Policies Proved Correct

The series of partial victories in the Scottsboro and Herndon cases, and especially this latest achievement of workers' defense, prove once again the correctness of the policies followed by the International Labor Defense—the two-fisted policy of mass defense plus the best available legal defense. It is the best answer that can be given to the enemies of the Scottsboro boys, Leibowitz, his cohorts among the Negro reformists, led by Dr. George E. Haynes and William H. (Kid) Davis of the "Amsterdam News," the editors of the "Nation," and the leadership of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Role of Workers' Press

Only the working class and revolutionary press, together with some portion of the Negro press, stood by the Scottsboro boys and their defenders without wavering. The "Daily Worker" organ of the Communist Party, the "Negro Liberator," organ of the League of Struggle for Negro Rights, and the "Labor Defender," official organ of the I.L.D. together with the revolutionary press, became the only medium through which the Scottsboro boys' defense could find expression.

These alignments of the agitational forces were not only the surface indications of the political alignments which underlay them of the coordinated reactionary front of the New Deal of lynching, misery, and terror which stood opposed to the united front of working class and Negro liberation forces for the lives and freedom of the Scottsboro boys. They formed a powerful offensive weapon on the strength of which the lynchers throughout the South, thinking they saw a weakening of the Scottsboro defense forces, launched a new and fiercer wave of terror against white and Negro workers.

The I.L.D. met these attacks boldly, and marching forward steadily with its legal steps in which Osmond K. Fraenkel and Walter H. Pollak, constitutional authorities, the latter the same lawyer who prepared the legal papers and conducted the argument in the first successful U. S. Supreme Court appeal in the case in 1934, were retained, proceeded along the road that history had set for it, of organizing the broadest united front in defense of the Scottsboro boys.

Columbus, Miss. Dispatch
January 8, 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

THE Supreme Court of the United States has again agreed to review the now famous Scottsboro case.

It involves the case of Haywood Patterson, a negro charged with criminal assault.

The negro, along with his confederates, was scheduled to hang in Alabama on February 8.

The courts have been fooling along with this case long enough.

It has cost the State of Alabama—the tax payers—thousands and thousands of dollars.

The defendants enjoyed all of the protection that a cautious court could throw around them.

Re-trials have been held, in which every precaution to safeguard their rights were taken.

They were entitled to a fair trial ,and they got it.

The trouble has been with the notorious International Labor Defense which supplied lawyers to defend the negroes, and the main interest of the lawyers has been to exploit the negro race in both the North and the South, collect contributions to fight the case and get away with fat fees.

It hasn't been a question of justice. It has been a matter of exploitation.

Albany-Decatur, Ala. Daily
January 15, 1935

Word comes from Montgomery that Representative John S. O'Neal, of Jackson county, plans to introduce a bill providing that the state take over the expense of the Scottsboro trials, relieving Jackson county from that burden.

It is the Daily's opinion that the measure is very fair. Jackson county had no more to do with the instigation of the Scottsboro cases than any other county. None of the principals even lived in Jackson county.

Yet High Jackson has been put to considerable expense in connection with the cases and has found it difficult to meet the obligations from its own treasury. As a matter of fact, some bills here from the first local trials are still outstanding.

The Daily hopes that the legislators take a liberal view of the matter and come to Jackson's aid.

Carmichael Asks Knight To Prosecute Scottsboro Cases

Former Attorney General Will Represent State To Conclusion

By JOSEPH R. McCOY

Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael yesterday appointed Thomas E. Knight, Jr., former attorney general and now lieutenant governor of Alabama, as special counsel to have full charge of prosecution to the conclusion of the Scottsboro cases.

The appointment was announced by the attorney general in the following statement: "My predecessor, Thomas E. Knight, Jr., has handled the cases known as 'the Scottsboro cases' from their inception down to the time of the expiration of his term of office. Mr. Knight has conducted for the State three trials and has twice appeared before the Supreme Court of the United States and the Supreme Court of Alabama in these cases.

"Mr. Knight is thoroughly familiar with every detail, both law and facts. It seems to me that he is the logical attorney to conduct the prosecution of these cases. It is unthinkable to me that I should take them over without utilizing the knowledge Mr. Knight has gained in the handling of these cases. It is my judgment that he should continue to handle these cases.

"I have this day requested that he continue the prosecution of all of the Scottsboro cases. I think this is only fair to him and to the State. Mr. Knight has accepted, and from here out Mr. Knight will have full charge and control of the Scottsboro cases."

The action of Atty. Gen. Carmichael, as soon as the appointment became known, was everywhere received with commendation, the consensus being that he had exercised sound and excellent judgment as to both the appointment and the appointee.

From the time of the commission early in March, 1931, of the crime that resulted in the so-called "Scottsboro cases" the criminal assault of two young white women by a group of negroes, near Paint Rock in Jackson County—Mr. Knight, then attorney general, personally directed until the end of his term on Jan. 14, prosecution of the nine defendants who were subsequently arrested, indicted and tried.

All but one of the nine, who was held to be a juvenile, were convicted in the Jackson Circuit Court and sentenced to death. On appeal to the Supreme Court of Alabama, judgments in seven cases were affirmed, the other defendant being remanded to the custody of the juvenile court. In the seven remaining cases, defense attorneys took appeals to the U. S. Supreme Court, where they were reversed and new trials ordered on the ground that adequate provision had not been made for counsel for the accused at their respective trials.

On a change of venue obtained by the defense to Morgan County, two of the seven negro defendants, Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, were again placed on trial at Decatur, the case of Patterson being first called. He was again convicted and sentenced to death, but the trial judge set the verdict aside on the ground that the State's evidence was not sufficiently strong to sustain it. Patterson was then placed on trial a third time, and for the third time was convicted and sentenced to death. Norris was then tried, a second conviction and death sentence resulting in his case.

Appeals were taken to the Supreme Court of Alabama from those judgments. Both were affirmed, and the defense then, on petition for certiorari, sought another review of the cases by the Supreme Court of the United States. The petitions were recently granted by that tribunal, and oral arguments are to be submitted by counsel for both the State and the defendants at a date yet to be set. Pending disposition of these cases by the Nation's highest court, Patterson and Norris are confined at Kilby Prison. The other five negro defendants are being held in the Jefferson County Jail at Birmingham.

MR. KNIGHT AND SCOTTSBORO

The Advertiser hastens to congratulate Attorney-General Albert A. Carmichael upon the wisdom and rightness of his decision in appointing Thomas E. Knight, Jr., his predecessor as Attorney-General, to conduct future trials arising from the infamous "Scottsboro cases."

This action by Attorney-General Carmichael should be immensely pleasing to Alabamians. It is not only poetic justice, it is good sense. It is sound patriotism.

No other living Alabamian knows as much about these cases as our new Lieutenant-Governor. No other Alabamian would have it in him to put more of conscience, sense and patience into the trial of these cases than Tommy Knight.

Since the outer world has chosen to make an issue of Knight, the only fair and decent thing for the State of Alabama to do is to throw Knight back into the teeth of all vilifiers of this commonwealth.

If Knight were a cheap blatherskite, instead of an honest, able lawyer, it would be different. But Knight has been conscientious about the Scottsboro mess, he has been dignified, he has been clean, and yet he has suffered at the hands of outsiders who vilified him unscrupulously and made him the symbol of a lost and degraded civilization, whereas the young man is controlled only by a sense of honor as a lawyer and a sense of decency as a patriot.

Bravo, Carmichael! Step on it, Tommy!

ATTY. GEN. CARMICHAEL

LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL & COURIER
JAN 29 1935

SCOTTSBORO CASE AGAIN

Our Constitution guarantees to the humblest citizen the right to "due process of law" in all matters affecting life and property. The Supreme Court has again proven that it shall continue to stand forth as the defender of that right even when all else has failed. By deciding for a second time to review the findings of Alabama courts in the now famous or infamous Scottsboro case the highest tribunal of the land has again accepted the responsibility of determining—not the guilt or innocence of the condemned, but whether they got a fair trial.

In 1932 the Supreme Court ruled that the Negro youths condemned to death on charges of attacking two white women had not received a fair trial, according to ordinary methods of court procedure, in the state courts and ordered that they be granted a new trial. Two of the condemned were granted a new trial and again convicted and condemned to death while the others still await trial. The condemned have again appealed to the highest court of the land. Regardless of whether the Negroes are guilty or innocent the Supreme Court, by its consenting to review the case a second time, is apparently determined to see that they get a fair trial. And whether guilty or innocent, no American citizen could ask more.—The Pathfinder.

DEMOCRAT
McPherson, Kans.
JAN 25 1935

High Court Intervenes

By consenting for the second time to review the findings of the Alabama state courts in the so-called Scottsboro case the United States supreme court should relieve the minds of those persons who have feared that another injustice might have been done to the two Negro defendants in connection with the retrial of their case. It is not necessary to entertain an opinion as to the innocence or guilt of any of the seven Negroes originally convicted of criminal assault and sentenced to deat hat Scottsboro, Ala., to be glad that the federal court again has assumed jurisdiction and will pass upon the fairness of the trials at Decatur in the same state, to which the case was taken on a change of venue.

The original trials were held under conditions that reflected a high degree of racial prejudice. The supreme court of Alabama, however, confirmed the convictions and the defendants were saved only by the United States supreme court, which declared that they had not had a fair hearing and ordered a general retrial of the case. By this time the issue of justice had been clouded by the injection of communist propaganda on one side and local resentment at outside interference, as well as racial prejudice, on the other. One defendant, Heywood Patterson, was retried under much better circumstances and again convicted, but the judge set aside the verdict on the ground that it was contrary to the weight of the evidence.

Patterson and a second defendant then were tried before a different judge and were convicted and sentenced to death, in spite of the fact that one of the principal witnesses in their first hearing completely reversed her testimony. But when appeal was taken to the federal high court the trials of the other five Negroes were postponed. Like so many other celebrated cases in history, the Scottsboro case now has become complicated by evidence of prejured testimony and prejudice. Fortunately in the United States supreme court this country has a tribunal which can function in such cases to dispel doubt and insure justice. Its intervention here should be generally welcomed.—Kansas City Star.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama.

5000

Forgery Of Jury Roll Is Charged

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.— (AP) — Forgery of negro names to a jury roll book in Jackson County, Alabama, was charged today before the Supreme Court by attorneys seeking to save the negroes in the Scottsboro case from the electric chair.

The roll book was presented and justices examined the names with a magnifying glass.

Samuel Liebowitz, of New York, representing the defendants, Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, said these "forgeries" constituted an "admission" of his contention that the negroes convicted of attacking white girls were denied constitutional rights.

Only six negro names were on the rolls, Liebowitz told the high court. He said a difference in ink and the fact that in each instance they were at the end of columns of white names, proved they were inserted after empanelling the Grand Jury which indicted the boys.

Arguments will be continued Monday when Lieut. Gov. Knight, of Alabama, will answer for the State. Knight, as Alabama Attorney General, prosecuted the cases in State court and was appointed to appear here.

Liebowitz said, "no negroes in the memory of man ever served on a jury in Jackson County."

A 50-year-old case from Delaware in which the Supreme Court reversed the State Court because negroes were not allowed on juries was cited by Walter H Pollak, of New York, another attorney for the negroes. Pollak said there were numerous negroes fully qualified for jury duty in Jackson County.

Ohio Students Aid Scottsboro

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Feb. 17.—Headed by Harry Blank and Robert Hare, of the National Students League, Ohio State University students picketed the Commerce and Administration buildings on the campus, protesting the revoking by President George Rightmire of a permit for a Scottsboro protest meeting in the Commerce Building.

The prohibited meeting had been held on the steps of the Commerce Building, where students cheered an appeal by the Scottsboro mother, Mrs. Ida Norris, for support of the fight for the lives and freedom of her son and Haywood Patterson, whose appeals are now being heard by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Robert Hare, who led the picketing, is one of seven conscientious objectors to military training who were dismissed last year. After the picketing, a meeting of students adopted resolutions to be sent to the U. S. Supreme Court demanding the immediate release of the Scottsboro boys.

COURT HEARS SCOTTSBORO CASE TODAY

Review of Trial Mirrors the Mass Campaign Behind Boys

[Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., editor of the "Negro Liberator," will re-report the continuation of the Scottsboro hearings from the United States Supreme Court chambers today, for the Daily Worker.]

By Louis Colman

When the United States Supreme Court justices file into their seats today to hear the continuation of the argument by Walter H. Pollak in the appeals of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, Scottsboro boys, this very fact will be an indication of the tremendus pressure exerted by the toiling masses of the world demanding the lives and freedom of these boys.

The United States Supreme Court is supposed to be in recess for two weeks starting today. Instead, this recess will be broken into when Mr. Pollak continues his argument on the constitutional question of the denial of their rights to the Negro people. He will be followed by Lieutenant-Governor Thomas E. Knight of Alabama, former attorney general and now special prosecutor of the Scottsboro boys, who will argue for their legal lynching. Osmond K. Fraenkel, constitutional attorney, who has been in charge of the appeals for the International Labor Defense since the last Decatur trial, will follow Knight with rebuttal argument.

Court Reflects Pressure

The court has already showed in innumerable ways its consciousness of the pressure of thirteen million Negroes and millions of white workers and sympathizers whose eyes are upon it in this case.

A tripled detail of capitol police lounged around in the corridor outside the court while the case was being heard Friday.

The doorkeeper nervously insisted that Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., who reported the proceedings of the hearing for the 'Daily Worker,' leave his brief case outside the court room. The day before, several persons, including myself, had walked unchallenged into the courtroom, and sat listening to the proceedings, with brief-cases in our hands.

Justice James Clark McReynolds, of Kentucky, who wrote the dissenting opinion in the first Supreme Court reversal of the Scottsboro sentences, in which he said that the contention that the boys were deprived of a fair trial because of the systematic exclusion of Negroes from the grand and petit juries that indicted and tried them was "without merit," was conspicuously absent from the bench when the cases came on last Friday. He sat with his eight colleagues from noon until two o'clock, but when the court convened again at two-thirty, with the case coming on forty minutes later, he failed to appear.

The argument he claimed was "without merit" is the main constitutional question which is being raised in the present appeals.

Court Packed

The attorneys and others familiar with the ways of the United States Supreme Court were astonished, during this hearing, to see eight persons standing at the back of the court, after all seats had been filled—mostly with sympathizers of the Scottsboro boys, about half of them Negroes—for not only is the court almost complete empty of spectators, with the exception of small parties of tourists who sit for a few minutes in bored and awed silence, but none of them could remember on any previous occasion a session when anyone had been permitted to enter after the seats were filled. Dozens of people stood in line outside, last Friday, waiting for the slim chance that one of the spectators would go out, and leave room for one at a time to enter.

The analysis of the Communist Party and the I. L. D., that this case symbolizes the whole struggle of the Negro people for civil rights of which they are violently deprived, and for national liberation, was shown to be correct by the very attitude of the justices of the court, the nine pillars of reaction, toward the arguments presented.

"Justice Butler is fighting like hell," an attorney sitting beside me whispered as Pierce Butler, President Hoover's Attorney-General, fired question after question at Attorneys Leibowitz and Pollak as they piled up proof of the illegal and systematic exclusion of Negroes from Alabama juries, and of the fraudulent attempt to rob the Scottsboro boys of appeal by forging the names of Negroes on the Jackson County jury roll.

Lieutenant-Governor Knight's foxy, beet-red, smirking face broke out into a beaming grin, and he looked as though he were about to repeat his famous Decatur hand-clapping trick when Butler fired a question at Leibowitz, interrupting his argument to ask whether this was not a "question of determination of fact." The Supreme Court, according to its theory, is only supposed to pass on questions of constitutional law.

Knight stopped his nail-chewing, and his nervous twitching of his hands in front of his face for another big smile with which he favored the whole bench from one end to another, when Butler interrupted Pollak to ask a question in regard to the discretion of the jury commissioners. Pollak easily answered the question by pointing once more to the evidence.

Jury Venire Present

The bench was agitated from Justice Owen J. Roberts on the extreme right to Justice Benjamin N. Cardozo on the extreme left when the Jackson County jury roll, with the names of six Negroes crudely forged on its pages, was introduced in evidence. Physical evience is almost unheard-of in this court, which concerns itself almost exclusively with lawyers' briefs and court records. The stern eyes of millions turned upon them forced the justices to accept this evidence of the brazen lynch-determination of the white ruling class that set them up on this bench, for examination.

Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes' white two-pointed beard and mustachios waggled feverishly, and he hitched himself back and forth in his big leather chair, as he ordered the big red tome brought up on the bench. The justices leaned over, peering as, growing more agitated every moment, the Chief Justice examined the forgery with a magnifying glass, firing question after question in regard to what names, what pages, what red lines, made with ink or pencil, at what approximate date, etc.

The court-room was tense as the big book passed from justice to justice, to be examined and re-examined. Knight twitched his hands and bit his finger-nails and smirked more nervously.

Perhaps the court, which goes to a great deal of trouble to maintain its attitude of "impartial dignity," to the point of filing in not on the minute of the scheduled opening, but on the second, while the marshall intones, "Oyez! Oyez" and all those in the courtroom stand up, was glad that the hearing could not be finished before the stroke of 4:30 when it rose in the middle of a sentence of Mr. Pollak's argument. It would need a couple of days to regain that dignity and go on with the hearing. It had shown plainly that it was alreay disturbed by the mass movement, the growing unity of black and white toilers, behind this appeal.

Protests Must Mount

It had shown plainly, too, in spite of itself, what must be done to force a favorable decision in this case. Between now and the time when it makes its decision—anytime after March 3—the protest must be redoubled. The masses must be brought into the streets to shout their demand for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys so loudly that it will penetrate the tiny, ugly, semi-circular room where the court sits, and force a decision reversing the lynch-verdicts against Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, affirming the right of Negroes to sit on juries.

Thousands of resolutions, telegrams, and post-cards must flood that court, expressing this burning demand of the masses of people white and Negro.

Scottsboro Decision Soon; Protests Will Save Boys

Capitalist Press Was Silent on Appeal to Supreme Court— Mass Pressure Needed Now

By Louis Colman

"The plutocratic press is silent in our case. Let not one of you be deceived by the actual apparent calm. The enemy is at work day and night—the press knows the proper time to use the noise or the silence against us. Let not none of you be deceived by the sneaking, mortal enemy . . ."

Bartolomeo Vanzetti wrote this in a letter to the International Labor Defense in 1926.

In 1935, the same venal press maintains the most utter silence in regard to the fate of the Negro Scottsboro boys, arraigned in the cases of two of whom, against lynch-verdicts of death, were heard a week ago in the same U. S. Supreme Court, which found every excuse—even the most ridiculous ones—to help send Vanzetti and Nicola Sacco to their deaths.

A Dramatic Story

Saturday, after the first part of the hearing, most of the metropolitan dailies in New York had not a word to say about it. The New York Times had two and a half inches of garbled report. The press of the country, as a whole, including the "liberal" weeklies, took this cue. There could not be the excuse that this was not "news," for the hearing, as reported in the "Daily Worker" at the time, was probably the most dramatic ever made in the holy of holies of capitalist justice.

Tuesday, after the end of the hearing, the press was uniformly silent.

It is no accident, either, that the "Pittsburgh Courier," biggest of the Negro weeklies, owned by an assistant attorney-general of the United States, Robert Vann, and one of the bitterest enemies of the Scottsboro defense for four years, was the one which took its cue from the white bourgeois press without any dressing, and mentioned not a single word about the hearing.

Garbled Stories

The other big Negro weeklies gave garbled and lying stories about the hearing, some of them misleading stories merely, but they had to say something about it. The same pressure that made the U. S. Supreme Court hear the case, made them report, something, anything but the truth, of course, about it.

Vanzetti knew—"the press knows when to use the noise or the silence against us."

The United States Supreme Court which once decided (in the "Dred Scott" case) that "a Negro has no rights a white man is bound to respect," has had thrust before it, for the first time in 70 years, a case in which a point-blank reversal of this dictum is demanded.

Masses Forced Appeal

It was "noise"—the noise of millions of Negro people, and hundreds of thousands of white workers and sympathizers, making known their demand for the lives and freedom of nine innocent Negro boys—that forced the court to hear the appeals of Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris. All the maneuvers of the courts, the state, and the treacherous white and Negro reformists—the "American Scottsboro Committee," the National, the "Amsterdam News"—could not stop nor drown that noise of protest.

Nobody knows precisely what is going through the heads of the justices of the United States Supreme Court as they make up their minds on the verdict in the Scottsboro case. One thing is certain—the volume and intensity of the mass protest, the shout of demand, will determine the decision of the court.

The lynch-press knows when to use silence against the lynched.

Three Grounds

Three grounds, proved to the hilt, why the court should, according to its own laws, reverse the Scottsboro verdicts, were presented in the briefs prepared by the I.L.D. lawyers, and in the argument before the nine black-robed servants of capitalism:

1. The systematic exclusion of Negroes from the grand jury that indicted the boys.

2. The systematic exclusion of Negroes from the trial jury that convicted them.

3. The forgery of the names of Negroes on the Jackson county jury rolls, for the purpose of defrauding the boys of the first ground of appeal.

No argument was advanced by the State of Alabama, represented by its Lieutenant-Governor, Thomas E. Knight, who has earned a Nero's fame as one of the most determined would-be murderers in history, and as an arch-lyncher, against these grounds. They are unassailable under bourgeois law.

So is the Constitution under which they are raised—in theory—but for reasons of political expediency, to save the program of the Roosevelt administration, by bringing about an inflation that will still further rob the toiling masses—the same United States Supreme Court set aside all constitutional guarantees to uphold the Gold Clause.

The court—according to the pressure brought upon it—can make one of many decisions:

How Court May Act

It can uphold the convictions of both boys. This is what it fought to lay the basis for at the hearing. It can attempt to save its face by reversing in one case and upholding in the other.

It can be forced to reverse on all three counts—which would mean that the indictments against all nine boys are illegal, because this would be the meaning of a decision on the first count.

It can slide out a little from the momentous implications of such a decision by picking ground No. 2.

It can make another technical decision, as it did in 1932, and reverse on the third ground.

Judges Agitated

The court fought hard, firing question after question at the boys' attorneys, in an effort to break down the evidence and the argument. The judges were visibly agitated by the overwhelming argument in favor of a reversal, and angered at the poor showing made by the representative of the state.

Their one concern was to find some excuse, some technicality, whereby they might again uphold the Roosevelt regime, whereby they might uphold his Democratic Party stronghold in the South, help him, by endorsing the enslavement of 13,000,000 Negroes, to hold the toiling masses in subjection. A lynching of the Scottsboro boys is part of the Roosevelt A.A.A. program in the South, just as the Gold Clause inflation is part of the New Deal as a whole.

Ears to Ground

Now the ears of the nine justices are close to the ground—can they afford to uphold the convictions?

They are weighing that question.

When the capitalist press is silent, the working class must work with tenfold energy to raise the sound of protest.

The Scottsboro-Herndon protest cards, addressed to the U. S. Supreme Court, must be mailed by the tens of thousands. Let the justices of the court see a constant stream of postmen bringing in these postcards, with resolutions and protests from trade unions, organizations, Democratic local clubs, Epic clubs churches, Utopian societies, Socialist locals and from every individual expressing the "noise," the "plutocratic press" refuses to echo.

The mass campaign must be developed, the appeal to the same court against the 18-20 years of living death imposed on Angelo Herndon must be prepared. Funds to carry on this work must be rushed to the National Office of the International Labor Defense, Room 430, 80 E. 11th St., New York City.

On March 4, the court may hand down its decision, or any Monday thereafter. Let it hear the protest of yourself, your organization, and everybody you know or can in any way reach, before that date.

Clarksdale, Miss. Register
February 18, 1935

SCOTTSBORO VERSUS FLEMINGTON

The Scottsboro case has reached the supreme court. Two Alabama negroes, convicted in a lower court and sentenced to die for alleged attacks on two white girls, have succeeded in getting their case argued before the supreme court.

Alabama has been criticized severely by northern biased press because of the Scottsboro case. Surely after the Flemington trial, however, the press for the sake of consistency will remain silent.

The Flemington trial in many respects has been the most farcial that has taken place. Apparently the travesty was not concluded at the end of the trial. For among the ridiculous aftermaths is the move among members of the jury to organize and hold an annual picnic in celebration of the trial. Next to that is the effort to get members of the jury to appear before night clubs and on the stage.

Arthur Brisbane said recently that the country must inspire respect for the law. But how can that be when a trial atavistically degenerates into a Roman holiday?

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

FEB 18 1935

FAMOUS CASES NEWLY ARGUED

Two famous Scottsboro, Ala., cases, in which seven Negroes are under sentence of death for criminal assault, are before the United States Supreme Court in a form which will impart unusual interest to the Court's disposition. The question at issue is whether the convicted Negroes were denied the equal protection of the law guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. The claim of the applicants is that Negroes, otherwise eligible, were deliberately, and in conformance with general practice in the State, excluded from the trial jury.

It is the contention of the Attorney General of Alabama that the Supreme Court has no authority to interfere in a matter of State judicial procedure—the manner in which jury rolls are made up. Against this reasoning is opposed the defense attorneys' insistence that the Fourteenth Amendment was violated. Behind this paramount controversy is the fact that the Alabama jury law does not exclude Negroes. It requires for jury duty "honest and intelligent" men, "esteemed in the community for their integrity, good character and sound judgment," and able to read English. (Ability to read is waived for freeholders or householders.) But the defense protests that these rules are applied so as to bar all Negroes. In this connection it directs attention to the notation on jury lists, before the rolls are finally made up for calling, of the abbreviation "col." (colored) after the names of Negroes. This distinguishing mark carries a somewhat significant implication.

The Scottsboro cases certainly set in motion a complicated and prolonged round of judicial reviews. But of all its bewildering aspects, the present is the most clear-cut and understandable.

Lynchings- 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

5001

The Scottsboro Appeals

APPEALS against the Scottsboro lynch verdicts are now being heard by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The friends of the Scottsboro boys must be under no illusions. It was only the power of the mass fight, organized and led by the International Labor Defense, that forced the court to agree to review the Scottsboro verdicts for the second time. The court's decision will depend on the extent and speed by which the masses are now mobilized to the defense of the boys, to the fight against the systematic violation of the rights of the Negro people, against legal lynching.

From every corner of the country protests must pour in on the U. S. Supreme Court, Washington, D. C., demanding reversal of the death sentences against Norris and Patterson, demanding the liberation of the nine Scottsboro boys. Funds to aid the fight for the boys must be rushed to the national office of the I.L.D., 80 East 11th St., New York City.

Scottsboro Hearing

THE announcement that the U. S. Supreme Court will hear arguments today on the Scottsboro appeals places before the working class and all friends of the Scottsboro boys an immediate duty. This is the necessity of quickly rallying in a mighty united front demand for the reversal of the death sentences against Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, for unconditional release of the nine Scottsboro victims of capitalist justice and national oppression.

The recent rulings of the U. S. Supreme Court, denying a hearing to Tom Mooney, must serve as a warning to all friends of the Scottsboro boys and the oppressed Negro people to intensify the fight for their lives and freedom.

Protest demonstrations should be held at once in all parts of the country. A flood of telegrams and resolutions must go forward immediately to the court from workers' meetings and organizations, from sympathetic groups and individuals. Funds must be rushed to the International Labor Defense, 80 East 11th Street, New York City, to help press the fight in the U. S. Supreme Court.

NEGROES' CASE BEFORE COURT

Alabama Jury System Is Key Point Of Appeal On Death Trials

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—Constitutionality of the Alabama system of selecting juries comes before the Supreme Court today in two of the Scottsboro cases, in which seven Negroes are under sentence of death for assault.

Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York and George W. Chamlee of Chattanooga will appear before the court in one case, involving the appeal of Clarence Norris. Walter H. Pollak and Osmond K. Fraenkel will appear for Haywood Patterson.

Atty.-Gen. Thomas E. Knight Jr. who prosecuted the cases, will argue that the Supreme Court has no authority to interfere in what he contends is a mere matter of state judicial process—the manner in which jury rolls are made up.

The defense charges that exclusion of Negroes from jury rolls in Jackson and Morgan Counties where the trials took place, denied the condemned men the equal protection of law guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment.

In the Patterson case the Supreme Court reversed the first conviction, and trial Judge JJames E Horton set aside the verdict in the second. The validity of his third trial is here involved.

Norris' second conviction also was set aside by Judge Horton, on the ground that the evidence of Victoria Price, one of the complainants, did not support the charge.

SCOTTSBORO ATTORNEYS IN HIGH COURT

Defense Proves Negroes Were Excluded from Jury Service

By Ben Davis, Jr.

(Editor of the Negro Liberator)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—We are in the court chambers of the United States Supreme Court. The justices of the Supreme Court are preparing to hear the appeals of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, two of the nine innocent Scottsboro Negro boys.

Perched near the bench is a table containing the forged jury rolls used by the Alabama lynch court officials.

Negroes Systematically Excluded

The case is called at 3:10 p. m. Attorney Leibowitz begins the argument for Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris. He states the facts of the lower court procedure. He states that Negroes were systematically excluded from the entire jury system in Jackson and Morgan counties. He states that Negroes were systematically excluded from the entire jury system in Jackson and Morgan counties. He states that the Alabama law did not specifically exclude Negroes but that the administration of the law was unconstitutional.

"Not so much whether Negroes sat but whether they were called for jury service." This was the interruption of Justice Van Derventer. Leibowitz answered that no Negroes "in the memory of man" had ever been seen on either the grand or petit jury.

The entire Court was plainly attentive. The Justices asked questions frequently. Mr. Leibowitz answered them all as he narrated the whole system of exclusion of Negroes. A dramatic moment occurred when he exhibited the book containing the alleged forged jury rolls. The entire bench and audience became quiet. He turned the book towards the judges and showed them how the names of Negroes were forged.

The Justices asked many detailed questions about the forgery. Justice Van Deventer presses Mr. Leibowitz on the motive for writing in the names. Justice Van Deventer impressed the audience as a prosecutor rather than an "impartial" Judge.

Chief Justice Hughes has the book brought up to him. Everyone is amazed at the unusual proceeding.

The fictions of judicial impartiality disappeared completely—and significantly.

Justice Stone, former U. S. Attorney General, examines the book spectacularly, with large magnifying glass.

Mr. Pollak begins argument. He cleared up masterfully a point raised by Justice Butler. He makes it clear that Negroes not only never sat on grand or petit juries but even never were called for jury service. Mr. Pollak shows that in Morgan County Negroes frequently qualified—many had had high school qualifications. Some had even been students of Phillips Andover, wealthy, exclusive academy in Massachusetts, some were lawyers, etc.

At 4:30 the Chief Justice adjourned the court. The case will be resumed Monday at 12 noon. Mr. Pollak was speaking beautifully and brilliantly when the session ended.

Pollak will complete his argument Monday, following which Mr. Frankel and Lieutenant Governor Tom Knight will present testimony. Knight, although no longer Attorney General of Alabama, has been named Special Prosecutor in charge of prosecution of the Scottsboro boys.

ALABAMA PLANNING NEW INDICTMENTS

Lieut. Governor Knight Awaits Supreme Court Order in Scottsboro Cases.

PRISONERS CHEER DECISION

Only Patterson Hesitates to Believe News of Victory in the Highest Tribunal.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 1 (AP).—New indictments to prosecute the Scottsboro attack cases "to their conclusion," will be sought promptly, Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight Jr. of Alabama announced today as the defendants greeted with delight the Federal Supreme Court decision setting aside two death sentences in the litigation.

The Lieutenant Governor, who as Attorney General prosecuted Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, the Negroes whose sentences for alleged attack on a white woman were set aside today, has been retained as special prosecutor to conduct the State's case.

No action can be taken before the Federal Supreme Court's decision is returned to the Alabama Supreme Court, which in turn will remand Norris's case to the lower courts. In the Patterson case, while the nation's highest tribunal did not immediately order a new trial because of a technicality, it was believed that such action would come from the State Supreme Court.

Mr. Knight said he did not know whether a special session of the grand jury would be called at Scottsboro, or whether the case would await a regular session.

If true bills are returned the cases will be set down for trial on the Jackson County court docket, where in April, 1931, less than three weeks after the nine negroes accused of an assault on two white girls were removed from a train at Paint Rock, eight of them were convicted and sentenced to death. The case of one was sent to juvenile court.

The original true bills were returned by a grand jury before which both Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, alleged victims of the attack, appeared. They had charged the Negroes attacked them aboard a freight train as it rumbled through the mountains of Jackson County.

The Bates girl since has repudiated her testimony, and in an appearance in Patterson's second trial at Decatur, testified that Mrs. Price had "framed" the story.

Mr. Knight said today:

"Approximately ninety jurors have been found saying the defendants were guilty of the offense with which they are charged, and for which the penalty is death. I have been retained by the State to prosecute the cases and will prosecut the same to their conclusion."

The news brought joy to eight of the defendants, but the ninth, Patterson, greeted it with shouts of derision from his cell in death row at Kilby prison here.

Refusing to come to the bars, Patterson heard the news and shouted, "You must think I' mdrunk if I believe that." Then he broke into boistrous laughter, halting intermittently to shout "A new trial—a new trial."

Norris asked Deputy Warden Frank Boswell to read a telegram to him from Samuel S. Liebowitz, chief counsel, informing him of the court's action.

"That 'shore' is good news," he said, grinnig. "I'm mighty happy."

In the Jefferson County jail from the other seven defendants awaiting trial it brought shouts of joy. "That's good news, we're mighty happy," they chorused. "We feel we are helped as much as Patterson and Norris."

NEW TRIAL ORDERED BY SUPREME COURT IN SCOTTSBORO CASE

Chief Justice Hughes Rules Negroes Were Barred From Juries in Norris Ruling.

SECOND CASE SENT BACK

If Alabama Does Not Grant New Trial to Patterson High Court Will Order It.

The text of the Supreme Court's decision is printed on Page 15.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, Negroes condemned to death on charges of having assaulted a white woman in the celebrated Scottsboro case, must have new trials, the Supreme Court held today in two opinions by Chief Justice Hughes.

The whole weight of the opinion in the Norris case was that Negroes had for years been barred from jury duty in Jackson and Morgan Conuties, Alabama, where the Scottsboro cases were tried. The opinion on Patterson dealt almost entirely with Alabama's protest that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction.

Asserting that Negroes had been arbitrarily and systematically barred from jury duty, Justice Hughes in the Norris case held that court proceedings were invalid where citizens were excluded because of race and color from jury duty. He reviewed the evidence that Negroes had not been called for jury duty and the addition of Negroes names to the jury rolls after the first trial.

"While there was testimony which cast doubt upon the qualification of some of the Negroes who had been named, and there was also general testimony as to the lack of 'sound jpudgment' of the 'good Negroes' in Jackson County," the Chief Justice said, "we think that the definite testimony as to the actual qualifications of individual Negroes, which was not met by any testimony equally direct, showed that there were Negroes in Jackson County qualified for jury service."

Holds Discrimination Shown.

"We think that the evidence that for a generation or longer no Negro had been called for service on any jury in Jackson County; that there were Negroes qualified for jury service; that according to the practice of the jury commission their names would normally appear on the preliminary list of male citizens of the requisite age, but that no names of Negroes were placed on the jury roll, and the testimony with respect to the lack of appropriate consideration of the qualifications of Negroes established the discrimination which the Constitution forbids," the opinion added.

Chief Justice Hughes condemned the "sweeping characterization of the qualification" of Negroes in Alabama as stated by the authorities of Morgan County.

"Upon the proof contained in the record now before us, a conclusion that their continuous and total exclusion from juries was because there were none possessing the requisite qualifications cannot be sustained," he declared.

In the case of Norris, the court specifically ordered that he must be tried again, but in the Patterson case the issue was sent back to the Alabama courts for "further proceedings." Lawyers and court officials agreed that if a new trial should be refused to Patterson, he could approach the Supreme Court for a direct order for a new trial.

In other Scottsboro reviews the court had set aside the convictions of seven of the nine Negroes accused of assaulting two white girls in a box car in 1931. The court then held that the defendants had not had full opportunity to consult counsel.

Norris and Patterson alone were tried the second time in Alabama. Two of the other Negroes were not brought to trial and the remaining five, whose convictions were set aside, still await trial.

Justice McReynolds did not hear argument and took no part in the consideration and decision of either the cases ruled on today.

Patterson Case Sent Back.

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—While both the Norris and Patterson cases were sent back to the Alabama courts for further proceedings by the Supreme Court today, the status of the two cases differed.

The court found no doubt of its right to set aside the death sentence in the Norris case on constitutional grounds, but it sent the Patterson case back for decision as to whether the lower courts, notwithstanding technical objections, will grant him a new trial.

Chief Justice Hughes said it would be wrong to set aside the death sentence in the Norris case and on a technicality be unwilling to retry Patterson, in whose case the same constitutional objections with regard to absence of Negroes from the juries existed and where a new trial should be granted on constitutional grounds if technical objections could be removed.

The State had contended in the Patterson case that the high court had no jurisdiction because a bill of exceptions had not been filed within the required time. In a separate opinion on this case, Chief Justice Hughes said:

"We have power to make such disposition of the case as judgment requires."

The judgment then was ordered reversed.

TO ASK NEGROES' RELEASE.

Leibowitz Prepares to Seek Federal Writ if Alabama Refuses.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of councel in the Scottsboro cases, announced yesterday that he will go to Montgomery, Ala., on receipt of the official decision of the Supreme Court and ask for the dismissal of the proceedings against all nine Negro efendants.

He said he expected the decision tomorrow or Thursday. In order that no time be lost in the move for dismissal of the indictments Mr. Leibowitz said he will make the trip by airplane.

"I am going to ask that the indictments against the nine defendants be quashed," Mr. Leibowitz said. "Under the Supreme Court decision the defendants should be released. If the Alabama authorities refuse I shall sue out a writ of habeas corpus in the Federal court.

"The next move is up to the State authorities of Alabama. We aer cartain of our position in the case."

In commenting on the decision by Chief Justice Hughes, Mr. Leibowitz said, "I am thrilled beyond words."

"The victory just won for the Scottsboro boys' in the Supreme Court of the United States is the culmination of the hopes and ambitions of 15,000,000 Negro souls in America. More than two years ago when I took up the case in behalf of these nnocent Negro boys I knew then that our only salvation lay in the highest court of the land, and I then laid the groundwork for an appeal in the event of a conviction, which was a foregone conclusion.

"For the first time in the history of American jurisprudence actual proof by way of living witnesses was produced in open court in an attack against bigotry and prejudice which bars the Negro citizen, although qualified, from serving on a jury in any of the State courts in that part of the country.

"The decision of the highest court, just handed down, is a triumph for American justice and is an answer to all those subversive elements who seek to engender hatred against our form of government."

This reference was directed by Mr. Leibowitz to the Communists and other radicals who were active in one form or another in the Scottsboro cases.

Mr. Leibowitz and an associate, Walter H. Pollak, argued the appeal in the Supreme Court a month ago. Briefs were prepared by Mr. Pollak and Osmund K. Fraenkel.

Mr. Leibowitz defended the nine Negroes in Decatur, Ala., in 1933, when they were convicted in a retrial before Judge William W. Callahan. The conviction was affirmed in the Alabama Supreme Court.

In addition to Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, whose convictions were set aside, the other defendants are Roy Wright, 17, his brother Andy, 21; Eugene Williams, 18; Olen Montgomery, 22; Ozzie Powell, 21; Charlie Weems, 23, and Willie Roberson, 22 years old.

JUSTICE FOR NEGROES.

It is more than four years since the case of the Negro boys condemned to death at Scottsboro began to trouble the consciences of Americans in all parts of the country. It is not necessary now to recall all the circumstances of the trial. Its conduct and some of the evidence admitted were of a sort to make many doubt the real guilt of the accused, but far more important than this was the growing conviction that they had been denied their constitutional rights and made the victims of race prejudice. Largely on this ground the case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, which held that the constitutional point was well taken—namely, that Negroes were systematically excluded from the juries. For this reason the original verdict was set aside and a new trial ordered. That was had in due time, the same verdict was reached and the same appeal was taken to the Supreme Court. Yesterday it ruled again that the Negroes in question had been deprived of their constitutional rights, so that they are entitled to a new trial, which the court ordered. Chief Justice HUGHES said that there was no disagreement on the point at issue. It was that, when the evidence showed that Negroes eligible to jury duty were regularly excluded, the trial was vitiated in the constitutional sense and the verdict would not be allowed to stand.

This judgment shows that the highest court in the land is anxious to secure and protect the rights of the humblest citizen. The case originally seemed of comparatively little importance. But with the lapse of years it has taken on the proportions of a celebrated cause. The test under which the Supreme Court was placed has been trying, but the judges have met it in the finest tradition of judicial independence and integrity. They have showed that their love of justice extends to the smallest as well as the greatest. The records which they have made in this case cannot fail deeply to impress the whole country. People may well hope to be spared a renewal of the original proceedings in the lower court. Might not the Governor of the State find sufficient reasons in what has already taken place for issuing a pardon in order to do substantial justice and at the same time free the courts from the duty of going on with a case which has become a public symbol of the mischief that may be wrought when prejudice is allowed to invade the place dedicated to impartial justice?

Alabama

Lynchings- 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

5002

Supreme Court Again Decides With Leibowitz

Saves Two Negroes But Says Texas Democrats May Keep Party White

Belcher Case Out

Carmichael, Knight Will Go On With Scottsboro Trials Despite Decision

WASHINGTON, April 1.—(AP)—Once again the Supreme Court intervened today to save two negroes sentenced to death in the famous Scottsboro, Ala., cases, but it upheld the refusal of the Democratic Party in Texas to permit negroes to vote in its primaries.

In effect, the highest tribunal ordered new trials for both Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, two of the seven who probably would have been executed in 1932 had it not been for the court.

New trials were ordered in the first instance after the court concluded that the men were denied representation by adequate counsel.

Chief Justice Hughes in his opinion today said the constitutional rights of Norris and Patterson were violated because negroes were excluded from jury service at their trials.

"We think the evidence that no negro has been called for jury service in Jackson County (where the trials were held) for a generation established there has been discrimination," the Chief Justice said.

Intense feeling has been aroused by the Scottsboro cases, which followed alleged assaults upon two white women by a group of negroes near the little Alabama town in 1931.

"I am thrilled beyond words," said Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York attorney who argued the case before the Supreme Court, when informed of the verdict.

Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., who as Alabama attorney general, prosecuted Norris and Patterson, said that the cases would be carried "to their conclusion."

"Approximately 90 jurors have found the defendants guilty of the offense with which they are charged and which is punishable by death," he said.

Old Texas Case Decided

The Texas negro voting controversy has been before the court at intervals since 1924. The decision today was the fourth ruling by the court on an appeal by a Texas negro asserting the right to vote in Democratic primaries.

Texas statutes which prevented negroes from voting and which authorized the State Democratic executive committee to prevent negroes from voting in primaries were declared unconstitutional by the court.

But today R. R. Grovey, Harris County, lost his appeal from the decision by the Texas Democratic convention that only white persons might vote in party primaries.

"We hold the party was a voluntary association and was competent to decide its membership," said Justice Roberts, who delivered the opinion.

Belcher Case Dropped

Shortly after setting aside the sentences on Norris and Patterson, the court allowed the Government to drop the Belcher case. which originally was scheduled as a test of both NRA and the lumber code.

An attorney for the lumber code authority objected to dismissal but William E. Belcher, Alabama mill operator, who won in the lower courts after the Government charged him with violating the lumber code, offered no complaint. The Chief Justice refused to hear the code attorney.

Returning after a two weeks recess, the court held one of the busiest opinion days of the session, although it failed to act on a pending new deal case—the constitutionality of the railroad pension act. Among the decisions were:

A ruling that an Oregon law regulating advertising by dentists is valid.

An opinion that Federal courts handling the reorganization of bankrupt railroads have the right to prevent—temporarily—the RFC and other holders of railway notes from selling collateral.

A decision that an Arkansas law extending the time in which owners could redeem property sold for failure to meet assessments on improvement district bonds is unconstitutional.

The declaration that the 1932 Mississippi law for reopening insolvent State banks is constitutional.

The upholding—in effect—of a lower court decision which dismissed a suit brought by Pacific Air Transport, of Oakland, Calif., in an effort to force Postmaster General Farley to reinstate its cancelled air mail contract.

As To Scottsboro Case

In the Scottsboro opinion, Chief Justice Hughes said that "the testimony . . . tended to show that in a long number of years no negro had been called for jury service in that county."

The court added that direct testimony was "that specified negroes, 30 or more in number, were qualified for jury service. Among these were negroes who were members of school boards, or trustees of colored schools and property owners and householders. It also appeared that negroes from that county had been called for jury service in the Federal Court.

"We think that the definite testimony as to the actual qualifications of individual negroes . . . showed there were negroes in Jackson County qualified for jury service.

"Testimony leads to the conclusion that these and other negroes were not excluded on account of age, or lack of esteem in the community for integrity and judgment, or because of disease or want of any other qualification.

"The evidence that for a generation or longer, no negro had been called for service on any jury in Jackson County, that there were negroes qualified for jury service . . . that no names of negroes were placed on the jury roll, and the testimony with respect to the lack of appropriate consideration of the qualifications of negroes, established the discrimination which the Constitution forbids."

Regarding conditions in Morgan County where the trials were held the court said:

"Within the memory of witnesses, long resident there no negro had ever served on a jury in that county or had been called for such service . . . A clerk of the Circuit Court . . . testified that during his official term approximately 2,500 persons had been called for jury service and that not one of them was a negro . . .

"There was abundant evidence that there were a large number of negroes in the county who were qualified for jury service. Men of intelligence, some of whom were college graduates, testified to long lists said to contain nearly 200 names, of such qualified negroes, including many business men, owners of real property and householders."

"We find no warrant for a conclusion that the names of any of the negroes . . . were placed on the jury rolls.

"For this long continued, unvarying and wholesale exclusion of negroes from jury service we find no justification consistent with the constitutional mandate."

Carmichael And Knight To Press Trials

Despite the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States in its decision yesterday, for the second time reversed judgments of Alabama's trial and high courts condemning to death Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, two of the seven "Scottsboro Case" defendants—there will be no slackening in the vigor of the State's prosecution of all of the cases to their conclusion.

That much was made clear in statements issued yesterday afternoon by Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael, and Lieut.-Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., appointed by Mr. Carmichael as special counsel for the State to handle these cases.

Atty. Gen. Carmichael said: "I have just received notice that the Supreme Court of the United States has reversed the Patterson and Norris cases. We have not yet received a copy of the decision. In the natural course of events the cases will come up for trial at a later date. The cases, of course, will be prosecuted vigorously."

Declaring that "approximately 90 jurors have been found saying the defendants were guilty of the offense of which they were charged and for which the penalty is death," Lieut.-Gov. Knight stated: "I have been retained by the State to prosecute the cases and will prosecute them to their conclusion."

The lieutenant-governor announced that new indictments will be sought before a Jackson County grand jury, in each of the "Scottsboro cases." Five of the seven defendants in the cases are confined in the Jefferson County jail. The other two, Patterson and Norris have been occupying cells in "death-row" at Kilby Penitentiary, pending the outcome of their apeals.

Mr. Knight who as attorney-general prosecuted the cases through trial and appellate courts, and in recent months in his present capacity as special counsel, presented additional arguments in connection with the Norris and Patterson appeals, before the U. S. Supreme Cout was unable to say yesterday whether a special session of the Jackson County grand jury would be called.

Norris Happy

Norris was jubilant when news of the reversal of his case by the nation's highest tribunal, reached him. So were the seven other accused negroes in the Jefferson County jail, but Patterson appeared indifferent. For several months, Patterson has been "playing crazy," according to prison officials who are of the opinion that he is feigning insanity.

When told of the Supreme Court's decision in Washington, Patterson shouted: "Don't bother me, will you. Let me alone Go ahead and do what you want with me. I don't care. Don't make no difference." He appeared to be unaffected by his new chance for life.

While Norris was still jubilating, a telegram arrived for him from Samuel Liebowitz, New York attorney and counsel for Norris and all other defendants in the case, with the exception of Patterson. The message said: "We won you a new trial. Congratulations." Breaking off his previous relations with International Labor Defense attorneys with whom he had formerly been associated in the defense of the negroes, Liebowitz later announced he represented all of them except Patterson.

Unable to write, Norris enlisted the aid of Willie Winton, condemned Walker County negro, in writing a letter of appreciation to Liebowitz in answer to his wire. Winton is under sentence of electrocution, imposed following his conviction of the murder of two white men. At his trial and before the State board of pardons and Gov. Graves, he claimed self-defense. On the eve of the date set for his execution, March 22, Winton was granted a reprieve of 30 days by the governor in order that he might give further study to the case.

As Norris Put It.

As Norris shouted in dictation down the corridor, Winton wrote Liebowitz as follows: :

"Mr. Samuel Liebowitz,

Dear Sir:

"Your telegram was received and it is beyond words how I felt and feel over being granted a new trial. I am a happy person to know that the grand argument which you made for this new trial was a great success.

"I always did have great faith in getting one, but you know that one can never be too sure if he does not have an ace in the hole.

"All of my thanks and appreciation goes out to you and your backers.

"The high court of opinion should paive a avenue for my complete freedom in my next trial.

"Mr. Liebowitz, if it is possible, I would like very much to be transferred back with the other boys where I can get some exercise. I am in need of it at the worst. I hope it can be arrange so I can depart from here in short.

"Now I want you to thoroughly understand that my faith and confidence in you is 100 per cent.

"I do hope this year will bring great victory in my case. I know you will only take the wises steps to gain my liberty. Therefore I will continually be in the best of spirit and high of courage. Give my warmest regards to all. Sincerely yours, (Signed), Clarence Norris."

The crime of which Norris, Patterson and their codefendants were found guilty was the criminal assault upon two white women, Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, on board a Southern Railway freight train as it rumbled through the hills of Jackson County near Paint Rock, on March 25, 1931. Both women testified against the negroes at the original trial. Ruby Bates, however, has since repudiated her testimony, claiming at the second trial of Patterson that Mrs. Price "framed" the account of the attack. The testimony of Mrs. Price, on the other hand, has never wavered and she is still one of the State's principal witnesses.

Government Wins Delay In Decision Over NRA

WASHINGTON, April 1.—(AP)—With NRA already under heavy fire in Congress, the Government today sought and obtained Supreme Court permission to avert an immediate test of the constitutionality of that hub of the recovery program.

The Court granted a motion by the Justice Department to dismiss its appeal in the Belcher lumber code case, while a move was under way in the Senate to get a decision in the case as a guide to Congress in enacting legislation to extend the Blue Eagle's life.

Senator Hastings (R), Delaware, one of the authors of the Senate move, immediately hailed the Government's action as evidence "the Department of Justice feels it can't sustain NRA."

It showed, he contended, "no honesty of purpose in trying to comply with constitution," and added a charge that Donald Richberg, NRA chief, is trying to "confuse" Congress.

Hastings and Senator Clark (D), Missouri, joined in a bi-partisan move when the Senate convened today to obtain a decision in the Belcher case. They introduced a resolution calling on Atty. Gen. Cummings to prosecute the appeal.

But even before their resolution was filed in the Senate chamber, Stanley Reed, the new solicitor general, stepped into the office of the Supreme Court, only a few yards down the Capitol corridor, and filed the motion to dismiss the case. Involving A. E. Belcher, Alabama lumber operator, the case presented to the court for the first time the issue of constitutionality of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

About three hours later, Chief Justice Hughes handed down the Court's permission to drop the case, after refusing to let other parties intervene.

The combined action of the Government and the Court made it doubtful whether there could be a clear cut decision on the constitutionality of NRA before the Court adjourns for the Summer or prior to congressional action on the bill to extend the recovery law.

Paying no attention to the legal developments, the Senate finance committee meanwhile went ahead with its investigation of NRA, receiving a report from a Federal Trade Commission attorney of price fixing by members of the Rubber Manufacturers' Association.

The Belcher lumber case presented to the Supreme Court the basic question of constitutionality of the hour and wage provisions of the recovery law.

Belcher was indicted for violating the hour and wage provisions of the lumber code but Judge W. I. Grubb of the Federal District Court in Birmingham held against the Government and the indictment was dismissed. Grubb ruled the NRA law unconstitutional. The Government appealed to the Supreme Court in an effort to expedite the decision.

With arguments scheduled to begin only a fortnight off, the Justice Department last week suddenly announced it would drop the appeal. It was immediately hailed by opponents of NRA as a confession of weakness on the part of the Government.

MR. HUGHES HAS NOT SAID ENOUGH

To the Honorable Charles Evans Hughes:

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from seats on the Supreme Court of the United States. Has that circumstance affected the justice of the Court's decisions involving the races?

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from the bench in Federal court districts.

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from seats on the bench of the Supreme courts of the States, except possibly in the Reconstruction years. There may have been some Negroes on the Supreme court of one of the Southern States in that period, although at the moment The Advertiser has no recollection of any exception to the rule.

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from the bench of nisi prius courts, at least in the Southern States, if not in all others. Have these circumstances prejudiced the cause of white or black citizen? If not, why not?

Yet the Supreme Court of the United States remands for rehearing a cause in which two Negroes were convicted of the capital offense of rape in Alabama, all upon the ground, not specifically that no Negro sat on the jury that convicted the defendants, but upon the ground that for a "generation"—about 30 years, we believe—Negroes had been "systematically excluded" from jury service in Jackson County, Alabama.

The Advertiser herewith takes the liberty of asking Mr. Hughes and his colleagues of the Supreme Court of the United States this question: If Negroes had served on Jackson County juries every year for 29 years before the "Scottsboro" infants came into court in their diapers and shaking their baby rattlers, but for some reason—any reason—had not been drawn to serve on the jury that tried the infants aforesaid, would the solemn Supreme Court of the United States have solemnly averred that justice had been outraged?

Does it follow that, in the light of the decision of the court as read by Mr. Hughes, no black man, no matter what the evidence against him may be, can have his sentence affirmed by the republic's highest court unless black men sat upon the jury that convicted him in the first instance?

Does it follow that an oathbound jury is entirely without virtue and respectability if only white men serve on it when Negroes are on trial?

Has the Supreme Court of the United States ever reversed the verdict of a trial court involving the liberty or life of an Indian upon the ground that no Indian sat upon the jury that convicted him? Or a Spaniard, of an Italian, or a Frenchman, or a Russian or a Japanese or a Chinese?

There is no relevancy in the observation of the Chief Justice to the effect that Negroes had been excluded from jury services for a generation before the Scottsboro infants were put to trial. The only relevant question is whether Negroes served on the jury that convicted these infants.

Suppose Negroes had been on all Jackson County juries for 29 years but that for some reason they were not accepted for jury service in the year that these puling infants were tried and convicted—would that not have been a miscarriage of justice?

We just wanted to know.

A PUSSYFOOTING SUPREME COURT

Alabama put two men charged with criminal assault to trial and in retaliation the Supreme Court of the United States, ignoring the evidence by which the men were convicted, put Alabama to trial because it disapproves of the color scheme of Alabama juries. The Advertiser, for one, wishes it knew of a way to find out what the Supreme Court of the United States thinks of the guilt or innocence of the defendants.

Graves Reputed Author Of Plan For Negro Jurors

Last Minute Cancellation Of Statement Believed To Indicate Opposition To Speak Today

Erasure Of Racial Lines Would Meet Criticism Of U. S. Supreme Court

By HARTWELL HATTON.

After setting the stage for "an important announcement" yesterday afternoon relative to the State's future jury policy in the light of the United States Supreme Court's Scottsboro decision, Gov. Graves changed his mind when the time came to make it and said it would be delivered today.

It had been rumored at the capitol that the governor would call on the jury commissions in the several counties to place the names of negroes in the boxes and when his announcement was held up at the last minute the impression was created that his plan had met with strong opposition among high State officials and possibly among his close advisers.

The governor only said that the announcement he had planned to make was found to need revisions and that nothing would be made public until the changes had been decided upon.

Should the jury boxes in the 67 counties be emptied and refilled with the names of negroes included along with the names of white citizens, the grounds for the United States Supreme Court's adverse decision in the Scottsboro case presumably would be removed.

Called Governor's Aim.

It was reported at the capitol yesterday that this was the aim of the governor. It was pointed out by those familiar with court procedure that the Scottsboro cases could then be re-initiated with the chief Federal question raised in the original cases eliminated.

After revising his plans yesterday afternoon, Gov. Graves indicated that he would occupy himself last night with preparation of a statement or announcement to be forthcoming today. After 8 o'clock he told a reporter that he would have the announcement ready today at 9 a.m.

Whether he will go through with his reputed intention of asking local jury commissions to insert negroes' names in their jury boxes was not apparent from any remark he made. Neither did it appear whether he had reconsidered in accordance with the advice of those opposed to such a course.

Senator J. Miller Bonner, of Wilcox County, meanwhile announced he would prepare a bill to present to the legislature when it reconvenes from a recess on April 30, limiting jury service to qualified electors. The senator said such a bill, he believed, would stand the constitutional test.

Black Belt's Viewpoint.

"While there may be other remedies to meet the situation caused by Scottsboro decision," said Bonner, "this one will go far to protect the black belt.

"Take my county, for instance, we do not have a single negro voter."

Alabama law prescribes that a person to be eligible to vote, except in certain instances, must pay a $1.50 annual poll tax, must be literate and understand the constitution. Only a small percentage of the negroes in the State are qualified electors, while under the jury law, in view of the recent Scottsboro ruling a vastly larger number might be qualified for jury service.

While the Alabama law does not prohibit any race or creed from serving on a jury, the authority to determine who meets these qualifications is vested with a jury commission. This commission after passing on the qualifications of eligible male citizens, places the names on a jury roll from which jury boxes are filled.

Lynchings- 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama.

5003

5003

Mobile, Ala., Press
November 15, 1935

Mixed Jury in Scottsboro Case

A county grand jury that included one negro member met at Scottsboro, Ala., and returned 18 new indictments charging nine negro defendants in the famous "Scottsboro case" with attacking two white women four years ago. The arrow in the upper left corner designates the negro juror, Creed Conyers, a farmer.—(Associated Press Photo).

Tufaula, Ala. Tribune
November 18, 1935

NO EXCITEMENT

When the grand jury met at Scottsboro the other day to reindict the nine negroes who have made the little Jackson county town famous, there was scarcely a handful of persons on the streets. The 36 veniremen, court officials, newspaper men and representatives of the ILD gathered in the court house to witness the selection of a grand jury. When the name of a negro was called, the judge ordered him to take his seat and when the panel was completed he went along with the seventeen white men and within a few minutes new indictments had been returned.

Scottsboro went about its business and there was nothing to recall the hectic days when the negroes were first brought to trial and ILD lawyers and trouble-makers stirred the section into a frenzy. Let us hope that the paid communists remain away when the case comes to trial in Decatur. Alabama courts can handle these cases justly and they should not be harrassed by outside interests.

Commenting on the scenes around the court house, the Scottsboro Sentinel editor wrote:

There was no excitement of any kind at the courthouse during the drawing, empaneling and reporting of the grand jury.

In fact, there appeared too little, or no interest at all, in the matter.

Not a ripple was caused when Conyer, the first negro ever to sit on a grand jury in this county, took his seat when his name was called.

After the final report in the afternoon, the jury consented to pose for photographs for the Associated Press and the United Press. Both were represented by special feature writers, and they were disappointed at the lack of interest or excitement in the entire proceedings.

WANTED: A NEW DEAL ON SCOTTSBORO

The Scottsboro boys are about to go to trial for the third time. For four years this case has been batted about and ballyhooed out of all relation to its importance solely because of selfish ambitions of the prosecution and the so-called defense.

If handled properly by Southern lawyers and not used to arouse race, class and sectional animosities, the case would long since have been closed and the boys ere this would have been walking the streets free men.

But unfortunately, the Communists got hold of it, and from that time to the present, Alabama has been fighting them and the North generally instead of trying the nine boys, with the result that no one has been victorious.

Alabama has spent a fortune on the trial with no tangible results. The Communists have collected hundreds of thousands of dollars "for defense," which have kept their officials living in clover for years, but has actually worsened the condition of the boys. The public has been ballyhooed until it is heartily sick of the whole business and a mass meeting in behalf of the Scottsboro boys will not draw a hundred people anywhere today.

What is needed in the Scottsboro case is a New Deal. The Communists should be kicked out lock, stock and barrel. Their irresponsible tactics, their unscrupulous activities and their unintelligible jargon have not even advanced the Communist cause, to say nothing of freeing the Scottsboro boys. They have become a laughing stock even to the infinitesimal moron minority that once harkened to their blather.

This case should be in the hands of the N. A. A. C. P., which had it at first. As it freed other Negroes and established valuable precedents, it would have secured the liberty of the Scottsboro boys.

Remember the case of the Elaine farmers, who were sentenced to death by the Arkansas court? The N. A. A. C. P. secured freedom for those men after the date of their execution had been fixed.

Birmingham, Ala. News
November 14, 1935

NEW GRAND JURY IN "SCOTTSBORO CASE"

Above is the Grand Jury of Jackson County which Wednesday reindicted nine Negro defendants in the "Scottsboro case" on charges of attacking two white women March 25, 1931. The jury included the first Negro within the memory of oldest residents of the county to serve on the Grand Jury. The Negro, Creed Conyers, of Paint Rock, a farmer, is shown in the extreme upper left hand corner. The foreman, J. Wiley Whitaker, is third from left, front row. Other members are O. V. Thomas, Bert Vann, Jeremiah Hester, Robert McMahan, Ben Rudder, J. Wyatt Moore, Europe Smith, Carl Gross, Jim Bryan Holland, Robert Wilborn, John A. Snodgrass, D. Hodge Rogers and Leonard Tiffin. (Associated Press Photo.)

Asheville, N. C., Times
November 20, 1935

The Scottsboro Case

DISCUSSING the Scottsboro case, in his editorial correspondence to The New York Times, John Temple Graves 2d puts forward a timely and sensible suggestion.

There is no longer in Alabama, he finds, a disposition to argue the guilt or innocence of the defendants. Many Alabamians, he thinks, would be well satisfied to see the Negro youths acquitted, provided their defense were conducted by some well known Southern lawyer or lawyers, so that the victory could not be used to exploit Communism among the Negroes.

The point is well made. Forgetting the past of this case, it is time for the defense to be placed in the hands of lawyers whose very presence will not excite animosity in the minds of Alabama people.

as practicing before the Alabama courts is concerned. He referred on the occasion in question to Alabama jurors as "those bigots whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out like frogs', whose chins drip tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy."

We confess that some of the previous tirades from the prosecution against Mr. Leibowitz and his associates were sufficiently intemperate to provoke a retort from him. The fact remains, however, that his retort was of such a nature as to rouse strong feeling against him in the vicinage of the defendants.

Since that is true, it would seem the part of wisdom for some one else to take over the case. The International Labor Defense, which retained him, offended pretty much everybody in Alabama with its abusive telegrams to the judiciary. Mr. Leibowitz then proceeded to make the situation still worse with his address in New York.

Something more than a year ago, he announced that he would withdraw as counsel "unless all Communists are removed from the defense." He was incensed over the "mysterious moves behind the scenes" of the I. L. D., a Communist affiliate. We are not advised whether he and the I. L. D. patched up their differences. As far as the public has been advised, both will be active at the forthcoming trial.

If it were only possible to place the Scottsboro defense in the hands of Alabama attorneys of standing, the forthcoming trial might be held in an atmosphere conducive to the rendering of an impartial verdict. But we have grave misgivings, under the circumstances. With Leibowitz in charge of the defense, all the old prejudices will be aroused. And a conviction this time is not apt to be set aside by the United States Supreme Court. There was a Negro on the Grand Jury which returned the recent indictments.

Richmond, Va., Times-Dispatch
December 8, 1935

Again Scottsboro

WORD comes from New York that Samuel S. Leibowitz will again appear as counsel for the defense in the Scottsboro trials, which are scheduled to open in Decatur, Ala., on January 6. This is bad news.

Without in the least detracting from the humanitarianism which has impelled Mr. Leibowitz to represent the nine Scottsboro defendants through a series of grueling court actions, we feel, none the less, that it will be virtually impossible for them to get justice, so long as he is in the case.

We intend no reflection upon Mr. Leibowitz's ability when we say this. On the contrary, we consider him a lawyer of great talent. But when he delivered an intemperate diatribe against Alabama jurors to a New York audience a couple of years ago, which diatribe was published all over Alabama, he destroyed his usefulness, in so far

New York Evening Post
DEC 24 1935

ALABAMA COUNSEL SOUGHT BY 9 NEGROES

DECATUR, Ala., Dec. 24 (AP).—The Daily said today it had learned from an authoritative source that efforts are being made to obtain two leading Decatur lawyers to defend the nine Negroes in the Scittsboro case.

Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York, who acted as chief counsel in three previous trials, announced more than a year ago that prominent Southern counsel would be obtained.

At Birmingham the nine defendants said they were satisfied with Leibowitz.

"We are plenty satisfied with Mr Leibowitz and want him," said Roy Wright, youngest of the nine Negroes and their spokesman.

Birmingham, Ala. News
December 24, 1935

WANT LEIBOWITZ

But Scottsboro Negroes Don't Object If Southerners Join Council

Reports from Decatur that two Morgan County attorneys were being sought for the Scottsboro defense, brought comment from the Negroes in Birmingham that they did not care who else might join their counsel as long as Samuel Leibowitz was in charge.

The Associated Press quoted The Decatur Daily as saying it had learned from an authoritative source that two prominent attorneys were being sought, and that one other attorney had declined to enter the case.

Leibowitz said more than a year ago that prominent Southern counsel would be obtained. The Negroes are to be arraigned in Decatur Jan. 6 for retrial on charges of attacking Victoria Price and Ruby Bates aboard a freight train March 25, 1931.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5004

U. S. HIGH COURT REVERSES DEATH VERDICT; UPHOLDS I. L. D. IN FIGHT FOR NEGRO JURORS

Four Year World Protest Led by International Labor Defense Forces High Court To Admit That Negro Boys Were Persecuted—Opinion for Norris and Patterson Makes History in Fight for Negro Rights in Black Belt

Four years of unceasing pounding of world protest by millions of workers, Negro and white, all over the world roused by the International Labor Defense and the Communist Party, yesterday found its mark as the United States Supreme Court in a unanimous decision wiped out the death sentences hanging over Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, condemned Scottsboro boys, by throwing the conviction out of court, and paved the way for the liberation of all the rest of the youths.

The verdict was based on the fact that the International Labor Defense gave indisputable proof that the Southern courts had systematically deprived Negroes of their rights to serve as jurors, and that Negroes had been fraudulently kept off the Scottsboro juries.

The decision, a tremendous victory in the struggle for Negro rights, is seen as directly connected with the recent mass outbreak in Harlem against jim-crow oppression and hunger, and the rising struggles of the Negro and white sharecroppers and tenant farmers in Arkansas and Alabama.

Decision Follows Appeal

The decision was handed down on the basis of the appeal carried for the second time into the Supreme Court by the International Labor Defense through its attorneys, Osmond K. Fraenkel and Walter H. Pollak.

Following its overwhelming victory in the court, the International Labor Defense will take immediate steps to win the unconditional and safe liberation of all the boys, the International Labor Defense announced through its executive secretary, Anna Damon.

In view of the denial of constitutional rights in the previous trials, the Supreme Court ordered that "the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion."

This left it up to Alabama to decide whether to attempt to try the defendants again or set them free.

Will Affect Other Cases

The decision yesterday set aside the convictions of Norris and Patterson, who were re-tried after the Supreme Court set aside their first conviction. The five other boys are still awaiting their second trial. But attorneys declared that they cannot be tried again on the present indictments since all the boys were originally named in the bills handed down by the Grand Jury, which has now been impeached by the Supreme Court decision. The present ruling, attorneys stated, will therefore apply to them.

The Court's decision, read by Chief Justice Hughes, stated that the evidence overwhelmingly proved the charge made by the I.L.D. that Negroes were systematically excluded from juries in Alabama. It found that there were many Negroes qualified to serve as jurors who were never called.

This is the second time that the I.L.D. has carried the fight to the Supreme Court, the court having reversed the death verdicts of seven of the nine boys in the first appeal, after which Norris and Patterson were convicted and sentenced again in a second trial.

Forgery Found

In his decision, Chief Justice Hughes found that there had been forgery of names on the Grand Jury rolls to make it appear as if Negroes had been called. The court decision raps the Alabama Supreme Court for not having noticed this and for having refused to quash the indictments on these grounds as demanded by the I.L.D. attorneys.

The Supreme Court in its opinion today found:

"We are of the opinion that the evidence required a different result from that reached in the State court.

"We think that the evidence that for a generation or longer no Negro had been called for service on any jury in Jackson county, that there were Negroes qualified for jury service, that according to the practice of the Jury Commission their names would normally appear on the preliminary list of male citizens of the requisite age but that no names of Negroes were placed on the jury roll, and the testimony with respect to the lack of appropriate consideration of the qualifications of Negroes, established the discrimination which the Constitution forbids.

"The motion to quash the indictment upon that ground should have been granted."

The Court said that regarding Morgan county, where the second trial was held, "the evidence that for many years no Negro had been called for jury service itself tended to show the absence of the names of Negroes from the jury rolls, and the State made no effort to prove their presence."

I.L.D. Led Fight

Four years ago when the nine Scottsboro boys were seized off a freight train and charged with having raped two white girls on the train, their death at the hands of a lynch mob was averted only that their death sentence might be more quickly rushed through in the court. They were tried and sentenced to die in less than 48 hours, with carnival-like scenes around the court.

It was at this point, April, 1931, that the I. L. D. entered the case, with the Communist Party's organ, the Daily Worker, sounding the first call for a mass fight against the frame-up.

It was the I. L. D. later which finally got Ruby Bates and Lester Carter, two of the white witnesses against the boys to confess that their evidence had been perjured and framed with the cooperation of the local authorities. Ruby Bates, one of the white girls who was supposed to have been raped, then joined the I. L. D. in its fight to save the boys.

The decision for the first time gives official recognition to the systematic jim-crow exclusion of all Negroes from jury service. The Supreme Court found that the Alabama courts, including the Alabama Supreme Court had ignored unmistakable evidence of forgery and fraud in the trying of the Scottsboro case.

The decision, the result of the mighty campaign of the Communist Party and the International Labor Defense, is of great historic importance since it now makes it possible for all Negroes to demand Negro jurors in their cases.

day held the constitutional rights of the negroes—Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris—had been violated by "systematic exclusion" of negroes from juries in the county where they were indicted.

The negroes are two of nine indicted on charges of attacking two white women—Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates—aboard a freight train in Jackson county on March 25, 1931, and were convicted with the death penalty in Morgan county in December, 1933.

Lieutenant Governor Thomas E. Knight Jr., retained by the state to prosecute the cases, and Solicitor H. G. Bailey, who directed the grand jury investigation returning the original indictments, today reiterated plans to seek new indictments and bring the negroes to trial.

"I do not know what effect the opinion will have," said Solicitor Bailey at Guntersville where he is conducting a regular session of the Marshall county grand jury, "but something will have to be done."

ALABAMA STUDIES SCOTTSBORO CASE

Officials Silent on Implications of Supreme Court's Decision.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 2.—(AP)—Silence clothed official circles today on the effect of the United States Supreme Court's decision in reversing two death sentences imposed in the "Scottsboro case" because the names of negroes did not appear on the jury rolls of Jackson county.

The nation's highest court yesterday held the constitutional rights of the negroes—Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris—had been violated by "systematic exclusion" of negroes from juries in the county where they were indicted.

The negroes are two of nine indicted on charges of attacking two white women—Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates—aboard a freight train in Jackson county on March 25, 1931, and were convicted with the death penalty in Morgan county in December, 1933.

Lieutenant Governor Thomas E. Knight Jr., retained by the state to prosecute the cases, and Solicitor H. G. Bailey, who directed the grand jury investigation returning the original indictments, today reiterated plans to seek new indictments and bring the negroes to trial.

"I do not know what effect the opinion will have," said Solicitor Bailey at Guntersville where he is conducting a regular session of the Marshall county grand jury, "but something will have to be done."

NO LAWS IN SOUTH BAR NEGROES FROM JURIES

By W. F. CALDWELL,
Associated Press Staff Writer.

There are no laws in southern states barring negroes from jury duty, although by custom comparatively few actually have been called.

This was emphasized today by officials of several states in noting the United States Supreme Court decision reversing the Scottsboro (Ala.) cases on the ground that negroes were systematically excluded from jury duty.

Commenting on this matter Attorney-General William McGraw, of Texas, said at Austin:

"Texas statutes and the conduct of criminal trials are in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court. Generally when (negroes are) drawn for service a suitable excuse is presented and always accepted. Texans have demonstrated perfect ability to properly control the negro question within the constitution."

Attorney-General A. A. F. Seawell, of North Carolina, said the decision "gives us pause for thought. It may mean more appeal attempts to the United States court from verdicts of our court. The effect it will have cannot be predicted at this time."

From Assistant State Attorney-General W. F. Barry Jr., of Tennessee, came the prediction that "I don't think that decision will have any influence whatever in the south except probably on a re-trial of those cases."

Negroes are eligible for jury service in Arkansas if they hold a poll tax receipt which is a necessary qualification for an elector. Assistant Attorney-General Thomas Fitzhugh, of that state, said:

"It just happens that no jury commission selects negroes for jury duty. It may be just a coincidence."

Attorney-General Cary D. Landis said the Scottsboro decision will have no effect on judicial procedure in Florida. Calling attention to the fact that there is no law in Florida to prevent negroes from serving on juries and that jury lists are made up from qualified voters, the attorney-general continued:

"Negroes are allowed to register to vote. They then become eligible to vote and are qualified for jury duty. Negroes have served on state court juries in Florida but not in recent years."

The office of the Mississippi attorney-general pointed to the records of that state supreme court having set aside a conviction of a negro in open court. The commissioners are sen- of jurors.

Attorney-General John M. Daniel, had negroes on juries. I have not had Carolina, said negroes "sit opportunity to study the decision as juries in some counties." yet, but if the Supreme Court has held anta a few months ago a judge it necessary to have negroes on juries motion to quash an indict- chances are we will have to take cogniinst a negro on the ground zance of it."

ey-General A. P. Staples, of said:

Magnificent Victory On Scottsboro Won By Mass Movement

—— Statement of Central Committee, C. P., U.S.A. ——

Announcement of the Supreme Court decision on the Scottsboro Case, upholding the defense on every point, is a magnificent victory for the nine boys, and for the whole movement for Negro Liberation.

It is a smashing confirmation of the correctness of the defense policy, conducted from the beginning by the I. L. D., on the proposals of the Communist Party and with its full support, of the broadest mass movement, combined with the most expert legal defense.

The identical decision in the cases of both Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, once and for all disposes of the malicious slanders broadcast against the defense by Samuel Leibowitz and his associates of the "American Scottsboro Committee," who unsuccessfully tried to drive out the I. L. D. and the Communists, and failing that, to split the defense.

Every conscious worker who realizes that the Communist Party made possible this victory, will increase his support to this Party; thousands more must now understand that their place is in the ranks of the Communist Party.

Recent events in Harlem, demonstrating that the Negro masses will not forever remain passive under Jim-crowism, starvation, and special oppression, also played a part in bringing victory at this moment.

Let this victory be followed up at once!

Demand the immediate, unconditional release of the boys!

Build the solid united front of Negro and white against every injustice!

Organize now to take up and fight every case of discrimination against Negroes!

Build the International Labor Defense!

For the Central Committee, C. P., U.S.A.

EARL BROWDER, General Secretary
JAMES W. FORD

I.L.D. Hails Triumph

By ANNA DAMON
Acting National Secretary of I. L. D.

The complete victory won from the United States Supreme Court in the appeals of Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, is another triumphant proof of the might of mass pressure and mass protest. Without the untiring world-wide mass campaign organized and led by the International Labor Defense and the Communist Party during the four years of the Scottsboro case, this victory would have been impossible.

The most significant aspect of this victory is not alone the reversing of the death sentences against the innocent Negro boys, but the fact that for the first time in its history, the United States Supreme Court was forced to make an unequivocal, clear statement on the illegality of barring Negroes from jury service in the South.

For four years the International Labor Defense has battled this point. The I. L. D. knew that to prove the innocence of the nine Scottsboro Boys was not enough to save them. In its fight it tore open the whole frame-up lynch system of Southern boss rule, exposed the unconstitutional, systematic exclusion of Negro people from jury service in the South, demanded enforcement of this right along with all the other rights denied them by the lynch lords of the South.

The International Labor Defense is proud of its victory. And in congratulating all those millions of people, Negro and white, who helped achieve it, we call upon them to follow up this triumph with an uncompromising fight to obtain the complete freedom of all these boys. We call on them to flood the State Supreme Court of Alabama, at Montgomery, Alabama, with demands for the complete freedom of these boys. There must be no re-indictments!

The Supreme Court decision orders the State courts to take the next step. That step must be complete freedom.

Demand this freedom, immediate, unconditional, and with safeguards against the lynchers!

The Herndon case comes up for appeal the middle of this month. Every minute must increase the volume of demands upon this court for his complete freedom. We know what mass protest can accomplish. Let us celebrate the Scottsboro victory by another smashing blow to the whole system of Jim-Crow frame-up rule—the complete freedom of Angelo Herndon.

Scottsboro Prosecutor Seen Moving for New Indictment

Negroes Expected to Be Added to Jury Roll, But Whether They Will Serve Is Not Known

BOAZ, Ala., April 4.—Solicitor H. G. Bailey of Jackson County, first prosecutor in the Scottsboro case, is moving to have Negroes added to the Jackson County jury rolls preparatory to re-indicting the defendants, he said today.

The step is intended to get around the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court which reversed the death sentences against Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, on the grounds, raised by the International Labor Defense attorneys, that Negroes are systematically excluded from grand and petit juries in Alabama.

When revision of the jury rolls has been completed, a special grand jury session will be called to re-indict the nine innocent boys, Bailey indicated. He refused to say whether Negroes would be permitted to actually serve on the jury or be peremptorily challenged and excluded for "cause."

I.L.D. Fight Lauded

William N. Jones, a leading member of the staff of the Baltimore Afro-American and chairman of the National Scottsboro-Herndon Action Committee, yesterday hailed the Scottsboro decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, reversing the death sentences against Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, as a victory for the world-wide mass pressure organized and led by the Communist Party and the International Labor Defense. Ruby Bates, Scottsboro star defense witness, at the same time expressed her pride that she had been able "to have a share in the mass pressure campaign of the I. L. D. which forced the Supreme Court to order those innocent boys a new trial."

She urged that funds be rushed to the I. L. D. to enable it to push the fight to complete victory.

Jones called on "every colored man and woman in this country to rally now and make this a finished job." He declared that if those Negro leaders who have so far held back from the united front fight for the boys are "fair and honest enough now to face the truth that the proof of the pudding is in the eating, this decision will vindicate the effectiveness of a militant program of action aimed at the roots of the problem of discrimination."

The Scottsboro case, he said, may well become the starting point for a new leadership and new tactics in the struggle of the Negro people for complete political, economic and social equality. Jones' statement follows in full:

"The signal victory written in the far-reaching Supreme Court decision on the Scottsboro case should settle once and for all the attitude of the masses of colored people to the unbending fight the International Labor Defense has kept up in this case.

Communists Led Fight

"And back of the International Labor Defense, it must not be forgotten, has stood the far-flung organization of the Communist Party which has brought into the struggle the impact of world-wide mass action.

"Whatever happens in this celebrated case now, the shameful system of injustice in Southern courts has been given a mortal blow. If colored leadership is fair and honest enough now to face the truth that the proof of the pudding is in the eating this decision will vindicate the effectiveness of a militant program of action aimed at the roots of the problem of racial discrimination in Alabama courts. It will also vindicate the conclusion of some of us who have followed the developments in this case that only a program of mass action as set up by the International Labor Defense will ever be able to blast through this deep-seated structure of legal lynchings.

"We might just as well be frank enough now to admit that there is not enough religion and ethics in the South to cope with problems of this kind, and that any organization whose appeal is based wholly on these considerations is doomed to failure.

"The Scottsboro case may well become the starting point for a completely new movement, new type of leadership, new tactics around which our 14,000,000 colored folk may rally in their struggle for complete political, economic and social equality, for equal opportunities, in this country.

"As chairman of the recently organized National Scottsboro-Herndon Action Committee, I want to call on every colored man and woman in this country to rally now and make this a finished job. For while this decision will rip out the flagrant color bar in the jury system in the South, its practical effectiveness will depend wholly on our persistence in carrying on an unabated fight.

"Even this decision will not soften the consciences of officials like former District Attorney Thomas E. Knight, Jr. Such indomitable racial prejudice can only be crushed and beaten to the ground. The International Labor Defense has the program and will do this. Let's rally behind this organization."

Ruby Bates, who threw a monkey-wrench into the Alabama frame-up machinery by repudiating her former testimony and exposing how Alabama officials had coerced her and Victoria Price into testifying that the boys had "raped" them on a moving freight train, yesterday expressed her joy over the decision. Her statement follows:

Ruby Bates Hails Victory

"I can hardly find words in which to say the joy I felt over the victory the I. L. D. won from the United States Supreme Court just about four years after the whole Scottsboro case began. And I feel proud that I was able to have a share in the mass pressure campaign of the I. L. D. which forced the Supreme Court to order those innocent boys a new trial. I am glad that I was able to convince many peopple in different parts of the country about the Scottsboro frame-up and to get them to line up behind the I. L. D.

"I wish I could do a lot more. I wish I could talk to millions of people and tell them the truth about the Scottsboro case and ask them to do whatever they can to help the I. L. D. get those boys out free and safe, and to raise as much money as they possibly can to carry on. I know it will take a lot of money to defend the Scottsboro boys and I join my voice with the National Office of the I. L. D. in asking all the friends and members to send in right away as much as they can to Room 612, 80 East 11th Street, New York City."

Lynchings—1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5005

2 Youngest Scottsboro Boys to Have a Hearing

I.L.D. Moves For Trial in Juvenile Court of Ray Wright and Eugene Williams—Cost of Action To Be $2,000—Districts Lag in Drive

Steps to obtain hearings in juvenile court for Roy Wright and Eugene Williams, the two youngest boys held in the Scottsboro case, both of whom are minors, are being taken by Osmond K. Fraenkel, New York atorney retained by the International Labor Defense in the cases, it was announced yesterday.

Judge B. L. Malone, of the juvenile court of Decatur, Ala., has agreed that he will set the date for the hearing within the next few days, Fraenkel said.

"Judge Malone was interviewed over the week-end by S. B. Powell, Birmingham attorney associated with us in the case," Mr. Fraenkel said. "He agreed to set the date for the hearings, and told Mr. Powell that he had notified Attorney-General Albert A. Carmichael of Alabama to that effect."

The cases of these two boys were separated from the others on account of their ages by Judge James H. Horton, when Fraenkel made application for a writ of habeas corpus in their behalf, on June 1, 1933 charging that they were being held illegally without trial, he said. Both boys were 13 years old at the time of their arrest in 1931.

A mistrial occurred in the original trial of Roy Wright, in April 1931, and he has never been tried since. The Alabama State Supreme Court, in March, 1932, granted Eugene Williams a new trial on an appeal taken by the International Labor Defense.

Under Alabama law, Mr. Fraenkel stated, the judge of the juvenile court must pass on two issues whether a defendant is innocent or guilty, and if guilty, whether he can be reformed. If he finds a defendant incorrigible, the cases are sent back to the ordinary criminal court for trial.

Complete Trial

The hearings before Judge Malone, Mr. Fraenkel said, will have all the characteristics of a trial, and witnesses will be brought, as they were in the previous trials of Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris at Decatur, Ala., to prove the innocence of Eugene Williams and Roy Wright.

"We will demand the complete freedom of these two boys," Mr. Fraenkel said.

Further legal steps in the cases of Patterson and Norris, whose convictions were reversed by a decision of the United States Supreme Court on April 1, are waiting on the mandate of that court, which will be handed down soon, he said.

Trial to Cost $2,000

Steps being taken to force hearings immediately on the cases of Eugene Williams and Roy Wright, youngest of the Scottsboro boys, who have been remanded to the juvenile court, will necessitate expenses, counting legal expenses alone, of a minimum of $2,000, Anna Damon, acting national secretary of the International Labor Defense, announced yesterday.

Meanwhile, receipts in the campaign for a $20,000 fighting fund to force the freedom of all the Scottsboro boys, following reversal of the convictions against them by the United States Supreme Court, dropped again yesterday to $108.95, a figure hundreds of dollars below the daily expenditure for the campaign and legal steps in the Scottsboro and Herndon cases.

Districts Fail to Respond

Among the collections turned in yesterday were $41 from the New York District of the Communist Party, and $10—the first contribution—from the Boston District of the International Labor Defense. The remainder of the figure was made up by individual donations.

Districts which have not so far responded to the appeals of the Central Committee of the Communist Party, and the National Executive Committee of the International Labor Defense, for a $20,000 Scottsboro Defense Fund of the I. L. D., include Detroit, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, and New Jersey.

Total received in drive $2,411.13
Still to the raised: 17,588.87

Rush funds for the $20,000 Scottsboro defense drive to the International Labor Defense, Room 610, 80 E. 11th St., New York City.

Scorns 'Sidetrack'

LIEUT. GOV. KNIGHT

Knight Cool To Negro Jury Issue

Names In Boxes No Part Of Prosecutor's Duties, Liebowitz Riding South

By JOSEPH R. M'COY

Following receipt of information that Samuel Liebowitz, of New York, attorney for six of the seven negro Scottsboro case defendants, would arrive in Montgomery tomorrow for a conference with Lieut. Gov. Knight, special prosecutor of the cases for the State, it developed that the latter not only has no appointment with Mr. Liebowitz, but knows nothing of his reported prospective arrival here.

Communicated with by telephone, the Lieutenant Governor, advised of the reported conference, said: "I have not heard from Mr. Liebowitz and have no appointment with Mr. Liebowitz relative to the Scottsboro cases or anything else

"I have had nothing to do with exclusion of any race from juries in Alabama and I propose to have nothing to do with inclusion of any race on the jury rolls of any county. I feel that as special prosecutor it would be the height of impropriety for me to suggest to the jury commission who should or should not be included on the jury rolls of a county from which a jury would be drawn before which I would try a case."

Mr. Knight's statement infers that the matter of exclusion or inclusion of negroes on jury rolls in Alabama is a matter he will, as special State's prosecutor, refuse to discuss with Mr. Liebowitz or any other attorney in the Scottsboro cases, should he be broached by them. It is one, however, that they, as a matter of course, would reasonably be expected to bring up if they were not forewarned that such action would be useless, in view of the fact that recent reversal by the U. S. Supreme Court of the judgments of conviction of two of the Scottsboro defendants, Clarence Norris and Heywood Patterson, was based on the holding that the evidence tended to show negroes were systematically excluded from jury rolls in Jackson County on account of race, in violation of the 14th amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and that the constitutional rights of Norris and Patterson had been invaded.

Though the U. S. Supreme Court's mandate, officially advising the Supreme Court of Alabama of reversal of the cases, has not yet been received, and until it is, they cannot be remanded back to the Circuit Court of Jackson County where they originated, O. K. Fraenkel, also of New York, I. L. D. attorney for the Scottsboro defendants, has already made a trip to Alabama to call on his clients since the reversal decisions were announced in Washington. Liebowitz who claims he represents all of the defendants with the exception of Patterson, has not been here so far, but from New York dispatched a telegram of congratulation to Norris.

Lieut. Gov. Knight, who has prosecuted the cases throughout, in both trial and appellate courts, has already announced he will ask that new indictments in each be returned by a Jackson County Grand Jury. He can take no action until after the U. S. Supreme Court's mandate arrives and the cases are remanded by the Supreme Court of Alabama.

SCOTTSBORO BAIL HEARING FOR 2 IS SET

Lt. Governor Knight Announces Opposition to Any Bond

Daily Worker
4-19-35

Hearing on petitions for bail for two of the Scottsboro boys, Willie Robinson and Olen Montgomery, has been set for the first week in July, it was learned yesterday, the International Labor Defense announced.

The hearings, which will be in the nature of a trial, with witnesses brought to show the innocence of the boys, and briefs filed citing the decision of Judge Horton, and other documents, will be held in Decatur, before Judge W. W. Callahan, before whom Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris were tried last year.

State Fights Bail

Lieutenant-Governor Thomas E. Knight, former attorney-general and now special prosecutor of the Scottsboro boys, has announced he will oppose the granting of any bail at all to these boys who have been proved innocent, and are not now even under indictments, being held on false warrants recently sworn out again by Victoria Price.

No date has yet been set for the hearings in juvenile court before Probate Judge Malone of Decatur, of Eugene Williams and Roy Wright, the two youngest boys. The I.L.D. is pressing to have these hearings held at the same time as the bail hearings. These also will be in the nature of a trial.

Fund Lag a Peril

The bail petitions, filed by Attorney C. B. Powell of Birmingham, will be argued by Attorney Osmond K. Fraenkel of New York, who has been in charge of the Scottsboro proceedings since the last trial, and Powell.

The slackening up in the Scottsboro $20,000 drive of the I. L. D. to meet the daily expenses of the campaign, and for the very heavy extensified collection of funds for penses of these hearings, is endangering the fight to free the Scottsboro boys, Anna Damon, acting national secretary, pointed out.

A flood of protests to Governor Bibb Graves of Alabama at Montgomery, demanding the uncondi-

I. L. D. COUNSEL FORFEIT BAIL

Lawyers Charged With Scottsboro Bribery Jump $4,000 Bond

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., May 30.—Failure of Sol Kone and Daniel Swift, New York lawyers, to appear in court here yesterday to face charges of attempted bribery in the Scottsboro case, resulted in the forfeiture of a $4,000 bond.

Accused of offering Victoria Price $1,000 to change her testimony against the Scottsboro boys, the New Yorkers were kidnapped in Nashville on October 1 and removed to Huntsville. On warrants sworn to by Mrs. Price they were arrested and charged with attempted bribery, and placed under $2,000 bail each, furnished by two Huntsville residents.

The case against J. W. Pearson, alleged go-between in the case, was nol-prossed. Pearson, who lives in Birmingham, appeared in court for trial.

TEST IN SCOTTSBORO CASE SET FOR JULY

Habeas Corpus Petition For Pair To Be Heard At Decatur

DECATUR, ALA., May 30.—(AP)—An expected test of evidence against two of the nine negro defendants in the "Scottsboro case" was postponed until an indefinite date in July today by Judge A. A. Callahan here, on agreement of opposing counsel.

The hearing of a habeas corpus petition filed for Olen Montgomery and Willie Roberson had been scheduled for 9 a.m., tomorrow. C. B. Powell, Birmingham attorney, acting for Osmond K. Fraenkel, New York attorney brought into the case by the International Labor Defense, in presenting the petitions.

Judge Callahan granted the postponement without fixing a date for the hearing.

Montgomery and Roberson are charged with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price aboard a freight train in Jackson County on March 25, 1931. Indictments against them in Jackson County were held invalid by the ruling of the United States Supreme Court in setting aside death sentences against Haygood Patterson and Clarence Norris, two other Scottsboro defendants.

The Supreme Court decision held the negroes had been deprived of constitutional rights by the "systematic exclusion" of negroes from the grand petit juries involved in their cases.

Mrs. Price swore out new warrants against the nine negroes following the court's decision. New indictments will be sought in Jackson County when the new grand jury convenes, probably next Fall.

Montgomery and Roberson were sentenced to death, along with six of the other seven defendants, in the first trials at Scottsboro.

One of these convictions was set aside because the defendant was held a juvenile, and the other seven were set aside by the United States Supreme Court, which held the negroes had not had benefit of adequate counsel at the first trials at Scottsboro.

Later hearings in the case were transferred to Morgan Circuit Court here under a change of venue.

Albany-Decatur, Ala. Daily
May 30, 1935

HEARING HERE ON PETITION OF TWO NEGROES DELAYED

Callahan Announces Postponement to Next July

EXACT DATE IS TO BE DECIDED

Counsel Agreement Is Reported By Jurist

Hearing of a habeas corpus petition filed in behalf of two of the nine defendants in the Scottsboro case, scheduled for hearing at nine o'clock Friday morning, has been postponed to July, it was stated today by Judge W. W. Callahan, presiding.

Judge Callahan added that the exact date of the hearing had not been determined and said the postponement followed an agreemnt by counsel.

The petition had been filed in behalf of Olen Montgomery and Willie Roberson by C .B. Powell, of Birmingham, said to have been acting for Osmond K. Fraenkel, of New York, retained as counsel by the International Labor Defense.

The petitions largely are based on a decision of former Judge James E. Horton in setting aside a death sentence imposed on Haywood Patterson ,another of the defendants, holding that the evidence was insufficient to warrant the verdict.

Montgomery and Roberson were once under death sentence imposed in Jackson county on charges of attacking two white women aboard a Southern railway freight train in Jackson county on March 25, 1931. Their sentences were set aside by the United States supreme court on November 8, 1932, the court holding that they had not had the benefit of adequate counsel.

Since that time neither of the negroes has been brought to trial, but both recently were named in new warrants sworn out by Mrs. Victoria Price at Scottsboro. This action was taken after the United States supreme court had set aside death sentences imposed on Patterson and Clarence Norris, holding their constitutional rights were violated because the names of no negroes appeared on the jury rolls in Jackson county where they were indicted ,and in Morgan county where they were tried.

Absence of the names of negroes, the court held was proof of "systematic exclusion."

Norris, Patterson Leave Death Cell

Clarence Norris and Heywood Patterson, two of the negro Scottsboro Case defendants, who for months have been confined at Kilby Penitentiary in the cell block reserved for condemned prisoners, were transferred early yesterday morning to the Jefferson County Jail in Birmingham, where their co-defendants are being held and will remain pending retrial.

The transfer was made by Sheriff J. S. Sandlin, of Morgan County, to whom the two prisoners were turned over by Warden Frank A. Boswell on an order issued by Circuit Judge W. W. Callahan, of Decatur. There was no opposition to the transfer by either Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael or Lieut.-Gov. Thomas E.

Anniston, Ala. Star
June 11, 1935

SCOTTSBORO—You heard much of the poll tax amendment in the campaign last year. A big majority of the candidates for public office told the people they were for it and would use any influence they possessed to persuade the Legislature to submit it. You now wonder, of course, what obstacle has been thrown in the way. A short, concise answer may be made: The Scottsboro cases. Many members of the Legislature fear the result of ratification of the amendment that would permit any person, otherwise qualified, to vote after paying two or three years' poll taxes. Under the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Scottsboro cases names of negroes have been placed in the jury boxes in Alabama. The next step, of course, will be to put the names of many other negroes on the poll lists. Many members of the Legislature fear the ratification of the poll tax amendment will result in a general demand on the part of negroes for their registration on payment of the two or three years' poll taxes. Under the present Constitution no person can become a voter until he has paid all poll taxes due since ratification of the Constitution in 1901.

'SCOTTSBORO CASE' WRIT TURNED DOWN

Judge Overrules Prisoner's Plea for Liberty.

The fact that there was no negro on the jury which convicted Carlos Cartino, negro, given a five-year sentence in federal court at Birmingham, Ala., March 5, 1934, does not entitle him to his freedom, despite the United States supreme court decision in the Scottsboro, Ala., case, it was decided yesterday by Judge E. Marvin Underwood in the district federal court here.

Cartino, found guilty of stealing interstate freight, and confined in the Atlanta federal prison, sought a writ of habeas corpus on the ground there were no negroes on either the grand jury that indicted him or the jury that heard the case. He cited the Scottsboro case as the basis for a claim that he was illegally convicted.

The government, however, introduced records to show that names of 66 negroes were placed in the jury box at the term of court at which Cartino was convicted, and Judge Underwood ruled that the fact that none was drawn for service did not invalidate the proceedings.

NEW SCOTTSBORO QUIZ PLANNED IN FEW DAYS

Jackson County Jury Board Nearing Completion of New Rolls.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Oct. 15.—(AP)—A new investigation of the "Scottsboro case" by a Jackson county grand jury in special session, Lieutenant Governor Thomas E. Knight Jr. said today will be asked within a "few days."

The lieutenant governor, who has been retained as special prosecutor in the case in which nine negroes are charged with attacking two white women, said the jury board in Jackson county was nearing completion of drafting new jury rolls.

Previous indictments under which all of the negroes have been tried at least once were nullified by the United States supreme court in setting aside two death sentences in the case on the grounds that negroes were "systematically excluded" from grand and trial juries in Jackson and Morgan counties.

The original indictments were returned on March 31, 1931, within a week after the alleged attacks took place aboard a Southern Railway freight train in Jackson county, and the negroes were arrested at Paint Rock.

After first trials here in which eight of the nine were convicted, and the ninth gained a mistrial, the verdicts were set aside on appeal, and a change of venue was granted to Morgan county.

Lieutenant Governor Knight said if new indictments were obtained at Scottsboro, the cases would revert to Morgan county circuit court for trial under the original change of venue.

Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser
November 1, 1935

Scottsboro Case Refunds Barred

It was held in an opinion rendered yesterday to Comptroller Charles W. Le by the office of Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael, that Morgan County cannot be reimbursed from the $35,000 appropriation made by the Legislature to cover the cost of disposing of the "Scottsboro cases" for payments to witnesses and jurors in these cases made by Morgan County and charged to Jackson County. Neither can payments to jurors and witnesses made by Jackson County in these cases, be refunded from the appropriation. First trial of the "Scottsboro cases" was held in Jackson County, where the crime charged occurred. Subsequent trials were held in Morgan County on a change of venue.

The act making the appropriation is clear and unambiguous, the opinion sets out, in stating that the money appropriated is for the payment of "unpaid costs and fees of jurors, officers and witnesses, etc." Throughout the act, it is cited, the word "payment" is used, the word "reimbursement" being omitted. "The law is well settled," the opinion says, "that though other meanings may be possible of inference, the clearly expressed meaning of a statute and the intent of the Legislature must prevail in its construction."

Information was sought by the Comptroller as to whether if a witness or juror has been paid by Morgan County and the payment charged to Jackson County, the appropriation could be used to reimburse Morgan County as an unpaid claim against Jackson County; also, if witnesses or jurors in these cases have actually been paid by Jackson County, could the county be reimbursed. The opinion answers both questions in the negative.

Lynchings - 1935
6
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

5006

5006

Birmingham, Ala. News
December 15, 1935

LEIBOWITZ TO REMAIN IN SCOTTSBORO CASE

Negro Defendants Turn Down Suggestion Of Using Southern Lawyer's Aid

The nine "Scottsboro Negroes" who will face trial again early next month in Decatur on charges of attacking two white girls nearly five years ago Saturday said they were "satisfied" with Samuel Leibowitz as a defense attorney and that they believe they would fare better with his aid than with the services of a Southern lawyer.

Southern white men and women interested in the Negroes' case had suggested that the defendants might fare better with the aid of an outstanding Southern attorney than under the New Yorker's guidance.

Leibowitz, in New York after the last trial in Decatur, was quoted as saying "justice is impossible in that place."

Arraignment of the Negroes has been postponed until Jan. 6.

Andrew Wright, acting as spokesman for the nine, told a newspaper reporter Saturday at the Jefferson County Jail that the group "is well satisfied with Mr. Leibowitz's service."

"I believe we'll get along better with Mr. Leibowitz and I'll take him," Wright said.

"Me, too," the others said.

Letters from sympathizers addressed to "Scottsboro Boys, Alabama," were pasted on the cell walls.

Postponement at the request of Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of counsel for the Negroes, was announced here Friday night by Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., retained by the state as special prosecutor. The postponement, the lieutenant governor said, was at the request and agreement of Mr. Leibowitz.

"The trials will proceed rapidly, with practically no delay due to the postponement of arraignment," Lieut. Gov. Knight said.

The Negroes were to have been arraigned under new indictments returned a month ago at Scottsboro by a Grand Jury that included one Negro in its personnel, the first within the memory of oldest residents to serve in such a capacity.

New indictments were made necessary by a United States Supreme Court decision setting aside death sentences imposed in Morgan Circuit Court (Decatur) on grounds there had been "systematic exclusion" of Negroes from Grand and Petit Juries.

The Negroes are charged with having attacked Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, Huntsville mill workers, aboard a freight train in Jackson County, March 25, 1931.

Eight of the Negroes were sentenced to death in Jackson County in April, 1931, but the U. S. Supreme Court granted new trials to seven on the grounds they did not have adequate counsel.

In the case of the eighth the Alabama Supreme Court held he was a juvenile, and for the ninth a mistrial resulted when a jury could not agree.

Under a change of venue, Patterson and Norris were tried again in Morgan County and convicted. Under Alabama law the cases go back to Morgan County for trial under the new indictments.

The Negroes are held in jail here.

New York Evening Post

DEC 19 1935

SCOTTSBORO BOYS GET DEFENSE AID

United Front of Liberal Groups Formed for Defense of Alabamans

The defense of the Scottsboro boys, hitherto in the hands of the International Labor Defense, Communist affiliate, will be directed henceforth by an inclusive, non-political committee.

Five national organizations have banded together, it was learned today, to form a new "united front" committee for the defense of the nine Alabama Negroes accused of attacking two white women.

Convictions of two of the nine have been set aside by the United States Supreme Court because of the exclusion of Negroes from their juries. New indictments were voted by a Grand Jury last month, with a Negro farmer on the panel.

Leibowitz to Conduct Defense

The new defense committee will begin to function at once, in preparation for the new trials. Samuel Leibowitz, who took part in the negotiations leading to the new committee, will again, in association with Alabama counsel, conduct the defense.

The decision of the Communist Party to agree to a new committee was dictated in part by its new policy of co-operation with liberals and progressives, but also by the fact that Mr. Leibowitz has won the personal loyalty of the defendants who have placed their fate entirely in his hands.

The introduction of non-Communist elements into the defense committee is expected to have a salutary effect on Southern public opinion, which, to an extent, has linked the case of the Scottsboro boys with Communism and the Communist Party.

Sponsors Are Sought

The new committee will be made up of representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People, the Urban League, the American Civil Liberties Union, the League for Industrial Democracy and the International Labor Defense.

The National Association is the outstanding organization in the nation concerning itself with the welfare of the Negro race. It has a large membership of philanthropic non-colored people of conservative political beliefs, as well as liberals.

One of the first efforts of the new committee will be to enlist a large and representative committee of sponsors to be chosen from all political parties, religions and races. The new committee will have a working agreement with the American Scottsboro Committee, composed of leading Negro ministers, social workers and educators.

PLEASE WRITE, ASK SCOTTSBORO BOYS

LEIBOWITZ READY TO DEFEND BOYS

Haywood

A plea for letters from those who believe in his right and a promise to try to answer all who write, was made public Wednesday from Haywood Patterson, one of the nine Scottsboro boys who will face the special grand jury in Scottsboro today where a new attempt to get lynch indictments against all the boys will be made.

The letter which Patterson sent to the International Labor Defense in New York City reads:

"My dear comrades and workers:

"It affords me the most greatest of pleasure to write to you this afternoon. It is very lonely here during all those lonesome and miserable days, and I want to tell you how the days are with me. A day seems mighty long and dark in such a place as this. It is easy to get discouraged and even stand in doubt of the fight which I know you are all continually carrying onward in my behalf. I am compelled and must suggest that I could so very much myself and be more comfortable and cheerful if each one of you workers who have an interest in me would write me a letter. Every letter is just like letting in rays of sunshine. And it will encourage me and give me more courage and new hope for life.

"I ever thank you one and all for your kindness in giving your assistance to one who is in my circumstances. Of course, I have not a university education but my promise is to do my very utmost to answer an interesting letter to each and every one who may be-dre to write me. I can tell you of he South, and you can tell me of the world outside.

"I shall appreciate the thought behind the deed as much as the leed itself.

"HAYWOOD PATTERSON,
"Jeffereson County Jail,
"Birmingham, Ala."

Scottsboro Trials Set for Next Month

Whether or not the new Scottsboro trials, tentatively scheduled for next month at Decatur, find him in the midst of a city political campaign, Samuel S. Leibowitz, candidate for the Democratic nomination as district attorney in Kings County, will go to Alabama to continue his defense of the victims of the now world famous Scottsboro frame-up.

"I shall let nothing interfere with my defense of these boys," Mr. Leibowitz yesterday informed The Amsterdam News. He reiterated the pledge made when his candidacy for office was first announced. "I will continue the fight for their freedom," he said, "and will serve as their counsel in Alabama until they have been freed and vindicated before the whole world."

9-7-35

The Scottsboro defense attorney announced his candidacy for the Kings county post last June. He entered the Democratic primaries in opposition to William F. X. Geoghan, incumbent. Should he emerge victorious in the primaries on September 17, he will be actively engaged in the campaign for election throughout October. At the time he announced his candidacy he said: "Election to any office in the United States could not make me desert those boys."

Announcement was made Tuesday in Montgomery by Lieutenant Governor Thomas E. Knight, Jr., that the new trials would probably be held next month. He also said that the county jury boxes were being refilled to include the names of Negroes in accordance to a requirement imposed by the United States Supreme Court which last spring reversed the convictions of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson on the grounds that Negroes were systematically excluded from jury service. Knight is the special prosecutor in the case. At the time that the case began in the Spring of 1931, he was attorney general.

Norris and Patterson are two of nine youths charged with assaulting two white women, Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, near Scottsboro in March, 1931. At a trial, dominated by an atmosphere of mob violence, eight of the boys were convicted and sentenced to death. In the case of the youngest boy a mistrial was declared.

The International Labor Defense entered the case and gained from the Supreme Court a reversal of the decisions handed down by the Scottsboro Court. Mr. Liebowitz was retained by the I. L. D., and a second trial was held at Decatur. Patterson was again convicted, although Ruby Bates reversed her testimony and took the stand in his behalf. Presiding Judge James Horton ordered a new trial.

At the new trial in November, 1933, Patterson and Norris, the only two defendants tried, were both convicted and sentenced to death. An appeal was made to the Supreme Court, which resulted in a second reversal of the lower court's decision. Meanwhile Leibowitz had broken with the I. L. D. on the matter of tactics in defending the boys. The American Scottsboro Committee was organized to continue the defense of the boys with Leibowitz as counsel. Both groups continued in the case, the committee representing Norris in the last appeal, and the I. L. D., representing Patterson.

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

5007

Extend Scottsboro Victory, Aid Defense, Ford Urges

By James W. Ford

(Member Central Committee of the Communist Party)

Dr. George E. Haynes, vice-chairman of the American Scottsboro Committee, stated, as reported in the December 4th issue of the New Masses, that "if the boys stick with the I. L. D., the American Scottsboro Committee would wash their hands of them and let them take their medicine." [Emphasis mine—J. W. F.]

What has the I. L. D. meant for the boys? It has meant victory after victory! But that is not what you meant, Dr. Haynes! You meant that the boys should die! But your wish shall not come true as long as the I. L. D. exists, as long as we are able to build up a broad mass defense behind such able and honorable legal representatives as Osmond Fraenkel, Walter H. Pollak, Joseph Brodsky and Ben Davis, Jr.

The I. L. D. is now in urgent need of funds. It must have at least $10,000 at once! The I. L. D. relies mainly on developing mass campaigns to supplement court action, nevertheless the financial statement of the I. L. D. for three and a half years shows that the biggest item of the $61,825 collected—$38,181, or 62 per cent, went for legal and court proceedings and investigations.

Six thousand dollars are needed immediately in connection with the appeal to the Supreme Court. There is a $2,000 deficit from the old account that must be met; $2,000 are needed for incidentals. This $10,000 should be raised in the next few weeks. Each district of the Communist Party is called upon to do its share and to help the I. L. D. in its district to raise the quota.

We call upon all workers, intellectuals and justice-loving people to contribute to this fund. Send your contribution to the National Office of the International Labor Defense at 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

New York Times

JAN 9 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE.

For the second time the United States Supreme Court has decided to review the findings of Alabama courts in the Scottsboro case. Its first intervention came in the Fall of 1932. At that time it ordered new trials for the seven Negroes then condemned to death on charges of attacking two white women. In reaching this decision it did not at all pronounce upon the question of guilt or innocence, but simply ruled that the ordinary methods of a fair trial had not been followed in the State courts and that a new trial must therefore be granted the defendants.

At present two of these defendants are again under sentence of death, while the five others are awaiting trial. The Supreme Court's decision to review the proceedings in the case of the two found guilty for the second time means that their sentences will be suspended until arguments in the case have been heard. The right to "due process of law" in all matters affecting life and property is guaranteed by the Constitution to the humblest citizen. The court once more stands forth as the defender of that right when it accepts the responsibility of determining whether the second case was fairly tried.

New York Evening Post

JAN 9 1935

Behind the Scottsboro Case

In reviewing death sentences against the two Scottsboro Negroes the Supreme Court of the United States will also be reviewing the whole judicial apparatus of the South as it is used for day-to-day repression of Negro rights.

Patterson and Norris, sentenced to die on February 8, are Negroes tried for rape by a jury drawn from a panel from which all Negroes were systematically excluded.

Exclusion of Negroes from jury panels is certainly a denial of the "equal protection of the laws" granted to all in the Fourteenth Amendment. It is a violation of the right of any man to be tried by "a jury of his peers" and a violation of the right of Negro citizens to serve on juries as clearly laid down in the Fifteenth Amendment.

The Supreme Court has held several times that exclusion of Negroes from jury lists was a violation of the Constitution. Except in the specific cases on which the court has ruled, however, most Southern States have continued the practice.

Exclusion made the conviction of the Scottsboro defendants just so much easier. But exclusion is constantly used for repression of the Negro in thousands of civil and criminal cases which don't make the front pages.

We shall see the workings of that machine exposed as the Supreme Court reviews the Scottsboro case. Americans will expect the high court to take positive action for democracy.

New York Herald-Tribune

JAN 8 1935

2 Scottsboro Negroes Win Final Review

Supreme Court Grants Plea of Patterson and Norris, Twice Sentenced to Die

Defers Mooney Appeal

Rejects Merrell Petition in Brooklyn Liquor Case

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—The Supreme Court agreed today to review the death sentence imposed by Alabama on Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, Negroes convicted of criminal assault on a white woman in the Decatur trial of the Scottsboro case. They had been sentenced to die on February 8.

Both contended they had been denied constitutional rights by being indicted by a grand jury and convicted by a trial jury from which Negroes had been excluded.

Once before the high court ordered a new trial for Patterson, Norris and five other Negro defendants in the widely known case. It held then they had been denied a fair trial in Alabama, in that they were not provided with counsel in time to prepare for their defense.

On the second trial Patterson and Norris again were convicted and sentenced to death. The others charged with the same offense are awaiting trial.

Alabama said it recogned that systematic exclusion of Negroes from grand and trial juries would be a denial of equal protection of the law and would be unconstitutional. It declared, however, that the evidence presented to the trail judge in the two cases and reviewed by the Alabama Supreme Court in the Norris case did not disclose that Negroes were systematically and arbitrarily excluded from the juries because of their race or color.

Mooney Decision Deferred

Reasons advanced by California why Thomas J. Mooney should not be released from a life sentence in San Quentin penitentiary were presented formally to the court today, but it deferred a decision until next Monday on whether it would review the celebrated case.

Mooney was convicted of complicity in the 1916 San Francisco Preparedness Day parade bombing. He has waged an eighteen-year campaign for freedom.

The court refused to interfere with a sentence of three months' imprisonment imposed in Brooklyn against Eugene E. Merrell, master of the yacht Aera, for bringing into the jurisdiction of this country liquor which had not been invoiced and on which the tax had not been paid. He was found guilty of violating the tariff act, but he contended the United States was in fact prosecuting him for violation of the national prohibition act and that since it had been repealed he could not be forced to serve the sentence.

His yacht was apprehended on October 5, 1933, by the Coast Guard between Block Island and Montauk Point and taken to New York City. Prohibition was repealed the following December 5.

Merrell asserted he was returning from a cruise among islands off the coast of Maine when he met the vessel Dorin in distress off the Bay of Fundy. The captain of the Dorin informed him, he asserted, that the Dorin was in serious condition but probably could make port if relieved of a part of its cargo.

Brooklyn Man Granted Review

Under these circumstances Merrell claimed he consented to a transfer of the liquor, with the understanding he would take it to New York, enter it at the Customs House, and put it in bond until such time as the prohibition law should be repealed. His yacht and its contents were confiscated and Merrell and members of his crew were placed on trial, but he alone was sentenced.

Harry Berger, of Brooklyn, convicted of conspiracy to counterfeit notes of the Dallas and Chicago Federal Reserve Banks, was granted a review by the court.

Berger sought to have set aside a sentence of a year and a day imposed in Federal Court at Brooklyn. He asserted he was in the real estate business, and had nothing whatever to do with the counterfeiting or passing of the notes.

Turn to MacCracken Case

The court turned today to the case of William P. MacCracken jr., which involves the Senate's power to punish for contempt. The court decided to hear oral arguments as to whether the Senate could punish MacCracken, former Assistant Secretary of Commerce, for failure to produce certain papers.

MacCracken, a lawyer representing aviation concerns, was called upon to produce the papers before the Senate's air mail committee. He reported he was unable to comply fully because a client's representative had borrowed some from his files. The Senate's sergeant-at-arms arrested him for contempt but the District of Columbia Court of Appeals ordered him released.

Federal Attorney Leslie C. Garnett, as counsel for the Senate, contended that punishment for contempt was an exercise of the Senate's constitutional authority. MacCracken's failure to produce the papers, he said, obstructed the Senate.

Rule Against Seaman

Seamen on vessels owned by the United States are barred from suing the government for double wages when payment of the amount due had been refused. The court today made this ruling in a case brought by Livingston H. McCrea, of New York. He signed on the American Shipper, a vessel owned by the United States, for a voyage from New York City to London and return. He contended the crew on the outward voyage had not been divided in equal watches, as required by the seamen's act of 1915, and on reaching London demanded his discharge and pay. When pay was refused he brought suit in the Federal District Court at New York, claiming double pay.

In a five-to-four decision, the court held that courts have no right to increase damages fixed by a jury. It approved the action of the First Circuit Court of Appeals in ordering a new trail of a suit brought by Peter Schiedt, of Medford, Mass., for damages for an injury by an automobile driven by David G. Dimick, of Portland, Me.

Chief Justice Hughes and Justices Brandeis, Stone and Cardozo dissented. They contended that trial courts can increase inadequate damages awarded by juries as well as decrease excessive awards. A jury awarded $500 damages to Schiedt, which he contended was inadequate. The trial court announced it would refuse a new trial if Dimick would agree to pay Schiedt $1,500. Dimick declined to agree.

Evidence that World War veterans had worked at gainful occupations after the lapse of their government insurance policies prevents them from claiming that they became permanently and totally disabled while the policies were in effect. This was ruled today by the court in a case brought by Irah D. Spaulding, of Pensacola, Fla., who carried a $10,000 war risk insurance policy which lapsed in November, 1923.

Brooklyn, N. Y. Eagle
JAN 9 1935

Guaranteeing a Fair Trial.

Again the Supreme Court of the United States has intervened in the famous Scottsboro case on the broad ground that all residents of the United States, including Negroes in the South, are entitled to a fair trial, or due process, as the law puts it. When seven of the nine Negro youths, accused of criminally attacking two white women nearly four years ago, were first convicted and sentenced to death the Supreme Court set aside their convictions and ordered a new trial on the ground that proper counsel had been denied them.

Two of the Negroes, Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, were retried first. It is their conviction which is now before the Supreme Court on the ground that they were indicted by and tried before juries from which Negroes had been systematically excluded. The Alabama Supreme Court ruled that their contention had not been established. Decision of the United States Supreme Court to review the case on these new grounds assures an exhaustive study of the situation regarding the use of Negroes on juries picked to try Negroes in the South. An opportunity is here presented for a ruling by the highest court in the land on a question which has long been the subject of bitter debate.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y.
UNION
JAN 10 1935

Behind the Scottsboro Case

In reviewing death sentences against the two Scottsboro Negroes the Supreme Court of the United States will also be reviewing the whole judicial apparatus of the South as it is used for day-to-day repression of Negro rights.

Patterson and Norris, sentenced to die on February 8, are Negroes tried for rape by a jury drawn from a panel from which all Negroes were systematically excluded.

Exclusion of Negroes from jury panels is certainly a denial of the "equal protection of the laws" granted to all in the Fourteenth Amendment. It is a violation of the right of any man to be tried by "a jury of his peers" and a violation of the right of Negro citizens to serve on juries as clearly laid down in the Fifteenth Amendment.

The Supreme Court has held several times that exclusion of Negroes from jury lists was a violation of the Constitution. Except in the specific cases on which the court has ruled, however, most Southern States have continued the practice.

Exclusion made the conviction of the Scottsboro defendants just so much easier. But exclusion is constantly used for repression of the Negro in thousands of civil and criminal cases which don't make the front pages.

We shall see the workings of that machine exposed as the Supreme Court reviews the Scottsboro case. Americans will expect the high court to take positive action for democracy.—New York Post.

Court Gives Negroes Review; Holds NRA Oil Curb Illegal

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—(AP)—For the second time, the Supreme Court decided today to go over the findings of the Alabama courts in the cases of two Negroes accused of assaulting two white women almost four years ago near Scottsboro, Ala.

With only one dissent, the court also declared unconstitutional the first important bit of New Deal legislation to come before it—the section of the National Industrial Recovery Act under which the Government is attempting to control oil production.

Chief Justice Hughes read the long opinion that scrapped one of the vital laws passed during the Roosevelt administration to an audience which packed the tiny courtroom that was once the Senate chamber.

Originally, nine negroes were charged with the Scottsboro offense. One was acquitted, however, and one was excused because of his youth. Of the seven remaining two have been convicted and sentenced to death. Five others await trial.

The case arose from the accusations of two young white women, clad in overalls, who were riding a freight train from Tennessee into Alabama. The women said the negroes threw off several white men who also were on the train.

Since then a circuitous legal route has brought the cases to the Supreme Court several times. After Alabama courts convicted seven of the negroes and sentenced them to death, the Supreme Court set aside their conviction and ordered a new trial, saying the negroes had been denied proper counsel.

A change of venue and separate trials followed.

Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, convicted again, claimed they were indicted by and tried before juries from which negroes had been systematically excluded because of race.

The State Supreme Court ruled that the evidence did not prove that negroes were systematically and arbitrarily excluded. The United States Supreme Court raised the same constitutional questions. Their cases will be reached for oral argument in February or March and in the meantime, the death sentences will be suspended.

His voice resonant, the Chief Justice reiterated that Congress had delegated too much legislative authority to the President when it gave him the power to prohibit the interstate shipment of oil produced in excess of state quotas.

The decision caused a burst of discussion in the capital. Secretary Ickes asserted that, while the court had declared unconstitutional Section 9 (C) of the NIRA, it "did not rule on the oil code" embodied in other parts of the recovery act.

"We still have the oil code and will continue to operate," said Ickes. "We will attempt to regulate 'hot oil' with every resource we have."

From the Oklahoma oil fields came reports that the crude oil price structure was expected to crumble within 24 hours under the decision.

Donald R. Richberg, executive director of the National Emergency Council, tonight issued a statement warning against prophesies on the basis of today's decision as to what the Supreme Court may decide in the future about NRA.

"The Court, even by implication, has not cast a doubt on the validity of codes of fair competition," said Richberg.

From Senate and House members came few expressions of surprise, there were predictions that new legislation would be enacted for oil control, possibly through State compacts.

Justice Cardozo was the only high court member to disagree with the conclusion of the other eight that Congress had given away some of its intrinsic powers.

Although the oil statute was a part of the National Industrial Recovery Act, other portions of the law were not challenged in the suit brought by the Panama Refining Company and other concerns operating in the flush oil field.

Consequently, the codes affecting almost every industry in the United States stand for a later test, although some of the Chief Justice's language may not be read with pleasure by Administration and NRA officials.

The oil code was not passed upon because of a curious oversight on the part of the Administration. The section penalizing those who violated its terms was left out inadvertently and not inserted until September last year. Chief Justice Hughes said that consequently the Government could not prosecute those charged with violations of its terms.

"To repeat," said the Chief Justice near the end of his lengthy opinion, "we are concerned with the question of the delegation of legislative power.

"If the citizen be punished for the crime of violating a legislative order of an executive officer, or of a board or commission, due process of law requires that it shall appear that the order is within the authority of the officer, board, or commission, and, if that authority depends on determinations of fact, those determinations must be shown."

The Court also refused to reconsider its recent unanimous decision that the University of California had the right to suspend two students who declined to take military training.

SAME ATTORNEY TO TRY NEGROES

Knight Will Continue As Prosecutor In Famed Scottsboro Cases

1-25-35

By United Press.

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 24.—Lt.-Gov. Thomas E. Knight Jr., former attorney-general, will continue to represent Alabama in the prosecution of the Scottsboro cases.

Atty.-Gen. Albert A. Carmichael announced the appointment of his predecessor to the task late yesterday.

"He has handled the cases from their inception to the expiration of his term of office," Mr. Carmichael said. "Mr. Knight has conducted three trials and has twice appeared before the Supreme Court of the United States and the Supreme Court of Alabama in these cases."

Cases of two of the nine Negroes charged with assaulting two young white women on a freight train near Paint Rock, Ala., in 1931, are now pending before the United States Supreme Court.

They are Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris. Both were twice convicted and sentenced to death, but obtained reversals in the Supreme Court on the ground that Negroes were systematically excluded from the trial juries. They appealed again on the same grounds.

Two of the other defendants were classed as juveniles. The other five are held in the Jefferson County jail pending outcome of the Patterson and Norris cases. The latter are in Kilby Prison.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5008

Durham, N. C. Sun
April 3, 1935.

Negroes on Juries

North Carolina, naturally, will give some attention to the United States Supreme Court ruling in the Scottsboro case. Two convictions were thrown out on the ground that Negroes were excluded from jury service.

Durham will recall that two such tests have gone to the North Carolina Supreme Court from this section within the past year or so. One was the Theodore Cooper, from Durham county, the other the Spice Bittings case from Person. The state court held that no new trial was justified, the protestants having failed to show that Negroes were excluded.

Since the cases in question closed before advancing beyond that point, the issue decided by the federal supreme court was not reached.

North Carolina's court declared the absence of Negroes from a jury is not prima facie evidence that they were barred.

If it had been proven that Negroes had been excluded, the state court might have decided the point as did the federal court and were the issue to be squarely presented in the future, it might do so then, although no inference to that effect should be read into the decisions in the Cooper and Bittings cases, since supreme courts do not offer inferences.

In the light of the federal decisions, test cases are certain to arise, in North Carolina as well as in other states. The question is one Durham county ought to give immediate attention. Juries here should be so drawn as to minimize the possibility of later reversals which undo all the effort of trials and which pyramid expense.

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 2 1935

SCOTTSBORO CASE DECISION.

Unless fundamental institutions of this country were assailed and constitutional guarantees contravened the Supreme Court of the United States could not have done otherwise than order a new trial in what has become famous as the Scottsboro case. It will be recalled that seven Negroes were indicted for an alleged assault upon a white woman and two of the number would probably have been executed three years ago had it not been for the intervention of the court at that time. Since then in one form or another the case has been in the courts. The decision of yesterday orders a new trial. The judgment of the highest tribunal will no doubt affect the legal status of the other five defendants who are still in custody.

The principle upon which the decision of yesterday is based is the important feature of the final judgment. It sustains the constitutional guarantee that a person accused of crime must be tried by a jury of his peers. In this case the court holds that rights of the defendant were violated because Negroes were arbitrarily excluded from jury service at the trial. The exclusion was effected through leaving the names of Negroes off the rolls of veniremen. This means that the qualifications for service as jurors rests with the trial courts instead of the people who make up the jury lists. And it upholds the principle, jealously guarded, that race and color shall not militate against a defendant. While the Constitution should be flexible there are some of its principles that should not be stretched and among such are those involved in the Scottsboro case.

TARBORO, N. C.
SOUTHERNER

APR 2 1935

The Scottsboro Case Again

The decision of the Supreme Court in ordering new trials for Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, two of the seven now famous "Scottsboro Boys", on the grounds that their constitutional rights had been violated because no Negroes sat on the jury that convicted them, throws the case back again into the lap of Alabama—which state, one suspects, would be more than happy to wash its hands of the entire affair.

The supreme court, no doubt, knows what it is doing; in fact, it has always enjoyed the enviable reputation of knowing what it is doing. Nevertheless, the grounds on which the new trial was granted seems a bit queer. In effect, the Supreme Court has said that no man of any race may be tried unless there are members of that race on the jury which, of course, is quite a new notion in American jurisprudence. By the same token, Bruno Hauptmann should have a new trial because there were no native born Germans on the jury that convicted him of the murder of the Lindbergh baby. By the same token again, there has never been a Negro legally convicted in Edgecombe county—or most of the South, for that matter—since the days of Negro supremacy during the reconstruction peroid. Nor is the matter confined entirely to the South, for Northern juries seldom have Negroes on them either.

If, as the decision of the court suggests, the Scottsboro boys did not get a fair trial because of race prejudice against them, would it not have been equally true, had there been Negroes on the jury, that the trial would have been unfair because of race prejudice for them? If it were impossible for white men to give the case impartial consideration, it follows that it would also have been impossible for Negroes to do so. The latter, it is suspected, would lean as far away from a straightforward course in one direction as the former would in another.

Since the Supreme Court has said that a jury must contain members of the same kind as the defendant, why not carry the idea a bit further, in order to be consistent, and declare that tall defendants be tried by juries of tall men, cross-eyed men by juries of cross-eyed men, brunettes by brunettes and red-heads by red-heads? After all, one's constitutional rights must be protected.

Three Murders

"JUSTIFIABLE homicide"—such is the cynical verdict handed down by a Georgia coroner's jury after two Negroes, Gent Garlin and his son James, were murdered in cold blood by a gang of deputy sheriffs.

The excuse was the usual Southern lynch lie—"suspicion of rape."

Two days ago, the State of California could not restrain its blood lust and executed a Negro boy, Rush Griffin, nineteen, while his case was being appealed!

The Scottsboro decision is a victory in the struggle for Negro rights, a victory won through the power of the mass fight roused by the Communist Party and the International Labor Defense.

But these cold-blooded killings of Negro workers go on every day. They are part of the terrorism of national oppression of capitalism against the Negro masses.

More than ever the fight for Negro rights, for the smashing of this terrorism, for the wiping out of jim-crow discrimination, for the liberation of the Scottsboro boys and Angelo Herndon must go forward.

Columbia, S. C. Record
April 4, 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO DECISION.

Southern states officials are inclined, it appears, to discount the supreme court decision in the Scottsboro cases, reversing the Alabama court's conviction of two negroes on the ground that negroes were systematically excluded from jury service in Alabama and that the defendants were thereby denied the equal protection of the law.

No law, it is pointed out, excludes negroes from jury service. But that is not the issue, which is one of fact, not law, whether, whatever the law may be, negroes are or are not excluded from jury service.

Neither the question nor the supreme court's decision is new. In the past the supreme court has held that deliberate denial of jury places to negroes in trials of negro defendants is a violation of the rights guaranteed by the constitution. A decision often quoted is that of Neal v. Delaware, handed down in 1880. In this case the supreme court held that the fact that no negro had ever sat upon a Delaware jury, although about 15 per cent of the population of the state were negroes presented a prima facie case of denial of the constitutional right of equal protection of the law. It had been, it declared, a "violent presumption" in the part of the state court that exclusion of negroes over many years had been solely because the whole black race in the state was unfit for jury service. The state of Alabama in the Scottsboro cases denied of course that negroes were wilfully excluded from jury service. The supreme court however, facing the fact that negroes were excluded, overturned the Alabama verdicts.

And the decision is therefore important in any other state or county where, whatever the law negroes may be in fact excluded from jury service. It offers an excuse for delay and a basis for another appeal when there are already too many opportunities for delay and too many avenues of appeal.

The Scottsboro case is hardly the perfect example of what can be done to postpone a final decision in a criminal case; there are grave reasons to doubt the guilt of the accused negroes. But it is none the less a rather good example, both of the possibilities of delay and appeal and of the occasional futility of such devices when they are resorted to in defense of those who may be innocent and not simply employing good political lawyers.

In March 1931, which was four years ago, nine negro youths were indicted at Scottsboro for the rape of two white girls on a freight train. April, four years ago, the nine, the oldest of them 19, were tried in three groups before three Alabama juries which found them guilty.

The cases were appealed to the Alabama supreme court, which affirmed the convictions. A writ of certiorari carried the cases to the United States supreme court which in December 1932 invalidated the decisions on the ground that the defendants had been vouchsafed such inadequate counsel as to deny them rights guaranteed by the federal constitution.

Patterson, one of the nine, was given a new trial in March 1933 with a change of venue and was again convicted. But Judge Horton, presiding, set aside the verdict as contrary to the weight of the evidence. One of the two supposed victims had by that time changed her testimony to give evidence that the negroes were innocent. Judge Horton, who won something like national acclaim for his conduct of the trial, was incidentally defeated in the primary when he came up for re-election in June 1934.

Third trials were held in November and December, 1933, with Patterson and Norris the defendants. They were again convicted and the case appealed to the Alabama supreme court, which again affirmed the convictions. Followed however the second appeal to the United States supreme court and now the new opinion reversing the Alabama courts again and invalidating the four-year old indictments.

UTICA, N. Y.
PRESS

APR 3 1935

ALABAMA AGAIN REBUKED

For a second time the United States Supreme Court has reversed convictions and death sentences imposed by Alabama courts upon negroes in the more or less famous Scotsboro case. For nearly half a dozen years seven young negroes have been in jail in Scottsboro, Ala., charged with criminal assault upon two young white women. The alleged crime occurred on a freight train in a car in which the negroes, the two women and two white male companions were stealing a ride. The allegation was made the negroes attacked the white men, overpowered them and assaulted the women.

For the alleged crime, a capital one in Alabama, the seven negroes were arrested, indicted, tried, convicted and sentenced to death. The Civil Liberties Union and a national negro organization interested themselves in the case of the accused. An appeal was carried to the United States Supreme Court, before which it was argued the condemned men had been unconstitutionally deprived of the aid of counsel in the preparation of a defense. The Supreme Court reversed the conviction and ordered a new trial.

Only two accused, against whom the state was said to have the strongest case, were brought to retrial, the others going over. They are still to be retried. The two retried in a change of venue were convicted and condemned. They were represented apparently by competent counsel throughout. Racial feeling was stirred undoubtedly in the state by the active participation of outside interests and outside legal counsel on behalf of the negroes, so that change of venue hardly insured fairer consideration and trial for the accused. There evidently has been a lot of perjury in connection with the trials. One of the women apparently was dropped as a state witness, when she became of doubtful support to the state's case. The defense's outside counsel by their conduct of their case were seldom tactful or discreet and seemingly often inflamed rather than sought to mollify white prejudice against the negroes. The jury found both the accused guilty a second time and the higher Alabama courts sustained the findings.

The United States Supreme Court, however, again upsets the verdict and orders a second trial. Chief Justice Hughes delivers the opinion, apparently unanimously concurred in by the rest of the bench, since there is no dissent. The reversal is based upon the ground that qualified negroes were systematically and arbitrarily excluded from both the grand and the trial juries. It had long been held, the Chief Justice said, that whenever—by any action of a state, whether through legislation, the courts, executive or administrative officers—persons of the African race were excluded because of race and color from jury service, the court proceedings were invalid. "We think the evidence that no negro had been called for jury service in Jackson County for a generation established there had been discrimination," the opinion declares. "We find no justification for excluding Negroes from the trial jury."

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
EAGLE NEWS

APR 3 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO DECISION

The decision of the United States Surpemeto accommodate itse Court on Monday voiding the convictions ofout disruption of two of the Scottsboro Negroes sentenced toThe immediate res death in Alabama is welcome news to thought of many conviction ful persons who have been following the case of crimes for which for the last four years. That the defendants mayperiod of transition be guilty of the crime of which they have beenmay be encountere accused is quite possible, but the character ofoo, that Negroes w the testimony upon which they were convicted duty will refuse re was not worthy of credence and it is impossiblevict persons of the not to believe that racial prejudice determinedthat white juries the result. acquit. It is to be
It is gratifying that the Court has definitelypen. With their ri ruled that the practice of many southern statestected, the best se of barring Negroes from jury duty is unconsti-form for themselve tutional and voids criminal proceedings in whichof the most consci resort is made to it. This will be the b
It may be hoped that the South will be ablethe circumstances

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama.

5009

State's Haste Spells New Efforts to Railroad Scottsboro 9

COURT CALENDAR IGNORED IN ANXIETY TO 'DISPOSE' OF CASES—INCREASED VIGILANCE AND PROTESTS NEEDED TO SPIKE SCHEME OF ALABAMA RULERS

IN THEIR determination to rush the nine Scottsboro boys through new lynch trials to the electric chair, Alabama officials are considering the unprecedented action of postponing a whole crowded calendar of ordinary cases set for trial in Decatur, Ala., to permit the holding of a special session of the court early in December to "dispose" of the Scottsboro cases.

Writing on the Scottsboro cases in the New York Times on Sunday, Joan Temple Graves, 2d, Alabama "liberal," openly expressed the desire of the Alabama ruling class "to be rid of the thing."

The policy of Thomas E. Knight, lieutenant-governor of the state and special prosecutor of the Scottsboro boys, who hopes to climb to higher office over their charred bodies, has been one of combined delay and railroading. Delay after delay blocked early action in the cases, to be followed by re-indictment and now by a speed in railroading through a mass lynch trial unprecedented even in the previous history of the Scottsboro boys.

Because of the use of more skillful efforts by the lynchers, designed to block the way to further appeals to the higher courts, the danger to the boys is now greater than ever. There is not a moment to be lost. The broadest united protest movement must be developed everywhere. Trade unions, organizations of every type, must be drawn into action in every city. Governor Bibb Graves of Alabama must receive a flood of resolutions protesting against Knight's railroad policy, and demanding the safe and unconditional release of all nine boys.

Large sums of money will be needed to carry through this fight. Preparations for the defense of the boys have been started. Money to support this fight should be rushed to the International Labor Defense, 80 East Eleventh Street, New York City.

The re-indictment of the boys is not just "another stage" in the Scottsboro cases. It is a new historic development in the battle of opposing class forces, in the resistance of the Alabama rulers to world opinion, to the rising flood of protests against the hideous "rape" frame-up and the world-wide fight against the bestial oppression of the Negro people and the Negro and white toilers of Alabama.

The inclusion of a lone Negro on the Jackson County grand jury which returned the new indictments marks the introduction by the lynchers of more skillful efforts and technicalities to make the death warrant perfect. The fundamental questions in the case all flare up now more than ever, even more clearly marking the case as a symbol of the brutal national oppression of the Negro people and of the struggle for Negro liberation, for civil rights.

BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
NOV 11 1935

Says The Supreme Court, Not The Constitution, Saved The "Scottsboro Boys"

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: J. W. Johnson, in The Sun today, is concerned with the saving of the Constitution. He cites for support of his theories the Alabama cases where Negroes were saved by the Constitution. A little study of the facts, J. W., will show you the error in your argument.

In the first place, the Negroes were saved by the laudable action of the Supreme Court in an effort to save the unfortunate youths from another legal lynching. Nowhere in the admirable Constitution that you are trying to defend is the Supreme Court given any authority to do what they did in these cases. The Constitution proves itself inadequate because it never has given the Supreme Court the right to declare anything unconstitutional.

In the second place, when the same Prof. Felix Frankfurter (whose New Deal ideas I also detest) was fighting to uphold the Constitution and prevent the brutal execution of the thousand times proven innocent Sacco and Vanzetti, the Supreme Court turned a deaf ear upon his pleas. They claimed it was beyond their powers. If the Constitution has proven itself inadequate for all occasions, why can't we change it to conform to modern needs? Zebedian.

Baltimore, Nov. 7.

LINCOLN, NEB.
MORNING STATE JOURNAL
NOV 18 1935

Again the defendants in the Scottsboro case are to be tried. Indictments have been returned against them on the basis of the crime with which they were charged in 1931. The supreme court stepped into the case after the last conviction and held that Negroes had been systematically excluded from jury service in Jackson county, Alabama, so the convictions in these cases involving Negroes were faulty. Jackson county is using Negro jurors since the supreme court acted in this manner. There is, of course no hope of an improvement in the machinery for dispensing justice just because the system has been changed to conform with the law. As long as the prejudice against the race remains in the south, methods for legally keeping them from jury service in cases where prejudice dictates the verdict, will be found. Jackson county merely neglected to keep up appearances. It had made the mistake of dropping the pretense of drawing Negroes for jury service.

Columbia, S. C. State
November 21, 1935

Again the Scottsboro Case.

We have long been wondering what Alabama really thinks about the Scottsboro case. So very little has been publicly said about it there, outside of the court rooms and off the political stump. One is permitted, however, to draw some conclusions from reading between the lines.

In the introduction to a special article on this case appearing in The New York Times, and written by John Temple Graves, 2nd, son of the celebrated Southern orator and editor of that name, we find this:

New indictments in the Scottsboro case point to an early resumption of all the noise, bitterness, notoriety and expense that attended the earlier trials. Alabamians still are divided on the merit: of the case, but of one mind in the wish to be rid of the thing for better or for worse.

There is no present disposition in the press or anywhere else to debate the guilt or innocence of the defendants any longer. Comment everywhere runs now to regret that the ugly business must be brought forth again and to hope that this time it will be settled permanently one way or another. To meet the decision of the supreme court a Negro sat on the grand jury that found the new indictments.

Tom Knight, who was attorney general at the time of the last trials and who conducted the prosecution in that capacity, has since been elected lieutenant governor, largely as a result of prestige won in opposing "Communists and New Yorkers" allied against him in the case. Detailed as special prosecutor for the new trials, he is said to have gubernatorial ambitions which new triumphs in the Scottsboro case would serve handsomely. Those close to him are convinced that he believes absolutely in the guilt of the Negroes, who are charged with assaults upon two white girls.

5009

In the opinion of many Alabamians the prime thing to be considered today is whether the International Labor Defense shall be permitted to win a famous victory and exploit it to further the Communist movement among Southern Negroes. These Alabamians would be well satisfied if the defense could be taken over by some well-known Southern lawyer or lawyers and an acquittal won under such command. They do not believe acquittal would be wise if the International Labor Defense were in a position to claim credit for it and they do not believe an acquittal will be possible if the defense is conducted by this or any other group identified with what has come to be known as "outside interference in Alabama's affairs." This is in all probability the essentially realist attitude toward the case.

From the very outset the tactics of the spokesmen for the International Labor Defense and other Northern organizations ostensibly rallying to the defense of those accused Alabama Negroes, as well as the conduct of the Northern lawyers sent down there to defend them in their several trials, increased instead of lessened the jeopardy of the defendants. Those people, seemingly for publicity purposes for themselves, not only intensified the already existing race feeling, but created new and bitter prejudices. No policy could have been adopted better calculated to insure the conviction of those defendants by Alabama juries, than the policy pursued by these "outsiders" who injected themselves into the case in the role of defenders. What crass stupidity to assail Alabama juries and judges and courts while the lives of the accused rested upon unprejudiced action by the courts!

Prejudice may be condemned; it may be bitterly denounced. And all that is said against it may be true, but it cannot be removed by such methods. One wonders whether the International Labor Defense and its agents were really concerned in saving the lives of those defendants?

John Temple Graves of Alabama says: "Alabamians would be well satisfied if the defense could be taken over by some well-known Southern lawyer or lawyers and an acquittal won under such command. They do not believe acquittal would be wise if the International Labor Defense were in position to claim credit for it." So it seems that because of these new prejudices created the International Labor Defense has become more conspicuous as a defendant in the dock than the six Negroes, and to prevent its triumph it is regarded as "unwise" to set the Negroes free.

Of course, it is deplorable that "expediency" should ever be considered instead of "justice." But when bitterness has been created that is what happens. Nowhere is it easy to hold the scales of justice evenly balanced; when prejudice gets a foothold it is impossible. It is most deplorable that exploitation of persons or organizations should be placed above human lives or justice.

Birmingham, Ala., Age-Herald
December 4, 1935

"Judges alike of the facts and the laws . . ."

* * *

THE PEOPLE of Alabama are divided on the question of the guilt or innocence of the Negroes in the Scottsboro case. But they are of one mind and heart in desire to be rid of the case forever, to have Alabama freed of the passion, ill-fame and expense that go with it. New indictments and the scheduled resumption of trials make the prospect seem bitterly without end just now. Even if a final legal disposition is obtained, racial, sectional and class feeling promises to foster for years to come unless there is created within the next few days a radically different atmosphere. In this column's opinion it is possible to create that different atmosphere. It can be created by a little realism on the part of all parties involved, by a realism which will recognize certain facts and act upon them.

* * *

Everybody will admit that the only consideration in determining the fate of the Scottsboro Negroes should be whether they are guilty or innocent. But everybody knows that this particular consideration is confused now and almost lost in matters having to do with the relations between the white and black races, between the North and the South, between the Jew and the Gentile, between the Communist and the anti-Communist.

* * *

Obviously the sensible ambition for all parties, whether they believe the Negroes guilty or whether they believe them innocent, is to free the approaching trial of these other considerations. Everyone should desire that and everyone should be willing to accept whatever will assure that, even if it involves admitting some unpleasant things on both sides. A truly fair trial, one in which no prejudice of any sort operates or is suspected of operating against either the prosecution or the defense, is the only possible way in which Alabama can really be rid of this case or of its fearful consequences. Remove racial feeling, sectional feeling and class feeling from the case in a manner which will convince everybody that the removal has really been made, and it will be possible to close the whole hateful chapter honorably and peacefully.

* * *

The only way to remove these racial, class and sectional feelings is to recognize their existence. The only way to isolate the case into a question of guilt and innocence alone is to face courageously and sensibly the fact that the case is not at all isolated as it stands.

* * *

Two things are obvious to anyone near enough the scene to know the situation and objective enough to admit what he sees. One is that no Alabama jury is likely to let the International Labor Defense or any other Communistic organization win a famous victory. Another is that, rightly or wrongly, so much resentment of outside interference has been created that no Alabama jury is likely to let any outside lawyer win a victory, particularly if he comes from New York. This point applies against Samuel S. Leibowitz, and there are other and more personal ones against him as well. It isn't necessary either to approve or to disapprove. These things are facts. They exist. They are the realities of the Scottsboro case.

* * *

It sums up to this: There can be no trial of the case on its merits, no real end to the thing, if the defense is conducted by Communists or by outsiders of any sort. Most especially there can be no fair trial nor any end if the defense is conducted by Samuel S. Leibowitz.

* * *

Once these circumstances are recognized and faced, a solution of the situation suggests itself. Let the defense be handled by an Alabama lawyer. An Alabama lawyer who believes absolutely in the innocence of the defendants, who is experienced and competent in every respect, and who would know that international fame awaited him if he were successful. It might be that the Alabama Bar Association could be persuaded to nominate such a lawyer. It might be that, if the association's zeal were suspected, the nomination might come from other sources. It might be that some lawyer would nominate himself and be able to persuade Patterson, the first Negro to be tried, that his only hope lay in having Southern counsel before a Southern jury.

* * *

The Scottsboro defense should be turned over in toto to an Alabama or some other Southern lawyer. He might accept advice from distinguished Northern counsel, but the command should be his and his alone. He should be a fine lawyer, but even if he were not, even if he were the sorriest shyster in the state, he would have more chance of getting an acquittal for the Negroes than Samuel Leibowitz has, than the I. L. D. has, than anyone from outside the South has.

* * *

Here is something for the Scottsboro Negroes to think about. It may mean life or death for them. It is something for the Association for the Advancement of Colored People to think about. It is something for the Southern Interracial Commission. Naturally Northern organizations which have espoused the defendants in this case will incline to suspect a plot of some sort or to doubt the zeal or competence of Southern counsel. But no one can consider the facts with knowledge and with dispassion and not realize that the only hope of a fair and unprejudiced trial now is with some well known Southern lawyer commanding the defense. Friends of the Negroes can ask for nothing better than this, and neither can friends of Alabama.

"SCOTTSBORO AND COMMON SENSE"

Editor, The Advertiser:

In your issue of Dec. 6 on your editorial page you reprinted a letter from The Birmingham Age-Herald from the facile pen of John Temple Graves, II. I have heard a number discuss this subject and about all any of us can get out of it is an empty boxcar loaded with a group of willing hobos including several negro boys and two white girls on the one hand and some political aspirants on the other and we are tired of it all; besides, it is giving us some very uncomplimentary notoriety in other States. Personally, we should like to see it forgotten. Perhaps the Scottsboro authorities at the first should have put them all on their chain gang for 30 days and sent one color West and the other East, or have paid no attention to any of it. We see hundreds of what are called hobos every time we are where a train of cars is passing North or South, East or West. Then why make such ado about this particular case?

O. P. SPIEGEL.

Montgomery, Ala.

Alabama

Lynchings—1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

5010

Montgomery, Ala. Journal
April 5, 1935

All Dixie States Expected To Follow Alabama's Lead And Put Negroes on Juries

By W. F. CALDWELL
Associated Press Staff Writer

Alabama's action in ordering new jury lists drawn to conform with the United States supreme court decision in the Scottsboro case may be followed by other southern states calling more negroes for active jury duty.

No negroes are barred by law from jury duty in the south but few have actually been called to sit on cases. In most of the states jurors must be qualified voters and this in itself has kept a great many negroes off the jury list.

Conviction Set Aside

In granting new trial to the Scottsboro negroes, the supreme court set aside their conviction in the Alabama court on the ground of systematic exclusion of negroes from the jury.

This ruling caught the attention of the law enforcement officers in the south.

An editorial in the Richmond News Leader supported the general belief that some negroes had been called for jury duty in that state since the trial of George Crawford, who was convicted of slaying Mrs. Agnes Ilsley, wealthy sportswoman.

"Here in Virginia, the way was opened by the Crawford case," the News Leader said. "Although Judge McLemore denied the motion to quash the indictment on the ground of racial discrimination in drawing the jury, the argument in November, 1933, so impressed Virginia jurists that most of them quietly directed the inclusion of negroes on grand juries. This has been done without creating the slightest ripple."

Major W. Calvin Wells, president of the Mississippi State Bar association, said the Scottsboro decision "may have great effect" on state courts. The Mississippi law does not bar negroes from jury service because of race or color.

The North Carolina supreme court has held twice in the last year or so that negroes were not entitled to new trials when major grounds for appeal were allegations of exclusion of negroes from the jury. The court held that the simple fact negroes were not on juries was not conclusive evidence they were barred from the jury box.

Negroes serve on federal juries frequently in North Carolina and the same is true in federal courts in Georgia and other southern states.

Not Barred in Florida

Florida juries are drawn from lists of qualified voters supplied the court by county officers. Negroes are entitled to vote in Florida and when they do, become eligible for jury duty.

Jury commissions in South Carolina have discretionary power in selecting jury panels.

Negroes holding poll tax receipts—a necessary qualification to vote—are eligible for jury duty in Arkansas. Assistant Attorney General Thomas Fitzhugh, of that state, said "It just happens that no jury commission selects negroes for jury duty. It may be just a coincidence."

Under Control in Texas

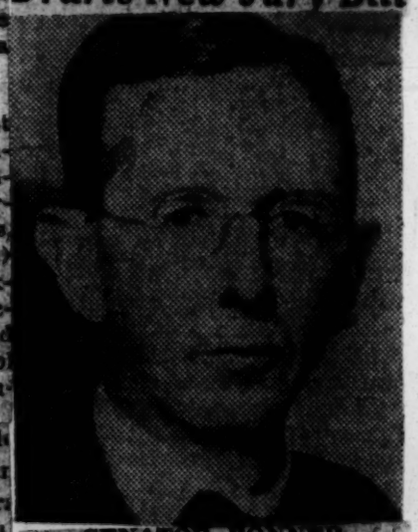
Texas statutes and the conduct of criminal trials "are in conformity with the decision of the supreme court," said Attorney General William McGraw, of Texas. "Generally when (negroes are) drawn for service a suitable excuse is presented and always accepted. Texans have demonstrated perfect ability to properly control the negro question within the constitution.

Jury commissioners are the sole judge of qualification of jurors in Alabama. The names of the jurors are drawn from the lists of eligibles supplied to the judges by jury commissioners. Usually the lists are revised every two years. There is no law barring negroes from jury duty in that state.

NEGROES CALLED ON FEDERAL JURIES

Though a checkup failed to reveal any instances of negroes serving on juries of the United States court for the middle district of Alabama recently, negroes have in former years been named to both trial juries and grand juries, it was stated Friday.

O. D. Street, Jr., clerk of the court, said that he could recall no negroes having served on juries during his term of office, during the past two years, but said that they had been admitted previously.



Those serving on the juries were always of the educated negro class, and there were never more than two or three in any jury panel.

HAILED AS VICTORY FOR COLORED RACE

NEW YORK, April 5.—(AP)—The orders that negroes be included on Alabama jury lists, issued today by Governor Bibb Graves to court officials in the state, were acclaimed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Arthur B. Spingarn, for 21 years chairman of its national legal committee, declared, "it is a very fine step. It should advance not only the rights of negroes, but also the whole attitude of that section of the country towards enforcement of the law."

Drafts New Jury Bill

SENATOR BONNER of Wilcox county, who is drafting a bill to restrict jury service in Alabama to qualified voters. His measure, which is expected to be introduced when the legislature reconvenes April 30, would greatly curtail the number of negroes eligible for jury service, he asserts.

Scottsboro, Ala., Sentinel
April 4, 1935

THE U. S. SUPREME COURT AND OUR ALABAMA JURY SYSTEM

(An Editorial in Tuesday's Montgomery Advertiser)

The Supreme Court of the United States has bluntly laid down the law to Alabama on the question involving the right of negroes to serve on juries.

In reversing a Jackson County court in the conviction of two of the "Scottsboro" infants, the Supreme Court seems to have ignored the evidence and confined its comments mainly if not entirely to the fact that no negroes were on the jury which convicted two negroes of a felony. The Advertiser has read only a press summary of Chief Justice Hughes's position, but it would appear that he is concerned, not with the evidence upon which the defendants were convicted, so much as with the color of the jury that convicted them.

The Court charges that negroes were "systematically excluded" from jury service in the county of trial and that the few names of negroes in the jury box were fraudulently admitted.

The Advertiser does not know whether this charge of fraud is just or not. It may be that the names of negroes were admitted after the issue involving the right of negroes to serve on Alabama juries was raised.

The Advertiser does know that generally speaking the names of negro citizens are not in the jury boxes in the counties of Alabama, although negroes may and do serve on Federall juries in this State.

What qualifications must a juror possess under the law? He must be a person of good character, good standing and good intelligence—at least, this is the theory upon which names are admitted to the jury box. The jury commissioners of Alabama, inquiring for new names to put on their lists, never ask whether one is black or white, yellow, brown or bronze. The citizens to whom these verbal inquiries are addressed, instinctivey report only the names of white persons. The race question is rarely if ever raised between jury commissioners and citizens whom they question.

From a strict technical standpoint negroes are not excluded from juries; in common practice they are, of course.

At last the Supreme Court, following up previous warnings, reverses the verdict of a State court upon the ground of race discrimination in the selection of jurors.

It now follows that Alabama jury commissions must immediately put the names of reputable negro citizens in their jury boxes. Otherwise we cannot hope again to have the Supreme Court of the United States affirm the findings of a State court wherever a negro's liberty or life is at stake.

The Advertiser therefore would urge that county jury commissions in Alabama act immediately to make it possbile for the State of Alabama to win a case involving a negro in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Otherwise, we wish to say that Mr Hughes's pontifical deliverance is a lot of baloney.

Here is the Supreme Court of a great republic, reviewing the trial of two men charged with an offense that stands first among felonies in this State, reversing the verdict of an oathbound jury upon the ground that it does not like the color scheme of that jury.

The Supreme Court of the United States tells Alabama, in effect, that it is not primarily interested in otherwise credible evidence demonstrating human depravity, but that it is primarily interested in the academic political "rights" of a politically dispossessed race.

The Advertiser may be dumb, as well as "lost and ruint," but to save itself it cannot see what the political rights and privileges of negroes in Alabama have to do with the guilt or innocence of the gorillas who are charged with criminal assault upon two women, it being agreed that rape is a felony under the law in this backward State.

Either these gorillas committed rape, or they did not.

If they committed rape the jury, (even though white) knows the truth and reported it faithfully.

If they did not commit rape, we believe that this jury would have said so.

Suppose the defendants had been Italians. There are no Italians in Jackson County. So far as we know there are not today any Italians in Montgomery county, despite its relatively large population. Certainly there are no Spaniards, no Japanese, no Tahitans, no Indians, no Eskimos either in Montgomery or other counties.

In that event not many juries in Alabama could hope to have their verdicts affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States if a member of either of these races should ...ve here tomorrow and commit a ...pital offense.

It seems to The Advertiser that if the Supreme Court of the United States, presided over by Charles Evans Hughes, had a more sensitive regard for the victims (actual and potential) of felonious assault and less regard for the politically dispossessed in the home State of these victims, it would not devote an entire opinion to an academic politics question, but would offer some comment on the evidence by which the gorillas aforesaid had been convicted.

After all, the rape of a wench is not morally different from the rape of the proudest gentlewoman in the republic, and it seems to us that any man of sound instincts would see this truth. Rape happens to be a capital crime in Alabama.

We are sorry that the Supreme Court of the United States seems to have no immediate interest in th... phase of the subject.

NEW YORK TIMES
APR 7 1935

SCOTTSBORO RULING DISTURBS THE SOUTH

Move to Put Negroes on Jury Lists in Alabama Follows Supreme Court Decision.

NEW TRIAL IS DISLIKED

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.
Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., April 5.—Thirty-six hours after the United States Supreme Court ordered new trials in the Scottsboro cases last Monday an audience of some 4,000 white men and women in Birmingham's municipal auditorium gave a Negro one of the greatest ovations ever bestowed upon a Negro in the South. He was William L. Dawson of Tuskegee Institute, whose Negro Symphony No. 1 had just been played by the Birmingham Civic Symphony Orchestra, and who, with a group of Negro friends in evening dress, occupied the stage boxes as honor guests of the association.

It was a tribute, of course, to a fine musician, without regard to color, but there was an additional note in it that took source from the news of the Scottsboro decision and was concerned exclusively with his color. Distressed at prospective renewal of hateful emotion and prejudices involved in this case and confused in their own minds about the right and wrong of the matter, these Alabamians undoubtedly had a certain satisfaction and relief in giving unstinting homage to a Negro of whose desserts they were sure.

South Is "Confused."

That the Supreme Court's decision, setting aside the conviction of two Scottsboro defendants on the ground that Negroes had been excluded from the jury rolls, has resulted in both distress and confusion in the South is evident in the silence of Southern newspapers and the ambiguity of the first statements issued by officials. In so far as the Scottsboro case itself is concerned, the guilt or innocence of the Negroes long since has ceased to be the paramount issue in the minds of most Alabamians.

The real question is whether there is to be a spectacle of defeat for communism and of punishment for rape. That circumstances make such a spectacle necessary to the social stability of this section, in spite of the fact that Samuel Leibowitz, counsel for the Negroes, has dissociated himself from the International Labor Defense and that the crime is doubtful, is the inflexible if misguided conviction of many Alabamians who will insist that a fresh start be made now in the business of getting the accused men to the electric chair.

Governor's Action.

Prompt action by Governor Bibb Graves to have the names of Negroes placed in Alabama jury boxes in conformity with the decision and his statement that "Alabama is going to observe the supreme law of America" are being taken as fresh examples of a political realism and an executive courage which have made him one of the strongest Governors in Alabama's history. Nearly all daily newspapers in the State gave the announcement a leading place on their front pages.

Birmingham papers are unanimous in praise. Although there has not been time yet to estimate the general reaction, indications are that the statement gives Alabamans a clue to which they are quite likely to respond, in spite of efforts on the part of some politicians to seek new devices against bona fide admission of the Negro to jury service.

Thus far, Southern comment on the Supreme Court decision runs more to the general than to the particular implications in the matter of admitting Negroes to jury service. Although there are many suggestions that the subterfuges and legal fictions employed heretofore to exclude Negroes will have to be replaced now with other devices to accomplish the same end, more thoughtful opinion, particularly in the press, inclines to a belief that the decision must be accepted in dead earnest and that Negroes must be admitted to jury duty henceforth in Southern courts if convictions are to stand on appeal to the highest court in the land.

Views of the Press.

That the change in Southern practice will not be as revolutionary in what it calls for or what it threatens as some Southerners may fear, is the opinion of The Birmingham News. Pointing out that Negroes serve already on Federal juries in Alabama and that they are included in jury rolls and sometimes drawn for service in State courts in some counties, The News thinks the conclusion inescapable "that Alabama will have to take steps to correct the situation criticized by the Supreme Court wherever it holds true. The court's opinion unquestionably calls for remedial action in those counties where Negroes are excluded from the jury rolls."

Long before last Monday's decision the matter of admitting Negroes to juries had been under discussion in the South and many voices were being lifted in favor of it. Not only are the ideas of Southern white people changing but the Negro himself is continually improving and many who would have held him unfit for the duties and rights of citizenship a decade or so ago consider him qualified today. It is safe to suggest that the South is not half as shocked at the prospect of Negro jurors as it is at the threat of another Scottsboro trial.

HOPE AGAIN REVIVED

International
Haywood Patterson, one of the "Scottsboro boys," in his cell.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

APR 8 1935

Negro Jurymen

Gov Bibb Graves of Alabama in his prompt response to the decision of the supreme court of the United States requiring acceptance of Negroes as qualified jurymen has performed an important public service. His unequivocal acceptance of the ruling as part of the "supreme law of America," to be upheld "in letter and spirit," is calculated to discourage any disposition that may exist to nullify the ruling by evasion or subterfuge.

In no state in the Union are Negroes directly denied by law the right of jury service. In most, if not all, of the southern states they occasionally serve, in some counties, in the state as well as in the federal courts. The exceptions have been violations of the constitutional right by prejudiced officials rather than by the direct action of prejudiced legislatures or courts. The requirement now emphasized is for an extension in practice of a right generally recognized in principle. While some alarm is expressed in the South lest the policy dictated by the supreme court may weaken the states' defenses against a particular class of atrocious crimes, it is gratifying to know that the response in official and other influential circles has been generally reassuring.

A test of the new policy, which it may be assumed will be inaugurated, will come when it is put into practice. It is, of course, important that Negro jurymen, as well as white jurymen, shall be qualified by intelligence and character for the important service. It will be recalled that, during the last trial of the Scottsboro defendants, one explanation offered for the absence of Negroes from the jury list was that there were none in the jurisdiction who were qualified. The

Lynchings-1935

Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5011

NEW YORK SUN

APR 3 1935

BACKS BAN AGAINST NEGROES ON JURIES

Bankhead Says South Will Continue Practice.

WASHINGTON, April 3 (A. P.).—A belief that the selection of juries in the South will continue according to long established practices was expressed today by Senator Bankhead, Democrat, of Alabama. He voiced his opinion in an interview on the results of the Supreme Court's decision setting aside the convictions of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, two of the Scottsboro defendants.

The South probably will go on handling its affairs in much the same way that it always has, Mr. Bankhead said.

The basis for the Supreme Court's ruling was a finding that Negroes had been barred from jury service in the locality where Norris and Patterson, Negroes, were tried for an alleged assault on a white woman in Alabama.

"It's entirely a race question," Senator Bankhead observed. "Suppose a Jew or an Italian were convicted in New York. Would he have justified complaint if there were no Jews or Italians on the jury? Of course not.

"And I don't think that Southern lawyers who are counsel for Negroes will demand that Negroes be on the jury.

"Of course, the question might be raised for technical reasons, but the average Southern lawyer won't bring it up.

"Incidentally Negroes probably would be quicker to turn in a guilty verdict than whites," he concluded.

Some Things That Are Needed to Complete Scottsboro Victory

MUST BE MASS DEMAND; FUNDS URGENT "NO NEW INDICTMENTS, NO NEW TRIALS," IN FIGHT FOR BOYS' LIBERATION

IT WAS reported some time ago that the grandchildren of former Governor B. M. Miller of Alabama had the most elaborate stamp collection in the South. Daily Worker

These youthful connoisseurs had the assistance of their grandfather in assembling this stamp collection. Where did all the stamps come from? They came on envelopes which arrived from England, France, Germany, Spain, China, Japan and the Soviet Union.

In those envelopes were protests of workers and farmers, from students and intellectuals, from Young Pioneers throughout the world. 4-9-35

These are the protests whose cumulative effect compelled the U. S. Supreme Court to reverse the lynch decision against the framed-up Scottsboro boys. In this momentous decision the highest court of the land was forced to declare that Negroes must be placed on the jury rolls in the South. New York,

Joy swept through the hovels of the Negro workers in the industrial towns of the South and the shacks of the sharecroppers with the announcement of the reversal of the Scottsboro decision.

But the victory is not yet complete!

The Alabama authorities are taking steps leading toward the re-indictment of the Scottsboro boys.

There is no basis for their re-indictment. There is no basis for continued trials of these tortured Negro boys.

The decision of the U. S. Supreme Court itself tears to shreds the frame-up structure that Attorney General Knight and his fellow lynchers have constructed in the Alabama courts.

One of the two original complainants, Ruby Bates, has appeared in open court to testify to the frame-up character of the first trial in Scottsboro.

One of the principal witnesses in the case, Lester Carter, was held in jail in Scottsboro for 16 days without the opportunity to testify, because the authorities feared that he would help riddle the frame-up. When Carter testified for the defense in the Decatur court he described vividly the plot of the Alabama officials to execute the nine Negro boys on charges of which they were absolutely innocent.

No more re-indictments! No more trials of the Scottsboro boys!

The Daily Worker heartily endorses the present campaign of the International Labor Defense to obtain funds urgent to carry on the fight to a successful conclusion. Even its sworn foes must now acknowledge that without the persistent fight of the I. L. D. the Scottsboro boys would now be dead.

The I. L. D. has thus far spent $75,000 in the fight to save the boys. Within the next 60 days $20,000 more must be raised.

The Daily Worker pledges that its columns will be wide open to the I. L. D. in its campaign to raise this much needed sum.

Help make the Scottsboro victory complete! Send your contributions at once to the International Labor Defense, Room 610, 80 East Eleventh Street, New York.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

APR 3 1935

Comment On The Scottsboro Ruling.

Memphis (Tenn.) Commercial-Appeal—"It is commendable of the prosecuting authorities of Alabama to want to punish criminals, but we seriously doubt the wisdom of a retrial of the Scottsboro case. In view of the repudiations and denials there is a question of legal guilt. New York lawyers and agitators have fattened off the publicity. The Supreme Court's ruling about Negro juries will not change the manners and customs of Alabamians. Further controversy will only inflame the people to a resentment that will be bad for both races."

New York Times—"The test under which the Supreme Court was placed has been trying, but the judges have met it in the finest tradition of judicial independence and integrity. They have showed that their love of justice extends to the smallest as well as the greatest. The records which they have made in this case can not fail deeply to impress the whole country. People may well hope to be spared a renewal of the original proceedings in the lower court. Might not the Governor of the State find sufficient reasons in what has already taken place for issuing a pardon in order to do substantial justice and at the same time free the courts from the duty of going on with a case which has become a public symbol of the mischief that may be wrought when prejudice is allowed to invade the place dedicated to impartial justice?"

Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser—"Otherwise, we wish to say that Mr. Hughes' pontifical deliverance is a lot of boloney. It seems to The Advertiser that if the Supreme Court presided over by Charles Evans Hughes had a more sensitive regard for the victims (actual and potential) of felonous assault and less regard for the politically dispossessed in the home State of the victims it would not devote an entire opinion to an academic political question, but would offer some comment on the evidence by which the gorillas aforesaid had been convicted.

"After all the rape of a wench is not morally different from the rape of the proundest gentlewoman in the Republic and it seems to us that any man of sound instincts would see this truth. Rape happens to be a capital crime in Alabama."

Birmingham (Ala.) Age-Herald.—"Let the Scottsboro cases now be vigorously and fairly prosecuted and concluded in the light of the clear-cut Supreme Court ruling. Let us confront and assume the responsibilities which that decision generally emphasizes."

Hartford (Conn.) Courant.—"The case of the Scottsboro boys has become deeply involved in all sorts of prejudice, social and economic as well as racial. To lift it above such entanglements, to put it on a basis of simple fact, to lay it before a judge and a jury whose sole interest shall be the determination of the truth, to prosecute it fairly will be no simple task, but it is not an impossible one, and Alabama, whose courts have twice been rebuked by the highest tribunal, would seem to have no greater duty at the present time to see that it is accomplished in a way that will give no one further occasion to criticize.

The protection of its citizens, resting on the assurance that equal justice will be accorded to all, is the first and the highest duty of a State. If Alabama wishes to secure its reputation as a State in which the primary obligations of civilized life are fulfilled, it will now bend every effort to giving the boys a fair trial and seeing to it that, if acquitted, they are fully protected against violence from all sources. Not the boys but Alabama is now on trial."

LYNCHBURG, VA.
NEWS
APR 6 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

The decision of the supreme court of the United States in the Scottsboro case has been received with acclaim in many quarters. Nearly all commentators have expressed their satisfaction that the Negroes who were convicted by an Alabama court on evidence that appears to have been inadequate and in some instances perjured, are to have a new trial if Alabama decides to press the charges, or are to go free. Few newspapers outside Alabama have resented the opinion, or done other than approve it.

The News is one of those that believes there is grave doubt of the guilt of the condemned men. Yet it finds it impossible to feel any great enthusiasm about the decision of the highest court in the land. Its lack of enthusiasm, needless to say, in face of confession of doubt of guilt, is not the result of the decision itself, but of the basis for that decision. That basis was that since no Negroes have ever served on juries in Alabama, Negroes are thereby shown to be excluded from such service and the Negro defendants therefore were denied their constitutional rights of a fair trial by their peers. Nor is the lack of enthusiasm due to any concern about granting to Negroes the right to serve on juries. That is a question that is certain to be raised more and more frequently and there will be few convictions in the southern states of Negroes accused of major felonies that can be regarded as final until the question is finally and definitely settled. The opinion of the supreme court in the Scottsboro cases may hasten such settlement. The inability of The News to find any real satisfaction in the supreme court's decision is the consequence of fear that the basis of that decision was a makeshift. The supreme court apparently was convinced after two hearings of this case that the Negroes had not received justice, that there was serious doubt about their guilt. But new trials were not ordered on that ground; they were ordered because Negroes are not permitted, or because evidence indicates that they are not permitted, to serve on juries in Alabama.

Comment gives clear indication of public opinion. Where approval has been expressed it has been because the Negroes are to have a new trial, no matter what expedient was resorted to to give them a new trial. Where disapproval has been expressed it has been based on the belief that the Negroes are guilty. The reasoning on which the decision was based has been held of no moment, almost as unworthy of comment.

"We do not believe," says the Greensboro Daily News, "that the supreme court is going to send back for trial every case in which a Negro has not been provided with a jury of his peers?" That is equivalent to saying that the supreme court's reasons for giving a weighty decision were not the true reasons. How the supreme court will keep from sending back every such case, The Daily News says, "is the supreme court's business, not ours."

Perhaps, it is none of our business, but if another case is appealed on that ground to the highest court in the land and that court does not send it back for a new trial its action will be a plain confession that its reasoning in the Scottsboro case was manufactured for the occasion and is to be accepted only in a Pickwicklian sense. That, The News submits, would not be very exalted stand for the supreme court to take and would not make for any exalted opinion of that body. Many closely divided opinions have weakened the prestige of the court; fear that many more nearly unanimous opinions are reached first and reasoning to sustain them sought afterwards will weaken it still further. It is to be hoped that future decisions in similar cases will remove some of the cause for that fear.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
MAR 29 1935

Soviet Dropped Scottsboro Aid, Dean Charges

Labor Defense Unit Must Depend on America, Houston Asserts.

Desertion of the International Labor Defense by Moscow, with reference to prosecution of the Scottsboro case, was the charge made by Dean Charles H. Houston, of Howard University, last night before the Liberal Arts Club of that institution, where he and Bernard Ades, attorney for the I. L. D. organization, presented opposing views on tactics of legal defense.

"The International Labor Defense has been left high and dry, and holding the bag," said Dean Houston, "since Russia was recognized. Moscow has soft-pedaled the Scottsboro case, and called off the parades and demonstrations, not only here, but also in foreign countries.

"The group which remains here, however nobly it holds on, must effect an American ideology if it would succeed. While the National Association for Advancement of Colored People has never actually been [illegible] case, through legal representation, it has been concerned with reference to tactics employed, and it believes this American ideology would be of more aid to the defense than tactics formerly utilized."

Ades expressed the opinion that the National Association for Advancement of Colored People was never a part of the Scottsboro legal defense because of a bankruptcy of ideas, and because of its purpose in organization, to benefit the upper strata rather than the masses of colored population.

BOSTON, MASS.
Transcript
APR 2 193[illegible]

The South Hears from the Supreme Court

In its decision that convictions in the Scottsboro case must be set aside because of the systematic exclusion of Negroes from jury service in Alabama, the Supreme Court of the United States takes action which may be far-reaching in its effect. The decision applies not only to the case of the Negroes whose fate was involved in the case before the court. There was, in addition, laid down a rule that must govern in all States. No color line is to be drawn in the selection of citizens for jury service. The Supreme Court went to the record in the Scottsboro case. It found that there was such discrimination.

There is natural interest in what Alabama will do with reference to the cases of the Negroes and their companions accused of assault upon two white women, but of greater interest is the reaction in the South to this declaration concerning the status of Negroes with reference to jury service. It is a complicated problem in States in which the distinction between the races is sharply maintained by law and custom. Exclusion of Negroes from jury service is not limited to Alabama. It obtains elsewhere in that part of the land where Negroes must travel in Jim Crow cars, and in many other ways must not trespass upon the prerogatives of the Whites.

These distinctions may endure, but in the administration of justice there is, in the light of the Supreme Court decision, no warrant for discrimination against a great body of the inhabitants of the Southern States. It cannot be justified on the plea that Negroes by training and attainment are not qualified to serve as jurors. The Court finds that there were available in Alabama Negroes who were college graduates, who had found places in the professions, who had acquired property. It is absurd to say that such men have not sufficient intelligence and character to make acceptable jurors.

The decision will recall, here in Massachusetts, the excitement occasioned two years ago when the late Judge James A. Lowell granted a writ of habeas corpus in the case of a Negro wanted in Virginia to answer to a charge of murder. Because of the exclusion of Negroes from jury service in that State Judge Lowell, in granting the writ asked: "Why send this Negro back to Virginia when I know and everyone knows that the Supreme Court will say the trial is illegal?" Judge Lowell was overruled when the case was appealed but the correctness of his statement concerning the attitude of the Supreme Court is now given signal demonstration. The court was not called upon to consider the rights of the man accused of the murder in Virginia. He was extradited, tried and convicted, but accepted a sentence of life imprisonment, and did not appeal. However, what Judge Lowell said in Boston was a forerunner of the decision now made in the Scottsboro case, for which the Supreme Court finds precedent in the fifty-year-old Delaware case to which Judge Lowell also made reference.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
APR 2 1935

Scottsboro Establishes a Principle

Yesterday's decision of the Supreme Court in the Scottsboro case was a victory for American justice in general, as well as for the Negro boys sentenced to death for a crime which it seems they did not commit.

"We think," Chief Justice Hughes said, "the evidence that no Negro has been called for jury service in Jackson County (where the trials were held) for a generation established there had been discrimination."

In other words, in order to obtain a conviction against the two defendants, Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, the state of Alabama deliberately excluded Negroes from the jury, just as it had been accustomed to bar Negroes from juries for many years past.

But for the Supreme Court's decision, the boys would probably have been executed. They will now receive a new trial, as will the five other defendants. Since much of the testimony upon which they were originally convicted has been proved false, it is likely that they will finally be granted their freedom. For their years in prison and the suffering they endured with the death penalty constantly hanging over them, they will at least have the satisfaction of knowing that they established the principle that the South can no longer railroad Negroes to prison or to death, but must give them a fair trial.

Alabama.

Lynchings—1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

5012

No Southern State Bars Negro On Juries B[illegible]e Called

Alabama Officials On Supreme Court Decision

By W. F. CALDWELL
Associated Press Staff Writer

ATLANTA, GA., April 2.—(AP)—There are no laws in Southern states barring negroes from jury duty although by custom comparatively few actually have been called.

This was emphasized today by officials of several states in noting that the U. S. Supreme Court decision reversed the Scottsboro case on the grounds that negroes were systematically excluded from serving on Alabama juries.

Commenting on this matter, Atty. Gen. William McGraw, of Texas, said at Austin:

"Texas statutes and the conduct of criminal trials are in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court. Generally when (negroes are) drawn for service, a suitable excuse is presented and always accepted. Texans have demonstrated perfect ability properly to control the negro question within the constitution."

Atty. Gen. A. A. F. Seawell, of North Carolina, said the decision "gives us pause for thought. It may mean more appeal attempts to the United States court from verdicts of our courts."

From Asst. State Atty. General W. F. Barry, Jr., of Tennessee, came the prediction that "I don't think that decision will have any influence whatever in the South except probably on a retrial of those cases."

Negroes are eligible for jury service in Arkansas if they hold a poll tax receipt, which is a necessary qualification for an election. Asst. Atty. Gen. Thomas Fitzhugh, of that state, said:

"It just happens that no jury commission selects negroes for jury duty. It may be just a coincidence."

Atty. Gen. Cary D. Landis said the Scottsboro decision will have no effect on judicial procedure in Florida. Calling attention to the fact that there is no law in Florida to prevent negroes from serving on juries and that jury lists are [illegible] from qualified voters, the Attorney General continued:

"Negroes are allowed to register to vote. They then become eligible to vote and are qualified for jury duty. Negroes have served on state court juries in Florida but not in recent years."

The office of the Mississippi Attorney General pointed to the records of that state's Supreme Court having set aside a conviction of a negro sentenced to hang for killing a white man when the district attorney admitted that negroes had been excluded from jury duty because of race and color. The court held that was sufficient to quash the indictment.

Jury commissioners in Alabama select the prospective veniremen and place their names in a box from which they are drawn by the presiding judge in open court. The commissioners are the sole judges of the qualification of jurors.

Atty. Gen. John M. Daniel, of South Carolina, said negroes "sit on some juries in some counties."

In Atlanta a few months ago, a judge denied a motion to quash an indictment against a negro on the ground that negroes were excluded from jury duty. At that time a negro was sitting as a juror on a civil case in Atlanta.

Since Maryland's noted Euel Lee case two years ago, negroes in that state have been included on every panel from which a jury is drawn and in some instances served on the jury. Asst. Atty. Gen. Henderson said "Maryland had its own Scottsboro case two years ago."

In Oklahoma, Atty. Gen. Mac Q. Williamson said the Scottsboro decision does not affect the administrative procedure in that state for jury selection.

He continued:

"In Oklahoma we have three jury commissioners in each county who have discretionary powers in drawing jury panels from lists of taxpayers. Jury commissioners in their discretion can select any reliable taxpayers whom they believe will make good jurors whether the selections be Indians, Chinamen, negroes or whites."

Negroes May Be Placed On Alabama Jury Rolls

Silence clothed official circles in Montgomery yesterday on the effect of the U. S. Supreme Court's decision in reversing two death sentences imposed in the "Scottsboro case" because the names of negroes did not appear on the jury rolls of Jackson County.

The nation's highest court Monday held the constitutional rights of the negroes—Heywood Patterson, and Clarence Norris—had been violated by "systematic exclusion" of negroes from juries in the county where they were indicted.

The negroes are two of nine indicted on charges of attacking two white women—Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates—aboard a freight train in Jackson County on March 25, 1931, and were convicted with the death penalty in Morgan County in December, 1933.

Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., retained by the State to prosecute the cases, and Solicitor H. G. Bailey, who directed the Grand Jury investigation returning the original indictments yesterday reiterated plans to seek new indictment and bring the negroes to trial.

"I do not know what effect the opinion will have," said Solicitor Bailey, at Guntersville, where he is conducting a regular session of the Marshall County Grand Jury, "but something will have to be done."

While Atty. Gen. A. A. Carmichael and other officials withheld comment pending receipt of the opinion from Washington, Roderick Beddow, prominent criminal attorney in Birmingham, said the names of qualified negroes would have to be put on the rolls.

Beddow said it would not make material difference, adding, "negroes have been drawn for jury duty in Jefferson County, but they do not wish to serve. My experience has been that they invariably asked to be excused.

"I also have observed that for any other than capital crimes, white juries are more sympathetic toward a negro defendant than they are toward a white man charged with the same offense."

While official comment was withheld, the holding of the nation's highest court that negroes were "systematically excluded" from jury duty and that the indictments in the "Scottsboro case" should have been quashed on those grounds, indicated that the names of qualified negroes probably would be placed on the jury rolls.

The opinion and ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court will be forwarded to the Alabama Supreme Court, which then must act on its recommendations and ruling, returning the cases to the courts where the negroes were tried.

No official action can be taken before this procedure is carried out, and then, if the circuit solicitor or the Attorney General requests it, Judge A. E. Hawkins, original trial judge in the case said, a special session of the Jackson County Grand Jury would be called.

If a special session is not called, evidence for new indictments would be submitted at the regular session in September.

Initiative from the defense was expected, however, as Anna Damon, acting national secretary of the International Labor Defense in New York, announced immediate steps would be taken to free the negroes.

A writ of habeas corpus in behalf of Patterson, she said, already had been forwarded to C. B. Powell, Birmingham attorney for the I. L. D., and that other steps would depend upon a study of the complete text of the Supreme Court's decision.

Patterson and Norris remained in Kilby Prison here, while the other seven defendants, whose trials were postponed to await the outcome of the appeal to the Supreme Court, are held in the Jefferson County Jail at Birmingham.

THE SUPREME COURT AND OUR JURY SYSTEM

The Supreme Court of the United States has bluntly laid down the law to Alabama on the question involving the right of Negroes to serve on juries.

In reversing a Jackson County court in the conviction of two of the "Scottsboro" infants, the Supreme Court seems to have ignored the evidence and confined its comments mainly if not entirely to the fact that no Negroes were on the jury which convicted two Negroes of a felony. The Advertiser has read only a press summary of Chief Justice Hughes's position, but it would appear that he is concerned, not with the evidence upon which the defendants were convicted, so much as with the color of the jury that convicted them.

The Court charges that Negroes were "systematically excluded" from jury service in the county of trial and that the few names of Negroes in the jury box were fraudulently admitted.

The Advertiser does not know whether this charge of fraud is just or not. It may be that the names of Negroes were admitted after the issue involving the right of Negroes to serve on Alabama juries was raised.

The Advertiser does know that generally speaking the names of Negro citizens are not in the jury boxes in the counties of Alabama, although Negroes may and do serve on Federal juries in this State.

What qualifications must a juror possess under the law? He must be a person of good character, good standing and good intelligence—at least, this is the theory upon which names are admitted to the jury box. The jury commissioners of Alabama, inquiring for new names to put on their lists, never ask whether one is black or white, yellow, brown or bronze. The citizens to whom these verbal inquiries are addressed, instinctively re-

[illegible] large popu[illegible]ided over by Charles Evans Hughes, had [illegible] no Spaniards, a more sensitive regard for the victims [illegible] no Indians, (actual and potential) of felonious as[illegible]ntgomery or[illegible]sault and less regard for the politically [illegible] dispossessed in the home State of these [illegible]uries in Ala[illegible] victims, it would not devote an entire [illegible]heir verdicts[illegible] opinion to an academic political ques[illegible] Court of the[illegible]tion, but would offer some comment on [illegible] of either of[illegible] the evidence by which the gorillas afore[illegible]re tomorrow[illegible] said had been convicted.

After all, the rape of a wench is not [illegible]e.

[illegible]r that if the[illegible] morally different from the rape of the [illegible] States, pre[illegible]proudest gentlewoman in the republic, and it seems to us that any man of sound

[illegible] rape is a felony under the law in[illegible]county, despite its relatively [illegible]large [illegible] this backward State.

Either these gorillas committed rape, or they did not.

If they committed rape the jury, (even though white) knows the truth and reported it faithfully.

If they did not commit rape, we believe that this jury would have said so.

Suppose the defendants had been Italians. There are no Italians in Jackson county. So far as we know there are not today any Italians in Montgomery instincts would see this truth. Rape happens to be a capital crime in Alabama.

We are sorry that the Supreme Court of the United States seems to have no immediate interest in this phase of the subject.

port only the names of white persons. The race question is rarely if ever raised between jury commissioners and citizens whom they question.

From a strict technical standpoint Negroes are not excluded from juries; in common practice they are, of course.

At last the Supreme Court, following up previous warnings, reverses the verdict of a State court upon the ground of race discrimination in the selection of jurors.

It now follows that Alabama jury commissions must immediately put the names of reputable Negro citizens in their jury boxes. Otherwise we cannot hope again to have the Supreme Court of the United States affirm the findings of a State court wherever a Negro's liberty or life is at stake.

The Advertiser therefore would urge that county jury commissions in Alabama act immediately to make it possible for the State of Alabama to win a case involving a Negro in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Otherwise, we wish to say that Mr. Hughes's pontifical deliverance is a lot of baloney.

Here is the Supreme Court of a great republic, reviewing the trial of two men charged with an offense that stands first among felonies in this State, reversing the verdict of an oathbound jury upon the ground that it does not like the color scheme of that jury.

The Supreme Court of the United States tells Alabama, in effect, that it is not primarily interested in otherwise credible evidence demonstrating human depravity, but that it is primarily interested in the academic political "rights" of a politically dispossessed race.

The Advertiser may be dumb, as well as "lost and ruint," but to save itself it cannot see what the political rights and privileges of Negroes in Alabama have to do with the guilt or innocence of the gorillas who are charged with criminal assault upon two women, it being agreed

NEW YORK SUN

APR 6 1935

Back to Alabama.

For a second time the United States Supreme Court returned the case of the "Scottsboro Boys" to the State courts of Alabama. A new trial was ordered for Clarence Norris, one of seven Negro youths convicted of having raped two white girls in 1931. The case of Heywood Patterson, another of the seven, came up at the same time, and though no new trial was ordered, because of technicalities, it was evident that the same principle ruled. The Supreme Court held that Norris did not receive equal protection of the law, because no members of his race were permitted to sit on the Grand Jury which indicted him. All the defendants were convicted in the superheated atmosphere of Scottsboro, Ala., immediately after the girls, one of whom later recanted had accused them. Finally the case found its way to the highest court, and new trials were ordered on the ground that the seven did not have sufficient opportunity to put in a defense. Norris and Patterson were retried, convicted again, and now more new trials are on the schedule.

On the same day the Supreme Court ruled that Texas has a right to practice its favorite method of effectively disfranchising Negroes by forbidding them membership in the Democratic party, therefore keeping them from voting in its primaries, which in such a strongly Democratic State are the scenes of the real contests, instead of the general elections.

Scottsboro

Action of the United States Supreme Court in again reversing the decisions in the Scottsboro case, and the court's condemnation of "the systematic exclusion of Negroes from jury duty" is one of the high court's most significant rulings affecting racial problems.

It is its second rebuke to the prosecutors of the now famous case, and means in simple words that Negroes must be allowed to sit on juries, else no verdict affecting a Negro can be held legal. If the Negro has money enough to take his case to the high court. It means that no state will have the legal right to try Negroes in its courts if it can be shown that the names of Negroes are excluded from its jury panels. For Alabama in particular the decision means that the Scottsboro case is now further from a solution than ever before.

In the four years since the youths were taken from a train at Paint Rock and charged with the South's one unpardonable crime, an international conflagration of bitterness has seethed about the sordid affair. Bold headlines on every newspaper have chronicled three trials. One of the women in the case—unfortunate, illiterate billed as "a typical Southern worker"—has appeared on the campuses of Eastern universities "lecturing" to enthusiastic audiences on the ponderous subject of "Social Injustice in the South."

A play, purporting to be based on the case, has appeared on the Broadway boards, causing effete New Yorkers to burn with righteous indignation at the barbarity of their Southern brothers. A judge who presided ably at one of the trials has been hunted into political oblivion and his picture displayed on the front pages of Eastern journals as one "crucified on the altar of Southern bigotry."

Radical groups vying with each other in the "defense" of the Negroes have passed the hat throughout the civilized world after making impassioned appeals to "save ignorant children from being thrown to the lions."

What is to be done?

Let us be through with the whole affair at the earliest possible moment. Changes in our court procedure necessary to bring the case to a speedy and successful conclusion should be made at once.

Biggest Tasks Loom Now In Scottsboro Struggle

STATEMENT OF NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, INTERNATIONAL LABOR DEFENSE

Daily Worker

The tremendous victory of the reversal of the death sentence against the Scottsboro boys imposes new and greater tasks than ever before upon the entire revolutionary and labor movement in its struggle for national liberation of the Negro people.

The first of these tasks is the development of a broader movement than ever before, to push this victory to its conclusion—the unconditional and safe release of the Scottsboro boys.

The lynchers are determined to re-indict the Scottsboro boys. They have expressed their intention of going through with their plans to burn these boys.

4-9-35

New Indictments Loom

The State of Alabama is preparing to hand down new indictments against the Scottsboro boys, preparing to make them face once more new frame-up trials, new living deaths, and finally the electric chair.

This is what we must now fight to defeat.

Flood the Alabama officials, Governor Bibb Graves, Lieutenant-Governor Thomas E. Knight, the State Supreme Court, all at Montgomery, with the demands:

No new indictments against the Scottsboro boys!

Immediate, unconditional freedom for the nine innocent Scottsboro boys!

Cost to Be Great

This demand from the millions of toilers must be backed by legal steps, writs, briefs and other expensive moves which the courts put in the way of execution even of their own decisions.

Together with the development of the mass campaign for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys and Angelo Herndon, whose case now goes before the U. S. Supreme Court, will cost tremendous sums.

To date the I. L. D. has spent more than $75,000 in the Scottsboro struggle.

Within the next two months the I. L. D. must raise $20,000. The daily expenses are very heavy. Thousands of dollars are needed immediately.

Huge Responsibility

Never in the history of the labor defense movement has any organization been faced with the responsibility now shouldered by the International Labor Defense.

We appeal to all working class organizations, to all the friends of labor and the Negro liberation movement to once more lend support in raising fighting funds to organize and carry on the battle. Add your contribution as a challenge to the torture-chain-gang system, to the fight for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys, Angelo Herndon, and all class war prisoners. Rush funds immediately to the International Labor Defense, Room 610, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
INTERNATIONAL LABOR DEFENSE,
Anna Damon, Acting National Secretary.

Scottsboro Case Action Scheduled

Following the return yesterday from Washington, where he attended the annual meeting of the American Law Institute as Chief Justice John C. Anderson of the Alabama Supreme Court, it was made known that the court will, some time between now and Thursday, take up the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States, reversing the judgments of Alabama's courts in the cases of two of the so-called Scottsboro case defendants, Clarence Norris and Heywood Patterson.

It is expected that on or about Thursday of the present week, the State's highest tribunal, in compliance with the mandate from Washington, will remand these cases back to Jackson County where they originated. There, it is understood, Lieut. Gov. Knight, special prosecutor for the State, will file a motion without delay, asking that the original indictments which the U. S. Supreme Court held are defective, be quashed; and thereafter will request that new indictments be returned by a Jackson County Grand Jury.

Quashing of the indictments, however will not result in even the temporary release of the defendants, as some time ago, Mrs. Victoria Price, star witness for the State in the cases went from her home in Huntsville to Scottsboro, where she swore out new warrants for the arrest of all of them. On these warrants they will be held pending their reindictment and trials.

Alabama.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

5013

Let Inter-Racial Committee, Black And White, Pick Scotts boro Defense Attorneys," - Editor

The Scottsboro Case

The State of Alabama should for the sake of BETTER relationship between the white and black people of this state, now and for years to come, take unprecedented steps to see that the truth is established in the trial of the Scottsboro boys.

Conviction or acquittal without the naked truth being brought out, no matter whom it favors or disfavors, may be that type of solution of a problem that creates more problems than it solves.

There are a lot of people who believe the boys guilty and many who do not believe them guilty. These boys should not be convicted or acquitted on mere belief, unsupported by facts, beyond a shadow of doubt. Because to do so means that the ill-designing of the two schools of thought will make innocent people suffer to satisfy prejudice, hate and all the strife creating efforts now afoot in this state.

—Free It of Hate Food

For the state or the defense to lose in the interest of justice, pure and simple, means a victory for ever the loser.

We have absolutely no sympathy for any man, be he white or black, who violates the person of any woman. We have less sympathy for any one who would try to defeat the ends of justice for any one guilty of such offense.

We feel that it is beneath the dignity of civilized society to attempt to persecute the unguilty to further any end. So, since we have those who believe the boys innocent, let us all do away with racial prejudices, sensational hates, political ambitions, do all we can to keep down these monsters in ourselves and others and do what we can to see that the end of justice is served for both the Scottsboro boys and the State of Alabama.

—Get the Naked Truth

This will require courage to give and take on both sides. It will necessitate the best white and Negro citizens of this state getting together and seeing that the defense is supplemented by a capable, justice loving lawyer of the South — a Southern lawyer who wants to see justice done more than anything else.

This is a case in which so much more than the Scottsboro boys is involved, that people who are to live here cannot afford to allow grand stand playing, camouflaging and trickery to dominate from any group.

We don't think the prosecution will play a square game with the International Labor Defense no matter what is what, nor the I. L. D. with the prosecution no matter what is what. Both sides are able to keep this thing in court for 20 years. This means an increase in tax, hatred, strife, dishonor, suffering of the innocent and hundreds of wholly unnecessary things.

—Preserve Inter-racial Goodwill

There are people who doubt the sincerity of both the present prosecution and defense. Therefore, it might be a better thing for all concrned to ask the Inter-Racial Committee and a committee of white and Negro churchmen to pick three defense attorneys and allow the interested organizations and individuals to defray the expense. A shifting in the prosecution set-up would not be a bad idea.

These suggestions may all be entirely wrong, but the WEEKLY REVIEW is taking into consideration the enormous potentialities both for good and harm in the situation as it is today.

Alabama Launches New Drive Against Scottsboro Boys

INCLUSION OF LONE NEGRO JUROR DOES NOT ALTER CASE—MASS PROTESTS MUST BE WORKERS' ANSWER—FUNDS NEEDED FOR DEFENSE

THE new indictments returned yesterday against the Scottsboro Boys mark the active resumption of the drive of Alabama officials to railroad these nine innocent working class youth to the electric chair.

By including a lone Negro on the Jackson County Grand Jury, the Alabama rulers made a pretense at adhering to the decision of the United States Supreme Court which upheld the contention of attorneys retained in the case by the International Labor Defense that the constitutional rights of the defendants had been violated by the systematic exclusion of Negroes from Alabama grand and petit juries. The Federal Court itself left the way open for this monstrous travesty on justice by refusing to rule on the fundamental issues raised by the International Labor Defense.

The inclusion of this lone Negro on the grand jury does not alter one iota the facts of the hideous frame-up of the boys, whose innocence has been overwhelmingly proved in the courts of Alabama and before the U. S. Supreme Court. It does, however, show how the mass fight for the boys has forced the Alabama lynch rulers to retreat from the cynical position expressed by the Jackson County Sentinel (Scottsboro) in 1932, that a "Negro juror in Jackson County would be a curiosity. And some curiosities are embalmed, you know."

The new indictments are a danger signal which must galvanize the entire working class and the Negro people, and every opponent of lynch law and the suppression of democratic rights into action in a militant, mighty struggle for the lives and freedom of the Scottsboro Boys, for the democratic rights of the Negro people and the white and Negro toilers of Alabama.

The history of the Scottsboro case, extending nearly five years, is the stark record of a ruthless ruling class conspiracy to carry through the wholesale lynch massacre of nine framed-up sons of the working class and the Negro people.

Held in jail for over five years, subjected to the most bestial torture and brazen denial of their constitutional rights, these nine youths, two of whom were under 14 years of age at the time of their arrest, are to be subjected to a new ordeal in the lynch courts of Alabama, to a new threat to their young lives.

The renewed threat against their lives, comes at a time when Angelo Herndon has been returned to the Georgia chain gang by the United States Supreme Court, which refused to review the conviction of this heroic young Negro labor leader who has been sentenced to 18 to 20 years on the Georgia chain gang.

These two attacks on the Negro people and the toiling masses, white and Negro, of the United States, must be answered by a thunder of protests and renewed determination to build an American People's Front against fascist reaction and war. Mass meetings, demonstrations and other protest actions must be organized in every section of the country. Funds for the defense of the Scottsboro Boys and Angelo Herndon should be rushed at once to the International Labor Defense, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

Arraignment Of Negroes Put Off

Scottsboro Date Moved Up To Jan. 6 On Request Of Samuel Leibowitz

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Dec. 13.—(AP)—Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., retained as special prosecutor in the "Scottsboro case" announced here tonight that the arraignment of nine negro defendants in the case at Decatur, had been postponed from Dec. 16 to Jan. 6.

The postponement, Knight said, was at the request and agreement of Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, chief of counsel for the negroes.

"The trials will proceed just as rapidly as had the arraignment not been postponed," the Lieutenant Governor said, in announcing the postponement.

Arraignment is necessary under the new indictments recently returned by a Grand Jury at Scottsboro in Jackson County, which included the first negro within the memory of the oldest residents.

The negroes are charged with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, Huntsville, Ala., mill workers, aboard a freight train in Jackson County March 25, 1931.

Reindictment was made necessary by a U. S. Supreme Court decision this Spring which set aside the death sentence on Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, two of the defendants, holding their constitutional rights had been denied them.

The nation's highest tribunal upheld defense contention that negroes were "systematically excluded" from grand and petit juries in Jackson County where they were indicted and in Morgan County where they were tried under a change of venue.

Since the decision negroes names have been placed in jury boxes throughout the State, and three recently served on a grand jury in Morgan County.

Judge W. W. Callahan earlier in the afternoon had said Leibowitz asked that the arraignment be postponed by Dec. 23, but under Alabama statutes all circuit court sessions end the last Saturday before Christmas and resume on the first Monday after Jan. 1.

The negroes this week were served in the Jefferson County jail here with capiases under the new indictments, and after arraignment will be brought to trial again at Decatur.

Eight of the negroes have been under death sentence once, Patterson three times and Norris twice.

RUMOR COLORED JUROR FORCED TO VOTE "YES"

Two Indictments Returned Against Each Boy; New Trial Is Speeded

CASE NOTORIOUS

Witnesses, Former Judge Long Ago Denounced Efforts To Send Victim to Chair

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., Nov. 15.—(Special)—Nine young boys, whom international public opinion after weighing all evidence presented against them, has long since determined the victims of the most unreasoning injustice, must stand again the harrowing or deal of a trial on obviously trumped up charges of assault.

One member of their own race was on the special grand jury of eighteen that voted new indictments for the persecuted Scottsboro boys. Each of the boys was named in two indictments based in the alleged rape by the group of two hobo white girls in a small Alabama town more than four years ago.

Little time was used by the jury in returning the indictments, and little evidence presented, it is reported. Two colored men were named last week in the lists from which the jurors were selected to meet the decision handed down by the United States Supreme court that the boys had not been denied their constitutional rights because members of their race had been systematically excluded from juries which had previously convicted them.

Believe Juror Threatened

Creed Conyer, a laborer of Paint Rock, Ala., was the colored man who aided the seventeen whites in returning the new indictments. The International Labor Defense has already announced it will investigate rumors that Conyer was threatened with a horrible fate if he failed to vote an expression of prevailing Alabama sentiment regarding the boys.

The case, the details of which are now known to every intelligent citizen of this country, has attracted international attention because of the viciousness with which the deaths of the boys have been sought by the degenerate Southerners regardless of the implications of the nation's highest court that there was clearly no sufficient evidence to convict them.

Long ago, two of the three prosecuting witnesses for the state admitted they signed original affidavits against the boys only because of intimidation at the hand of Alabama police. The judge in the first trial in the lower court who completed a term of office shortly after the trial, was overwhelmingly dereated for reelection because he publically opposed further persecution of the boys after the first U. S. Supreme court decision.

A new appeal for generous contributions to a defense fund is being prepared by the I.L.D. More than a quarter million dollars have already been spent in prosecution and defense of the case, various estimates state. New trials for the boys are being pushed rapidly by local authorities.

Lynchings - 1935
2
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5014

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

APR 4 1935

ANOTHER COMMUTER.

For the second time the Supreme court has intervened in the Scottsboro case and ordered for its principals a new trial.

In the first instance, when it handed down a ruling in 1932, the highest court held that denial of adequate counsel represented a violation of the defendants' constitutional rights. In that connection there is intermission to wonder how many defendants, referring to the ignorant, black, poor white or helpless kind, in capital cases have "adequate counsel." Does a young lawyer, or two, frequently appointed by the trial court as the hearing is about to begin constitute "adequate counsel"? The Scottsboro defendants were in position to carry their fight to the highest court; most of the type referred to, however, are not.

In the present instance the tribunal from which there is no appeal has ruled that exclusion of negroes from jury service made the procedure invalid and the conviction which it involved unconstitutional. The Supreme court of Alabama, previously ruling on the same issue, had held that the exclusion was not designedly discriminatory, but the Nine Old Men at Washington, weighing the facts, thought "the evidence that no negro has been called for jury service in Jackson county for a generation established there had been discrimination." The decision from that angle is an indictment of Alabama and southern justice, capable of sharp repercussions and necessary readjustments. Its implications go far beyond the Scottsboro case.

Back of the two interventions, although predicated on rulings which are themselves of recognized importance, there is the suspicion that the Supreme court does not believe the defendants guilty.

How corrective steps are to be obtained by ordering a new trial is a practical question which the learned jurists themselves did not attempt to answer. It is not conceived here that an acquittal, in the light of what has already transpired and the atmosphere which must be as prejudicial as it ever was can be obtained in Alabama. Already it is announced that new indictments will be sought, and it is significant that this announcement comes not from the attorney general but from former Attorney General Knight who now speaks as lieutenant-governor. The Scottsboro case has apparently become a political spring-board which is working.

About the only immediate conclusion at hand is that the principals will not die; they'll spend the rest of their life in jail while their case becomes a legal commuter between Washington and Alabama.

HIGH POINT, N. C.
ENTERPRISE

APR 2 1935

SCOTTSBORO REVERSAL
NO MERE INCIDENT

REVERSAL of the convictions of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, two Negroes who have spent the past four years on the threshold of the death chamber for the Scottsboro, Ala., assault cases, by the United States Supreme Court is of the greatest significance in the South because its basis brings a step nearer an issue which ultimately must be met by our people.

Chief Justice Hughes, reading the decision in which he was supported by seven other of the justices, said that the systematic exclusion of Negroes from jury rolls was sufficient reason to reverse the convictions of the two men whose lives were at stake. The import of the ruling is that Alabama authorities must seek new indictments against the seven Negroes accused of attacking two white girls on a freight train. Already the Negroes have been tried and re-tried in Alabama, and always the jury has returned a verdict of guilty.

The Supreme court's criticism of the exclusion of Negroes from the Alabama juries is the "body blow" to Southern state courts that Circuit Solicitor H. G. Bailey, who prosecuted the original indictments, termed it. Sharp and unqualified, its effect must extend beyond the Scottsboro cases.

There is a serious indictment of justice that draws a line, color or whatever, as Chief Justice Hughes recalled in the case that no witness, including some who had dwelled most of their lives in Jackson County, Alabama, was able to recall that a Negro had served on a jury there—and there were, as he observed, many Negroes who could meet every requirement for jurors in the way of literary tests, age and sound health.

Hardly a decision of such social significance to the South has been rendered since Chief Justice Roger B. Taney, 78 years ago, held to the other side with the Dred Scott decision. The Scottsboro case means a great deal more than the probable release of principals in one of the most significant legal battles of the age.

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL.
JOURNAL

APR 3 1935

Reprieve.

Mr. Dooleys observation, that even supreme court justices read the newspapers, is a timely comment upon the decision in Washington which again halts the execution of seven Negro boys in Alabama.

The technicality upon which the appeal was based—the failure to include Negroes upon Alabama jury lists—has served its purpose in this particular case. The supreme court speaks again, as it has many times before, in behalf of the full rights of citizenship for the Negro race. Alabama, of course, will continue its discrimination, but the boys of the celebrated Scottsboro case are saved.

This is the case that arose when two girl tramps of unsavory past claimed that they were assaulted by seven Negroes in the gondola car of a freight train on which they were stealing a ride. The evidence was of the flimsiest—one of the girls testifying later that the whole story was a falsehood—but in the meanwhile Alabama's "southern pride" became involved. The sentiment was created throughout the state, that either the Negroes must be put to death, or the blacks of the state, and "damn Yankee" meddlers, would be out of hand.

So violent and unreasoning is local prejudice, there is reason for doubt whether even the authority of the United States supreme court will finally rule. The new danger of the Scottsboro boys is illegal lynching, in place of the legal lynching that had been intended.

Knoxville, Tenn. News Sentinel
April 3, 1935,

Justice

EIGHT U. S. SUPREME COURT justices united in striking down the conviction of two Scottsboro defendants. The Court held that Negroes had been illegally barred from acting as jurymen in the trials. Alabama now must either dismiss the famous case or re-indict and retry the defendants with Negro jurymen on the panels.

This is the High Court's second rebuke to the prosecutors of these Negro youths and their companions. In November, 1932, the Court ordered retrials on the ground that Alabama had denied the defendants due process on other grounds.

In these two opinions the Supreme Court has done much more than save the lives of obscure boys. It has done more than hearten the faith of 15,000,000 American Negroes in their country's courts. It has helped re-enforce the very foundations of the republic.

In his first inaugural address Jefferson said that equal and exact justice to all men of whatever state or persuasion, through trials by juries impartially selected, forms the surest bulwark against anti-republican tendencies. This is even truer today than in 1801.

Knoxville, Tenn. News Sentinel
April 3, 1935,

No Scottsboro Cases in Knox, Says Gen. Bibb

Negroes Are Not Barred From Jury Service Here, Declares Official.

The U. S. Supreme Court will never reverse a Knox County case on the ground Negroes are barred from jury service, as the high court did in the Scottsboro, Ala., case yesterday, says Attorney General Bibb.

"Our lists from which we select juries contains scores of Negroes," the attorney general said. "They are not barred from jury service."

"And I can remember two cases at least where Negroes were members of the jury. Lindsey Graves was one of them in a case tried a few years ago. And there was another case where a Negro named Jackson was a juror."

Recently Attorney Ray H. Jenkins, proposed an all-Negro jury to try Arthur Greenway, Negro, charged with violating the age of consent. Attorney General agreed that the jury be half and half. The plan was never carried out, however, and Greenway was acquitted by an all-white jury.

High Point, N. C. Enterprise
April 2, 1935

SCOTTSBORO REVERSAL
NO MERE INCIDENT

REVERSAL of the convictions of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, two Negroes who have spent the past four years on the threshold of the death chamber for the Scottsboro, Ala., assault cases, by the United States Supreme Court is of the greatest significance in the South because its basis brings a step nearer an issue which ultimately must be met by our people.

Chief Justice Hughes, reading the decision in which he was supported by seven other of the justices, said that the systematic exclusion of Negroes from jury rolls was sufficient reason to reverse the convictions of the two men whose lives were at stake. The import of the ruling is that Alabama authorities must seek new indictments against the seven Negroes accused of attacking two white girls on a freight train. Already the Negroes have been tried and re-tried in Alabama, and always the jury has returned a verdict of guilty.

The Supreme court's criticism of the exclusion of Negroes from the Alabama juries is the "body blow" to Southern state courts that Circuit Solicitor H. G. Bailey, who prosecuted the original indictments, termed it. Sharp and unqualified, its effect must extend beyond the Scottsboro cases.

There is a serious indictment of justice that draws a line, color or whatever, as Chief Justice Hughes recalled in the case that no witness, including some who had dwelled most of their lives in Jackson County, Alabama, was able to recall that a Negro had served on a jury there—and there were, as he observed, many Negroes who could meet every requirement for jurors in the way of literary tests, age and sound health.

Hardly a decision of such social significance to the South has been rendered since Chief Justice Roger B. Taney, 78 years ago, held to the other side with the Dred Scott decision. The Scottsboro case means a great deal more than the probable release of principals in one of the most significant legal battles of the age.

Sylacauga, Ala., News
April 5, 1935

The United States Supreme Court has reversed for the third time the Scottsboro case. The Court charges negroes were systematically excluded from the jury box, and a few names of negroes were fraudulently admitted in the box. The unwritten statute may again have to be invoked to cover such heinous cases.

New York Organizations Give $812, Pledge $5,600 For Scottsboro Defense

Answering the call of the International Labor Defense and the Central Committee of the Communist Party, trade unions, mass organizations, and sections of the Communist Party in New York City yesterday made direct donations amounting to $81 to the Scottsboro defense fund of the I. L. D., and gave in pledges to raise a total of $5,600 within two months.

The Central Committee of the Communist Party announced Tuesday a direct donation of $500 to the defense fund.

This was the immediate response of the class-conscious workers of New York to the appeal for a $20,000 fund to fight against the fulminations by the Alabama lynch officials of their unabated intention of prosecuting the Scottsboro boys to their death, following the recent victory of the I. L. D. in obtaining reversal of the death verdicts against Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson from the U. S. Supreme Court.

Mass Campaign Needed

Along with the drive for funds, a campaign must be developed, to rouse the broadest masses to organized expression of their demand that there shall be no new indictments against the nine innocent Scottsboro boys, that they must be granted immediate, unconditional and safe release.

The trade unions, mass organizations and the Communist Party organizations over the whole country are being urged to follow the lead of New York district, to collect funds at once and rush them in to the national office of the International Labor Defense, Room 610, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

Total received yesterday	$1,322
Central Committee, C.P.	500
Sec. 3, District 2, C.P.	25
Sec. 14, District 2, C.P.	100
Sec. 15, District 2, C.P.	112
Sec. 24, District 2, C.P.	100
International Workers' Order	300
Jewish Bureau	30
Russian Bureau	50
Dentists' and Doctors' Group	50
Professional Workers' League	25
Buffalo District, Communist Party	10
Still to be raised in $20,000 Scottsboro fund drive	$18,678

CALL FOR VOLUNTEERS

The National Office of the International Labor Defense is in great need of assistance for its campaign to free the Scottsboro boys and Angelo Herndon. Ten workers are needed. The I. L. D. cannot pay for this service, but ...

CORTLAND, N. Y.
STANDARD
APR 3 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO DECISION

A sens[e] of relief, accompanied by a sense of despair, will, we think, be the general response to the action of the Supreme Court in again setting aside the Scottsboro convictions and once more ordering—as it can only do—a new trial. There will be relief that a gross miscarriage of justice has again been averted. There will be despair over the appalling difficulties of securing a right and just conclusion in cases of this kind, once the fierce emotions of race prejudice, sectional pride, social and economic antagonisms, bigotries and ignorances have been stirred. It is now four years, almost to a day, since the Scottsboro case started upon its long and shocking history. There have been fine episodes in it—one thinks, for example, of Judge Horton's courage and fairness—but for the most part it has seemed fated to bring out the worst weaknesses and vices in the American judicial, political and social systems.

Twice the Supreme Court of the United States has convicted the state of Alabama of failing in its constitutional duty to assure justice to Negroes accused of rape; once an Alabama judge has set aside a jury's conviction as palpably contrary to the evidence, only to see another jury under another judge promptly convict upon essentially the same record. This is a damning indictment of the Alabama court system; and one cannot help thinking that if the citizens of that state had expended upon getting a really fair trial for the defendants a tithe of the energy which they have devoted to proving themselves right by securing their exceution, the results would have been much happier for Alabama and for the country. Unhappily, when passions have been thoroughly aroused, communities do not respond in that way, either in Alabama or (as the Mooney case and too many others sufficiently demonstrate) anywhere else. But after the Supreme Court decision it may perhaps be realized that to carry these proceedings any farther will accomplish nothing save to make worse a tragedy from which there can be no good issue now.—New York Herald Tribune.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
AGE HERALD
APR 6 1935

Graves Meets The Issue

Governor Graves has acted promptly, decisively and courageously to t[he] end that Alabama jury practice sh[all] be in conformity with the recent ru[l]ing of the United States Supre[me] Court in the Scottsboro cases holdi[ng] systematic exclusion of Negroes fro[m] jury rolls is unconstitutional.

"Without in any manner assuming or intimating," the governor has wri[t]ten all circuit judges, "that the co[n]tents of your jury boxes in any wa[y] fail to conform to this Supreme Cou[rt] opinion, I write to suggest that in th[e] event there be any non-conformity i[n] this regard, that you speedily tak[e] proper steps to remedy any suc[h] defects."

The state's chief executive calle[d] attention to the 1931 jury law, de[-] clared he would ask the Legislatur[e] to enact the legislation needful in the filling or refilling of jury boxes and suggested that "in any case in which this question is injected into the pleadings, the case be passed, continued or, if need be, nol-prossed until a new indictment may be presented by a Grand Jury to which this objection will not apply."

Copies of the governor's letter were sent all solicitors.

In a public statement, the governor said in part:

I have received the Supreme Court's decision in the Scottsboro case, holding in effect that when there is systematic exclusion of Negroes from juries, it is discrimination against the race in violation of the United States Constitution.

This decision means that we must put the names of Negroes in jury boxes in every county in the state.

Alabama is going to observe the supreme law of America.

The governor is the chief law enforcement officer of the state and the conservator of all laws. All laws, of course, include the supreme laws of the land.

It is unusual for the governor to undertake to suggest to the judicial department things which under our state policy are peculiarly within its jurisdiction. However, I have a duty to perform and an oath to abide by.

"In the exercise of this power," the governor's statement explained, he sent his letter to the judges.

The Age-Herald already has expressed its conviction that the state should and must accept the plain implications of the Supreme Court ruling. It has voiced its concurrence in the theoretical, legal and moral soundness of that ruling. It now commends the governor for a brave, intelligent and forthright meeting of the issue.

It seems to this paper that, while it might have been possible for a chief executive to evade such a direct and personal facing of the situation and his responsibilities as characterizes the action of Governor Graves, the Alabama executive has proceeded in accord with a high conception of his duty that is well within the bounds of the prerogatives of his office and state leadership. His suggestions and recommendations surely cannot be rightly regarded as constituting an invasion of judicial functions.

Governor Graves has set an example for all the officials and citizens of the state in their attitude toward the Supreme Court ruling. If that example is generally adopted—as this paper believes it will be—Alabama can look forward without alarm to a successful solution of whatever problems the ruling may raise.

While these problems now may rise on a broader scale than in the past, they will hardly be different in kind from those already overcome in this state.

It would seem undoubtedly to be the highest wisdom to deal with any such difficulties separately as they come up, to avoid the anticipation of troubles that may never occur and to suppress fears based on vague possibilities and generalities in the situation as a whole.

There is no reason to believe that the governor does not mean exactly what he says concerning his attitude. In their cooperation with him, The Age-Herald hopes that officials, legislators and citizens will so construe his purposes and spirit and act accordingly.

Miami, Fla. Herald
April 2, 1935

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE HUGHES writes the opinion of the Supreme court reversing the death sentences of two negroes, Morris and Patterson, condemned in the Scottsboro case, in which one of two white women found in a box car with seven negroes, confessed that she and her companion accused the negroes of crime to save themselves from disgrace.

Chief Justice Hughes finds that excluding negroes from the jury, which he considers proved, would "make the indictments invalid." The Supreme court decision, it is believed, may free all seven of the accused Scottsboro negroes.

Lynchings-1935
& Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5015

MOB ACTION FEARED BY LEIBOWITZ WHEN CASE IS CONTINUED

Amsterdam News
4-6-35

Youths Will Be Taken to Alabama Town if Rearrested

New York Times

MILITIA IS ASKED

Highest Court Scores Jury Exclusion in Making Reversal

While the civilized world rejoiced yesterday at the unequivocal reversal of the Scottsboro convictions by the highest tribunal in the land, Attorney Samuel S. Leibowitz moved swiftly to prevent the possible lynching of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson when the youths are returned to the small Alabama town in accordance with the laws of that state.

The New York attorney, whose brilliant summation before the U. S. Supreme Court resulted in one of the most clear-cut declarations of the Negro's rights in the history of the country, has wired Governor Bibb Graves of Alabama demanding that troops be dispatched to protect the young defendants if they are rearrested on their release from the death cell of Kilby Prison in Montgomery.

If the state insists upon prosecuting the cases further, Norris and Patterson, upon being rearrested, must be carried directly to Scottsboro, Ala., the scene of their original trial. Attorney Leibowitz informed The Amsterdam News Tuesday that he will go to Alabama this week and be present at Kilby Prison when the boys are released, probably temporarily, in accordance with the mandate of the United States Supreme Court. This tribunal held that the defendants had not been properly indicted because of the systematic exclusion of Negroes from the grand jury rolls of Jackson County, of which Scottsboro is the county seat.

Lynching Feared.

Because of the intense feeling in the small Alabama community over the case, which has become an international issue, Attorney Leibowitz feels that an attempt might be made to lynch the defendants so that the Scottsboro cases may be ended "once for all." He cited this belief in his wire to Governor Graves. A lynching would also obviate the immediate necessity of placing Negroes on grand and petit juries in Alabama, as directed by the higher court.

Announcing its decision exactly four years and six days after Norris, Patterson and seven other Negro youths were seized on a freight train at Paint Rock, Ala., on March 25, 1931, and accused of assaulting two white women hoboes, the United States Supreme Court struck a tremendous blow at the exclusion of Negroes from jury service in the South.

Written by Chief Justice Hughes and confining itself to the Norris case, the first decision held that Negroes had been arbitrarily and systematically barred from jury duty in Jackson County, where the nine youths were indicted and tried the first time, and in Morgan County, where the cases were heard a second and third time on a change of venue. Because of this exclusion, the decision stated unequivocally, the whole court and grand jury proceedings were invalidated. A new trial was directed for Norris.

Technicality Raised.

Because of a technicality raised by Alabama, the U. S. Supreme Court reversed the Patterson conviction and death penalty, but sent that case back to the Alabama Supreme Court for that tribunal to decide whether it will grant him a new trial despite the technical objections. Justice Hughes' opinion made it clear, however, that, should the state court deny Patterson a new trial, the U. S. Supreme Court would direct an order for the action.

The State had contended in the Patterson case that the U. S. Supreme Court had no jurisdiction because a bill of exceptions had not been filed within the required time in the Alabama courts. In ordering the reversal, Justice Hughes wrote: "We have power to make such disposition of the case as judgment requires."

As a result of the clear-cut decision of the high tribunal, Alabama is faced with two alternatives. It can allow the boys to go free when the order is served through the State Supreme Court on the Kilby Prison warden, or it can rearrest them and seek to reindict them with a grand jury whose rolls contain the names of qualified Negro residents of Jackson County.

May Drag Case.

Because of the enormous expense already incurred by the state in its attempts to execute the defendants, it is believed in some circles that Alabama may decide to nolle prosse the cases. Observers familiar with the racial vagaries of the South believe, however, that the state will promptly rearrest the boys and continue its prosecution. This course has already been indicated by Lieutenant-Governor Thomas E. Knight, Jr., who, as Attorney-General, prosecuted the three previous trials. Serving now as special prosecutor, Knight has announced that the cases will be fought 'to their conclusion."

As a result of the U. S. Supreme Court's decision, which was delivered Monday, Alabama is faced with another problem. The ruling of the high tribunal charges Kelly Morgan, grand jury clerk of Jackson County, with forgery. The court accepted Mr. Leibowitz's contention that the names of six Negroes were forged on the Jackson County jury rolls after the boys had been indicted. This action was obviously taken in an effort to combat the charge of racial exclusion.

The New York attorney established this contention in the second Decatur trials when he called a handwriting expert to testify that the names had been forged. Mr. Leibowitz presented these jury rolls to the high tribunal and was upheld in his charge. As a result of this, the state would appear obligated to prosecute Morgan for forgery. It is unlikely, however, that the action will be taken.

Second Reversal.

Monday's ruling marked the second time that the U. S. Court has reversed the Scottsboro decisions. Following the original conviction of the nine defendants in a mob-dominated courtroom at Scottsboro in 1931 and the sentencing of eight of them to death, the International Labor Defense secured a reversal of the death sentences when the high tribunal held that the boys had not had full opportunity to consult counsel.

Attorney Leibowitz entered the case in December, 1932, when he accepted the invitation of the I. L. D. to become trial attorney in the cases. He stipulated that he would pay his own expenses and accept no remuneration.

On a change of venue, Patterson was retried before Judge James Horton in Decatur early in 1933. Despite the fact that one of two women hoboes, Ruby Bates, recanted her previous testimony and charged that the whole case was a frameup, Patterson was convicted a second time. Judge Horton reversed the conviction, however, and Patterson and Norris were tried again in Decatur later in the year before Judge William W. Callahan and again convicted and doomed.

In October of last year, Attorney Leibowitz and Attorney George W. Chamlee of Chattanooga split with the I. L. D. after two New York attorneys were arrested in Nashville, Tenn., and charged with an attempt to bribe Victoria Price, the remaining complaining witness against the boys. At this time Attorneys Leibowitz and Chamlee revealed that the I. L. D. lawyers had failed to file a bill of exceptions for Patterson in the specified time. It was this failure which raised the technicality in that case before the U. S. Supreme Court.

Finally, after a long and bitter fight over which faction would represent the boys in their appeal to the high tribunal, Attorney Leibowitz made the oral arguments before the U. S. Supreme Court for both Norris, who had insisted that only Mr. Leibowitz could represent him, and for Patterson, who had changed from one group to the other. Walter Pollack, retained by the I. L. D., also made a shorter address in behalf of both of the boys when Mr. Leibowitz had finished. The trial counsel has been designated as their representative by eight out of the nine defendants.

Lawyer Hailed.

Mr. Leibowitz stated yesterday that he would continue to represent the boys with the support of the American Scottsboro Committee, 289 Fourth avenue. This committee, composed of prominent church and lay leaders, was organized to raise funds for the defense after the New York attorney split with the I. L. D. Hailing the U. S. Supreme Court decision yesterday, Dr. George E. Haynes, executive vice-chairman of the committee, stated:

"We feel especially encouraged by the sweeping victory before the U. S. Supreme Court for the freedom of the boys and the constitutional right of Negroes to trial by a jury of their peers. This result is due to the brilliant legal work of Attorney Samuel S. Leibowitz, whom the committee has supported unswervingly in the face of much opposition and misrepresentation.

"We expect to continue this struggle until every one of these boys is free, and we confidently expect the full-hearted support of all justice-loving citizens.

A contribution of $200 raised by the students and faculty of Knoxville College, Knoxville, Tenn., was announced last Saturday by the American Scottsboro Committee. A committee under the leadership of Prof. C. W. Blackburn conducted the fund-raising campaign.

"The citizens of Knoxville have expressed their sympathy and interest in the Scottsboro boys through their contribution of more than $200 for their defense," Prof. Blackburn stated. The gifts were made as individuals and through various organizations. It is their sincere desire that other groups of Negro citizens throughout the country join them in this co-operative fight for the freedom of these boys."

Scottsboro Interlude

IN A decision setting aside the verdicts and death sentences imposed on HAYWOOD PATTERSON and CLARENCE NORRIS in the now famous Scottsboro cases, the United States Supreme Court wiped away completely the entire history of those long litigations back to the very moment they were arrested. Even the indictments charging the seven boys and young men with rape upon two white girls were invalidated. And in this respect, they have been given a fresher, more complete lease on life than they have had since their incarceration in March, 1931.

The outlook for justice to these boys is brighter today than it has been in four years.

And, recalling the unpardonable miscarriages of justice which have kept them in the shadow of the electric chair all during that time, we well may heave a sigh of relief. May we not be over optimistic in hoping that even the people of Alabama will soon tire of shaming themselves in the eyes of the nation!

The Supreme Court's decision, read by Mr. Justice HUGHES, is sweeping and unequivocal. It meets boldly and squarely the pri- on the point has been unquestioned have been pinned down to earth latest Scottsboro decision of the mary question that has dominated for more than fifty years, but the and branded as outlaws. Supreme Court. But its factual the Scottsboro travesty from the facts which in the Scottsboro cases No longer can wholesale exclu-significance is that now, with the beginning; and that is the consti-are alleged to violate that law have sion of colored people from jury slate wiped clean, these seven untutionality of judicial proceedings been elusive and fraught with rolls be shielded from the light of judicial proceedings have at least a in which Negroes are systemati-subterfuges. At last all these de- behind discretionary fighting chance for justice and cally excluded from jury services and schisms for denying to powers vested in commissioners freedom. because of race or color. The law the Negro his constitutional rights That is the legal import of this

U. S. SUPREME COURT VOIDS THE SCOTTSBORO DECISION

AN EDITORIAL

The supreme court of the nation on Monday last set aside the lynch decision rendered by a jury in the criminal court and sustained in all of its infamy by the state of Alabama in the mock trial involving Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson of the equally infamous Scottboro case.

The decision setting aside this mockery of justice was rendered by Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, who in his opinion said, "The question here is one of fact, whether the right has been denied. We think the evidence that no Negro has been called for jury service in Jackson County for a generation established there had been discrimination. We find no justification for excluding Negroes from the trial jury."

The court's decision breathed contempt for the methods used in the Alabama court in arriving at its verdict and pronouncing the sentence of death upon the two defendants and charged that the methods by which Negroes were excluded from jury service in that state was fraudulent.

The court further stated that the absence of Negroes from the jury roll should have caused the judge who tried the case to have quashed the indictment. Twenty million black people and a hundred million white people in America know in their hearts that the whole proceedings embracing the Scottsboro trial had its inception in cowardice, insincerity, framed and prepared by men who live and perpetuate themselves in politics through hypocrisy, racial hate and prejudice.

The jurors who heard the evidence knew that the Scottsboro boys were framed. The presiding judge was equally well acquainted with the same set of facts; the attorney general, the gallant Mr. Knight, the chivalrous southern gentleman knew that his hands would have been stained with the blood of innocent men had these boys hung; yet the whole machinery of the state confederated in a conspiracy to do under the pretense of law and order that which would have constituted a legalized lynching, had they been successful, merely to satisfy their lust for human blood.

It is fortunate that there is in America a supreme court of the nation, an institution presided over by men of unquestionable character, high attainments and free from the unholy influences of those in high places who would debauch the spirit, as well as the letter, of the law.

It is a happy reflection to continue to realize that there are men in this country occupying places of judicial omnipotence whose decisions and opinions cannot be shaped by mob violence, whether that violence is committed by an actual mob of men or whether that violence is committed by judicial propaganda coming up to them from a lower court.

The world knows and Alabama is in possession of proof positive that the Scottsboro boys did not commit the assault for which they have been convicted. The facts in the Scottsboro case were distorted and reliable witnesses not permitted to testify, all at the behest and under the direction of the attorney general, the chivalrous Mr. Knight.

The state of Alabama through its judicial authority, if it can muster up sufficient respect and honesty, can remove this stain from its name and at least in part restore itself to the respectability and confidence of the nation by releasing the Scottsboro boys unconditionally. Will Alabama do the decent thing or will she let her state be branded as one of head-hunters?

Senator Says Alabama Will Still Bar Negro Off Juries

WASHINGTON, April 4.—The decision of the United States Supreme Court that Negroes must be allowed to sit on grand and petit juries, in Alabama will have no effect on the selection of juries in that state, Senator Bankhead (D., Ala.) declared Wednesday in commenting on the reversal of the convictions of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson.

Expressing a belief that the exclusion of Negroes would continue despite the plainly-stated mandate of the highest court in the land, Senator Bankhead said that "I don't think that Southern lawyers who are counsel for Negroes will demand that Negroes be on the juries. Incidentally Negroes probably would be quicker to turn in a guilty verdict than whites."

Attorney Samuel S. Leibowitz, the New York [illegible] who represnted the Scottsboro defendants in trial and before the U. S. Supreme Court, has announced, however, that not only will he see that Negroes are placed on the Jackson county jury which will reindict the boys, but he will insist that every one of the 666 male Negro residents of that county be canvassed for jury duty.

South Must Uphold Law

Leibowitz

"The most significant victory, not only for Negroes but for all minority groups in America, since the Dred Scott decision."

This is the opinion of Attorney Samuel S. Leibowitz on the clear-cut ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court that Alabama must not deny Negroes their constitutional rights by barring them from grand and petit jury service in that state. The decision was made in the reversal Monday of the Scottsboro convictions.

Hailed by his legal associates for the greatest personal triumph in his successful career, and swamped by congratulatory messages from all parts of the country, Attorney Leibowitz discussed the importance of the decision Tuesday in his offices at 225 Broadway and outlined his plans for the future defense of the nine Scottsboro boys.

"As a result of the high court's ruling," he said, "Alabama is faced with two alternatives—both of them decidedly unpleasant to the Southern state. She can allow the boys to go free when the order is served on the warden at Kilby prison, or she can rearrest them and seek to reindict them with Negroes sitting on the grand jury of Jackson County.

"If she chooses the latter course, Alabama may rest assured that Negroes will serve not only on the Scottsboro grand jury but on all other grand juries in that county. For we will fight them to the last ditch and see to it that every one of the 666 male Negro residents of Jackson County are canvassed for service. We will not allow them to stick the names of six or seven Negroes in the jury box and evade the law in this manner.

"Furthermore, we shall insist upon being present when the jury roll is drawn to see that justice is done. And once a Negro is drawn for this particular case, he will necessarily serve on every case that comes before that panel. You can't challenge grand jurors like petit jurors, you know."

The discussion was interrupted by the entrance of Mr. Leibowitz's secretary and confidential investigator, John Terry, who was even more elated than the famous lawyer over the decision. Terry, who has visited the boys more than a score of times in prison and who treasures his large collection of letters from them, had come in to anounce another delegation which wished to congratulate Mr. Leibowitz.

The lawyer finished hurriedly. You can thank the hundreds of unselfish persons who have supported us in this fight. The American Scottsboro Committee, your publisher (William H. Davis), and the many others who have helped us win this great decision. With such support behind us, Alabama will soon find out that the fight has realy just begun."

The Scottsboro Case

Now that the supreme court of the United States has again reversed the Scottsboro case, the state of Alabama announces that it will try the negroes again.

Frankly, there is serious doubt about the wisdom of such a step.

It is quite commendable by the prosecuting authorities to persist in their efforts to punish criminals and uphold the peace and dignity of the state. But they are getting nowhere by baiting the supreme court.

The crime of which these negroes stand accused is [illegible] some doubt; manifestly so, in view of the repudiations and denials. The extreme penalty is open to more doubt. The negroes have been in jail for four years. Their fight has been made a sort of martyrdom by New York agitators who desire nothing more than to reap the full benefit of publicity, to say nothing of fat fees raised by well-meaning persons whose sympathies have been enlisted. So notorious has the case become that the guilt or innocence of the negro boys has been lost sight of.

The supreme court, in its latest pronouncement, threw the convictions out because no negroes had been called for jury service. Of course, this is not going to change the customs and manners of the people of Alabama. But if agitated and pursued it may inflame the people to resentment which will not work to the well-being of either the white people or the negroes.

Alabama should take a note from the experience the state of Arkansas had in the Elaine riot cases. This case finally got to be an issue so bitterly drawn that the late Justice Holmes and Justice McReynolds made history in their sharp disagreements. It was sent back, and Arkansas quietly forgot it. The state surrendered none of its dignity in so doing, and the people of the state were not a whit worse off because of it.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN

APR 2 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO DECISION

The decision of the Supreme Court ordering a new trial for the Scottsboro defendants, CLARENCE NORRIS and HAYWOOD PATTERSON, makes unequivocal declaration that systematic barring of Negroes from Grand or trial juries deprives men of their race who may be placed on trial in such communities of the equal protection of the laws which is their constitutional right. Chief Justice HUGHES said there was no question about the constitutional point involved, the issue before the court turning on whether in fact such systematic exclusion had taken place. The court found that it had.

The implications of this opinion are much more sweeping than those of the previous decision ordering a new trial. That decision was based on the fact that the defendants were hurried to trial without their counsel receiving adequate time to prepare their case. That denial of constitutional right did not involve the fundamental matter of racial discrimination. The principle now asserted, or reasserted, is of prime importance. Its effect must be to summon Negroes to service on Grand and trial juries and to invalidate verdicts where discrimination as to service is clearly demonstrated.

The role of the High Court as the vindicator of the constitutional rights of the humblest citizen is again emphasized. No single decision can prevent or remedy all cases of unconstitutional discrimination again American citizens because of race or color but they all contribute greatly to the ultimate recognition of those rights in practice as well as theory. This will be a landmark in the struggle for equality before the law.

The rest of the country has never been satisfied that even-handed justice was meted out to the defendants in the Scottsboro cases, although the conduct of Judge JAMES E. HORTON, who presided at the first trial won general commendation. The Alabama courts are again, by mandate of the Supreme Court called on to do justice in this case. They have a last chance to vindicate the process of justice there as fair and impartial.

CINCINNATI, O.
POST

APR 6 1935

THE south was stunned by a Supreme Court decision ordering new trials for two Scottsboro defendants because Negroes were banned from juries. It was law colliding with reality in a history-making decree. Governor Graves of Alabama accepted it gracefully, suggested to all trial courts that Negroes be added to jury rolls. "The Supreme Court must be obeyed," he said.

The government sidestepped its first decisive test of the constitutionality of NRA, withdrawing the Belcher lumber case, then found another in a New York poultry code violation. A decision is hoped for before NRA expires June 16.

The railroads were denied their blanket 10 per cent freight increase, but were granted rate boosts on selected haulage, principally heavy raw materials, by the I. C. C. It is expected to mean 85 millions more annually in revenue.

New dealers were cheered by the March Treasury report showing "in the black" figures of 50 million dollars, the first in a blue moon. The fiscal year's deficit is heavy, however.

Lynchings—1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama.

5016

Savannah, Ga., News
September 25, 1935

Race Issue Comes Forward

Reports from Scottsboro, Ala., announce that the way is being cleared for a bitter legal battle on the race issue in a new trial of the famous Scottsboro assault cases. Judge Hawkins has ordered the jury commission to fill the jury box in keeping with the most recent decision of the United States Supreme Court. From this box will be drawn a new grand jury which will be asked to re-indict the nine negro defendants. New warrants were sworn out early in the summer by one of the alleged victims of the attack.

The race issue has been sharpened by a letter of Gov. Bibb Graves to all Alabama trial judges to fill jury boxes in keeping "with the supreme law of the land." Death sentences of the defendants were reversed by the Supreme Court in a ruling which held in effect that their indictments were illegal since members of their race had been excluded systematically from service on the grand jury. It is generally regarded as pure guess work to speculate on how many names of negroes may appear in the new jury lists. It has been pointed out that Jackson (Scottsboro) county has the smallest negro population of any Alabama county. It is estimated that the work of filling the jury box will take at least three weeks. When the work is completed, the jury commission will notify the judge who will take steps for drawing a new grand jury.

Another Scottsboro Case?

New Republic

SIR: On October 14, the Supreme Court of the United States granted a petition to review by writ of certiorari a decision by the Supreme Court of Mississippi that three Negroes, Ed Brown, Henry Shields and Yank Ellington, convicted of first-degree murder, were not denied due process of law. The facts revealed in the official record of the case seem to demand public attention.

Raymond Stewart, a white man, was found murdered in his farmhouse on March 30, 1934. That evening the defendant Ellington, who lived on the Stewart property, was taken from his home by state officers, severely whipped and twice hung by his neck from a limb of a tree in an effort to force from him information concerning the murder. (Official transcript of record: pages 69-70, 107-108, 111-112.) The defendants Brown and Shields were next arrested, taken to jail, stripped and whipped with a strap that had a buckle on the end, until they confessed. (Record: pages 43-47, 60-61, 102, 105-106, 113.) Later, Ellington was arrested and on the way to jail was whipped until he too confessed. (Record: pages 70-114.) The whippings were admitted at the trial by the state officers (record: pages 101-106, 110-114), Deputy Sheriff Dial characterizing them as being "not too much for a Negro; not as much as I would have done if it was left to me." (Record: page 112.)

11-13-35

The nature of the confessions is illustrated by the testimony of the defendant Brown: ". . . They put me down three times. Two times I said 'No, sir.' Until the last time, I said: 'I ain't never harmed Mr. Stewart in my life.' They said: 'Get down again.' He took the strop away from the little fellow and it looked like he was going to kill me, and I said 'Yes, sir.' He said: 'What about the lamp?' I said: 'I don't know.' He said: 'Put him down again' and I said 'Yes, sir.' He was whipping me so hard I had to say 'Yes, sir.'" (Record: page 45.) . . .

Less than twenty-four hours after the whippings, the defendants were called before the sheriff and gave the "voluntary confessions" admitted at the trial. (Record: page 21.) The sheriff admitted he had heard of the prior confessions and knew at the time that the defendants had been whipped. (Record: page 24.) Shields was limping and could not sit down (Record: page 24); marks of the rope on Ellington's neck were plainly visible and the sheriff admitted that during the questioning he suggested that certain of their answers were "unreasonable" and that then the defendants changed them. (Record: pages 23-24.) . . .

The trial court ruled these confessions admissible after a preliminary hearing at which their competency was contested but at which the defense introduced no evidence of the beatings. Later, when the facts were brought out, the defense counsel failed to move to strike out the confessions. Because of this failure to say the proper words at the proper time, though the facts were finally known to everyone at the trial, including the prosecuting attorney and the trial judge (Record: page 176), the Supreme Court of Mississippi affirmed the trial court's judgment.

This result seems even more appalling in the light of the circumstances in which the defendants obtained their counsel. Five days after the murder, the defendants were indicted; two days later they were tried. Counsel were appointed by the court the afternoon before the trial, were given only time for a hurried conversation with the defendants before they were taken to jail and while conferring with them on the following morning, were several times interrupted by the court requesting them to "hurry up and get on with the trial." (Record: page 147; affidavit of defense counsel John A. Clark.) The counsel appointed were so loath to defend the Negroes that they flipped a coin to determine which one would publicly challenge certain of the talesmen; one of them has sworn that he was told by the officers that the Negroes had voluntarily confessed and that before the trial began he believed them guilty. (Record: page 148.)

This lack of opportunity for adequate representation by counsel was dismissed by the court on rehearing with the statement that no request was made by counsel for additional time to prepare for the trial. The correctness of the decision of the Supreme Court of Mississippi in the light of prior Mississippi precedents is questionable, but it is too late for such arguments. The question now to be decided is whether the constitutional rights of the defendants have been violated.

Counsel for the petitioners supplied by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People argue that the knowing use of illegal evidence coerced from the petitioners by state officers through physical violence constitutes a fraud on the defendants as serious as that condemned by the Supreme Court recently in the Mooney case. They argue, moreover, that there was here as effective a denial of counsel as that which resulted in a reversal of the first Scottsboro conviction, and point to the failure to move to strike out the confessions as evidence of the half-heartedness and ineptness of the defense afforded them.

RALPH T. SEWARD.
International Juridical Association.

New York City.

'SCOTTSBORO' YOUTHS GO BEFORE JURY TODAY

Constitution

U. S. Ruling Makes New Indictment Necessary; Negroes on Rolls

11-13-35

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., Nov. 12.—(AP) From its starting point nearly five years ago, "the Scottsboro case" tonight had been moved back to Jackson county, where a new grand jury tomorrow will again investigate the alleged mass attacks on two white women on March 25, 1931.

The venire of 36 from which the 18-man grand jury will be selected, contained the names of two negroes, the first to be called in Jackson circuit for many years, but whether they will serve was not known.

Lieutenant Governor Thomas E. Knight Jr., special prosecutor retained by the state, said he would call as many witnesses as necessary, and would ask that true bills be returned against the nine negro defendants charging them with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates.

Mrs. Price has appeared in all seven trials in the case thus far, but the Bates girl after appearing in the first four here in April, 1931, two years later at Decatur, repudiated her previous testimony. She asserted she was not molested. Lieutenant Governor Knight said the grand jury would be informed her whereabouts are unknown.

New indictments were made necessary under a decision of the United States supreme court last March.

The nation's highest tribunal held that there had been "systematic exclusion" of negroes from the grand and trial juries in Jackson and in Morgan county, where the trials were held under a change of venue.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, representing the defendants, had contended the absence of negroes from the jury rolls in the two counties violated their constitutional rights.

Scottsboro Case Nine Reindicted

Negro Sits On Grand Jury Finding New True Bills; Victoria Price Is Called

SCOTTSBORO, ALA., Nov. 13.—(AP)—Eighteen new indictments charging the nine negro defendants in the "Scottsboro case" with attacking two white women were returned late today by a Jackson County Grand Jury that included one negro as a member.

Each of the defendants was indicted twice, one charging an attack upon Mrs. Victoria Price, and the other alleging an attack of Ruby Bates. The indictments alleged that the negroes attacked the two women on March 25, 1931, aboard a Southern Railway freight train as it traversed Jackson County.

On receipt of the report Judge A. E. Hawkins, presiding, who drew the name of Creed Conyers, negro, for duty on the grand jury, recessed the body.

The negroes named in the indictments are Haywood Patterson, Clarence Norris, Charlie Weems, Olen Montgomery, Roy and Andy Wright, Eugene Williams, Willie Roberson and Ozie Powell.

Under Alabama procedure the new true bills, will be certified to the presiding judge of Morgan Circuit Court before whom they will be tried under a change of venue granted early in 1933.

Cases For Trial

The Morgan County judge probably will call the cases for trial in a special session of court at an early date, marking resumption of the nearly five-year-old legal battle that has twice gone to the United States Supreme Court.

Mrs. Price appeared before the grand jury and seven other witnesses were called in the investigation, including Dr. M. H. Lynch, of Scottsboro, who examined the women the afternoon of the alleged attacks.

Other witnesses called were Lee Adams, Luther Norris, and Tom Dobbyns, farmers residing along the railroad who testified in previous trials to having seen a struggle aboard the train, Harry Hill, Will Brannum, Tom Rosseau and Walter Hall, of Paint Rock.

Judge Hawkins, in charging the grand jury made no mention of the Scottsboro case, but told the jurors they would investigate "such matters as may be brought before you."

Two Negroes Summoned

Two negroes had been summoned for probable duty on the grand jury to meet in special session, but in qualifying the venire one of them, Bird Hill, of Bridgeport, was disqualified because of his age. He told Judge Hawkins he was 74, and the law specifies the maximum age of 65 years for a juror.

In the drawing of 18 names from the venire of 36, Creed Conyers, of Paint Rock, negro farmer and chairman of the board of trustees of the negro school there, was the fourteenth draw.

The box had been well shaken and Judge Hawkins drew the name, calling Conyers around to take his seat.

In charging the grand jury, Judge Hawkins did not mention the "Scottsboro case" but told the grand jurors a number of men were in jail and to keep them there was an expense to the county.

"It will not be necessary for you to remain in session long," Judge Hawkins said, adding that when it completed its work the grand jury should make a report and he would discharge or recess the body as he saw fit.

Mrs. Price Called

It was apparent, however, early this afternoon that the grand jury was taking up the "Scottsboro case" as Mrs. Victoria Price, one of the alleged victims of the attack of which the nine negro defendants are accused, was one of the first witnesses called.

Others connected with the case also were taken into the grand jury room for questioning, but some of the witnesses questioned were not identified with the "Scottsboro case" indicating that the grand jury had expanded its inquiry to include several cases.

The negroes accused of mass attacks on Mrs. Price and Ruby Bates aboard a Southern Railway freight train on March 25, 1931, were not brought here for the grand jury hearing. They are in jail at Birmingham where they have been confined since the last trials in the case two years ago.

The drawing of the names of two negroes on the grand jury venire, and the subsequent drawing of one of them to sit on the body met the constitutional question raised in previous trials, and sustained by the United States Supreme Court.

High Court's Reversal

The nation's highest tribunal held last Spring that there had been "systematic exclusion" of negroes from juries in Morgan County where the trials were held under change of venue, and set aside death sentences imposed on Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, two of the defendants.

It was this decision that necessitated a new grand jury investigation, after a revision of the jury rolls to include the names of qualified negroes.

Since the United States Supreme Court's decision the names of negroes being drawn for jury duty in Alabama has been almost the rule, instead of the rare exception.

Solicitor H. G. Bailey who conducted the first grand jury investigation in the case here on March 31, 1931, was in charge of the probe today. Lieut. Gov. Knight, retained as special prosecutor by the State, was here for a brief conference with Mr. Bailey and then left.

NEW YORK SUN

NOV 14 1935

NEW CHARGES IN SCOTTSBORO

Indictments Voted to Meet Supreme Court Rule.

TWO NEGROES IN THE VENIRE

Third Trial of Nine Accused of Assault to Begin Soon.

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., Nov. 14 (A. P.).—Prosecution of nine Negroes in the Scottsboro criminal attack case was back today where it started four and half years ago, with each defendant indicted twice by a mixed Grand Jury impaneled to meet a Supreme Court objection to its all-white predecessor.

Death in the electric chair faces the Negroes if they are convicted again.

Creed Conyers, Negro farmer and school board trustee, served on the eighteen-man jury which late yesterday returned the true bills charging attack.

Conyers lives at Paint Rock, Ala., near the scene of the asserted mass assault on two white girls, Mrs. Virginia Price and Ruby Bates, aboard a Southern Railway freight train, March 25, 1931.

He was one of two Negroes on the venire of 36. Names of the jurors were drawn from a box.

Mrs. Price testified yesterday. Officers said Miss Bates, who once repudiated her prosecution testimony, could not be located.

It was not announced how the jury balloted on the true bills. A two-thirds vote is required for indictment.

Twice the Supreme Court has ruled for the defense on appeals of the convicted Negroes. First it held their counsel had been inadequate.

Last spring it set aside death sentences imposed on Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson on the ground there had been "systematic exclusion" of Negroes from grand and trial juries in Jackson county and in Morgan county, where the hearings were held under a change of venue in 1933.

The new indictments were the State's answer. Attorneys expected a special session of the Morgan county court would be called soon for retrial of the Negroes, who are in jail at Birmingham.

Birmingham, Ala. News
November 15, 1935

The New Indictments In The Scottsboro Case

Regardless of individual opinions and feelings about the Scottsboro case, no one, it is safe to say, relishes the prospect of going through once more the same sort of ordeal which every previous trial in these notorious proceedings has imposed upon Alabama. The case has dragged on for more than four years now, to no result. Repeatedly it has gone from the trial courtroom through the Alabama Supreme Court, then the United States Supreme Court, and back again. It has been a costly affair for Alabama; the expense to the taxpayers has been very considerable, and it should not be wondered at that many citizens are anxious to have an end to the proceedings—and to the expense. The monetary expense to the state, however, has not been the worst part of the cost. Alabama has been made to suffer enormously through being subjected to all sorts of criticism and reproach from throughout the world. Now that the Scottsboro defendants have been reindicted, the state is again to be subjected to this odious publicity. It is truly a bad situation, which seems to grow worse the longer it continues.

Scottsboro Gets Colored Juror

Two colored men were called and one actually served on the Alabama grand jury which, last week re-indicted the Scottsboro boys for the alleged rape of two white girls on a railway flat-car four years ago.

That is not an empty victory. For sixty years, Alabama juries have been lily-white, and the presence of one colored person on the grand jury is the outward observance of the processes of justice, long abused in that primitive community. More than that, the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling in the Scottsboro case has resulted in the selection of colored jurors in hundreds of other communities, where justice was mocked and the Constitution trampled under foot.

As expected, the Scottsboro boys were re-indicted and another trial is in prospect. If Scottsboro has learned its lesson and selects colored men for the trial jury panel, it may be that there will be found jurors who are willing to oppose the legal lynching of these boys. It is to be doubted, however, that Alabama public sentiment has so far reformed even under the national and international criticism it has received.

It may be that another battle all the way up to the U.S. Supreme Court is again in prospect, if the boys are to be saved.

Lynchings-1935
6
Legal Punishment for Rape
6

Alabama

5017

New Trial Of Scottsboro Cases Set For Jan. 6 By Morgan County Judge

DECATUR, Ala., Nov. 19.—(AP)—Arraignment of the nine negro defendants in the "Scottsboro case" under new indictments charging them with attacking two white women was set for Dec. 16, today by Judge W. W. Callahan, with the trials fixed for Jan. 6, 1936.

The dates of the trials were announced after Judge Callahan had conferred by telephone with Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., retained by the State as special prosecutor in the case that has been in the Alabama courts since 1931.

The new indictments, returned at Scottsboro last week by a grand jury that included one negro, Creed Conyers, charged each of the defendants with participating in alleged mass attacks on Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates in Jackson County, March 25, 1931.

Knight said in Montgomery on announcement of the dates, that Judge Callahan had agreed to postpone the trials in event a special session of the Legislature was called before they were finished.

Gov. Bibb Graves recently announced that he would call the Legislature into special session early next year, and it generally is believed in official circles the call will be for Jan. 14.

This, Knight said, would permit one trial at least, before he must return to Montgomery to preside over the Senate in his capacity as lieutenant governor.

The new indictments returned last week were necessitated if the negroes were to be brought to trial again, by a decision of the U. S. Supreme Court which last Spring held in the case of Clarence Norris, then under death sentence, that negroes were "systematically excluded" from grand and trial juries in Jackson and Morgan Counties.

Under Alabama procedure the cases automatically revert from Jackson to Morgan Counties for reindictment, under a change of venue granted in March, 1933.

Norris was tried and convicted here in December, 1933, the week following the conviction and death sentence of Haywood Patterson.

Further trials then were postponed on motion of Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel for the negroes, who held further proceedings were useless until the U. S. Supreme Court review the constitutional question raised.

The conviction in December, 1933, was the third for Patterson and the second for Norris. Patterson's second conviction was set aside by Judge James E. Horton who presided, on grounds that the evidence was insufficient to warrant the penalty.

All of the negroes are held in jail at Birmingham.

In the first trials in Scottsboro, within three weeks after the alleged offense, eight of the negroes were convicted and sentenced to death. A mistrial resulted for the ninth, a juvenile.

The Alabama Supreme Court set aside one death sentence, on the grounds that the negro was a juvenile, but affirmed the other seven. On the first appeal to the United States Supreme Court, the sentences were set aside on the grounds the negroes had "not had benefit of adequate counsel."

The International Labor Defense interceded for the negroes after their first conviction and for the retrials obtained Leibowitz, but he broke with the I. L. D. and now represents the negroes under the sponsorship of a New York group.

Since the Supreme Court decision last Spring, holding "systematic exclusion" of negroes from juries, the names of negroes have been placed in practically every box in the State.

NEW YORK TIMES

NOV 19 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE.

Suggestion of Local Lawyers for Defense Is Approved.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In THE TIMES last Sunday John Temple Graves 2d, your editorial correspondent of Birmingham, Ala., wrote freely, frankly and very impressively of the Scottsboro case, again acutely in the news because of a new indictment of the involved Negro youths handed up by a grand jury that included a Negro in its personnel.

From Mr. Graves's summation, after thoroughly going into several Alabama points of view, it is not at all difficult to reach the conclusion that Alabama would be glad to "save its face" and let the Scottsboro boys go free, provided the fait accompli could be done in its own way. And so long as freedom of the boys is the sole objective of their well-wishers, there could be no reasonable objection to providing no further occasion for the Lieutenant Governor of Alabama to realize his political ambitions from "defending his State against the Communists and New Yorkers allied against him" in previous Scottsboro trials. Then Attorney General, designated to prosecute, he got to be Lieutenant Governor and as such has again been designated to prosecute at the new trials.

As Mr. Graves found it, there is a feeling that the boys would fare better if defended by local talent next time, and I am inclined to agree. Like the man who discovered a bleeding victim alongside a railroad track and stanched the flow of blood, thereby preserving his life until the doctors got hold of the injured man in a hospital, the International Labor Defense completed its work in the Scottsboro case when it prevented the boys' electrocution in execution of the judgment at the first would-be trial and eventually got two favorable decisions by the United States Supreme Court.

Very properly, the previous Scottsboro trials were conducted from the standpoint of having the record contain grounds for successful appeals. Eventually, the highest court will find no Federal question involved, and then it will be "just too bad."

Not one of the Scottsboro youths has yet indicated any desire for martydom, and the Communists require "martyrs" to propagate their cause.

It seems to me that, presently, the youths are foils of the I. L. D. on the one side and of Jack Knight's ambitions on the other side, and if, as John Temple Graves obviously suspects, the Scottsboro case would be consummated with the boys' release from custody if defended by home talent at the new trial, then let us give home talent a chance.

RIENZI B. LEMUS.

New York, Nov. 18, 1935.

Haywood Patterson Vows to Fight on In Letter to I.L.D.

CHICAGO, Nov. 22.—"We can never forget the wonderful work which you workers have done for us," wrote Haywood Patterson, one of the nine Scottsboro boys, from his cell in the County Jail of Birmingham, Ala., in a letter this week to the Roy Wright Branch of the International Labor Defense.

In part, his letter reads: "My dear comrades, I have just now received your most welcome letter and was mighty happy to hear from you. . . . We feel assured that you workers will continue to fight for our rights . . . until we are freed and out with you all. . . . May I suggest that I am sorry to bother you . . . but since I am badly in need of a few cigarettes and some postage . . . I shall greatly appreciate just anything that you may desire to send me. With warmest regards, and all good wishes, Haywood Patterson."

Scottsboro, Ala., Age
November 14, 1935

Grand Jury Probing The Scottsboro Case

One Negro Placed On Jury To Take Up Criminal Investigation

Judge A. E. Hawkins of the Ninth Judicial Circuit came to Scottsboro Wednesday morning and from the newly-filled Jury boxes drew a special venire to take up criminal investigation, a part of which will be the Scottsboro cases which were reversed by the United States Supreme Court on a ruling that it appeared negroes had been systematically excluded from the jury rolls of Jackson and Morgan counties, where the negroes were indicted and tried and convicted.

One negro, Creed Conyer, farmer of Paint Rock was drawn to serve for this special jury service.

With the drawing of the new grand jury the notorious Scottsboro case gets under way again, after a continuous legal wrangle for three and a half years in the county, state and national courts.

Mrs. Victoria Price of Huntsville, principal witness in the case, came to Scottsboro yesterday to appear before the grand jury.

Solicitor H. G. Bailey, assisted by County Solicitor H. C. Hayes, will be in charge of the grand jury investigation. If the grand jury finds indictments against any or all of the negroes now being held on warrants sworn out by Mrs. Price after the ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court, it is presumed that a change of venue to the Morgan County Circuit Court will be ordered by Judge Hawkins and the trials will again be taken up at Decatur.

The drawing of the Negro's name removes any grounds for an appeal or reversal that discrimination against negroes is present in the case. Lieut. Governor Thomas E. Knight, who began the prosecution when he was Attorney General of Alabama, will likely have charge of the prosecution when the trials are taken up in circuit court.

The following were drawn for the special grand jury:

Europe Smith, Pisgah; Rankin L. Airheart, Scottsboro; Otis V. Thomas, Langston; Bert L. Vann, Scottsboro; Jim Bryant Holland, Henegar; Jeremiah Hester, Scottsboro; John A. Snodgrass, Scottsboro; Carl Gross, of Scottsboro; B. Hodge Rogers; Wiley Whitaker, Woodville; Leonard Tiffin, Scottsboro; Ben Rudder, Stevenson; Robert McMahan, Stevenson; Creed Conyer, Paint Rock; Sam G. Milligan, Henegar RFD; Robert Wilburn, Henegar; Geo. W. Oliver, Pisgah RFD; J. Wyatt Moore, Henegar RFD.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS

NOV 15 1935

Note on Compliance.

One of the 18 members of the grand jury empaneled to "re-investigate" the attack by nine Negroes on Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates aboard a freight train on March 25, 1931 — in short, the Scottsboro case — is himself a Negro. His presence on the jury is traceable directly to a United States Supreme Court judgment invalidating a previous conviction on the ground that Negroes were excluded from the jury in violation of the 14th amendment.

Not only in Alabama, whose governor was prompt after the rebuke by the Supreme Court to order the re-drawing of jury lists throughout, but in the rest of the Southern states are Negroes beginning to appear on juries. Their presence is remarked but otherwise is considered unremarkable. It is taken almost as a matter of course, even, unless we mistake, a little pridefully, as though duty belatedly understood was being done thoroughly.

Cheerful compliance with this order of the Supreme Court is creditable not only to the South but to the Court. It seems to show with what ingrained respect the Court is held.

COLORED MAN HAS PART IN BRINGING ANOTHER "TRUE BILL" AGAINST NINE YOUTHS WHOSE INNOCENCE IS CERTAIN

Lovers of American Liberty Called Upon for United Front in Fight to Halt Plan of Judicial Murder

——I. L. D. declared.

(Special to Crusader News Agency)

Scottsboro, Ala. — The nine Scottsboro boys whose innocence is known the world over were re-indicted by a Jackson County grand jury this week.

When the decision was announced, the International Labor Defense, through its acting national secretary, Anna Damon, stated that the reindictments "will some day be recognized as marking one of the gravest moments in American liberty."

"The famous Dred Scott decision by the Supreme Court in 1859, which turned open the whole question of Negro slavery which was later fought out on the battlefield of the Civil War, was no more important for the history of America than the present Scottsboro case will prove to be."

Negro Juror

Creed Conyers, farmer and chairman of Board of Trustees of Negro Schools in Paint Rock, Ala., served on the grand jury. He was the first Negro drawn in Alabama for more than sixty years. Bird Hill, another Negro picked for jury duty was "excused" because he was "nine years over the age limit."

No information could be garnered here as to how Conyers voted in the jury room, but it was felt that he had been subjected to considerable pressure from the seventeen white jury members.

"The inclusion of one Negro on the Grand Jury is openly and cynically admitted to be nothing more than a measure to prevent reversal by the U. S. Supreme Court," the Appeal to Save Scottsboro Boys

A ringing appeal to all "friends of American liberty of justice for the Negro people" to save the Scottsboro boys was made by the I. L. D.

"Every sane person who has examined the case," the I. L. D. said, "knows that the boys are innocent."

We are determined to save these boys. This is no longer even a case of saving nine innocent boys from death. It is a case of rescuing our country from fascist terror.

"This case has risen now to such a height of social importance to the American people that all quarrels between those who wish to defend these boys must come to an end and all who wish to be counted as friends of American liberty and justice for the Negro people must unite for this defense. All who have a spark of manhood or womanhood in them will respond.

"The boys must and will be given the best defense that it is possible to supply them, and the enemies of lynching and murder must rally throughout the country to supply means for this purpose."

Asheville, N. C., Times
November 13, 1935

SCOTTSBORO CASE GRAND JURY DRAWN WITH NEGRO MEMBER

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., Nov. 13.—(UP)—A special grand jury containing one negro—Creed Conyer—was impanelled and went into session in record time to consider new indictments today against the nine negro defendants in the famous Scottsboro case.

Judge A. E. Hawkins, after hearing excuses from several of the 36 men drawn last week on the grand jury panel, drew the names of 18 men who will serve on the grand jury.

Among those excused was Bird Hill, negro farmer of Bridgeport. He was excused because he said he was 74 years old, and the age limit for grand jury duty in Alabama is 21 to 65. Hill and Conyers were the two negroes drawn on the panel.

The two negroes had been drawn on the panel as the jury box was revised to comply with the latest U. S. supreme court decision which quashed original indictments on the grounds that negroes had been systematically excluded from service on the Jackson county grand jury.

The jury which was chosen consists of farmers and small businessmen. Conyers is a laborer of Paint Rock.

After selection of the jury, court was recessed until 1:30 p. m.

Other members of the jury in addition to the negro are:

Europe Smith, Otis V. Thomas, Rankin Airheart, Bert Vann, James Potter, Jeremiah Hester, John A. Snodgrass, Carl Gross, Hodge Rodgers, Wiley Whitaker, Leonard Tippin, Ben Rudder, Robert McMahan, Sam Mulligan, Robert Willborn, Wyatt Moore, George Oliver.

Whitaker will serve as the foreman.

Charleston, S. C. News & Courier
November 16, 1935

Mixed Jury in Scottsboro Case

A county grand jury that included one negro member met at Scottsboro, Ala., and returned eighteen new indictments charging nine negro defendants in the famous "Scottsboro case" with attacking two white women four years ago. The arrow in the upper left corner designates the negro juror, Creed Conyers, a farmer. (Associated Press Photo)

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama.

5018

SCOTTSBORO APPEALS TO BE ARGUED FEBRUARY 15TH

Crusader news
--- agency

Joint Legal Defense Will Be Presented By Attorneys Pollak, Fraenkel, Retained by ILD, and Attorneys Liebowitz and Chamlee

2-16-35

All Arguments Based On ILD Attorneys' Briefs

New York, N.Y.

NEW YORK - (CNA) The appeals of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, two of the nine Scottsboro boys, will be argued in the United States Supreme Court Friday, February 15. 2162 Scottsboro case.

Lawyers Unite, Divide Tasks

The appeals will be argued by Attorneys Osmond K. Fraenkel and Walter H. Pollak, retained by the ILD, and Samuel S. Liebowitz. The cases will not be separated and all arguments are based on briefs filed by the ILD attorneys. No new or additional briefs were filed by Attorney Liebowitz. Attorney Liebowitz will argue the facts in the case, Attorney Pollak the constitutional questions, and Attorney Fraenkel will reply to the arguments of the State of Alabama. Attorney-General Tom Knight, who referred to Patterson during the Scottsboro trials as "that thing", will represent the State of Alabama.

Last week, the entire Scottsboro legal defense was united when Attorneys Fraenkel and Pollak signed a joint agreement with Attorneys Liebowitz and George W. Chamlee. In accordance with this agreement Attorneys Fraenkel and Pollak were replaced as Attorneys-Of-Record by Attorneys Liebowitz and Chamlee. The unified presentation of the legal defense is regarded as a strengthening of the defense for both Norris and Patterson. Since the beginning of the cases the ILD has made repeated efforts to unite and strengthen the entire Scottsboro defense.

Only ILD Briefs To Be Used

The main issue to be argued in the appeals is the unconstitutional exclusion of Negroes from the juries which indicted and tried Patterson and Norris. Other basically important issues are the exclusion of Ruby Bates' testimony from Patterson's trial, the failure of Judge (Speed) Callahan to charge the jury on the question of innocence, the forgery of Negroes' names on the jury rolls by Alabama officials in order to avoid the jury question. All these issues are raised in the briefs filed by Attorneys Pollak and Fraenkel, ILD lawyers, and which are the only briefs used in the appeals.

After an intensified mass campaign led by the ILD, the United States Supreme Court on January 7th granted writs of review in the Patterson and Norris cases. The appeals to be argued on February 15 come as a result of the granting of these reviews.

Second Time In U. S. Supreme Court

Patterson has been three times sentenced to die in the electric chair, and Norris twice. This is the second time their cases have been before the U. S. Supreme Court. Six of the other Scottsboro boys have each been sentenced to die. Their cases, with Patterson's and Norris', were reversed in the United States Supreme Court in the fall of 1932. The cases of Roy Wright and Eugene Williams, the youngest of the boys, are to be handled in Alabama juvenile courts.

All the Scottsboro boys have been many times scheduled to die, but each time the ILD leading world-wide mass support has snatched them from the electric chair. Their cases will be affected by the results of the Patterson and Norris appeals.

Calls For Renewed Mass Support

Last week, the ILD announced a renewed mass campaign to save the lives of Norris and Patterson and for the immediate unconditional freedom of all the Scottsboro boys. It issued an urgent request for funds to be rushed to ILD, 80 East 11th Street, Room 610, New York City. It declared that all funds will be used for the expenses of the Scottsboro and Angelo Herndon appeals. The Herndon case is also in the United States Supreme Court. Washington, D.C.. the ILD announced.

Protest resolutions, letters, telegrams, demanding the freedom of the Scottsboro boys and Angelo Herndon should be addressed to United States Supreme Court. Washington, D.C.

Protest Vital as Supreme Court Weighs Scottsboro Decision

JUDGES RETIRE FOR VERDICT AS I.L.D. COMPLETES BRILLIANT APPEAL IN CASE OF ANGELO HERNDON COMES UP IN MARCH—FUNDS NEEDED

HAVING heard the arguments of the I. L. D. attorneys in the Scottsboro case appeals, the Supreme Court has gone into a two weeks' recess.

During this time the mass protest which alone has blocked the legal lynching of the nine innocent Negro boys, seized more than four years ago in Alabama, must be redoubled.

The International Labor Defense emphasizes at this time that it would be folly to imagine that now the Supreme Court judges have the case solely in their own hands.

The case, more than ever, rests finally in the hands of the masses, in the strength of mass protest demanding their liberation.

The I. L. D. has waged a brilliant struggle for the lives of the boys. Its attorneys, supplementing the power of the mass movement, have exposed in this court, holiest of capitalist holies, the vicious jimcrow discrimination and oppression out of which grew the framed lynch verdicts.

Before the withering fire of attack, led by Walter Pollak, retained by the I. L. D., the Alabama Lieutenant-Governor Knight, with all the assistance of the justices on the bench, could only retreat, giving no answer.

The I. L. D. has been proven a thousand times correct in its policies, and has shown that one thing alone stands above everything in its fight—to win unconditional freedom for all the nine boys.

The I. L. D. now stands as the defender of all the victims of capitalist terrorism and oppression.

Its fight for Angelo Herndon, young Negro worker, sentenced to a living death in the Georgia chain gangs, has been one of the most glorious in the history of American labor.

It has temporarily wrested Herndon from the chain gang.

Herndon's appeal before the Supreme Court comes up in March. The fight for Herndon and the Scottsboro boys is a matter of honor for the American working class, leading the fight for the liberation of the Negro people.

Funds are urgently needed. Rush aid now to the International Labor Defense, 80 East 11th Street, Room 610, New York City.

The I. L. D. has issued special "Scottsboro cards" to be sent to the Supreme Court. They can be procured from the above address or from any I. L. D. office or branch. These should be distributed everywhere.

The Supreme Court judges are testing the power behind the mass protest. Let them know that the eyes of the working class are upon them!

Rush Funds Today to Aid Scottsboro

"We' the workers of the Domestic Workers Union of Harlem realize the importance of the urgent need for funds to carry on the Scottsboro and Herndon defense, even though unable to pay our rent, we send you this dollar as our contribution toward the defense."

This letter, received by the International Labor Defense, indicates the deep realization by the most exploited of the Negro and white workers of the importance of the Scottsboro-Herndon fight to their own struggle.

It can be placed alongside the contribution of $7 literally collected penny by penny, from the starving Negro workers of Birmingham, for the defense.

Funds urgently needed to carry on the Scottsboro campaign, and the defense of Angelo Herndon, whose case is due to come up before the U. S. Supreme Court within the next few weks, should be rushed to the national office of the I. L. D., Room 610, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

The Scottsboro Fight

AT THIS time, with the U. S. Supreme Court preparing its decision on the Scottsboro case, the International Labor Defense, tried and tested defenders of the boys, issues a warning against just sitting by and trusting to the fairness of the court.

The I. L. D. has conducted a brilliant fight right up through the highest capitalist court in the land.

But, warns the I. L. D., this court will heed the unmistakable evidence of frame-up in the case only if the power of mass protest and demonstration is brought to bear upon it.

It was this mighty world protest that saved the boys from death four years ago. It is this alone that can win their liberation.

All sorts of so-called friends of the boys, the various Negro reformist groups, the Leibowitz American Scottsboro Committee are trying to lull the masses with a false sense of security now that the Supreme Court has heard the evidence of the I. L. D. lawyers.

But this is precisely what will hurt the boys most! Now more than ever, the Supreme Court, which is only the servant of the Wall Street rulers, must hear the mighty voice of the people demanding the unconditional freedom for the nine innocent Scottsboro boys! Increase the demand for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys!

BONDS ARE FORFEITED IN SCOTTSBORO 'BRIBE' CASE

Cases Against Two Gotham Attorneys Nol-prossed in Huntsville

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., May 29.—(AP) Bonds for two New York attorneys accused of attempting to bribe the principal witness in the "Scottsboro case" were ordered forfeited and the charges dropped here today to close another chapter in the four-year-old legal fight for the lives of nine negroes which has drawn international attention.

Sol Kone and Daniel Swift, accused of offering Mrs. Victoria Price $1,000, failed to appear when their cases were called, and the forfeiture order followed. Three Huntsville residents who signed bonds of $2,000 each for the attorneys, had nothing to say.

Mrs. Price is the state's star witness against the negroes accused of attacking her aboard a freight train in Jackson county March 25, 1931.

Kone and Swift weer arrested in Nashville, Tenn., September 30, last year, on bribery warrants sworn out by Mrs. Price. Their arrest followed by one day the apprehension of J. W. Peerson, Birmingham, alleged "go-between" in the case. Peerson appeared in court here today, and his case was nol-prossed.

At a preliminary hearing on the bribery charges, Mrs. Price gave testimony which was used as a basis for holding the two attrneys and Peerson for the grand jury.

All three were indicted on charges of bribery.

Lynchings—1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

5019

Knight Has No Answer To Scottsboro Defense

I. L. D. Attorney's Proof of Exclusion of Negroes from Jury Unassailed in Arguments Before U. S. Court — Recess for 2 Weeks

By Marguerite Young
(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 18.—Attorney General Thomas E. Knight of Alabama today failed to give the United States Supreme Court a single reply to repeated sharp questions on the Scottsboro boys' plea that proof of the denial of their constitutional rights lies in the uncontested evidence that none of their race "in the memory of man" has served on a jury in the counties where they were convicted by all-white juries.

"The sum total of the State's case," Knight frankly admitted, "is that if there were no Negroes on the jury roll it was not because of color."

Walter H. Pollak, retained by the International Labor Defense to argue the appeals before the obviously tense tribunal, unleashed a drumfire of uncontested evidence and legal precedents to prove the defense's case.

Two Weeks' Recess

"The case in its cardinal issue (the denial to Negroes of their right to serve on juries) is way beyond the need of further evidence," Pollak argued. "Half a century ago the fact of the qualification of Negroes for jury service was undubitably proved. . . ." And yet in the Scottsboro case, "it was proved without contradiction . . . not only that no Negro had ever served on a jury within a generation, but also that no Negro ever was called to serve on a jury."

The Supreme Court recessed for two weeks on the conclusion of argument by Attorney General Knight. As he neared his finish, one of the justices by inference indicated that the Court might sit again tomorrow—but Knight hastily urged, "Oh, no."

Admits Marks on Rolls

Attorney General Knight boldly admitted to the Supreme Court that the names of Negroes are customarily marked "Col." to show that they are Negro voters, on the rolls of voters in the State of Alabama. He did this in an effort to mainain that it was rolls of voters —and not lists of jurymen, as the defense showed, on which the special designation was given to Negroes' names. Pointing to the red books containing the jury rolls, on which the defense contends that the names of six Negroes were forged, Knight said:

"I cannot tell you today that those names were or were not forged . . . I simply take the position that I don't know now, when or whether, and I consider it immaterial whether they were or were not placed there."

Knight Can't Answer

Justice Willis Van Devanter of Wyoming, seemingly irked at Knight's striking failure to even approach the defense's main issue, called the attention of the shouting prosecutor to the fact that out of the "box" containing the names of qualified voters "not a colored man's name ever came," and "that no colored man ever was called," Then the justice asked Knight, "What is your answer to that?"

"I understand that the Jury Commission has the discretion——" Knight began.

"It has not the right to exclude colored men," the Justice shot in.

"I don't contend that it has," said Knight.

"But the colored men didnt get on," Van Devanter complained.

Instead of answering, Knight retorted that it was for the Supreme Court to decide whether the evidence warrants "the presumption that the Jury Commission did what they said they did.'

Hundreds Wait To Hear

The Court, according to its custom, set no definite time for rendering its decision on the appeals.

Osmond K. Fraenkel, the other lawyer retained by the I. L. D., sat beside Pollak, ready to offer rebuttal argument. Attorney Samuel S. Leibowitz, who presented the facts for the defense last Friday, was not present today.

The session opened with hundreds of Negro and white persons waiting outside to hear the case. Many of them waited in vain.

Four Main Points

The four main points, hammered by Pollak with the calm of his judicial listeners perched high on the bench above him, were:

1. That the indictment of a member of the Negro race and his conviction by juries from which Negroes are systematically excluded is a denial of the equal protection of the law.

2. That the court (in Alabama) denied the boys' constitutional rights in refusing to quash the indictments by the grand juries in Jackson County where Negroes had for years been excluded from jury service.

3. That the court denied the boys' constitutional rights in refusing to quash the venire of the petit jury in Morgan County where Negroes had for years been excluded.

4. That the court denied their constitutional rights in refusing to permit them full opportunity to prove that Negroes were systematically excluded.

Pollak cited the uncontested testimony by a jury commissioner, Stewart, that the names of Negroes on the lists from which jurymen were drawn were followed by the designation, "Col."

Attorney-General Knight, wearing a deep flush with his black cutaway coat, told the court that jury commissioner Stewart was "confused" when he testified to that fact, and "was thinking of the voting list."

"Is that the custom there?" Justice Butler asked Knight, referring to the custom of designating Negroes as to color on voting lists.

"It's been done ever since I can remember," Knight replied.

"But that's on voting rolls, not on jury rolls."

"Why didn't Mr. Steward say so?" asked Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes.

"He said the roll did not systematically exclude Negroes," was Knight's only answer.

His only answer to the exclusion of qualified Negroes was, "I can't conceive of this court constituting itself a jury commission."

The defense's plea is that the jury commission and all other agencies of the State of Alabama concerned with the case violated the constitution—the protection of which is the duty of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Enemies of Scottsboro Boys Lie About High Court Hearing

Associated Negro Press and Amsterdam News Attempt to Hide Leading Role of I. L. D.

A barrage of venomous lies about the Scottsboro defense, and about the hearing on the Scottsboro case before the United States Supreme Court, which was held Feb. 15 and 18, has been let loose by the enemies of the Scottsboro defense among the Negro newspapers, controlled in behalf of white bosses, during the past week.

The Associated Negro Press and the Amsterdam News, Harlem newspaper which has consistently sought to prevent a united defense for the boys, have led the attack with lies and distortion.

The "Amsterdam News," whose general mangger, William H. (Kid) Davis, was in the courtroom and knew the facts, stated that Attorney Samuel S. Leibowitz presented arguments on behalf of Clarence Norris on Feb. 15, and that "after the oral arguments on the Norris case the U. S. Supreme Court reserved decision," and that "it is believed that I. L. D. attorneys will argue the Patterson U. S. Supreme Court appeal."

At the time this was written, Attorney Leibowitz had presented the facts in both the Norris and Patterson cases to the court, and Attorney Walter H. Pollak, constitutional authority, had begun his argument of the constitutional law in both cases, which was concluded Monday, Feb. 18.

Joint Argument

The cases were argued jointly, by agreement between the attorneys, concurred in by the International Labor Defense after Attorney Leibowitz received a retainer from Clarence Norris, in January, 1935. The I. L. D. agreed to this arrangement in pursuance of its consistent policy of avoiding any division in the defense forces, or act against the best interests of the Scottsboro boys.

A distorted story of the hearing, apparently emanating from the so-called "American Scottsboro Committee," and published in many Negro newspapers, stated that "upon invitation of Attorney Leibowitz, Attorney Walter H. Pollak presented a brief argument on some of the points of constitutional law involved," with the obvious intention of giving the impression that the cases were not argued jointly. As a matter of fact, the entire argument on the constitutional questions was made by Mr. Pollak, Mr. Leibowitz's part in the appeal being limited to a presentation of the facts involved.

The brief used in the Norris case was prepared by Messrs. Pollak and Osmand K. Fraenkel, attorneys retained by the International Labor Defense, the names of Leibowitz and General George W. Chamlee being merely substituted on the cover after Leibowitz obtained a retainer from Clarence Norris.

The "Associated Negro Press," in an astounding display of editorial venom for a supposedly impartial news service, the previous week stated that the I. L. D. had "bowed and scraped its way out" of the Scottsboro case, when Leibowitz's name was substituted for that of Pollak on the appeal brief.

News Service Slanders Defense

Previous stories sent out by that service, during the last few months, have been full of similar venomous slanders and distortions in regard to the Scottsboro defense and the I. L. D., as though the service were trying, in its own field, to out-Hearst the famous anti-labor and anti-Negro publisher.

Several Negro newspapers used such headlines as "I. L. D. Gives Up Scottsboro Defense" and "I. L. D. Gets Out of Scottsboro Case," in connection with this A. N. P. story, though even the distortion contained in the story did not justify these lies.

Other Negro newspapers throughout the country studiously avoided mention of the I. L. D. in their accounts of the hearing, and sought by implication to give the impression that Leibowitz was in full charge of the appeals.

Still others followed the lead given by the white lynch-press in failing to even make mention of the case in their editions following the hearing

SUPREME COURT JUSTICES CHIDE ATTY. KNIGHT

Special Prosecutor of Scottsboro Boys "Grilled"

By LOUIS R. LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C.—During the argument of the so-called Scottsboro cases in the United States Supreme Court last Monday, Justice Willis Van Devanter critically questioned Thomas E. Knight, former Attorney General of Alabama, now lieutenant governor, to elicit from him the truth respecting the exclusion of colored persons from jury duty in Alabama. He got special permission to continue to act for the state in the celebrated case.

Mr. Knight started badly. He began by telling the court he did not know how two big books containing the names of men sligible for jury duty in Jackson County, Alabama, had got before the Supreme Court.

"Come, come, now!" Justice Van Devanter chided him.

Chided By Court

Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, who twice tried the cases at Decatur, Alabama, had shown one of the books to the court last Friday when argument was commenced.

Mr. Leibowitz startled the court by charging that the names of six colored men appearing in the book had been forged after the question of the exclusion of colored persons from jury duty had been raised.

He declared that the names of the colored men had been entered after the jury commission which made up the jury rolls, from which the grand jury which returned the indictments, had gone out of power "for the purpose of depriving the defendants of their constitutional rights and in all probability preventing a review of this court."

Says Names Forged

He explained that red lines had been drawn on each page by the new jury commission to show where the work of the old commission had ended and the work of the new commission had begun. He stated that an expert witness had testified that the names of the colored men, arranged alphabetically and according to precincts, had been superimposed upon the red lines indicating that they were inserted after the red lines had been put there.

Chief Justice Charles E. Hughes and Justices Van Devanter, Owen J. Roberts, Pierce Butler, and Harlan F. Stone questioned, one after another, to ascertain how the clerk of the old jury commission had got possession of the book after he went out of office and what explanation he had made with respect to the alleged spurious names.

SUPREME COURT JUSTICES CHIDE ATTY. KNIGHT

Special Prosecutor of Scottsboro Boys "Grilled"

(Continued from Page 1)

Mr. Leibowitz replied that he himself would like to find out how the old clerk had got access to the book and that no explanation had been given when the old clerk testified regarding the jury rolls and the alleged forged names were brought to his attention.

Attacks Jury System

Mr. Leibowitz contended that the rights of the petitioners had been violated by the systematic exclusion of colored persons from jury service solely because of race and color.

He made no complaint with respect to the Alabama statute prescribing the qualifications of jurors, but contended that "the administration of the statute is the gravamen of the complaint we lay before you."

He said "we were able to show that no Negro has ever served within the memory of man on grand or petit juries in Jackson County."

Offers Evidence

"Do you mean by that," asked Justice Van Devanter, "that they were never called, or, although called, they were excused?"

Mr. Leibowitz replied that it is a matter of custom in Jackson County that no Negro can sit on juries. That custom, he said, has prevailed for at least 60 years.

He asserted it was proved there are Negroes in Jackson County qualified to serve. He said it was testified there were Negroes in the county who had served on federal juries.

"We showed not only the absence of service on juries by Negroes," he declared, "but we actually produced living specimens in the court whom we contended were legally qualified and whose qualifications were not challenged by the state."

Tells About Morgan County

Taking up the argument where Mr. Leibowitz had left off, Walter H. Pollak, of New York, who presented the first appeal in the Supreme Court which resulted in a reversal of the conviction of seven youths for alleged attacks on two white women, described the situation in Morgan County, Alabama, where the second and third trials were held after a change of venue had been granted.

"As to Morgan County," said Mr. Pollak, "no claim is made by the state that the names of Negroes appeared on the jury rolls, although the proportion of Negroes to whites is even considerably larger than in Jackson County."

He asserted that no Negroes sat on juries in Morgan County and none had been called for jury service as far as could be remembered.

Many Qualified

"There were Negroes of the highest qualification," he said. "The testimony was overwhelming that there were qualified Negroes in Morgan County." He added that Negroes had been called for federal service and had sat on federal juries.

Mr. Pollak pointed out that the Scottsboro case had arisen 50 years after the case of Neal against Delaware in which the court found that there was a presumption of qualified Negroes.

"Negroes obviously have progressed immeasurably in the interval," declared Mr. Pollak, "and we have a case where there is no problem of relying upon the presumption of qualified Negroes because we have proof of the existence of qualified Negroes."

Interrupted By Gold Decision

When argument was resumed after the court had handed down its decision in the gold clause cases on Monday, Mr. Pollak took up the question of the striking of the motion for a new trial and the bill of exceptions in the case of Haywood Patterson.

Patterson was found guilty on December 1, 1933. Immediately after the verdict, he said, Patterson's counsel requested an extension of time beyond 30 days in which to file a motion for a new trial. Judge Callahan refused the extension, he said, stating that counsel had 30 days within which to make a motion for a new trial.

The motion for a new trial was filed December 29, 1933. The attorney general of Alabama on February 24, 1934, moved to strike the motion for a new trial because it was not filed until after the expiration of the term of court on December 23, 1933. Judge Callahan granted the state's motion.

Trickery Alleged

Under Alabama law, Mr. Pollak explained, bills of exceptions must be presented within 90 days from the date on which judgment is entered. With the motion for a new trial not entertained, the 90-day period for filing the bill of exceptions expired on March 1 or March 6, 1934, depending on whether the judgment date is considered as December 1, 1933, on which the verdict was returned or March 6, on which Patterson was sentenced. The bill of exceptions was presented on March 5.

But Mr. Pollak contended that the striking of the bill of exceptions did not affect the constitutional question because the issue of exclusion of colored persons from jury duty was raised by separate motions in writing.

Mr. Knight declared that the issue was solely whether or not colored persons were systematically excluded from jury service. He said he was not concerned with whether the names of the six colored men had been placed on the jury list legally or not. He added that the state of Alabama was not concerned with whether or not the name of a single colored person appeared on the book which Mr. Leibowitz had produced in court.

Knight Argues

"I am not telling the court those names were forged on there," he declared. "I am not telling you they were not."

He said he resented the innuendo of Mr. Leibowitz that he had objected to the introduction of the book at the trial before Judge Horton and then with "alacrity threw them at defense counsel" at the last trial.

Knight argued that the jury commission had wide discretion in the selection of jurors. He contended that there was direct testimony in the record to the effect the commission had considered the names of every person qualified for jury service without inquiring as to his race or color.

Subjected to Quizz

Mr. Knight was then subjected to a series of questions respecting the meaning of testimony that race or color was not discussed by the jury commissioners in making up the jury rolls.

"No colored man was ever called or served on the jury," commented Justice Van Devanter. "What answer do you make to that?"

Mr. Knight said he was inclined to think that the commissioners had acted within their discretionary powers.

'Discretion" Is Alibi

"I do not understand they had any discretion to exclude colored people because they were colored," replied Justice Van Devanter.

Justice James C. McReynolds, who dissented when the Supreme Court reversed the convictions, did not sit during the argument of the case.

By stipulation Mr. Leibowitz argued the appeal of Haywood Patterson and Mr. Pollak the appeal of Clarence Norris, both of whom are under death sentence in Kilby Prison, Montgomery, Alabama. Leibowitz has repudiated the International Labor Defense.

Patterson and Norris were found guilty in December, 1933, of attacking Victoria Price, white mill worker. Appeals from their convictions were taken to the Supreme Court of Alabama. That court affirmed their convictions. From the decision of the Alabama Supreme Court the cases are now before the United States Supreme Court for review.

Background of Cases

They are two of nine youths charged with criminally attacking the Price woman and Ruby Bates aboard a freight train in Jackson County, Ala., Mar. 25, 1931. Eight of them were found guilty and sentenced to death after a trial at Scottsboro in April, 1931. A mistrial resulted in the 9th case on account of the boy's age.

The Supreme Court of Alabama reversed on an age technicality the conviction as to one of the boys and affirmed the conviction as to seven. The convictions and death sentences were reversed by the United States Supreme Court November 7, 1932, on the ground that the youths were not properly represented by counsel.

Patterson, one of the seven, was subsequently tried before Judge Horton at Decatur, Alabama, and was convicted. Judge Horton later set aside the conviction on the ground that it was very contrary to the weight of the evidence. At this trial Miss Bates, who had previously testified for the state, repudiated her former testimony and testified in behalf of the defendant.

Patterson and Norris were then again tried and convicted before Judge Callahan. Patterson has been sentenced three times and Norris twice. None of the others have been sentenced again—or tried —since 1931.

Alabama

Lynchings - 1935

Legal Punishment for Rape

5020

Ruby Bates, former associate of Victoria Price who reversed her testimony against the boys and declared that neither she nor the Price woman had been the subjects of attacks by the boys.

Judge James A. Horton, distinguished southern jurist who discredited the testimony of the women and was forthwith removed from the bench by prejudiced southerners seeking nothing less than the chair for the youths.

One of the most brilliant legal battles ever assembled for the defense of members of the Race fought gallantly under the leadership of Samuel Leibowitz against the prejudice of southern courts for justice which seems a foreign element to the region. Left to right are Mr. Leibowitz, Joseph Brodsky and George W. Chamlee. The two former are New Yorkers while Mr. Chamlee is an Alabaman.

Victoria Price who along with Ruby Bates brought charges of rape against the nine youths causing their arrests and subsequent litigation. Recently, following the Supreme Court's reversal of the death sentences of Patterson and Norris, the youths were reindicted on charges brought by her.

An interesting study of the principals in the "outrage of the century" which was made in the Jefferson County jail where all but two have been held since 1930. The other two, Norris and Patterson have been kept in Kilby Prison in Montgomery since their convictions.

Washington, D. C. Post
November 6. 1935

Two Negroes Listed for Jury In Scottsboro

Names Drawn for Body to Consider Indictments in Assault Case.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Scottsboro, Ala., Nov. 5.—Names of two Negroes tonight were drawn in a list of 35 from which an 18-member grand jury will be organized to consider new indictments in the international cause celebre—the Scottsboro assault case.

Presence of names of two Negroes on the list was without historical precedent in Jackson County. The drawing of the new list followed reversal of death sentence convictions of two of the Negro defendants by the United States Supreme Court on ground members of their race systematically had been excluded from service on the jury which returned original indictments.

The two Negroes are Bird Hill, farmer of near Bridgeport, Ala., and Creed Conyer, laborer of Paint Rock, Ala.

Drawn From 1,200 Names.

Their names were drawn from a list of 1,200 citizens by Circuit Judge H. E. Hawkins.

However, since under Alabama law only 18 men comprise a grand jury, it is possible that one or both might be disqualified before the special grand jury is impanelled on November 13 and asked to return new indictments against the nine Negro youths charged in the internationally famous case.

Although representing the first time Negroes have been drawn for service in this county, Negroes have been called for service in nearby Morgan and Jefferson counties since the Supreme Court ruling.

The Negro population of Jackson County, however, is the smallest in the State, and percentage of Negroes on any jury list was expected to be correspondingly small.

The new grand jury will be asked to re-indict nine Negro youths who have become famed internationally in the bitter legal battles which followed a charge they attacked two white girl "hoboes" aboard a freight train near here on March 31, 1931.

New Warrants Sworn.

Although the Supreme Court quashed original indictments in the ruling in favor of the defendants, new warrants charging assault were sworn out this summer against the nine youths by Mrs. Victoria Price.

The new warrants were unique in the 4-year-old litigation since in previous trials only six had been accused of participation in the attack.

Return of new indictments was expected to be more or less a formality. The real battle in the case will develop when the special session of the circuit court is convened and they go on trial.

The actual trial will take place in Morgan County, although the new indictments must be returned in Jackson County, scene of the alleged assault. The change of venue obtained by the defendants during original trials still is effective, necessitating the transfer of the case to nearby Decatur, Morgan County.

Former Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, special prosecutor in the case, said appearance of Negroes on the list from which the jury will be organized will make no difference to his plans. Gov. Bibb Graves declined comment.

The nine defendants are held for safekeeping in the Jefferson County Jail at Birmingham. They are: Clarence Norris, Haywood Patterson, Ozie Powell, Willie Roberson, Andy Wright, Charlie Weems, Olen Montgomery, Roy Wright and Eugene Williams.

HORTON PROPOSED TO SUCCEED GRUBB

Alabamans Urge That Former Scottsboro Judbe Be Named to Federal Bench.

H-5-35

BAR GROUP BACKS MOVE

His Record in Ignoring 'Popular Clamor' in Negroes' Trial Is Cited in His Behalf.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4.—A movement has been begun by Alabama citizens looking to the appointment of James E. Horton as judge of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge William I. Grubb.

Judge Horton, who presided in the Eighth Judicial Circuit of the State, was defeated for re-election last year after he had ordered a new trial for the Negroes convicted at their second trial in the famous Scottsboro case. Judge Horton declared the verdict was against the weight of evidence.

It is contended by many citizens of Alabama that he acted solely in the spirit of impartial justice in so doing, ignoring a popular clamor for the death of the defendants. The result, they maintain, was the defeate of Judge Horton at the polls.

Since then Judge Horton has been living in virtual retirement on his farm without thought of again entering a contest for publi coffice. He serves occasionally as legal consultant for the TVA. His friends declare that he is completely inactive in the movement which has now sprung up in his behalf and which is based upon a desire to see that justice is done to him for ignoring racial passions and administering the law in accordance with its precepts and his conscientious duty as a sworn judicial officer.

The movement was begun by the Bar Association of Huntsville, Ala., which last week adopted a resolution for submission to President Roosevelt and Senators Bankhead and Black asking that Judge Horton receive "careful consideration" for the appointment to the Federal bench vacancy.

The resolution recites that Judge Horton "has demonstrated that he possesses the fine qualities of integrity, courage, impartiality and legal ability in a marked degree," and that "by the most exacting standards, he is eminently qualified and would be a worthy successor" of Judge Grubb.

Many citizens of Alabama who are temporarily resident here have interested themselves in the case in support of the resolution.

SCOTTSBORO CASE PROSECUTOR READY

Knight Sees No Possibility Of 'Constitutional Questions'; Negroes On Jury

Lieut. Gov. Knight, special prosecutor in the "Scottsboro case," said yesterday that the inclusion of negroes on the venire from which the Jackson County Grand Jury will be drawn next Wednesday had "removed all constitutional questions from the case."

11-7-35

Death sentences of two of the defendants were reversed by the U. S. Supreme Court on the grounds that negroes had been systematically excluded from juries, and the Alabama Legislature this year enacted a law setting up machinery for the refilling of jury boxes in conformity to the decision.

In drawing the venire of 135 Tuesday from which the Grand Jury will be selected to investigate the "Scottsboro case" the names of two negroes were drawn.

The Lieutenant Governor said he would leave here Monday for Scottsboro and ask the Jackson County Grand Jury to return new indictments against the negro defendants who are now charged in warrants with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price aboard a freight train near Paint Rock, Ala., on March 21, 1931.

"I had nothing to do with the exclusion of the negroes from juries and had nothing to do with their inclusion this time," Knight said, "but in view of the fact that negroes have been drawn on the venire from which the Grand Jury will be selected, I can conceive of no constitutional question which could remain in this case.

"In view of the fact that the defendants received a fair trial at Decatur two years ago and it is certain they can have a fair trial there again, circumstances have removed all constitutional questions from the case."

The nine original defendants in the case are held in jail at Birmingham, two of them in the jurisdiction of the Morgan County Juvenile Court.

Mr. Knight said he would stop at Decatur en route to Scottsboro and confer with Probate Judge B. L. Malone over the disposition of the juveniles. In the event they are remanded to Jackson Circuit Court, Knight said he would ask that indictments be returned against them.

Nine Negroes Reindicted For Crime at Scottsboro

Colored Farmer Is Member of Grand Jury Investigating Famous Case

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., Nov. 13 (AP).—Eighteen new indictments charging the nine Negro defendants in the "Scottsboro case" with attacking two white women were returned late today by a Jackson county grand jury that included one Negro as a member.

11-14-35

Each of the defendants was indicted twice, one charging an attack upon Mrs. Victoria Price, and the other alleging an attack on Ruby Bates. The indictments alleged that the Negroes attacked the two women on March 25, 1931, aboard a Southern Railway freight train as it traversed Jackson county.

On receipt of the report Judge A. E. Hawkins, presiding who drew the names of Creed Conyers, Negro, for duty on the grand jury, recessed the body.

The Negroes names in the indictments are Haygood Patterson, Clarence Norris, Charlie Weems, Olen Montgomery, Roy and Andy Wright, Eugene Williams, Willie Roberson and Ozie Powell.

Under Alabama procedure, the new true bills will be certified to the presiding judge of Morgan circuit court, before whom they will be tried under a change of venue granted early in 1933.

The Morgan county judge probably will call the cases for trial in a special session of court at an early date, marking resumption of the nearly five-year-old legal battle that twice has gone to the United States supreme court.

Mrs. Price appeared before the grand jury and seven other witnesses were called in the investigation, including Dr. M. H. Lynch, of Scottsboro, who examined the women the afternoon of the alleged attacks.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5821

THE SCOTTSBORO DECISION

Following the Scottsboro decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, the Governor of Alabama has announced his intention to have the laws of the State so modified where necessary as to include Negroes on grand juries and petit juries throughout the State so as to bring Alabama within the suggestions of the Supreme Court, both in letter and in spirit.

Just how the people of Alabama will react to the decision of the Supreme Court and to the suggestion of its Governor remains to be seen. There are some good men in Alabama who have a very great deal to say about public opinion because they, themselves, constitute some of the agencies responsible for public opinion, not only in Alabama but in the South. For example, we can rely upon John Temple Graves, III, to reflect the reaction of the intelligent and liberal element of Alabama. Mr. Graves is an institution within himself, and is perhaps one of the strongest single agencies for good in the whole South. Jonathan Daniels is another such Southerner. There are other men and women in Alabama who share the liberal spirit of Mr. Graves and like him, they have the courage to express themselves. From this element, we may expect a conscientious endeavor to comply not only with the decision of the Supreme Court but with the suggestion of the Governor of Alabama. But, unfortunately, the entire State of Alabama, with its varied elements, must be reckoned with when any attempt is made to encroach upon some Southern traditions which have become as fixed as a religion. It cannot be expected that the whole State of Alabama will accept the suggestion of the Supreme Court of the United States because, to some of the people in Alabama, the opinion of the Supreme Court will be looked upon as a slap at the South. These people must still undergo educational treatment until they are able to control sentiment and master useless and expensive traditions.

Of course, the State of Alabama can, by appropriate laws, comply with the order of the Supreme Court and still prevent Negroes from actually participating in the trial of criminal cases. It is not the law so much as the practice that visits hardships upon Negroes everywhere. For example, we have Negroes on the grand juries and petit juries in Pennsylvania, but under the practice, even in Pennsylvania, a Negro seldom ever sits on a murder case where the defendant is a Negro. It is a very simple matter for the District Attorney to challenge every prospective Negro juror, either pre-emptorily or for cause. We imagine that this practice will work as well in Alabama as it does in Pennsylvania, but the very fact that Negroes are permitted to sit on juries is within itself a step forward even for Alabama, and in the course of time, another step forward will be taken, all tending to improve the status of both blacks and whites in Alabama.

Of course, the State of Alabama does not like the idea of not being able to try a criminal case where a Negro is concerned without having its judgments reversed by the Supreme Court of the land. It will be an achievement even for Alabama to try a criminal case where a Negro defendant is involved in such strict compliance with the law that the Supreme Court of the United States will approve the judgment. The whites, themselves, will feel better when they can say with pride that their State courts have so complied with the law of the land as to merit confirmation by the Supreme Court. Likewise, Negroes will take pride in living in a State with the knowledge that litigation where they are concerned can be had without the foregone conclusion that all their cases must be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States for final opinion.

The opinion of the Supreme Court should not be accepted as waving a red flag in the face of the South, but it should be accepted as proof that the courts of this country are fearless, courageous and fair. Every citizen in the land can sleep more comfortably when he knows that the courts of his State and his Nation are fearless, courageous and fair. Nothing more nor less should be possible in this country. If Alabama resents the opinion of the Supreme Court and sets about to prove to the country that Alabama can comply with the order of the Supreme Court, and still convict Negroes of crime about which there is universal doubt, Alabama will still be in the class of a benighted people who not only do not want to be just, but who take special delight in being unjust.

If the rest of the country will let Alabama go into serious conference with itself on this Scottsboro matter, we venture the assertion that the Scottsboro case will have not been tried in vain. If, on the other hand, the rest of the country proceeds to prod and tease and harass Alabama, she may sacrifice her better judgment for the sake of revenge, and then the Scottsboro case will not have served any purpose.

Injustice cannot be justified by tradition, nor can tradition, however evil, be rooted up overnight. Let us all return to a quiet and sober introspection. For all we know, the Scottsboro case may be the last of its kind.

Rocky Mount, N. C., Telegram
April 2, 1935

Notes On A Criminal Case

On March 25, 1931, more than four years ago, nine Negro youths were removed from a freight train in Paint Rock, Alabama, and charged with criminal assaults on two young white women who were riding as hoboes on the train. Six days later they were indicted and two weeks and one day later eitther were sentenced to die in Alabama's electric chair. One was held a juvenile. Exactly one year after the arrest of the nine, the Supreme Court of Alabama upheld the convictions and death penalties of seven but ruled that the eighth sentenced to die was also a juvenile and, consequently, not fit material for the electric chair. In November of 1932 the Supreme Court of the United States set aside the conviction on the grounds that the Negroes did not have adequate counsel.

Two years passed from the time the Negroes were first arrested before they were brought to a second trial. Then one of the women repudiated her story of the attack and declared that the story on which the Negroes were arrested was a "frame-up." Nevertheless, one of the Negroes was convicted and sentenced to death. An Alabama superior court judge set aside the verdict. In December, 1933, two of the group were convicted and sentenced to die and in June, 1934, the death sentences were upheld by the Alabama Supreme Court. Yesterday the Supreme Court of the United States ordered a new trial for the two. Seven others remain in jail after four years, no disposition having been made of their cases.

If a man were charged with murder in North Carolina, let us say, and in the process of his trial one of the two witnesses for the prosecution took the stand to declare that previous testimony was false and that the whole story was a frame-up, we have an idea a jury would be convinced that the defendant was entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt. The character of the two witnesses has been proved in court. At the very best the evidence on which the two are convicted is flimsy and not of the sort this newspaper regards as sufficient to warrant wholesale executions of nine persons. However, racial hatred, issues not remotely connected with the case have been injected into the trial of these Negroes and their convictions, we have an idea, depended more on a matter not at all concerned with the trial than on actual testimony indicating their guilt.

For four years they have remained in jail, although they would have died in Alabama had there been no interference in Alabama legal processes by out of the state parties interested in the case. It is not flattering commentary on the courts of Alabama that three convictions have been ruled illegal nor is it at all pleasant to remember that for more than four years nine persons have lain in jail awaiting final disposition of a case when, in our minds at any rate, there is excellent reasons to consider them not guilty as charged.

Leibowitz's Victory

IN DISCUSSING the relationship of the Supreme Court's Scottsboro and Texas Democratic primary decision, we purposely avoided a thorough discussion of one phase of the Alabama frame-up because it deserves isolated treatment. We refer to the far-reaching effect of Samuel S. Leibowitz's victory, his heroic success in convincing the Supreme Court that officials of the State of Alabama had connived to thwart justice in the Scottsboro case.

Many times our highest tribunal has asserted that exclusion of Negroes from service on grand juries is a denial of a Negro defendant's rights. Mr. Leibowitz did more than convince the august jurists that they should merely apply this principle to exclusion of Negroes from petit jury service in Alabama. He produced proof (not arguments) to show that systematic exclusion had been practiced for more than a generation, and he showed the jury commission's books and offered forged names of Negroes as testimony that fraud and chicanery had been resorted to.

This was the result of ground-work which he had laid two years ago before Judge Horton at Decatur. It was also the fruition of the hopes of intelligent and courageous Negro citizens who braved personal danger and dared submit to tests of their qualifications for jury service in open court. We cannot resist the persuasion that few, if any, Southern lawyers would have moved to smash tradition and bare the narrowness of Dixie juridical policy as the Scottsboro attorney did.

The Supreme Court decision was clear-cut. It left no loopholes. Jury service exclusion must cease in Alabama (and the whole South, for that matter) if the convictions for felonies are to stand. Such a victory cannot be minimized.

It is significant that Mr. Leibowitz, who gave his energy and experience without cost to win this victory for Negroes and for all lovers of justice, is a member of a race which has suffered discrimination and prejudice for more than 4,000 years. We hope that his success will herald a new era of co-operation and interracial amity between Negroes and Jews. Both races have suffered alike, although our barriers have been higher and more numerous. We salute Samuel S. Leibowitz for his victory, and the Jewish people for the glory he brings them.

Scottsboro Decision Changes Southern Jury System

LAW enforcement agencies in the southern states are still staggering from the blow delivered in the supreme court's Scottsboro decision. If the exclusion of Negroes from southern juries means that "equal protection of the laws" is denied to Negroes who are brought to trial, and that any conviction under these conditions is liable to reversal on appeal, the consequences and implications extend far beyond the case in which the decision was rendered. It means that most convictions of Negroes during the past half-century or more may be reviewed and reversed, and that future convictions will not stand unless the system of jury selection is immediately altered. This creates a really dangerous situation. The governor of Alabama, the state most directly concerned, has met it in the right spirit and with the proper action. He has ordered that race discrimination in the making of jury lists cease. There has never been any law to support it. In most southern states, Negroes have not been excluded from jury service by law any more than they have been excluded by law from voting; they have simply been excluded. The assistant attorney-general of Arkansas stated the practice in his state naively when he said: "It just happens that no jury commission selects Negroes for jury duty. It may be just a coincidence." It certainly is—a coincidence between the practice of the jury commissions and the popular opinion that Negroes should not be admitted to participation in the civil life of the state. That makes the situation all the easier to remedy. No legislation is needed, but the white officials will now have to make their acts coincide with the principle laid down by the supreme court instead of with local prejudice. The governor of Alabama deserves all praise for the promptness with which he has declared that "Alabama is going to observe the supreme law of America," and has taken steps to make the practice of the courts conform to the law. The change may be, as he says, "the most revolutionary since the war between the states," but the good sense of the southern people is capable of making it. What will be much harder—impossible, in fact—is to give the Scottsboro boys a fair and unprejudiced trial now, after all these false starts and reversals, no matter what kind of jury is in the box.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
APR 9 1935

Using Public Funds for Persecution

Editor of The Record:

Sir:—Being an American citizen, I join with you in being proud of the Supreme Court's decision on the Scottsboro case. But justice is not fulfilled when the courts do not follow the law.

In the Tom Mooney case as well as the Scottsboro case, the defendants were proved innocent beyond a shadow of a doubt. Yet the States in both cases are willing to spend fortunes in fighting against the law and to keep the victims imprisoned.

I wonder how many hundreds of starving children could be taken care of with the money that is spent to destroy nine innocent lives: Tom Mooney and the eight Scottsboro boys?

ELIZABETH BROWN.

NEGROES IN THE COURTS.

Governor GRAVES of Alabama deserves the approbation of the country at large for his prompt action in directing the circuit judges and solicitors throughout the State to accept and uphold the decision of the United States Supreme Court "in letter and in spirit."

It is, moreover, cheering to note the manner in which this decision in the Scottsboro case has been received in the South generally. Striking as it does into the heart of the South's most difficult problem there still exists been no open challenge of the court's authority. The integrity of none of the judges has been impugned. The Alabama Advertiser, which writes at length upon the case, advises against allowing suspicion or perversity to sway the future prosecution of the Negro boys, if, indeed, they are prosecuted. It rather urges the Jury Commissioners of Jefferson County to make sure that in the next drawing of the jury there are names of respectable Negroes in the boxes. On an actual trial, it admits, such proposed jurymen may be subjected to a personal examination or tests of intelligence which are not commonly applied to white persons. But the law, as now declared by the Supreme Court, insists that "eligible jurymen" cannot hereafter be "systematically excluded" for the sole reason that they are black. The Advertiser makes the following sensible practical suggestion:

The Supreme Court, following up previous warnings, reverses the verdict of the State court upon the ground of race discrimination in the selection of jurors. The Advertiser therefore urges the County Jury Commissioners to disband and immediately to make if possible for the State of Alabama to win a case involving a Negro in the Supreme Court of the United States.

MUNCIE, IND.
EVE. PRESS
APR 8 1935

THERE IS A LAUGH IN ALABAMA CASE

You should get a laugh out of the dispatch from Montgomery, Alabama, quoting Governor Bibb Graves as saynig that hereafter jury boxes in that state should contain the names of Negroes as well as of whites. This comes immediately after the United States Supreme Court decision in the Scottsboro case which held that the Negro boys charged with attacking two white tramp girls and sentenced to death, had been deprived of their constitutional rights because the records disclosed no Negro ever had performed jury service in Morgan County where the trials were held.

"This decision means that we must put the names of Negroes in jury boxes in every county in the state," Governor Graves said and virtuously added that these boxes must be made to conform to "all legal requirements."

In the first place it is doubtful if all the Alabama courts will agree to this procedure. In the second place, it is more than doubtful, even so, that any of them really will permit a Negro to be drawn for actual service, and in the third place, if one actually were placed in the jury box it would make no difference—he would be a mere figurehead.

It is impossible to imagine that any Negro in the South would be permitted to have any say in arriving at a verdict. He would vote as the white jurors told him, "or else," and the "or else" would be so painful he would feel it the part of wisdom to do as he was told.

RACES

Alabama & America

"Alabama," firmly declared Governor Bibb Graves last week, "is going to observe the supreme law of America!"

This announcement came after the U. S. Supreme Court had once more taken official cognizance of the fact that in the South the Negro does not get all the rights of citizenship the 14th Amendment of the Constitution was intended to give him. In reviewing the death sentence passed on Negro Clarence Norris, one of Alabama's nine "Scottsboro boys," the Supreme Court for the second time reversed the State court's conviction on the ground that Negroes had been "systematically excluded" from the jury roll. Alabamans and the Press of the entire South took that decision with a stunned and apprehensive silence. It was at that critical point that Bibb Graves spoke up. Enclosing a copy of the Supreme Court's reversal, he wrote to every judge in the State:

"Holdings of the U. S. Supreme Court are the supreme laws of the land. Whether we like the decisions or not, it is the patriotic duty of every citizen and the sworn duty of every public officer to accept and uphold them in letter and in spirit. . . . This decision means that we must put the names of Negroes in jury boxes in every county."

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5022

TWO UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT DECISIONS ARE PART OF MANY THAT CONCERN THE NEGRO

By Irving A. Williamson

Two decisions of the United States Supreme Court handed down Monday are of vital concern to colored Americans. In one the court granted a new trial to Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson in the celebrated Scottsboro case. In the other an unfavorable decision for the race, the barring of Negroes from the Democratic primaries in Texas by action of the Democratic State Convention was upheld by the

These two decisions by the Supreme Court are two of a long list of cases in which the Supreme Court has dealt on questions of great concern to the race. Before this high tribunal of justice the American Negro has stood and awaited the constitutional word of the court with a deep realization that the words of the court affected generations of unborn American citizens of our race.

Looking into the past for the relationship of the race to the court the Dred Scott case looms for consideration. Just as the entire nation awaited the decision of the Supreme Court in the gold clauses a few weeks ago, so did the entire nation await with feverish anxiety the Dred Scott case in 1857.

Scott, a slave, had gone with his master from Missouri, a slave territory into Illinois, a free territory and he contended before the court that by so doing he became a free man. He started his case in a Missouri court in 1846 and after a number of court trials it reached the Supreme Court of the United States in 1856.

His case could not have reached the court at a more critical time in the wave of bitterness which hung over the country as the result of the slave controversy which had recently formed the virgin soil for the foundation of the Republican party.

Judges Influenced

Southerners were frantic. In the coming decision they saw an opportunity for judicial approval of slavery. Forthwith they sought to induce the Southern judges of the court to put in the decision that Congress was bound to protect slave property in any state as it was bound to protect any other property.

It is here that Maryland-born Chief Justice Taney, who wrote the decision, made a colossal blunder. Taney said that a Negro could not be a citizen although he was in free territory and because of this he could not sue.

But not being contented with declaring that a Negro could not be a citizen, Taney made Dred Scott the text for weighty constitutional and political arguments by going beyond the immediate issue and declaring that Congress was bound to protect slave property in free states.

Court Loses Prestige

Taney's decision caused the court to face the severest criticism never launced against it. It lost its claim to De Tocaueville declaration that in its hand "repose unceasingly the peace, the prosperity, the existence, even, of the Union." The decision was a rally point for the North and the Republican party. Taney's decision was summarized by the man in the street in the expression, "Negroes had no rights which white men were bound to respect."

Justice Curtis, New England-born, reasoned that since descendants of slaves had voted in various states prior to the adoption of the Constitution and consequently at the adoption of the Constitution they became citizens of the United States.

Taney's decision widened the gulf between the North and South and quickly rushed thousands into the Republican party. It was a dominant factor in fomenting the Civil War.

Three Amendments Added

With the adoption of the Thirteenth amendment as a result of the Civil War December 18, 1865, slavery became unlawful.

What Taney tried to settle regarding the citizenship of the Negro was finally determined with the ratification of the Fourteenth which made all persons born in the United States and subject to its jurisdiction citizens of the United States. The amendment went into effect March 30, 1870.

The third great piece of constitutional making a deep signifincae to the American Negro is the Fifteenth Amendment ratified in 1870, providing that the right to vote shall not be denied on account of color or previous condition of servitude.

Kill "Grandfather Clauses"

On June 21, 1915 newspapers throughout the nation gave much space to a decision of the court which sounded the death knell of the "grandfather clauses" in vogue since 1890 when Mississippi passed the first law in effort to nullify the Fifteenth amendment.

The "grandfather clauses" in the Oklahoma State Constitution and the Annapolis, Md., election statutes were used by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in attacking the South's method of disfranchising of the Negro.

Chief Justice White in his decision said that Oklahoma was in violation of the fifteenth amendment in making it a test of the right to vote that a person should have been able to vote in 1866 or prior to that time.

Property, educational and other tests were declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court when they served to deny the right to vote because of the race of the voter.

The securing of the right to vote has been a large part of the battles the Negro has brought to the Supreme Court judges. Back in 1876 the court gave down two decisions concerning the right of the Negro to vote.

N. A. A. C. P. Wins

The court held: "The Fifteenth amendment does not confer the right of suffrage upon a person. It prevents the states or the United States, however, from giving preference, in this matter to one citizen of the United States over another on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

In the struggle against whites having the preference at ballot box the N. A. A. C. P. in 1927 was successful when the Supreme Court ruled that it was unconstitutional to bar Negroes from the Democratic primaries in Texas and other states.

But Texas Democrats fought back. The legislature, immediately after the decision, passed a law permitting state party committees to say who were members of a party. But on May 2, 1932 by a five-to-four decision the court set aside this new law. Even with these victories trouble is experienced from time to time by Negroes.

A victory against residential segregation was gained in the Supreme Court on November 5, 1917 when it declared unconstitutional a residential segregation ordinance in Louisville, Ky., similar to others in many Southern cities at the time, because it was a straight-out violation of the rights of Negroes to live where they desired.

Arkansas Peonage Case

Segregation has been held as a matter for the states to legislate on. Equal accommodations have been held not to be discriminatory or a denial of constitution rights. In 1914 the Supreme Court in considering a separate coach law of Oklahoma, questioned the right of a state to deny Negroes the use of Pullman sleeping cars.

In the Arkansas peonage case, brought by the N. A. A. C. P. to the Supreme Court February 19, 1923 the principal was established that a trial in court dominated by guaranteed by the Fourteenth amendment.

Attorneys for the Scottsboro cases which are before the Supreme Court for the third time have depended heavily upon the decision in the Arkansas case.

No progress has been made by the forces who have claimed that it is racial discrimination, as was done in the Scottsboro appeals, that no qualified Negro is permitted to serve on juries hearing cases involving Negroes.

In the Scottsboro decision of 1932 Justice Sutherland said the only thing to be decided in the case was whether the right of the men to have counsel was denied and whether this infringed the due process clause of the Constitution.

SCOTTSBORO DUO

WIN NEW TRIAL

Supreme Court Administers Rebuke When Reversing Lower Court.

Atlanta, Ga.

By HARRY FERGUSON.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—(UP)—Two negroes who have spent the last four years on the threshold of the death chamber won another chance to live today when the supreme court reversed their conviction in the Scottsboro assault case.

The opinion, spoken slowly and carefully by Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, may mean that the remainder of the negro youths will be freed after the hardest-fought legal battle since two Italians named Sacco and Vanzetti became world figures when they walked to the electric chair in Massachusetts.

Hughes and seven other of the justices found that negroes had been barred from the jury in Alabama, both in Jackson and Morgan counties where the litigation over the lives of the defendants has dragged on since 1932. The systematic exclusion of negroes from the jury rolls, the court held, was sufficient reason to reverse the conviction of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, the two whose lives were at stake today.

The full import of that ruling is that Alabama authorities will have to seek new indictments against the seven negroes who are accused of attacking two white girls on a freight train. Samuel Leibowitz, the crack New York homicide lawyer who has fought through half a dozen courtrooms to try to save the negroes, got the news in Manhattan.

Sticks With Case.

"Splendid," he said. "I'm going to stay with this case until hell freezes over. Those boys are entirely innocent."

The seven negroes have been tried and retried in Alabama, and always the jury has filed back with a verdict of guilty, which carries the death penalty. The village of Scottsboro has become world famous Russians far up on the Steppes close to Siberia have pooled their rubles to contribute to the International Labor Defense fund to carry the case to the highest court.

Once before the nine justices of the supreme court had the power of life and death over the negroes. The case came up to the supreme court that time on the issue of whether the defendants had time and opportunity to consult counsel in the trial that resulted in their convictions.

There was tension inside the capitol that day as justices filed in and took their seats. Outside, 300 radicals were marching up the hill, singing and carrying placards demanding "Save every requirement for jurors—literacy tests, age and sound health.

Evidence showed, the chief justice ruled, that an attempt had been made through trickery to fix the jury rolls in such a way that they would show that negroes were included on the panel. He criticized the lower court for not pointing out that evidence.

NIGHT IMMEDIATELY TO SEEK NEW WRITS

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 1.—(AP)—New indictments to prosecute the Scottsboro attack cases "to their conclusion" will be sought promptly, Lieutenant Governor Thomas E. Knight Jr., of Alabama, announced today as defendants greeted with delight the United States supreme court decision setting aside two death sentences in the litigation.

The lieutenant governor, who as attorney-general, prosecuted in the trials of Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, the negroes whose sentences for alleged attack on a white woman were set aside today, has been retained as special prosecutor to conduct the state's case until final disposition

ALABAMA NEGROES ORDERED ON JURIES

Gov. Graves Cites Scottsboro Decision in Asking Courts to Revise Juror Rolls.

CONSTITUTION PUT FIRST

Pending Cases Will Be Continued or Nol Prossed Till Jury Boxes Are Refilled.

By The Associated Press.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 5.—A revision of Alabama jury lists to include Negroes was called for today by Governor Bibb Graves in view of the United States Supreme Court decision in the Scottsboro case.

The Governor wrote his suggestion to circuit judges and solicitors throughout the State after receiving the official decision and included copies of it.

He also announced that he would ask the Legislature when it reconvenes April 30 for such legislation as may be necessary to cover the dumping and refilling of Alabama jury boxes from which the names of jurors are drawn.

The Supreme Court a few days ago set aside death sentences imposed on two Negro defendants in the Scottsboro attack case, holding that Negroes were "systematically" excluded from jury rolls in Jackson and Morgan Counties with infringement upon the constitutional rights of the accused.

"Holdings of the United States Supreme Court are the supreme laws of the land," Governor Graves stated. "Whether we like the decisions or not, it is the patriotic duty of every citizen and the sworn duty of every public officer to accept and uphold them in letter and in spirit.

"I have received the Supreme Court's decision in the Scottsboro case, holding in effect that when there is systematic exclusion of Negroes from juries, it is discrimination against the race in violation of the United States Constitution. This decision means that we must put the names of Negroes in jury boxes in every county.

"Alabama is going to observe the supreme law of America."

With reference to pending cases the Governor advised that, if the question of absence of Negroes' names from jury rolls be raised, the case would be continued or nolle prossed until the boxes were refilled to meet constitutional requirements.

Precedent for Rest of South.

ATLANTA, April 5 (AP).—Alabama's action in ordering new jury lists drawn to conform with the United States Supreme Court decision in the Scottsboro case may be followed by other Southern States calling more Negroes for active jury duty, it was indicated today.

No Negroes are barred by law from jury duty in the South but few have actually been called to sit on cases. In most of the States jurors must be qualified voters and this in itself has kept a great many Negroes off the jury list.

The North Carolina Supreme Court has held twice in the past year or so that Negroes were not entitled to new trials when major grounds for appeal were allegations of exclusion of Negroes from the jury.

Jury commissions in South Carolina have discretionary power in selecting jury panels.

Major W. Calvin Wells, president of the Mississippi State Bar Association, said the Scottsboro decision "may have great effect" on State courts.

Negroes holding poll-tax receipts, a voting qualification, are eligible for jury duty in Arkansas. Assistant Attorney General Thomas Fitzhugh said that "it just happens that no jury commission selects Negroes for jury duty; it may be just a coincidence."

Texas statutes and the conduct of criminal trials "are in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court," said State Attorney General William McGraw.

Order Is Acclaimed Here.

Governor Bibbs's order to include Negroes on Alabama juries was acclaimed here yesterday by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, according to the Associated Press. Arthur B. Spingarn, for twenty-one years chairman of its national legal committee, said:

"It is a very fine step. It should advance not only the rights of Negroes, but also the whole attitude of that section of the country toward enforcement of the law."

Scottsboro Case Decision Arrives

Formal certification was received yesterday at the office of Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael, from Washington, of the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States reversing judgments of conviction of the State courts in the cases of Clarence Norris and Heywood Patterson, two of the seven negro Scottsboro defendants. No such official notice has been received, however, at the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court of Alabama up to closing time, at 12 o'clock, noon. Until it does arrive, Alabama's courts retain jurisdiction in the Norris, Patterson, and all other cases.

O. K. Fraenkel, of New York, I. L. D., attorney, for the defense in the Scottsboro cases, interviewed Norris and Patterson at Kilby Prison, Friday afternoon and left early in the evening for Birmingham, where he was to confer with the other five defendants at the Jefferson County Jail. Though habeas corpus proceedings seeking release of the negroes have been prepared, Fraenkel said that in his opinion, they will not be filed immediately. Presumably, the defense is awaiting the time when jurisdiction in all of the cases is resumed by State courts.

It was held by the U. S. Supreme Court in reversing Patterson and Norris judgments, that where there is systematic exclusion of negroes from juries it is discrimination against race in violation of the Federal Constitution. Gov. Graves declared in a statement issued Friday, this ruling means that names of negroes must be put in the jury boxes in every county in Alabama—and wrote a letter to all circuit judges and solicitors in the State calling attention to the holding and its significance.

Lieut.-Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., special prosecutor for the State in the Scottsboro cases, has announced he will seek new indictments by a Jackson County Grand Jury in all of them.

MAKING THE NEGRO THE GOAT

The masses of Negroes in Alabama are law-abiding, well-behaved people. All they want is peace and a chance to make a living and a chance to improve their status as a social and economic unit.

Whenever a member of their race commits a serious offense against society respectable Negroes are embarrassed. They despise the criminal Negro more than whites do, for criminal conduct by a Negro reflects upon all Negroes and so creates unnecessary difficulties for them.

The Advertiser for three years has been impressed with the fact that the controversy about the "Scottsboro case" was and is a white man's row.

The Advertiser has no doubt that if only Negroes had served on the juries in the Scottsboro cases there would have been as many indictments and as many convictions as we have had.

The average law-abiding Negro despises the lawless member of his race with a passion quite unknown to white people. He feels that every Negro criminal is a Judas to his race.

The Advertiser is close to the Negro leadership of Alabama. No Negro leader, great or small, hesitates to come by The Advertiser to talk frankly of any problem that troubles him.

All of them know that The Advertiser has always been their sympathetic friend, and so Negroes usually talk freely to The Advertiser. In the light of this circumstance it is remarkable that never at any time has any Negro in Alabama ever appealed to The Advertiser against the courts that indicted and convicted the Scottsboro defendants. We have never heard from a Negro any expression of opinion regarding these defendants.

No Negro leader in Alabama has lent his voice to the world chorus against Alabama since the Scottsboro case first became a cause celebre.

In Alabama Negroes and whites understand how to get along together, but whites elsewhere in the world do not seem to be quite satisfied with the arrangement.

What we mean to say is this: The average Negro in the South, especially in Alabama, stands for law and order, he stands for good citizenship. He ought not to be humiliated unduly by the criminals of his race. He ought not to be humiliated by the debates involving public policy which follow.

THE DECISION of the Supreme Court in the Scottsboro case will go down in history along with Lincoln's emancipation proclamation as a milestone in the struggle for racial equality in the United States. It is a complete vindication for those who have felt from the beginning that the case involved a principle far deeper than the unjust conviction of seven Negro boys. If the decision can be enforced, it will mean that the established tradition of keeping Negroes subjected by legal terrorism will have to be abandoned. In any case it will mean that the type of race hysteria which brought about the arrest and conviction of the Scottsboro boys will occur with much less frequency than before, and that when it occurs there will be legal recourse for the defendants. And it may not be too much to hope that provision for Negroes to serve on juries may be a step towards the granting of full legal rights. That the battle against mob rule has not yet been won, however, is clearly demonstrated by the conviction at Sacramento on the same day as the Supreme Court's decision of eight young radicals

Alabama.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

5823

Negroes Must Be Held Eligible For Jury Duty

By EUGENE ANDERSON

The United States Supreme Court did not make an new law when it handed down its Scottsboro decision last Monday, but it clarified an old law. Qualified Negroes must in future be put in jury lists.

The Georgia Constitutional convention of 1868 struggled with the same question, and from that day to this criminal lawyers in this state have been trying to do exactly what the International Labor Defense lawyer did in the case of the Negroes who figure as defendants in the Scottsboro (Ala.) case. They have been trying to force a new trial on the ground that Negroes do not serve on juries, and to make courts say Negro criminals, or alleged criminals, do not therefore get a fair trial from juries of white men.

John Randolph Cooper, who was a genius in digging up technical points in behalf of his Negro clients, tried several times to get such a point before the United States Supreme Court, but was always baffled because he could not prove that Negroes were discriminated against in the jury system. If he had succeeded in finding one judge who refused to give him a chance to prove his charge of discrimination, he would have scored his point. If a trial judge had said in answer to his motion to quash indictment, "Georgia law gives the Negro as good chance as anybody else to serve on the jury, and the court overrules you," the astute lawyer would have scored.

When John P. Ross was solicitor-general Mr. Cooper made the point, and Solicitor Ross said, "I'm ready to traverse you." The jury commissioners were brought in by Mr. Cooper as witnesses and they explained how they selected the members of the grand jury and the trial juries, and the court ruled that the method was in accordance with the state constitution, and therefore Negroes are not discriminated against, although it has been thirty or more years since a Negro served on a state court jury in this county.

Nobody doubts that there are some Negroes in the county who are intelligent enough and have character enough and are sufficiently educated, but such are for the most part exempted under the general law for exempting all men in certain professions or callings. White or Negro attorneys are ineligible either as jury commissioners or as jurors. Ministers of the gospel are exempt, regardless of color or race; physicians and apothecaries do not serve; school teachers are omitted; millers and ferrymen, all railroad employes certified to be actively engaged in their public duties; all male persons over 60 years of age; all telegraph operators, officers and members of the fire companies, dentists unless they especially ask the privilege, pilots and boat keepers, policemen and other such guardians of the law, telegraph linemen, stationery engineers, postal clerks, members of the military forces, licensed embalmers, etc., are by the state constitution exempted—because of their public duties. But this does not mean that these are compelled to accept exemption. If they request the privilege of serving they can be passed on by the jury commissioners for their fitness.

For grand jurors the commissioners must select "the most experienced, upright and intelligent men whose names are found on the tax digests of the county"

For trial jurors the requirement is the same, except "most experienced" is omitted. Such jurors must be "the most upright and intelligent" men in the list of taxpayers.

In the case of Carter, in Texas, 1900, the Supreme Court held that he should have been allowed to prove that when the jury trying him had no Negroes on it, injustice had been done him because the jury was not made up of the proper material, and needed some Negroes. The court before which he was tried did not let him produce his proof.

The sensational part of the Supreme Court's decision in the Scottsboro case is that the august judges brushed aside the testimony that satisfied the trial court, and they decided that "presumptive evidence" showed that the Negroes had been discriminated against, because they were never allowed to appear on the jury lists. The United States Supreme Court rarely has reversed state supreme courts on question of fact. The Supreme Court in this case even hinted at fraud or manufactured evidence. On this Chief Justice Hughes, reading the opinion for the eight members of the court (Justice McReynolds being absent), said among other things:

"The clerk of the jury commission and the clerk of the circuit court had never known of a Negro serving on a grand jury in Jackson county. The court reporter, who had not missed a session of court in twenty-five years, and two jury commissioners testified to the same effect. One of the commissioners said he had never known of a single instance where any Negro sat on any grand jury or petit jury in the entire history of that county. That testimony in itself made out a prima facie case of denial of the equal protection which the Constitution guarantees. . ."

The names of six Negroes appeared on the lists submitted in evidence, and red lines were drawn undr them. The trial judge expressed the view "that he would not be authorized to presume that the jury board had been unfaithful to their duty, and had allowed the books to be tampered with." His conclusion was that Negroes' names were on the roll.

Justice Hughes said: "We think the evidence did not justify that conclusion." He then proceeded to show that the court regarded the Delaware decision as based on a similar case, except there was no evidence (false or otherwise) to show that Negroes had ever been considered when jury lists were being made up. In the Delaware case it was held that the trial court indulged a "violent presumption" when it decided that the uniform exclusion of Negroes from juries during a period of many years was solely because in the judgment of the commissioners "the black race in Delaware were utterly disqualified by want of intelligence, experience or moral integrity to sit on juries. The Chief Justice thought such a presumption in the Scottsboro case would be equally violent.

All of this grows out of the fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution, which reads:

"No citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law, shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any state, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

Violation must be punished in the United States courts through the initiative of the officers and marshals of the United States courts. Penalty is as for a misdemeanor or a fine of not more than five thousand dollars.

This law was passed when Thad Stevens was in the saddle in Congress. He was the greatest force in the National capital at the time, and he was the bitterest enemy of the white race. He was a fanatical partisan of the Negro race, and through him the first lady of the land was his Negro housekeeper.

The law produced more unhappiness for the Negroes and the white people and estranged their relationships more than anything that happened before or after the war. Seventy years have healed many wounds, and the Negroes are beginning as a race to see that it behooves them to obey the laws of the land and to see that those of their color are also obedient.

At this late date, after vicious intermeddling on the part of fanatics from the outside has subsided, the important task before the people is to make the Negro see that "the law" is not merely the will of the white man and the persecution of the Negro, but that it is or should be used for the good of all.

While the decision of the Supreme Court in the Scottsboro case may be construed as a wicked stab at the Southern white people, and by many it will be so regarded—perhaps it points the way to better justice for the Negro, and through that way may accomplish much to make the Negro race more friendly to the law, which in its operation affects his life, liberty and happiness.

Some will guess that the court's ruling means that Lords must be tried by Lords in our jury system, and commons must be tried by commons—that naturalized Italians or other nationalities must be tried by jurors of Italians, or others in kind, and cannot be tried by any other kind of jury. And it has been true in the development of the jury systems of the world, with all of their weird philosophies, that time was when a foreigner could not be convicted except by a jury composed of half natives and the other half citizens that have been adopted from other countries. It was not necessary that an Italian should have half of the jury composed of Italians; nor was a naturalized Chinaman to have half of the jury composed of Chinamen, but half were supposed to be foreigners that had become naturalized.

These questions about foreigners may never arise as a result of this case, because this is purely a race question. The Negro was the only person in mind when the jury section of the fourteenth amendment was adopted. The Supreme Court has said that Negroes must not be excluded from the jury lists if they appear on the tax digests. As to whether the tyranny of the decision can make jury commissioners in the different states prefer Negroes is another question. The presumption is that it cannot. But jury commissioners are chosen by the judge of the court because of their uprightness and intelligence, and in the average community in which the races live amicably it is not likely that commissioners will violate their oaths either way because of the race question. If the Negro taxpayers are supposed to be among the "most experienced, upright and intelligent citizens," and are not exempted along with white people of the same callings, the chances are that no more Negro criminals will be able to escape through this race question in the constitution.

New York Herald-Tribune

APR 2 1935

The Scottsboro Decision

A sense of relief, a companied by a sense of despair, will, we think, be the general response to the action of the Supreme Court in again setting aside the Scottsboro convictions and once more ordering—as it can only do—a new trial. There will be relief that a gross miscarriage of justice has again been averted. There will be despair over the appalling difficulties of securing a right and just conclusion in cases of this kind, once the fierce emotions of race prejudice, sectional pride, social and economic antagonisms, bigotries and ignorances have been stirred. It is now four years, almost to a day, since the Scottsboro case started upon its long and shocking history. There have been fine episodes in it—one thinks, for example, of Judge Horton's courage and fairness—but for the most part it has seemed fated to bring out the worst weaknesses and vices in the American judicial, political and social systems.

Twice the Supreme Court of the United States has convicted the State of Alabama of failing in its constitutional duty to assure justice to Negroes accused of rape; once an Alabama judge has set aside a jury's conviction as palpably contrary to the evidence, only to see another jury under another judge promptly convict upon essentially the same record. This is a damning indictment of the Alabama court system; and one cannot help thinking that if the citizens of that state had expended upon getting a really thoroughly aroused, communities do not accomplish nothing save to make worse a fair trial for the defendants a tithe of the energy respond in that way, either in Alabama or (as the which they have devoted to proving themselves tragedy from which there can be no good issue Mooney case and too many others sufficiently right by securing their execution, the results demonstrate) anywhere else. But after the Su- would have been much happier for Alabama and preme Court decision it may perhaps be realized for the country. Unhappily, when passions have that to carry these proceedings any farther will now.

Picking and Selection of Jurors

Post 4-5-35 Birmingham

A group of high minded, decent and respectable independent lawyers have reached the point where they will not tolerate any further the methods and manner of juror selection and expect to start prosecutions as soon as additional evidence is accumulated. We want every white man who has been in Jefferson County for a number of years and who has not been selected for jury service to write a letter to the undersigned giving his name, occupation and address. All letters received will be held as absolutely confidential. We want all jurors who have served on the civil juries for as many as two times within a period of six or 12 months to write the undersigned a letter and state that to him and when the service occurred to his best recollection. We want all jurors who have served and rendered a verdict of reasonable proportions for the plaintiff and against the defendant and who have not since then been called for jury service again to write me and tell me as best you can the time it happened and the case he sat on and give his name and address also. I want every juror who has served on a jury in Jefferson County and who has been approached by anyone and sought to be influenced by any one to write me and give me his name and address and state the circumstances of his being approached as best he can in a short letter. The expense of getting up this information will be borne by these lawyers who are interested only in getting a square deal and an even break and to have justice administered in our courts.

Any information that any man has which he may think of interest or importance in connection with the Jury System will be greatly appreciated if forwarded in writing to the undersigned as Chairman of the Committee and everything sent will be held as confidential unless the writer and the undersigned both agree that it should be turned loose.

We know that jurors are being picked and they are being selected from certain groups or classes of people with the result that injustice has prevailed and the man who is wronged cannot have righteousness dealt to him in our courts. We ask you to write rather than to visit the undersigned as a matter of convenience.

JOHN W. ALTMAN, Attorney, Chairman.

GOVERNOR TO MEET ORDERS OF U. S. COURT

Post 4-3-35

Declares All Lists Must Conform To Ruling In Scottsboro Case

Birmingham

ACTION IS 'SUGGESTED'

Executive Declares L a w Must Be Upheld; Ends Discrimination

MONTGOMERY, April 5.—(Special.)—Declaring that the names of Negroes must be placed in the jury boxes of the state, Governor Graves today "suggested" to trial judges that the boxes be made to conform with "all legal requirements."

This step is advised, Governor Graves declared, to meet objections raised by the U. S. Supreme Court Monday when it reversed the convictions of two of the nine Negroes held in the Scottsboro assault case on the ground that members of their race were systematically excluded from the Grand Jury and trial jury rolls.

The governor's statement follows:

"Holdings of the United States Supreme Court are the supreme law of the land. Whether we like the decisions or not, it is the patriotic duty of every citizen and the sworn duty of every public officer to accept and uphold them in letter and spirit.

"I have received the Supreme Court's decision in the Scottsboro case, holding in effect that when there is systematic exclusion of Negroes from juries it is discrimination against race in violation of the United States Constitution.

"This decision means that we must put the names of Negroes in every county in the state.

"Alabama is going to observe the supreme law of America.

Abides By Oath

"It is unusual for the governor to undertake to suggest to the judicial department things which, under our state policy, are peculiarly within its jurisdiction. However, I have a duty to perform and an oath to abide by.

"In the exercise of this power I am writing our trial judges, enclosing a copy of that opinion and saying that I do not assume or intimate that the contents of their jury boxes in any way fail to conform to all legal requirements, but suggesting in the event there be any nonconformity, that they speedily take proper steps to remedy any defect, and call their attention to the jury law of 1931.

"I also make suggestions as to the proper disposition of any pending cases which might be affected by that opinion.

"I have sent copies of these letters to all solicitors."

Suggests Courts Delay Action

A copy of the letters written by the governor follows:

"Permit me to hand you herewith a copy of the opinion of the United States Supreme Court recently handed down in what are known as the Scottsboro cases.

"Without in any manner assuming or intimating that the contents of your jury box in any way fail to conform to this Supreme Court opinion, I write to suggest that in the event be any nonconformity in this regard that you speedily take proper steps to remedy any such defects.

"I intend to ask the Legislature to enact such remedial legislation as will be needful along the lines of filling or refilling jury boxes.

"May I suggest for your consideration that in any case in which this question is injected into the pleadings, the case be passed, continued, or if need be, nolle prosed until a new indictment may be presented by a Grand Jury to which this objection will not apply."

The governor released his statement just before starting on a fishing trip in the southeastern part of the state.

He commented on the jury system by saying that Alabama's election law and jury system was "basically sound."

• • •

Jefferson Jury Board Awaits Study Of Order

Birmingham

James J. Smith, chairman of the Jefferson County Jury Board, which is in charge of filling the jury box here, today said he would call a meeting of the three-man board to discuss the governor's outline of police toward Negro jurors.

The meeting would be called, he said, as soon as advices were received from "duly constituted authorities." He declined to say whether the efferson County box now contains the names of Negroes.

"I would rather not be quoted on matters as important as this without first reading the governor's statement and discussing it with the other members of the board," Mr. Smith said.

Associate members of the board are Joseph H. Loveman and John Angwin.

Solicitor George Lewis Bailes also declined to comment.

"The jury box is in the hands of the Jury Cmomission and the solicitor has nothing to do with the jury box," he declared.

Judge J. Fritz Thompson, presiding judge of Circuit Court declared: "So far as I am concerned and I am sure the same would apply to the other circuit judges, I would heartily co-operate with any plan or program of the governor unless there was some statute forbidding it."

• • •

Speedy Retrial Planned For Scottsboro Negroes

By United Press.

MONTGOMERY, April 5.—With the state's policy of placing Negroes' names on jury rolls definitely decided, Alabama today planned to have the Scottsboro assault cases on trial within two or three weeks.

The mandate of the U. S. Supreme Court, ordering new trials for Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, two of nine Negro defendants sentenced to death for an alleged assault on two white women, was expected to reach here today or tomorrow.

As soon as the Supreme Court receives the decision, it will be dispatched to Morgan County, where the last trials were held, then immediately remanded to Jackson County, where the two Negroes were indicted.

Solicitor Bailey of Jackson County plans to have a special session of the grand jury called immediately to reindict the Negroes. The cases then will be transferred back to Morgan County and the trials will begin, attaches of the attorney-general's office said.

Lieut.-Gov. Thomas E. Knight Jr., who prosecuted the cases as attorney-general, will act as special prosecutor for the state. Under present plans, Thomas S. Lawson, assistant attorney-general [illegible]

TWO ALABAMA NEGROES WIN THEIR APPEAL

Telegraph

U. S. Court Upholds Texas Democratic Rule Against Colored Voters

4-2-35

SCOTTSBORO CASES UPSET

Macon, Ga.

High Tribunal Postpones Action on Constitutionality of Railway Act

WASHINGTON, April 1 (AP)—Once again the supreme court intervened today to save two Negroes sentenced to death in the famous Scottsboro, Ala., cases, but it upheld the refusal of the Democratic party in Texas to permit Negroes to vote in its primaries.

In effect, the highest tribunal ordered new trials for both Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, two of the seven who probably would have been executed in 1932 had it not been for the court.

New trials were ordered in the first instance after the court concluded that the men were denied representation by adequate counsel.

Chief Justice Hughes in his opinion today said the constitutional rights of Norris and Patterson were violated because the Negroes were excluded from jury service at their trials.

Texas Rule Upheld

Intense feeling has been aroused by the Scottsboro cases, which followed alleged assaults upon two white women by a group of Negroes near the little Alabama town in 1931.

"I am thrilled beyond words," said Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York attorney who argued the case before the supreme court, when informed of the verdict.

The Texas Negro voting controversy has been before the court at intervals since 1924. The decision today was the fourth ruling by the court on an appeal by a Texas Negro asserting the right to vote in Democratic primarie.

Texas statutes which prevented Negroes from voting and which authorized the state Democratic executive committee to prevent Negroes from voting in primaries were declared unconstitutional by the court.

Railway Pension Act

But today R. R. Crovey, Harris county, lost his appeal from the decision by the Texas Democratic convention that only white persons might vote in party primaries.

"We hold the party was a voluntary association and was competent to decide its membership," said Justice Roberts, who delivered the opinion.

Shortly after setting aside the sentences on Norris and Patterson, the court allowed the government to drop the Belcher case, which originally was scheduled as a test of both NRA and the lumber code.

An attorney for the lumber code authority objected to dismissal but William E. Belcher, Alabama mill operator, won in the lower courts after the government charged him with violating the lumber code, offered no [illegible] The chief justice refused to hear the code attorney.

Returning after two weeks' recess, the court held one of the busiest opinion days of the session, although it failed to act on a pending new deal case—the constitutionality of the railroad pension act. Among the decisions was an opinion that federal courts handling the reorganization of bankrupt railroads have the right to prevent—temporarily—the RFC and other holders of railway notes from selling collateral.

Macon

Prosecution Planned

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 1. (AP) New indictments to prosecute the Scottsboro attack cases "to their conclusion" will be sought promptly, Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., of Alabama announced today as defendants greeted with delight the United States supreme court decision setting aside two death sentences in the litigation.

The lieutenant governor, who as attorney general, prosecuted in the trials of Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, the Negroes whose sentences for alleged attack on a white woman were set aside today, has been retained as special prosecutor to conduct the state's case until final disposition.

No action can be taken before the U. S. supreme court's decision is returned to the Alabama supreme court, which in turn will remand Norris' case to the lower courts. In the Patterson case, while the nation's highest tribunal did not immediately order a new trial because of a technicality, it was believed that such action would come from the state supreme court.

Birmingham

The news brought joy to eight of the defendants, but the ninth, Patterson, greeted it with shouts of derision from his cell, in the cell of death row at Kilby prison near here.

Refusing to come to the bars of his cell, Patterson heard the news, and shouted "you must think I'm drunk if I believe that."

Norris asked Deputy Warden Frank Boswell to read a telegram to him from Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel, informing of the court's action.

"That shore is good news," he said, grinning. "I'm mighty happy."

Release Is Sought

NEW YORK, April 1 (AP)—The International labor defense hailed the "Scottsboro boys."

Attorney Samuel S. Leibowitz, who defended the "Scottsboro boys," carried their appeal to the supreme court, said the decision was "the culmination of the hopes and ambitions of 15,000 000 Negro souls in America."

Alabama

5024

Lynchings - 1935.
Legal Punishment for Rape

5024

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

APR 5 1935

Negroes And Jury Service In The Southern States

The reaction to the Supreme Court's decision in the Scottsboro case among officials of Southern states, so far as the question of excluding Negroes from the jury rolls is concerned, makes an interesting study. From a survey of opinion of Southern attorneys general made by The Associated Press, it appears that nowhere was there any surprise at the Supreme Court's ruling on that question. Rather, the decision seems to have been received as one which was to have been expected.

The other Southern states are no less concerned with the fundamental issue raised by the court's ruling than Alabama. In most of them, the practice regarding the service of Negroes on juries has been the same as that in Alabama. In all the states in which officials have commented, it has been pointed out that there are no laws barring Negroes from jury duty. Of course, if there were any such laws, they would be unconstitutional. But while Negroes are included on some jury rolls, they are seldom called on to serve. In most other states of the South, as in Alabama, there is recognition of the necessity for a change which will make practice conform with the Supreme Court's decision.

Atty. Gen. William McGraw, of Texas, says the statutes of that state are in conformity with the decision. He adds that generally when Negroes are drawn for jury service a "suitable excuse is presented and accepted." A similar practice has obtained in some counties in Alabama. "Texans," McGraw says, "have demonstrated perfect ability properly to control the Negro question within the constitution."

Atty. Gen. A. A. Seawall, of North Carolina, expresses the view that the decision 'gives us pause for thought." It may, he says, mean more appeal attempts to the United States Supreme Court from verdicts of state courts, but he would not undertake to predict the effect it will have.

In Tennessee, Asst. State Atty. Gen. W. F. Barry, Jr., is of the opinion that the decision will not have any influence in the South except probably on a retrial of the Scottsboro cases. A similar view, with respect to the effect in Florida, comes from Atty. Gen. Cary D. Landis, of that state, who says: "Negroes are allowed to register to vote (in Florida). They then become eligible to vote and are qualified for jury duty. Negroes have served on state court juries in Florida, but not in recent years."

In Arkansas, according to Atty. Gen. Thomas Fitzhugh, Negroes are eligible to serve on juries if they hold a poll tax receipt, but "it just happens that no jury commission selects Negroes for jury duty. It may be just a coincidence."

Atty. Gen. John M. Daniel, of South Carolina, says Negroes sit on some juries in some counties in his state. In Georgia also Negroes occasionally serve on state juries.

Atty. Gen. A. P. Staples, of Virginia, is quoted as saying: "I do not know that we ever had Negroes on juries. . . . But if the Supreme Court has held it necessary to have Negroes on juries, chances are we will have to take cognizance of it."

A particularly interesting comment comes from the office of the attorney general of Mississippi. There the records of a case were cited where the Mississippi Supreme Court set aside a conviction of a Negro sentenced to hang for killing a white man when the district attorney admitted that Negroes had been excluded from jury duty because of race and color. The Mississippi court held that this circumstance was sufficient to quash the indictment. Thus the Supreme Court of a Southern state took precisely the same position that the United States Supreme Court has taken in the Scottsboro case. In the decision setting aside the conviction in the Scottsboro case, Chief Justice Hughes said that the absence of Negroes from the jury rolls should have caused the trial court to quash the indictments.

From these comments, it appears that throughout the Southern states there is a recognition of the legal principle laid down by the Supreme Court. In those states whose officials believe the decision will have no effect, it is evidently because they feel that there is at least technical conformity with that principle. Nowhere is it denied that qualified Negro citizens should be included on the jury rolls. The extent to which they are called on to serve, in practice, is another matter.

In no Southern state is there any alarm apparent over the effect of the Supreme Court's ruling. Nor is there any reason why there should be. While, probably in most Southern states, it will be necessary to make some alteration in practice, the court's decision does not call for any revolutionary change. This question must be adjusted by Alabama and other states of the South, and it can easily be adjusted in a common-sense way. Even now it is not by any means an unheard-of thing for a Negro to sit on a jury, in Alabama and doubtless in all other Southern states. Negroes occasionally serve on federal juries, and in at least some places on state juries. The necessity which now confronts Alabama and the South in general is simply to see to it that Negroes are not systematically excluded from the jury rolls in any county, and that they are occasionally called for jury service. In instances where they wish to be excused, and where the court sees fit to excuse them, this would be a proper method for handling the situation, in part. Then, too, attorneys can strike Negro jurors or accept them for service as they please. And there would be no harm in permitting them to serve on occasion, to give moral force to the principle involved—certainly there would be no more harm in letting them serve at times in state courts than there is in having them serve in federal courts in the South.

Whatever is done in this state, let it be a practical and common-sense solution of the question, which will not merely be in conformity with the Supreme Court's decision, but which also will satisfy the moral implications of that ruling.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

APR 3 1935

The Strong Hand

Once more the strong hand of the United States' Supreme Court has reached out to snatch the Scottsboro boys from death.

This time only two of the original seven defendants had their cases reviewed by the nation's highest tribunal. But the result was much the same as in the first review of the cases.

The court held Alabama justice, which insists upon judging Negro defendants with lily white juries, has erred.

The retort of the court to Alabama's claim that no colored veniremen were possessed of the necessary qualifications for jurors was almost contemptuous, if such an expression can be used in connection with a Supreme Court decision.

"Upon the proof contained in the record now before us," wrote Chief Justice Hughes, "a conclusion that their (the Negroes) continuous and total exclusion from juries was because there were none possessing the requisite qualifications cannot be sustained."

It is quite obvious to any objective observer that Negroes, charged with certain crimes such as criminal assault, cannot get a fair trial in the Deep South. The actual evidence in the second set of Scottsboro trials would not have convicted anyone anywhere else.

It will be recalled that in 1931 seven young Negro lads jumped a freight train upon which they found some white boys and two girls. A fight started between the white boys and the Negroes and the former were driven from the train, the girls remaining. Almost two days later the girls preferred charges of assault against the Negroes. At the second trial one of the girls, having previously told her story to Raymond Fosdick, New York clergyman, appeared in court and denied wholly her former testimony, swearing that neither she nor her companion had received harm at the hands of the Negroes.

Evidence of this sort counts for nothing in an Alabama court when the issue is white versus black. The boys were condemned.

On the issue that Negroes are debarred from jury duty in Alabama the case was carried to the Supreme Court. Two questions were considered. The first, in the case of Clarence Norris, that there was racial discrimination in picking the jury. The second, in the case of Haywood Patterson, that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction in the matter.

Norris' case was sent back for retrial. That of Patterson for "further proceedings."

The main issue however is that Alabama has lost again.

The power of a sovereign state against the public opinion of the nation has again been proved futile.

The best thing Alabama can do is to amend her judicial procedure to accord with the Constitution of the United States—and civilized opinion.

Brewton, Ala., Standard
April 4, 1935

Negro Jurors Must Come

Distasteful as the thought of it may be, Alabamians may as well make up their minds that they must have negroes on the jury lists, if not actually sitting in the jury box, where they expect any conviction of a negro to stand before the highest court of the land. Such will be the outcome of the last decision of the United States Supreme Court in the famous Scottsboro cases, in which the fact that negroes are "systematically excluded from the jury system" in this state brought about a reversal of the appealed cases and new trials for the defendants.

As has been the history of these cases from the start the handling of them on the part of the state was bungled in the hearing before the Supreme Court. Ex-Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, who is unfortunately still designated by the present Attorney General to carry on the cases, made the State of Alabama and its system of criminal jurisprudence appear just as ridiculous before the Supreme Court as he succeeded admirably in doing when the cases were on trial. His main point of argument was that negroes are not excluded from jury service in Jackson county when everyone, except perhaps Mr. Knight knows that there has never been the name of a negro on an Alabama jury list since the days of reconstruction. It would have been far better to have evaded the issue entirely and possibly the justices would have looked with some benevolence on a situation that, though probably not handled constitutionally, has at least been worked out with satisfaction to all parties concerned, including the negroes themselves.

But whatever the damage that might have been averted, it has been done, and its results are of no small import to the people of this and other southern states. The jury commissions now have no alternative except to place in the jury boxes names of negroes who can meet the qualifications prescribed by law for jurors in Alabama. That there are several such negroes in every county can not be denied. If they happen to be drawn for service along with the white jurors they will have every right to serve in court and to pass judgment on defendants of both races. Otherwise, it will never again be possible to make the conviction of a negro hold good in the higher courts.

What the outcome will be is hard to predict. We hope that some plan may be devised that will preclude any serious trouble, for there is every possibility of such arising under the situation with which we are now faced.

SUFFOLK, VA.
NEWS HERALD
APR 2 1935

"THE SCOTTSBORO CASE"

The United States Supreme Court yesterday did the expected when it ordered a new trial for a group of Negroes, two of whom had been condemned to death on the charge of assaulting a white woman hobo traveling with them and her companion in a box car in Alabama. Both women accused the Negroes of attacking them, but one later confessed that it was false, repudiating the charge.

These ignorant black boys never had a ghost of a show for justice after a certain organization with headquarters in New York sent a "Yankee" lawyer down into Alabama to defend them. If this same organization had had the good sense to employ a local attorney to defend them there would have been no outcry and a just verdict would have been reached.

It was utterly impossible to give these Negroes a fair and impartial trial in the atmosphere prevailing at Scottsboro at the time their cases were called. The jury was so prejudiced that the members could not see any extenuating circumstances even if these white women deliberately herded themselves with blacks.

They may be guilty as charged and if so should be punished, but the death penalty is too extreme in this case. If given a trial in another community they will receive a just verdict whether it be conviction or acquittal.

WILMINGTON, N. C.
NEWS
APR 3 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO VERDICT

It has since the inception of the case, been our private opinion based on our views of public morals that white girls who go hoboing about the country, hobnobbing, or at least riding in the same box cars with members of other races and the other sex are not overly deserving of society's most tender protection, but in the Scottsboro case there are other phases to be considered. The case has just been sent back to the Alabama courts by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The girls involved caused the arrest of seven negroes, they accused of attacking them while all were uninvited and non-paying passengers on an Alabama freight train. Two of the negroes have been convicted for a second time, and must be tried again unless the state elects to drop the charges.

The reasons behind the majority opinion, read by Mr. Chief Justice HUGHES is significant. Judge HUGHES and his colleagues hold that because negroes are kept off the jury rolls in Alabama that is good and sufficient reason to return a reversal of the Alabama tribunal's finding.

It is, as the chief solicitor of the Alabama circuit remarked when informed of the findings "a body blow at the courts of the state." However, it does not follow that Alabama will rush to the fore with mixed juries. Far from it. Alabama is too deep in the south to permit of that, and even should it insert the names of negroes in the jury boxes for the purpose of complying with the supreme court, ways will be found to continue jury service as at present and within the law.

For the moment, however, it would appear that a very important decision has been based on a case involving not a particularly prepossessing set of complainants or defendants.

WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
APR 3 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE DECISION

The issues in the long drawn out Scottsboro cases have been beclouded from the start by the unreasoning emotions of race prejudice. The conduct of the trials and the type of evidence that was admitted raised serious doubts long ago as to the guilt of the men accused.

Now that the Supreme Court has again set aside the convictions, a general hope has arisen that their decision may mark the end of what has become a cause celebre in American court annals. Their ruling has the effect of ordering a new trial. But there is little reason to believe that a new trial could possibly result in any further progress toward justice.

It has been four years now since the nine Negro youths were indicted at Scottsboro, Alabama, for the rape of two white girls on a freight train. Juries found all of the defendants guilty. When the case was carried to the Supreme Court, all of the decisions were invalidated on the ground that the defendants had been allowed such inadequate counsel help that they had been denied their constitutional rights.

A bright chapter in the litigation was the courageous action of Judge Horton after a jury had again found one of the defendants, Patterson, guilty after a new trial. Judge Horton set aside the verdict as contrary to the weight of the evidence. A year later he won the reward for his refusal to bow to prejudice, when he was defeated in the primaries for re-election to the bench.

The third trial was held in December, 1933, with Patterson and Norris the defendants. Again verdicts of guilty were returned, and a second appeal was taken to the Supreme Court, largely on the ground that Negroes had been systematically excluded from juries in Alabama. It was on this appeal that the Supreme Court has just now ruled.

Prejudice has been the ruling factor in all the proceedings in the lower courts from the start. Stubborn racial prejudice, backed by sectional pride, is nearly certain to mar the proceedings if the case is tried again. If Alabama is wise she will attempt to find some way to bring an end to a case which has become a symbol of what wrongs may be done when emotions are allowed to overrule impartial justice.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.
TIMES HERALD
APR 4 1935

IN ALABAMA

A JUDGE whose outraged sense of justice caused him to set aside one of the verdicts in the Scottsboro Negro cases was defeated for re-election last year. That shows the temper of Alabama. If the Supreme Court of the United States, which stingingly denounced the quality of justice in that state were in any wise subject to the will of southern chivalry, it may be taken for granted that the entire bench would share the fate of the home judge.

Alabama is intent on hanging these nine Negroes. Probably her citizens are sorry that they escaped the usual lynching bee and got their cases into court where tiresome rules of justice prevail. There will be another trial. Some concession may be made to the order of the highest tribunal that Negroes be admitted to the jury panel. But if these cases proceed further, we feel fairly certain of the outcome. The Negroes on the next juries had better vote for conviction if they do not want to run considerable risk of personal extinction themselves.

Charlotte, N. C. Observer
April 9, 1935

IT IS SURPRISING THAT THE South is taking the ruling of the Supreme Court touching upon the rights of Negroes to serve as jurymen with no outburst of wrath or back-talk.

You would expect it to have been otherwise and as shortly back as 25 years there would have been a more or less frantic reaction to such a ruling.

But comment in the newspapers of the South generally is far more friendly than it is critical of the court's findings as to race discrimination, usually practiced in the Southern courts to the extent at least of barring Negroes from jury service.

There can be but one reasonable and intelligent interpretation of this lack of fire, race prejudice is far less robust and blatant today in the South than ever before.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5025

Greenville, S. C. Piedmont
April 3, 1935

Negroes And Law

TWO of the most important documents affecting the legal status of negroes written in a long time were handed down this week as decisions of the United States Supreme Court.

One, arising from the famed Scottsboro case in Alabama, upheld the right of negroes to serve on juries.

The verdict in the cases of two men in the Scottsboro affair were set aside as invalid because negroes had been systematically barred from jury rolls in Jackson County Alabama—as they have been and doubtless for a long time will continue to be barred from jury rolls in Greenville County, South Carolina, and most other southern counties.

The Supreme Court by a decision unanimous (except that Mr. Justice McReynolds took no part in the case) declared that for this long "continued, unvarying and wholesale exclusion of negroes from jury service we find no justification consistent with the constitutional mandate".

How that clear-cut decision will affect southern legal and social practices in the future we may only guess.

But for a long time, as we said, net results of current practices will somehow continue to be the same.

The second decision holds valid the Texas primary law which prohibits participation by negroes in Democratic primary elections, a condition comparable to that long existing and almost never questioned in South Carolina.

This more solidly intrenches the general southern plan of legally disfranchising the race.

In decades to come attitudes and practices in respect both to suffrage and jury service by negroes may undergo a measure of gradual change in the South but it is inconceivable that any early change will occur.

Likewise it is inconceivable, to citizens with first hand knowledge of the facts and with earnest friendship for both races, that early change of any kind would be wholesome for the welfare of either race or of the South.

EL PASO TEX.
HERALD
APR 3 1935

Justice to Negroes

EIGHT U. S. Supreme Court justices united in striking down the conviction of two Scottsboro defendants. The court held that Negroes had been illegally barred from acting as jurymen in the trials. Alabama now must either dismiss the famous cases or re-indict and re-try the defendants with Negro jurymen on the panels.

This is the high court's second rebuke to the prosecutors of these Negro youths and their companions. In November, 1932, the court ordered retrials on the ground that Alabama had denied the defendants due process on other grounds.

In these two opinions the Supreme Court has done much more than save the lives of obscure boys. It has done more than hearten the faith of 15,000,000 American Negroes in their country's courts. It has helped re-enforce the very foundations of the republic.

In his first inaugural address Jefferson said that equal and exact justice to all men of whatever state or persuasion, through trials by juries impartially selected, forms the surest bulwark against anti-Republican tendencies. This is even truer today than in 1801.

RALEIGH, N. C.
NEWS OBSERVER
APR 3 1935

Where The Stars Fell

Despite the second decision of the United States Supreme Court overturning Alabama's second conviction of the Negroes in the famous Scottsboro case, Alabama officials announce that the state will "prosecute to the end." The conscience of the nation and the world is convinced that the seven Negroes are not guilty of the crime with which they were charged. A brave Alabama judge forfeited his political life to set aside a verdict of guilty upon the grounds that there was not adequate or credible evidence of guilt. Yet Alabama will "prosecute to the end." To what end?

The end so far attained has been the discrediting of Southern justice at the bar of the world. To that verdict an Alabama judge who tried the cases has testified. Twice the United States Supreme Court, by its verdicts, has in a very real sense so testified. Alabama does not care. Regardless of the good opinion of the world, it seems determined to further serve its bitter, stubborn prejudice by seeking again death verdicts against defendants whose guilt is so much more than doubtful that their execution would be lynching under the studied forms of law.

Horrid as is lynching it would have been in this case less horrible than the long, cold-blooded determination to bring these men to death under the forms of law on the evidence which has been twice presented to secure from angry Alabama juries verdicts which were set aside once by an Alabama judge who held the evidence incredible and insufficient, and twice by the Supreme Court of the United States, which found the legal flaws in the record to halt injustice at the hands of Alabama prejudice and anger.

As the case continues, as Alabama prosecutors insist that it will, it becomes more obvious that not the Scottsboro Negroes but the justice of Alabama is on trial. What Alabama needs now—what the South needs—is not a new verdict of guilt against the defendants, but some evidence that reason and justice, as well as anger and prejudice, exist in the state where the stars fell.

NEW YORK TIMES
APR 7 1935

NEGROES IN THE COURTS.

Governor GRAVES of Alabama deserves the approbation of the country at large for his prompt action in directing the circuit judges and solicitors throughout the State to accept and uphold the decision of the United States Supreme Court "in letter and in spirit."

It is, moreover, cheering to note the manner in which this decision in the Scottsboro case has been received in the South generally. Striking as it does into the heart of the South's most difficult problem there still has been no open challenge of the court's authority. The integrity of none of the judges has been impugned. The Alabama Advertiser, which writes at length upon the case, advises against allowing suspicion or perversity to sway the future prosecution of the Negro boys, if, indeed, they are prosecuted. It rather urges the Jury Commissioners of Jefferson County to make sure that in the next drawing of the jury there are names of respectable Negroes in the boxes. On an actual trial, it admits such proposed jurymen may be subjected to a personal examination or tests of intelligence which are not commonly applied to white persons. But the law, as now declared by the Supreme Court, insists that "eligible jurymen" cannot hereafter be "systematically excluded" for the sole reason that they are black. The Advertiser makes the following sensible practical suggestion:

> The Supreme Court, following up previous warnings, reverses the verdict of the State court upon the ground of race discrimination in the selection of jurors. The Advertiser therefore urges the County Jury Commissioners to disband and immediately to make it possible for the State of Alabama to win a case involving a Negro in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser
April 4, 1935

MR. HUGHES HAS NOT SAID ENOUGH

To the Honorable Charles Evans Hughes:

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from seats on the Supreme Court of the United States. Has that circumstance affected the justice of the Court's decisions involving the races?

Negroes on the Supreme court of one of the Southern States in that period, although at the moment The Advertiser has no recollection of any exception to the rule.

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from the bench in Federal court districts.

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from seats on the bench of the Supreme courts of the States, except possibly in the Reconstruction years. There may have been some cause

Have
y not?
erty of asking Mr. Hughes and his colleagues of the Supreme Court of the United States this question: If Negroes have one of which two Negroes were convicted of the d, al- capital offense of rape in Alabama, all ertiser upon the ground, not specifically that no on to Negro sat on the jury that convicted the defendants, but upon the ground that for a "generation"—about 30 years, we believe—Negroes had been "systematically excluded" from jury service in Jackson County, Alabama.

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from the bench of nisi prius courts, at least in the Southern States, if not in all others. Have these circumstances prejudiced the cause of white or black citizen? If not, why not?

had served on Jackson County juries every year for 29 years before the "Scottsboro" infants came into court in their diapers and shaking their baby rattlers, but for some reason—any reason—had not been drawn to serve on the jury that tried the infants aforesaid, would the solemn Supreme Court of the United States have solemnly averred that justice had been outraged?

Does it follow that, in the light of the decision of the court as read by Mr. Hughes, no black man, no matter what the evidence against him may be, can have his sentence affirmed by the republic's highest court unless black men sat upon the jury that convicted him in the first instance?

Does it follow that an oathbound jury is entirely without virtue and respectability if only white men serve on it when Negroes are on trial?

Has the Supreme Court of the United States ever reversed the verdict of a trial court involving the liberity or life of an Indian upon the ground that no Indian sat upon the jury that convicted him? Or a Spaniard, of an Italian, or a Frenchman, or a Russian or a Japanese or a Chinese?

There is no relevancy in the observation of the Chief Justice to the effect that Negroes had been excluded from jury services for a generation before the Scottsboro infants were put to trial. The only relevant question is whether Negroes served on the jury that convicted these infants.

Suppose Negroes had been on all Jackson County juries for 29 years but that for some reason they were not accepted for jury service in the year that these puling infants were tried and convicted—would that not have been a miscarriage of justice?

We just wanted to know.

[redacted]
NEWS
APR 2 - 1935

Two Race Issues Dealt With

WITH EXACT justice in both, but with differing results, the Supreme Court of the United States yesterday acted upon two cases brought before it of prejudice against the Negro in the South, a case of juridical prejudice in Alabama and one of partisan political prejudice in Texas.

The first was the case of two of the seven Negro lads who were convicted of assaulting two white girls and sentenced to death, though one of the girls later repudiated her story and said she had been intimidated by the authorities, and that, as a matter of fact the boys were not guilty of any crime at all. This is the Scottsboro case in Jackson County which has held public attention ever since 1931. After the first trial the Supreme Court set aside the verdict on the ground that the men had been illegally convicted because they had been deprived of the aid of counsel in the preparation of their defense. Five of them have not yet been retried, but two have, and these were convicted a second time.

In the opinion of the Court, delivered without dissent by Chief Justice Hughes, it is very clearly declared that the deliberate excluding of qualified Negroes from jury service in Jackson County, which as a matter of fact has been going on for more than a generation, is unconstitutional, and that in view of such exclusion, depriving these two Scottsboro defendants of the right of trial by a jury of their peers, the second trial was irregular and the Court should have quashed the indictments. There was plenty of evidence the Chief Justice said that there were Negro citizens in Jackson County qualified for jury duty.

In the second case, the opinion, delivered by Mr. Justice Roberts, again without dissent, was against the contention of a Negro citizen of Harris County, Texas. In 1932 the Supreme Court declared invalid a Texas statute which excluded Negroes from voting in Democratic elections. This decision was of course, sound. But since then the Texas Democratic organization has made a like ruling for Democratic primaries. The suit in this case was brought when the County Clerk refused to give the complainant a ballot. He sued for $10 damages before a Justice of the Peace and of course lost. This paved the way for an appeal to the highest court.

In this case, with equal wisdom, the Court ruled against the complainant on the proper ground that a political party is a voluntary association and as such must be held to be competent to pass upon the qualifications of its members. Much as we regret the necessity for it, this is the sound view. The Court could take no other. While it does not do away with the element of prejudice, the decision as such must be accepted. The only way to circumvent this situation would be for the Government to assume control of all primaries and elections in all the States, and this would be a very doubtful benefit. We rather suspect no one wants such a thing as that.

Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser
April 6, 1935

GOVERNOR GRAVES'S LETTER ABOUT NEGRO JURORS

The Advertiser does not see how Governor Bibb Graves could have done less than to assume his full responsibility as the chief executive and the titular leader of Alabamians in urging all judges and solicitors to take steps immediately to have this State conform its jury practices to the demands of the Supreme Court of the United States since there is no other court to which this State may appeal.

The Advertiser several days ago said that it would now be necessary for Alabama jury commissions immediately to recognize the demands of the Supreme Court, otherwise it would be useless to expect that body to affirm any conviction of a Negro by an Alabama court, regardless of the evidence.

Governor Graves in his letter to circuit judges and solicitors merely recognizes the realities of the situation. It is vital that whatever readjustment to the Supreme Court's decision is to be made should be made immediately. We think it is the function of the Governor to point the way, and so we are glad, but not surprised, that Governor Graves should have acted in the forthright manner that he did. He could not have done less.

There is talk of new legislation on the subject. The Governor indicates that he will advise the Legislature in May to enact whatever legislation may be necessary to bring State practice into line with Charles Evans Hughes's opinion.

We doubt if new legislation is necessary or desirable. Certainly Senator Miller Bonner's suggestion that we revise the law so that only qualified voters may be eligible for jury duty would seem to be far enough to go. The Advertiser's opinion is that the matter can be safely entrusted to the jury commissions of the counties and the lawyers practicing at the bar.

We do not anticipate serious difficulties. Everybody knows that there are hundreds of Negroes in Alabama who are qualified by native intelligence and personal character to serve on a jury drawn to hear any cause. They are as well qualified for jury service as any other citizens. They do not especially desire to be called for jury service and we have no doubt that colored men of this calibre and rank are naturally embarrassed by recent developments.

It is not in response to any demand from them that the Supreme Court has nullified the action of the oathbound courts of the sovereign State of Alabama.

Nevertheless the great majority of Negroes are not yet prepared for the responsibilities of jury service, and for the information of Mr. Charles Evans Hughes The Advertiser will here say upon its own responsibility that the great majority of Negroes in Alabama are not likely to be summoned for jury duty in future. If they are the respectable practitioners at the bar on both sides of a cause will strike their names.

Finally and in conclusion: The Advertiser does not believe that if the 12 Apostles, returned to life, should declare the Scottsboro infants guilty, the Supreme Court of the United States would affirm the verdict.

The Advertiser does not believe that the Supreme Court of the United States would affirm any verdict of guilty against these puling infants.

The Advertiser believes that the State of Alabama should resolutely prosecute these sucklings to the bitter end! It believes that this sovereign State should at last have its way. If these sucklings are innocent they should be acquitted in an Alabama court.

If they are guilty they should be convicted in an Alabama court, if it takes 100 years to convict them!

After which the Governor of Alabama whoever he may be at that time, may properly take into account certain extenuating circumstances and act in his own wisdom to save these sucklings from the supreme sacrifice.

It would be weak, apologetic and cowardly for Alabama to back down now!

Therefore, we hope that Thomas E. Knight, Jr., as weary as he may be of these nasty cases, will pursue them to the very end. Let Alabama continue to drop these sucklings into the laps of the ponderous, querulous old men who quaver aimlessly in the chambers of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The dignity of a self-respecting State can demand no less.

Lynchings—1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5026

Samson, Ala., Ledger
April 4, 1935

NEGRO JUROR DECISION

The decision of the United States supreme court declaring that the negroes in the now famous Scottsboro case were denied a legal trial because of the absence of negro names in the jury box is very unwelcome in Alabama, where from the beginning of the jury system in America justice has been administered by people of Caucasian descent. Possibly an exception should be made of the reconstruction period, when military rule forced the hand of the people. Exception must also be made in the case of the United States courts, where the juries sometimes have contained colored men.

There has naturally been a reason for the exclusion of negroes in selecting names to go into the jury boxes. Common observation will remind us that there are few representatives of the negro race who have sufficient intelligence, education and a temperament that would fit them for unprejudiced judgment of testimony. That there are white men sometimes selected for jury duty who lack the balance and intelligence to dispassionately weigh evidence is not a sufficient argument in favor of further purging of the jury rolls.

It is indeed doubtful if there are many intelligent negroes who would care to be included in the jury list. Most of them would no doubt prefer to avoid the responsibility.

It is also not clear to us how the supreme court could reach the conclusion it does. Juries in Alabama are composed of people who have been picked out by the jury commissions in the various counties. Theirs is a selective power, which cannot be questioned by any state authority; neither can the governor, the trial court nor the supreme court of the state dictate to the jury commissioners that they shall include or exclude any particular person. We really wonder if this line of reasoning was presented to the United States supreme court in its fullness.

The consequences of this decision may be grave and not to the credit of the state's good name. For years a strong effort has been made to extirpate lynching in Alabama and this effort has been very successful. Many people who have set their faces against lynch law in the past may feel less eager about the matter and public sentiment may possibly change radically.

We deprecate the consequences of the supreme court's decision.

Greenville, Miss., [illegible]. Dem.-Tms.
April 8, 1935

SOUTHERN JURIES

The decision of the Supreme Court in the Scottsboro, Ala., case will have a far-reaching effect in the South. It opens up a new avenue of legal escape for criminals, which may be resorted to by shrewd lawyers fighting for the lives of their clients.

Twice have juries declared that men accused of assault were guilty and each time their verdict has been set aside. This last decision because the convicted men were negroes and there were no negroes on the juries. The higher court says that the negroes did not receive a fair trial because there were no negroes permitted to sit on the jury. Would they have taken the same attitude had the men been acquitted?

In Washington county there have been no negroes on juries for several years. In our courts the various juries have been called to pass judgment on white, colored, men and women of all nationalities: Never has there been any question of sex, race or nationality raised in any of these verdicts. Men have been sent to their death for taking the lives of others. Yet our courts have been carried on in an orderly manner.

What does the new high court decision prophesy? Does it mean that a negro cannot be convicted because there are no negroes on the jury, that a Chinese cannot be convicted because there are no Chinese on the jury? Or that a woman cannot be convicted because there are no women on the jury? Or that those already punished for their crimes have been illegally punished? Does it make any difference whether the jury is composed of blondes or brunettes?

It seems to us that the question for the courts to decide in any case is whether, or not, the defendant is guilty. Did the facts warrant conviction? It looks like our laws are becoming more complicated—not simplified.

Richmond, Va. News-Leader
April 2, 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO APPEAL.

Never, perhaps, has the supreme court of the United States handed down on the same day two opinions that so directly affect the Negroes of America as the decisions yesterday in the Scottsboro case and in the appeal on the Texas primary law.

The ground on which the court ordered a new trial of the boys accused of rape in Alabama was probably the only one that could have been found. The most recent trial had resulted in a tangle of procedure that practically closed the Alabama courts to a hearing of the appeal on its merits. From the viewpoint of orderly litigation, the ruling that outlawed the appeal was so important that one of the most distinguished Northern students of the case though convinced of the innocence of the accused boys, privately made the strange admission not long ago that it was better the two youths should perish than that the limitation of appeals, as fixed by the highest court in Alabama, should be set aside.

It is not certain that the Negroes will be acquitted on a new trial. Opinions can become so fixed and passions can be so deeply stirred that men will accept the evidence even of witnesses suspected of perjury. That is one of the many defects of the jury system as maintained in those states that make the trial judge merely a referee between opposing lawyers.

This, however, is certain: the decision of the court will mean the definite racial reform of jury service in the South. No prosecutor will be willing hereafter to put a Negro on trial for a felony unless there has been at least perfunctory compliance with the court's requirement that Negroes be included on the lists from which grand jurors are chosen. Neglect of this elementary act of justice might hereafter invalidate any conviction.

There is every reason why the Southern states should conform to this practice, not merely to an extent that will satisfy the supreme court, but wholeheartedly and honestly. Here in Virginia, the way was opened by the Crawford case. Although Judge McLEMORE denied the motion to quash the indictment on the ground of racial discrimination in drawing the jury, the argument in November, 1933, so impressed Virginia jurists that most of them quietly directed the inclusion of Negroes on the grand juries. This has been done without creating the slightest ripple. Other states will find the reform as simple as it proved to be in Virginia.

The establishment of the Negro's right to jury service is one thing; the practical exercise of that right will temporarily prove to be more difficult. Quite recently, the Richmond Planet reported that several Negro voters had been drawn for a jury in the hustings court, where a man of their race was to go on trial, defended by colored lawyers. Several of the Negroes qualified, but when counsel had exercised the right to strike off names, not one Negro remained on the jury. As the commonwealth's attorney stated that he had not "struck" a single Negro, the conclusion of the Planet was that defence counsel had preferred to entrust the fate of the accused man to white jurors.

It is commonly said that attorneys defending Negroes desire a white jury because they believe it will be more lenient toward a Negro than a jury of his own race will be. This is true only in occasional cases, but it is generally credited and it operates to keep Negroes from being accepted as jurors.

The cure is two-fold—first, to prevail upon lawyers to trust such a jury of Negroes as is apt to be drawn here in Richmond, and, second, to create in court, where a white jury is hearing an indictment against a Negro, precisely the same serious atmosphere that prevails when white jurors are sitting in a case involving a white man. We must be frank and fair in the premises: It is not enough to let the matter rest, in a flattered spirit, with the statement that Negroes had rather be tried by white men than by their own race; it should be our effort to administer evenhanded justice in such a way that no man will expect either clemency or severity because of his race. When we approach that ideal, Negroes will not expect their delinquencies to be viewed lightly by white men. Anticipating no favors, they will be willing to have other Negroes sit in judgment on them. The jurors, in their turn, will receive valuable training in citizenship. For a man performs no public duty that gives him quite the same sense of responsibility, or quite the same respect for courts and for law, as a few days of jury service.

MEXIA, TEX.
NEWS
APR 2 1935

The Negro Jury May Present New Problems for Texas

While the United States Supreme Court in a decision Monday upheld the right of the Democratic party through its convention in Texas to bar negroes from participating in primaries, the court also ruled in another case affecting the negro. This time it was in the famous Scottsboro cases from Alabama. The court returned the case for new indictment because negroes have not been selected as jurors in the state of Alabama.

The court ruled, in effect, that nine negroes charged with assault four years ago on two white girls must be either reindicted and retried by a jury drawn from a panel which includes negroes or set free.

Now attorneys are wondering about the Texas jury system. It is a bit different, perhaps, from the Alabama system but neither women nor negroes are drawn as jurors in Texas. The district judge appoints a jury commission. The jury commission selects the venire, or panel. From this list the trial court selects the 12 jurors. They are always white men.

In a few instances where there is a confusion of names negroes have been called as jurors. They, however, were promptly excused. Few murder cases are carried to the United States Supreme court, but some day a case will be taken up and the jury system of Texas challenged. It will be most difficult to find a way around the decision but Texas lawyers and courts as well as legislators are resourceful.

In this country we like the Negro. We want him educated, treated right economically, given justice in the courts, and complete freedom. But we want the Democratic party to remain the white man's voluntary association, and we know of no satisfactory way to permit negro participation in juries

Birmingham, Ala. News
April 6, 1935

Gov. Graves Performs His Duty Admirably

For his prompt and forthright facing of the situation precipitated by the Supreme Court's decision in the Scottsboro case, Gov. Graves deserves hearty commendation. No man in his position could have done more. No one similarly placed should have done less. Yet many a man as governor of a state, confronted with this issue, would not have acted with the dispatch and the directness which characterized Gov. Graves' action. Many a man would not have seen his duty so clearly or met it so courageously. Bibb Graves saw his duty and faced it without hesitation.

There could be no clearer exposition of the chief executive's duty in the premises than that contained in Gov. Graves' statement concerning his action. He said:

> Holdings of the United States Supreme Court are the supreme laws of the land. Whether we like the decisions or not, it is the patriotic duty of every citizen and the sworn duty of every public officer to accept and uphold them in letter and in spirit.
>
> I have received the Supreme Court's decision in the Scottsboro case, holding in effect that when there is systematic exclusion of Negroes from juries, it is discrimination against the race in violation of the United States constitution.
>
> This decision means that we must put the names of Negroes in jury boxes in every county in the state.
>
> Alabama is going to observe the supreme law of America.
>
> The governor is the chief law enforcement officer of the state and the conservator of all laws. All laws of course include the supreme laws of the land.
>
> Accordingly, the governor has written to all trial judges in the state requesting that they speedily take the proper steps to conform with the Supreme Court's ruling where there is any nonconformity. This means that the names of qualified Negro citizens must be added to the jury rolls in every county in Alabama.

The duty which Gov. Graves points is not merely that of the chief executive himself. As he says, it is the "patriotic duty" of every citizen and the "sworn duty" of every public officer to uphold "in letter and in spirit" the supreme laws of the land. The obligation in this matter is one which no citizen of Alabama should fail to recognize. Let us all, then, adopt the attitude which Gov. Graves has taken, uphold him in his course and abide by the supreme law of the land as it has been laid down for us by our highest tribunal. No Alabamian should do less than to follow the leadership of Gov. Graves in this matter and the example he has set.

As The News has said before, there is an absolute necessity for alteration of our practice with respect to this question, but this need not mean a revolutionary change, and there is no reason for feeling alarm or apprehension over the consequences of it. By the governor's order, the names of qualified Negro citizens must be included on the jury rolls of the state, and placed in the boxes from which jurors are drawn. Negroes, as a matter of course, will be called for jury duty from time to time. Concerning the extent to which they will actually serve on juries, that is another matter. Trial judges are permitted a certain amount of discretion in accepting or rejecting jurors. Jurors who wish to be excused may be excused if the court sees fit to excuse them. Attorneys may strike or accept jurors for service as they please. The chances are that not many Negroes will actually sit on juries. As this paper has previously suggested, the problem—for it must be frankly realized by all that it is and will remain a problem—can easily be handled by common-sense methods entirely in conformity with the letter—and the spirit—of the law.

But it follows necessarily that Negroes must occasionally serve on state juries, even as they now sometimes serve on federal juries in Alabama and elsewhere in the South, and as, in some places, they already sit occasionally on state juries. Thus the service of Negroes on juries will not be an innovation. What has already been done can and should be done on a somewhat broader scale, merely to give moral force to the law, and as a matter of simple justice. There is no reason to feel any grave concern. There is no reason to feel, as Gov. Graves is quoted as saying, that there has been "nothing more serious" than this court decision since the War Between the States. It is serious, but to say that it is so serious as that is to magnify its gravity.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
POST
APR 6 1935

The Southern Press

Editorial Comment

Montgomery Advertiser—The Supreme Court of the United States has bluntly laid down the law to Alabama on the question involving the right of Negroes to serve on juries.

In reversing a Jackson County court in the conviction of two of the "Scottsboro" defendants the Supreme Court seems to have ignored the evidence and confined its comments mainly if not entirely to the fact that no Negroes were on the jury which convicted two Negroes of a felony.

The court charges that Negroes were "systematically excluded" from jury service in the county of trial, and that the few names of Negroes in the jury box were fraudulently admitted.

The Advertiser does know that generally speaking the names of Negro citizens are not in the jury boxes in the counties of Alabama, although Negroes may and do serve on Federal juries in this state.

It now follows that Alabama jury commissions must immediately put the names of reputable Negro citizens in their jury boxes. Otherwise we cannot hope again to have the Supreme Court of the United States affirm the findings of a state court wherever a Negro's liberty or life is at stake.

* * *

Nashville Tennessean—Tuesday's decision in the Scottsboro case was the first in recent years in which the United States Supreme Court upheld the right of Negroes to sit on juries.

It is not, however, the first time the court has ruled that deliberate denial of jury places to Negroes in trials of Negro defendants is a violation of the rights guaranteed by the constitution.

The decision in the case of Neal versus Delaware, in 1880, is often quoted. The court ruled that the fact that no Negro had ever sat on a Delaware jury, although about 15 per cent of the population of the state was Negro, presented a prima facie case of denial of the constitutional right of equal protection of the law.

It does not seem probable that the Scottsboro decision, any more than that of 1880, will result in any far-reaching changes in judicial procedure in the Southern states, or in any other section of the country, for that matter.

* * *

Raleigh (N. C.) News and Observer—The conscience of the nation and the world is convinced that the seven Scottsboro Negroes are not guilty of the crime with which they were charged. A brave Alabama judge forfeited his political life to set aside a verdict of guilty upon the grounds that there was not adequate or credible evidence of guilt.

As the case continues, as Alabama prosecutors insist that it will, it becomes more obvious that not the Scottsboro Negroes but the justice of Alabama is on trial.

* * *

Selma Times-Journal—It is a bit strange that the U. S. Supreme Court should have waited until the celebrated Scottsboro case was brought before them a second time to find that a reversible error had been committed by the trial court in excluding Negroes from the jury.

It is rather amazing that the state should have pitched its entire defense program on the absurd contention that Negroes do serve on juries in Alabama, when every 10-year-old schoolboy knows that they do not.

A very certain aftermath of this malodorous case, it appears, will be the slow breakdown of our white jury system and the substitution of mixed juries. Of course, this nauseous situation will be resisted as stubbornly as possible.

Seneca, S. C., Journal
April 3, 1935.

New Trials at Scottsboro

The famous Scottsboro, Ala., case is again brought into prominence by the action of the supreme court in granting new trials to the two negroes sentenced to death. The case has been before the courts since 1932.

Alabama

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

5027

Birmingham, Ala. News
April 5, 1935

Negroes And Jury Service In The Southern States

The reaction to the Supreme Court's decision in the Scottsboro case among officials of Southern states, so far as the question of excluding Negroes from the jury rolls is concerned, makes an interesting study. From a survey of opinion of Southern attorneys general made by The Associated Press, it appears that nowhere was there any surprise at the Supreme Court's ruling on that question. Rather, the decision seems to have been received as one which was to have been expected.

The other Southern states are no less concerned with the fundamental issue raised by the court's ruling than Alabama. In most of them, the practice regarding the service of Negroes on juries has been the same as that in Alabama. In all the states in which officials have commented, it has been pointed out that there are no laws barring Negroes from jury duty. Of course, if there were any such laws, they would be unconstitutional. But while Negroes are included on some jury rolls, they are seldom called on to serve. In most other states of the South, as in Alabama, there is recognition of the necessity for a change which will make practice conform with the Supreme Court's decision.

Atty. Gen. William McGraw, of Texas, says the statutes of that state are in conformity with the decision. He adds that generally when Negroes are drawn for jury service a "suitable excuse is presented and accepted." A similar practice has obtained in some counties in Alabama. "Texans," McGraw says, "have demonstrated perfect ability properly to control the Negro question within the constitution."

Atty. Gen. A. A. Seawall, of North Carolina, expresses the view that the decision "gives us pause for thought." It may, he says, mean more appeal attempts to the United States Supreme Court from verdicts of state courts, but he would not undertake to predict the effect it will have.

In Tennessee, Asst. State Atty. Gen. W. F. Barry, Jr., is of the opinion that the decision will not have any influence in the South except probably on a retrial of the Scottsboro cases. A similar view, with respect to the effect in Florida, comes from Atty. Gen. Cary D. Landis, of that state, who says: "Negroes are allowed to register to vote (in Florida). They then become eligible to vote and are qualified for jury duty. Negroes have served on state court juries in Florida, but not in recent years."

In Arkansas, according to Atty. Gen. Thomas Fitzhugh, Negroes are eligible to serve on juries if they hold a poll tax receipt, but "it just happens that no jury commission selects Negroes for jury duty. It may be just a coincidence."

Atty. Gen. John M. Daniel, of South Carolina, says Negroes sit on some juries in some counties in his state. In Georgia also Negroes occasionally serve on state juries.

Atty. Gen. A. P. Staples, of Virginia, is quoted as saying: "I do not know that we ever had Negroes on juries. . . . But if the Supreme Court has held it necessary to have Negroes on juries, chances are we will have to take cognizance of it."

A particularly interesting comment comes from the office of the attorney general of Mississippi. There the records of a case were cited where the Mississippi Supreme Court set aside a conviction of a Negro sentenced to hang for killing a white man when the district attorney admitted that Negroes had been excluded from jury duty because of race and color. The Mississippi court held that this circumstance was sufficient to quash the indictment. Thus the Supreme Court of a Southern state took precisely the same position that the United States Supreme Court has taken in the Scottsboro case. In the decision setting aside the conviction in the Scottsboro case, Chief Justice Hughes said that the absence of Negroes from the jury rolls should have caused the trial court to quash the indictments.

From these comments, it appears that throughout the Southern states there is a recognition of the legal principle laid down by the Supreme Court. In those states whose officials believe the decision will have no effect, it is evidently because they feel that there is at least technical conformity with that principle. Nowhere is it denied that qualified Negro citizens should be included on the jury rolls. The extent to which they are called on to serve, in practice, is another matter.

In no Southern state is there any alarm apparent over the effect of the Supreme Court's ruling. Nor is there any reason why there should be. While, probably in most Southern states, it will be necessary to make some alteration in practice, the court's decision does not call for any revolutionary change. This question must be adjusted by Alabama and other states of the South, and it can easily be adjusted in a common-sense way. Even now it is not by any means an unheard-of thing for a Negro to sit on a jury, in Alabama and doubtless in all other Southern states. Negroes occasionally serve on federal juries, and in at least some places on state juries. The necessity which now confronts Alabama and the South in general is simply to see to it that Negroes are not systematically excluded from the jury rolls in any county, and that they are occasionally called for jury service. In instances where they wish to be excused, and where the court sees fit to excuse them, this would be a proper method for handling the situation, in part. Then, too, attorneys can strike Negro jurors or accept them for service as they please. And there would be no harm in permitting them to serve on occasion, to give moral force to the principle involved—certainly there would be no more harm in letting them serve at times in state courts than there is in having them serve in federal courts in the South.

Whatever is done in this state, let it be a practical and common-sense solution of the question, which will not merely be in conformity with the Supreme Court's decision, but which also will satisfy the moral implications of that ruling.

Greenwood Miss
Commonwealth
April 2-1935

THE SCOTTSBORO DECISION AND THE SOUTH

Fears are being expressed that the decision of the United States Supreme Court rendered Monday, reversing the appeal of the Scottsboro negroes convicted of rape, may seriously affect the jury system in the Southern states where there is a practical exclusion of negroes from juries in the courts.

The United States Supreme Court in reversing a conviction of the Alabama negroes found that negroes had been barred from jury service in the locality where the Scottsboro pair were tried, and declared that because of this exclusion the equal protection of the laws had been denied the defendants.

Not wishing to criticise the highest tribunal in the land as to its wisdom or interpretation, the fact remains that it is difficult for any except the judicial mind to determine why a black man should be entitled to a sprinkling of blacks on the jury, any more than a member of any other race should have a proportion of those of his racial kinship on the jury when he faces trial on any charge.

However, the court has spoken, and from its decision there is no appeal. Thus southern states are wondering about reversals in all cases in which negroes are involved. The legislature might met the situation by providing that any defendant should be entitled to be tried by a jury possessing the same coloring of skin or hair as does the prisoner, but that might make rather difficult the selection of a jury in the majority of cases.

As a matter of cold truth the average negro defendant in the south is likely to receive more lenient judgment from a jury composed entirely of whites than if the jury were composed of negroes. The southern white man knows the shortcomings of the average negro and seldom holds him to the strict accountability he would hold the white man.

But, if the Supreme Court's decision is carried to its logical conclusion there has hardly been a legal conviction of a negro in the southern states since reconstruction days, and the south does not apolozige for it.

It is possible that the issue is not a vital one, the cost of appeals being what is, except in those cases where northern agitators like the crew who invaded the Scottsboro cases become involved, and if necessary, those cases can be specially dealt with.

Build Fighting Fund of I.L.D. To Save Lives of Negro Boys!

APPEAL OF CENTRAL COMMITTEE, COMMUNIST PARTY, U. S. A.

Comrades! Fellow Workers!

The Scottsboro boys must be freed! Angelo Herndon must be saved from a living death on the chain gangs of the South!

For four years the hands of the Southern lynchers have been stayed by the mass efforts of millions of workers, farmers and intellectuals. This same mass pressure has finally forced a decision from the Supreme Court of the United States, which not only saves the boys once more from the electric chair, but which is at the same time a tremendous victory in the struggle for Negro rights.

But there must be no illusions. Before the Scottsboro boys are free, before Angelo Herndon can once more freely take his place in the ranks of the working class, a long and bitter battle lies ahead. This battle must be founght on two fronts. The best possible legal defense must be provided. The mass pressure which has won so many victories in these historic cases must be multiplied many fold.

The Central Committee of the Communist Party, which has from the beginning given its fullest support to the campaign conducted by the International Labor Defense in the Scottsboro and Herndon cases, now calls upon the American working class, and upon all who wish to put an end to "lynch justice" to rally in one mighty effort to carry these cases on to final victory.

A fighting fund of $20,000 is needed to enable the International Labor Defense to carry on its defense of these cases.

This money must be raised within the next two months.

The Central Committee itself contributes $500 to this fund and calls upon all members of the Communist Party, upon all workers in the trade unions and the mass organizations, upon all intellectuals and liberals, to raise this fund within the next sixty days. Take up collections in your shops, in the neighborhoods and in the countryside.

Mobilize to demand the immediate unconditional safe release of the Scottsboro bays and of Angelo Herndon.

Demand: No re-indictments! No new trials'

Send in your donations at once!

Build the International Labor Defense!

CENTRAL COMMITTEE, COMMUNIST PARTY, U. S. A.
Earl Browder, General Secretary, C. P. U. S. A.

2 Scottsboro Rallies In Oklahoma to Hear Leader of Bonus March

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla., April 16.—Mass meetings are being arranged in Cushing and Sand Springs, near here, at which Emanuel Levin, Rank and File leader of the 1932 Bonus March, will speak on the Scottsboro, and Oklahoma "Sedition" cases, on April 18 and 19, respectively.

Levin spoke here at a meeting at Fourth and Nebraska Streets last week to a large group of Negro and white workers. After the discussion the workers decided to form a branch of the International Labor Defense and a committee was elected to carry out the plans for regular meetings.

A resolution was adopted at the meeting calling for the immediate unconditional release of the Scottsboro Boys and declaring that the workers assembled pledged themselves to "put forth every effort for the defense of the Scottsboro Boys, of Angelo Herndon and of victims of local attacks."

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
APR 5 1935

LAW AND THE PROFITS.

There is no way we could reverse the Supreme court of the United States, if we saw fit, in its decision in the Scottsboro case in which it has on the ground that negroes were excluded from the Alabama jury lists granted a new trial to a couple of negroes convicted of a capital offense. The fact that we are confident the absence of negro jurors is not the real point at issue does not assist our mental processes; and we doubt if it offered any considerable assistance to these our judicial betters.

The same sort of a decision could be reached in the trial of women defendants whom the court thought were being given short shrift; for no state of our acquaintance hereabouts requires the service of women on juries.

Admitted that the failure of women to appear on the jury lists and of the negroes to be asked or permitted to serve as jurors did not result from the same set of premises, the result is pretty much the same. White mastulinity—say the Democratic party, if you like—has accepted responsibility for the administration of justice in the south.

What's to be done about it? Nothing so far as we can see. We do not believe that the Supreme court is going to send back for trial every case in which a negro has not been provided with a jury of his peers.

How the Supreme court will keep from doing so is the Supreme court's business, and not ours.

Charlotte, N. C., News
April 2, 1935

Lawyers Talk Negro Jurors

Discuss Prospective Effect Of Supreme Court's Scottsboro Decision.

The federal supreme court's Scottsboro decision drew the keen attention of Charlotte lawyers today as to the prospective effects in the North Carolina courts with reference to negro jurors. The assumption was that the Alabama situation was much the same as in this state—that there was no law discriminating against negroes on the jury, but that they merely were never summoned.

The supreme court's finding of discrimination, however, it was believed, would apply here equally as with Alabama and that should the question be raised and pressed to a conclusion the result would be that negroes would be summoned for jury duty in the North Carolina courts.

Some lawyers were not bitterly averse to the prospect, believing that the more thoughtful negroes would make good jurors and would be of value particularly in those cases where negroes were on trial, by reason of their better understanding of negro life conditions.

Albany, Ga., Herald
April 5, 1935

THE SUPREME COURT AND THE SCOTTSBORO CASE.

Does the United States Supreme Court mean, in its reversal of the Alabama court in which the Scottsboro Negroes were convicted of criminal assault on a white woman, that hereafter no man charged with crime can be convicted unless his own race is represented on the jury? That is the reason given by the Supreme Court in the Scottsboro case, and one wonders if a new standard of justice has been established. The question is whether the accused Negro men were guilty. A jury of white men agreed that they were guilty, and the question at issue would seem to be: Were the jurors competent? It does not seem to have been shown that they were not competent, so the Supreme Court's view is a little hard to understand.

Was the Supreme Court prejudiced against the Scottsboro Negroes because all the Honorable Justices on that exalted bench are white men? No?

Then why assume that the white men of the trial jury were prejudiced?

Grove Hill, Ala., Democrat
April 11, 1935

MAKING THE NEGRO THE GOAT

The masses of negroes in Alabama are law-abiding, well-behaved people. All they want is peace and a chance to make a living and a chance to improve their status as a social and economic unit.

Whenever a member of their race commits a serious offense against society respectable negroes are embarrassed. They despise the criminal negro more than whites do, for criminal conduct by a negro reflects upon all negroes and so creates unnecessary difficulties for them.

The Advertiser for three years has been impressed with the fact that the controversy about the "Scottsboro case" was and is a white man's row.

The Advertiser has no doubt that if only engroes had served on the juries in the Scottsboro cases there would have been as many indictments and as many convictions as we have had.

The average law-abiding nego despises the lawless member of his race with a passion quite unknown to white people. He feels that every negro criminal is a Judas to his race.

The Advertiser is close to the negro leadership of Alabama. No negro leader, great or small, hesitates to come by The Advertiser to talk frankly of any problem that troubles him.

All of them know The Advertiser has always been their sympathetic friend, and so negroes usually talk freely to The Advertiser. In the light of this circumstance it is remarkable that never at any time has any negro in Alabama ever appealed to The Advertiser against the courts that indicted and convicted the Scottsboro defendants. We have never heard from a negro any expression of opinion regarding these defendants.

No negro leader in Alabama has lent his voice to the world chorus against Alabama since the Scottsboro case first became a cause celebre.

In Alabama negroes and whites understand how to get along together, but whites elsewhere in the world do not seem to be quite satisfied with the arrangement.

What we mean to say is this: The average negro in the South, especially in Alabama stands for law and order, he stands for good citizenship. He ought not to be humiliated unduly by the criminals of his race. He ought not to be humiliated by the debates involving public policy which follow.—Montgomery Advertiser.

Lynchings-1935-
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5028

CAMDEN, N. J.
POST

APR 2 1935

THE SUPREME COURT AGAIN CHALLENGES ALABAMA

Unanimously, the United States Supreme Court has ordered another new trial of defendants in the notorious Scottsboro case.

Fortunately for the nation, the civil liberties of the Negro in the South are stanchly upheld by the nation's highest tribunal.

But what are these defendants going to do? Is their whole life to be spent in jail while lawyers and courts debate their alleged guilt on charges of rape?

It was in March of 1931 that 11 Negroes were arrested in Scottsboro, Alabama, charged with assaulting two white girls in a railroad car. At first, the girls denied any assault had occurred. But after they had been badgered by the sheriff, they finally consented to prefer charges. The whole case was an outrageous frame-up, between civil authorities in Scottsboro, and the girls, who were found to be notorious prostitutes.

Swiftly, the 11 Negroes were tried, convicted and sentenced TO DEATH.

The case was appealed, finally reaching the United States Supreme Court in December, 1932.

A new trial was ordered on the ground that the defendants had been deprived of the elementary right of counsel.

Another swift trial was held. But it was so obviously a set-up, that Judge James E. Horton, of Alabama, set aside the guilty verdict and ordered still another trial. Confronted with such a courageous Judge, the Attorney General of Alabama hunted another Judge who would be more amenable to racial prejudice. He found one and one more trial was held. Again the Negroes were convicted.

Again, too, this verdict was appealed—and has now been thrown out by the United States Supreme Court on the grounds that Negroes were excluded from juries in Alabama and the defendants were deprived of their constitutional right to trial by "a jury of their peers."

Will another new trial give these defendants the justice to which they are entitled? Is it conceivable that Alabama can overcome its racial prejudice sufficiently to be fair above all things in this case?

Scarcely any intelligent person, even in Alabama, believes these Negroes guilty. But to give them a trial in which they might possibly be acquitted would, in the eyes of the biased, mean a loss of respect for Alabama.

The forces involved in this case lie deeper even than the forces of law and order. The elements of intolerance and prejudice, much as we may deplore them and wish for their abolition, remain strongly rooted. Were it not for that, the Scottsboro defendants would have been free long ago.

This latest rebuke to Alabama by the nation's highest court, however, constitutes a challenge which should bring that State's judiciary, if not its mob masters, to a new sense of public responsibility.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

APR 3 1935

Negro Civic Rights

The United States Supreme Court decisions on Texas negro voting in primaries and the Scottsboro case are not inconsistent. Actually in both the court is finding and has found heretofore as to the black man's civic rights. In the Scottsboro cases, the court holds that there has been discrimination against the right of trial by a jury of the condemned Negroes peers because no Negroes were summoned for jury duty. The logic of the holding is indisputable, however much it may upset traditional white man's court administration in the South. The court has spoken finally on this subject and criminal procedure south of the Mason and Dixon line will have to act accordingly.

In the Texas primary case, there is an entirely different issue presented. The court has held before that efforts of the State by statute to exclude the Negro from voting are unconstitutional. It sensibly recognizes the right of the party itself to determine the qualifications of its own members. A primary is not an election. From the latter under the Fourteenth Amendment the Negro, of course, can not be excluded.

The party has won its contention, which reaches beyond the color line. The party itself has the evident right by convention to limit its membership as it pleases but this permission defeats the real ends of party if it is exercised. Discrimination must throw votes into opposing camps. If the Democratic party is wise, it will welcome to its primary voting ranks, the intelligent property-owning taxpaying Negro.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE DEMOCRAT

APR 4 1935

SCOTTSBORO CONVICTIONS QUASHED AGAIN

"For this long-continued, unvarying and wholesale exclusion of Negroes from jury service, we find no justification consistent with the constitutional mandate," wrote Chief Justice Hughes, in the decision which for a second time calls in question the judicial processes under which Alabama convicted the seven Scottsboro Negroes of a capital crime in 1931.

Of course, the question might recur as to how many times a man may be tried for the same offense. However, the very basis of the decision setting aside the judgment in the two cases now on appeal was that Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson had had no trial, had only been convicted in the semblance of a trial. They had not been in jeopardy before an illegal jury, and the outcome must be still another trial unless Alabama releases the men, whose guilt at best is in grave doubt.

The court's conclusion is that the exclusion must be on account of color, for it finds that many colored men, teachers, school board members and others, have all the qualifications for jury service and colored men are called from that same county for service on juries in federal courts. Apparently the discrimination is fatal only when Negroes are defendants and not when white men are tried before wholly white juries.

Because women are still excluded from juries in many places, attempt has been made to set aside the conviction of women defendants on the same ground. However, abridgment of civic rights only on account of "race, color or previously condition of servitude" and not account of sex, is forbidden by the "mandate" of which the Chief Justice speaks.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER

APR 7 1935

MAKING THE NEGRO THE GOAT

The masses of Negroes in Alabama are law-abiding, well-behaved people. All they want is peace and a chance to make a living and a chance to improve their status as a social and economic unit.

Whenever a member of their race commits a serious offense against society respectable Negroes are embararssed. They despise the criminal Negro more than whites do, for criminal conduct by a Negro reflects upon all Negroes and so creates unnecessary difficulties for them.

The Advertiser for three years has been impressed with the fact that the controversy about the "Scottsboro case" was and is a white man's row.

The Advertiser has no doubt that if only Negroes had served on the juries in the Scottsboro cases there would have been as many indictments and as many convictions as we have had.

The average law-abiding Negro despises the lawless member of his race with a passion quite unknown to white people. He feels that every Negro criminal is a Judas to his race.

The Advertiser is close to the Negro leadership of Alabama. No Negro leader, great or small, hesitates to come by The Advertiser to talk frankly of any problem that troubles him.

All of them know that The Advertiser has always been their sympathetic friend, and so Negroes usually talk freely to The Advertiser. In the light of this circumstance it is remarkable that never at any time has any Negro in Alabama ever appealed to The Advertiser against the courts that indicted and convicted the Scottsboro defendants. We have never heard from a Negro any expression of opinion regarding these defendants.

No Negro leader in Alabama has lent his voice to the world chorus against Alabama since the Scottsboro case first became a cause celebre.

In Alabama Negroes and whites understand how to get along together, but whites elsewhere in the world do not seem to be quite satisfied with the arrangement.

What we mean to say is this: The average Negro in the South, especially in Alabama, stands for law and order, he stands for good citizenship. He ought not to be humiliated unduly by the criminals of his race. He ought not to be humiliated by the debates involving public policy which follow.

Dothan, Ala., Herald
April 4, 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASES AGAIN

In reversing a Jackson County court in the conviction of two of the Negroes charged with rape in what is now commonly known as the Scottsboro cases, the Supreme Court has done more to sanction lynch law in this state than any editorial or other public utterance has ever done, and has laid itself liable to a criticism which but few red-blooded Anglo-Saxon Southerners can fail to feel, even they do not express themselves.

According to press reports, the Court charges that Negroes were "systematically excluded" from jury service in the county of trial, and that the few names of Negroes in the jury box were fraudulently admitted.

Now just suppose all that to be a fact, what has it got to do with the Negroes' guilt or innocence? It is an implication equivalent to an insult to the South and every law-abiding citizen in it, to say that twelve men selected from a venire of forty or fifty could not determine guilt or innocence from evidence submitted, even though they were white.

Suppose, further, that of the venire any number proportionate to the population were Negroes, but in selection of the trial jury, the Negroes were excluded, wouldn't the same point of law be involved?

As the Montgomery Advertiser forcefully expresses it:

"Either these gorillas committed rape, or they did not .

"If they committed rape the jury, (even though white) knows the truth and reported it faithfully.

"If they did not commit rape, we believe that this jury would have said so.

"Suppose the defendants had been Italians. There are no Italians in Jackson county. So far as we know there are not today any Italians in Montgomery county, despite its relatively large population. Certainly there are no Spaniards, no Japanese, no Tahitans, no Indians, no Eskimos either in Montgomery of other counties.

"In that event not many juries in Alabama could hope to have their verdicts affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States if a member of either of these races should move here tomorrow and commit a capital offense.

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from seats on the Supreme Court of the United States. Has that circumstance affected the justice of the Court's decisions involving the races?

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from the bench in Federal court districts.

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from seats on the bench of the Supreme courts of the States, except possibly in the Reconstruction years. There may have been some Negroes on the Supreme court of one of the Southern States in that period, although at the moment The Advertiser has no recollection of any exception to the rule.

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from the bench of nisi prius courts, at least in the Southern States, if not in all others. Have these circumstances prejudiced the cause of white or black citizen? If not, why not?

Yet the Supreme Court of the United States remands for rehearing a cause in which two Negroes were convicted of the capital offense of rape in Alabama, all upon the ground, not specifically that no Negro sat on the jury that convicted the defendants, but upon the ground that for a "generation"—about 30 years, we believe—Negroes had been "systematically excluded" from jury service in Jackson County, Alabama.

Columbus, Ga. Ledger
April 8, 1935

The Supreme Court

(Savannah Press)

The decision in the Scottsboro case is another chapter in that long drawn out affair. The Alabama counties are notoriously weary of it, although the probabilities are that it will be prosecuted in spite of the decision of the United States Supreme Court which saved from hanging two of the men in the notorious assault case.

The Constitution protects people from exclusion from the jury box on account of race, religion or any reason like that. The reply of Alabama to the decision of the Supreme Court is that no element is excluded from the jury box for these reasons, but that negroes as a rule do not sit upon juries in Alabama for the reason that the type of intelligence required of a juror is not exhibited by the negroes. There is no political exclusion on account of race, but a line of demarcation on account of the lack of intelligence in that color.

The Supreme Court held that the men did not have a fair trial, holding that the excited state of the community prevented a calm judicious verdict.

It is true that the community was in an excited state, the nature of the crime being sufficient to create indignation. It would be a reflection upon any community if this were not so. However, one of the Alabama state officers declared that the Supreme Court decision yesterday would have an effect far beyond the Scottsboro case.

Another decision concerning the race question was from Texas yesterday where a colored voter, who was excluded from voting in a primary, held political persecution because of race.

The court decided yesterday that the Democratic party of Texas had a right to make any regulation it pleased in conducting a preliminary election and that the exclusion of the colored man was not a political one. If this decision is followed no colored voter will be encouraged to cast his vote in the South because a primary usually determines the election and the result of the primary generally foreshadows the verdict at the polls.

Here were two cases decided by the Supreme Court which were not hailed alike with delight by the interracial element which is stirring up the South

SAVANNAH, GA.
PRESS

APR 2 1935

THE SUPREME COURT.

The decision in the Scottsboro case is another chapter in that long drawn out affair. The Alabama counties are notoriously weary of it, although the probabilities are that it will be prosecuted in spite of the decision of the United States Supreme Court which saved from hanging two of the men in the notorious assault case.

The Constitution protects people from exclusion from the jury box on account of race, religion or any reason like that. The reply of Alabama to the decision of the Supreme Court is that no element is excluded from the jury box for these reasons, but that negroes as a rule do not sit upon juries in Alabama for the reason that the type of intelligence required of a juror is not exhibited by the negroes. There is no political exclusion on account of race, but a line of demarcation on account of the lack of intelligence in that color.

The Supreme Court held that the men did not have a fair trial, holding that the excited state of the community prevented a calm judicious verdict.

It is true that the community was in an excited state, the nature of the crime being sufficient to create indignation. It would be a reflection upon any community if this were not so. However, one of the Alabama state officers declared that the Supreme Court decision yesterday would have an effect far beyond the Scottsboro case.

Another decision concerning the race question was from Texas yesterday where a colored voter, who was excluded from voting in a primary, held political persecution because of race.

The court decided yesterday that the Democratic party of Texas had a right to make any regulation it pleased in conducting a preliminary election and that the exclusion of the colored man was not a political one. If this decision is followed

Oneida, Tenn. News
April 5, 1935

FAMOUS SCOTTSBORO CASE NOW REVERSED

Supreme Court Again Saves Two Negroes From Chair

Once again the supreme court intervened this week to save two Negroes sentenced to death in the famous Scottsboro, Ala. cases.

In effect, the highest tribunal ordered new trials for both Clarence Norris and Haywood Patternson, two of the seven who would have been executed in 1932 had it not been for the court. New trials were ordered the first time after the court concluded that the men were denied representation by adequate counsel.

Chief Justice Hughes, in his opinion, said the constitutional rights of Norris and Patterson were violated because Negroes were excluded from jury service at their trials.

Lynchings—1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5029

SOUTHERN RULING CLASS SEEKS TO DODGE ISSUE OF NEGROES ON JURIES

Press and Politicians Propose Numerous Schemes for Circumventing Effects of the Scottsboro Decision

By ROBERT WOOD

The tremendous victory forced by mass pressure from the U. S. Supreme Court in the Scottsboro case is a political event of first importance for the oppressed masses of the South. To the doubly exploited Negro workers and sharecroppers the victory represents a great stride forward in the struggle for immediate political rights and for national liberation.

The U. S. Supreme Court has been forced to meet squarely the fact of the systematic exclusion of Negroes because of their race from Southern juries. It has been compelled to declare such exclusion to be in contravention of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments of the Federal Constitution.

Southern Rulers In Panic

The four-year struggle waged by the world-wide working class, under the leadership of the International Labor Defense, has indelibly impressed the toiling masses with the need of continued mass efforts to translate every court victory gained in the Scottsboro case into a POLITICAL victory. And no one is more aware of this determination than the ruling class and its officials.

The Scottsboro victory has thrown the ruling class, its officials and its press into complete panic. Blustering Solicitor H. G. Bailey, who made the infamous "Jew gold from New York" speech to one of the lily-white Scottsboro juries, now uncomfortably confesses that "it looks like something will have to be done." The decision he characterizes as "a body blow."

The Birmingham Post editorially cries quits. "What is to be done?" it asks. And quickly answers, "let us be through with the whole affair at the earliest possible moment." The Birmingham News calls for "remedial action." For "if this should not be done," it continues, "every case, either of major or minor nature, involving a Negro defendant, hereafter tried in Alabama, could conceivably be appealed to the United States Supreme Court, and each conviction set aside."

Soon after the decision was rendered, Governor Graves of Alabama, aware of the fact that the eyes of the entire working class was on his state, rendered lip service to it. He issued a statement instructing all jury commissioners to empty the jury boxes and refill them after adding the names of "eligible" Negroes. He also stated that he would seek "remedial legislation" to cover the refilling of jury boxes. He added after stating that the decision was the most important thing that had occurred in the South since "the War Between the States," that "this decision means that we must put the names of Negroes in jury boxes in every county of the State." It should be noted that Governor Graves' statement refers only to the necessity for putting Negroes' names "in jury boxes," but that he is silent as to the necessity for putting Negroes ON THE JURY. This gesture evades, therefore, the clear mandate contained in the language of the Supreme Court's opinion in reversing the lynch verdicts after inquiring not only into the fact of whether jury service was systematically "denied in expressed terms, but also whether it was denied in substance and effect."

Try to Dodge Decision

It is clear, therefore, that Governor Graves' statement omits any instructions as to actually placing Negroes on Alabama juries. The press wasted no time in clarifying the meaning of the statement. The Birmingham News quickly explained that "the Governor's order does not require that Negroes be placed on juries, but does require that their names must be placed on the jury rolls and in the boxes from which jurors are drawn." The views of the rest of the Alabama press and of its officials definitely shows that not only is a determined effort to be made to yet legally lynch these innocent boys, but also that the systematic denial of the right of jury service to the Negro people will be sought to be continued.

The Birmingham News, in the editorial referred to above, with true ruling class dishonesty, lamely attempts to show that the condition of wholesale exclusion—unquestionably existing throughout the entire South—is confined merely to Jackson and Morgan Counties in Alabama. "For," it states, in referring to the local federal courts, "Negroes have not only been included on jury rolls in Alabama, but they have in some instances actually served as jurors. Negroes have served as jurors in federal courts in this state." As to the conditions in state courts, it continues, "Probably they have served, or at least they have been eligible to serve, on juries in state courts in some counties. The Supreme Court is convinced that in Jackson and Morgan Counties, scenes of the Scottsboro trials, Negroes were "systematically" excluded from the jury rolls. This is almost certainly not true of every county in Alabama. [My emphasis.—R. W.]

A Warning to Workers

The final paragraph of this weasel statement points to the urgent need for the working class and its allies to redouble their efforts many times at precisely this juncture, in order to enforce the right of the Negro to serve on Southern juries. The warning is clear in the statement that though "the court's opinion unquestionably calls for remedial action in these counties where the Negroes are excluded from the jury rolls," yet all this amounts to, according to this mouthpiece of the Southern lynchers, is that "this is the absolute minimum of change in current practice' in Alabama necessitated by the court's ruling." In short, this means that the names of some Negroes will be put on the jury rolls—"the absolute minimum"—and then the right to sit on the juries will still be denied. [My emphasis above—R.W.]

The entire ruling class is seeking to give the Negro people the right to sit on Southern juries. Thus, the Selma Times-Journal openly states, "Of course, this nauseous situation will be resisted as stubbornly as possible." Judge Williams, of Clayton, termed the decision "discomforting and tending to upset our procedure." He added that he was "hopeful that the escapeful way may appear." The Alabama Herald, mouthpiece of the K.K.K., editorially writes that "we are not alarmed about the Negroes on juries in this state. A legal way will be found to exclude them from jury service."

Tell How to Dodge Issue

One of the possible methods in attempting a nullification of the Supreme Court's decision is suggested by Attorney-General William McGraw of Texas, who cynically explains the lynch-threat method in vogue in his state. There, he states, "Texas statutes and the conduct of criminal trials are in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court. Generally when [Negroes are.—R. W.] drawn for service a suitable excuse is presented and always accepted. Texans have demonstrated perfect ability to control the Negro question within the Constitution." (My emphasis—R. W.)

Among local suggestions for circumventing the Scottsboro decision is the proposal that "unanimous jury verdicts be dispensed with and a law passed to permit nine members of a jury to decide criminal cases, in order to meet the situation resulting from the Scottsboro decision without running afoul of the Constitution."

A definite step to limit the number of Negro people who will be eligible to serve on juries is the recent bill introduced by Senator J. Miller Bonner of Wilcox County—a Black Belt county—which will limit eligibility to jury service of those who are "qualified electors." The purpose of this proposed legislation is contained in his explanation that "only a small percentage of the Negroes in the state are qualified electors, while under the jury law, in view of the recent Scottsboro ruling, a vastly larger number might be qualified for jury service." This bill has the support of Bibb Graves and is the form that his "remedial legislation" is taking.

On May 1st, the Senate Judiciary committee voted unanimously for a favorable report on the bill. Senator Bonner told the committee his bill would "stand up in the courts." Its prompt passage seemed assured unless an immediate protest campaign against this measure is undertaken. Senator W. O. Walton, of Chambers county, weakly opposed the bill on the ground that it might result in "unfavorable publicity for Alabama in other sections of the country." "I believe," he added, "it would be better to defeat the Bonner Bill and let jury commissioners quietly carry out Governor Graves' recent request for refilling of jury boxes. They can take care of the situation."

Report Partial Victories

Partial victories following the Scottsboro decision have already been attained in some parts of the South. In Birmingham, recently, a group of Negro women went to the Circuit Court clerk and asked that their names be put on the jury rolls. This must be recognized as a tremendous step forward in courage and militancy for the Negro people of the South. In Norfolk, Virginia, the jury commissioners were instructed to select the names of "forty representative Negro citizens" to be placed on the jury rolls of the Norfolk courts. In Harrington, Virginia, a Negro took his place on the Rockingham County Circuit Court grand jury, despite a threatening note received from the local K. K. K. On April 23rd, the Circuit Court in Spartanburg, South Carolina, issued an order instructing jury commissioners to place the names of Negroes on the rolls for Grand and petit jury service. In Mobile, Alabama, an attorney representing two Negroes accused of murdering a white storekeeper, filed a motion to quash the indictments against the accused on the ground that Negroes were excluded from the particular grand jury which indicted them and on the further ground that Negroes are systematically excluded from jury service in Mobile County. On May 1st, the Guilford Superior Court in Greensboro, North Carolina, passed the murder trial of Dr. C. C. Stewart, a Negro physician, when his attorney based a pleading on the recent decision. In counties throughout Alabama entire criminal dockets have been passed until some steps have been taken by jury commissioners.

Seek to Nullify Decision

The facts related above clearly show that every effort will be made by the ruling class to nullify the Scottsboro decision. The answer must be a greatly intensified mass campaign to force obedience to the decision. Senators Bonner's bill in Alabama, limiting qualified jurors to those who are "qualified electors" makes an immediate necessity of a campaign to enfranchise the millions of depoliticalized masses. In this struggle it is possible to draw in the white workers. Thousands of these are disfranchised by the poll-tax payment law and by the unwillingness of the ruling class to place trade-unionists on Southern juries. A step in this direction will be taken at the forthcoming All-Southern Conference for Trade Union and Civil Rights to be held at Chattanooga, Tenn., on May 26th. One of the issues of the platform of the Conference calls "For the right of all citizens, white and Negro, to vote without payment of poll tax, and abolition of all other discriminatory and coercive measures preventing the exercise of political rights." In recent weeks there has been a bill introduced to make women eligible for jury service. This bill has been blocked in committee. A campaign for making the Scottsboro decision actual should attempt to draw in the millions of women.

The magnificent victory attained in the Supreme Court calls for renewed and greater efforts to free the Scottsboro boys and to translate into actual fact the words of the opinion of the Supreme Court. But the Scottsboro decision affects not only the jury question. It raises, in addition, to a higher political level, the entire struggle for national liberation of the Negro people. Its revolutionary implications become plainer to the Negro masses of the South with each day. The decision explodes, in addition, for all time, the ruling class' vicious "Divide and Rule" poison as to Negroes' propensity for attacking white women. It signifies a tremendous step forward in the daily struggles for working-class unity in the trade and sharecropper unions and other organizations.

Free Scottsboro Boys!

The I. L. D. locally, with the support of the Communist Party, is rallying the masses in thundering protest to the Alabama Supreme Court, to Attorney-General Carmichael, and to Governor Graves, against new indictments and new trials and in a demand for the immediate, unconditional and safe release of the nine innocent boys. The demand for their safe release is an imperative one. Well-founded rumors are heard as to plans for opening the gates of Kilby Prison and of the Jefferson County Jail and delivering the boys to organized lynch mobs!

Vigilance and ceaseless and redoubled effort are now needed! The boys must be immediately freed! Complete equality in jury selection and jury service must be established!

Albany-Decatur, Ala. Daily
May 1, 1935

Leibowitz

Samuel Simon Leibowitz, who once had the effrontery to tell the New York newspapers that Morgan county citizens were tobacco chewing ignoramouses or worse, has suggested to Governor Graves that he either pardon the "Scottsboro boys" or appoint a fact-finding commission to determine whether or not the defendants in this litigation should be prosecuted further.

Be it said to the everlasting credit of Governor Graves that Samuel Simon Leibowitz had to make his amazing propsal by letter since the Alabama governor was too busy to listen in person to such tom-foolery.

Since when did Alabamians need the advice of a New York lawyer on how to operate their law courts? Since when did it become necessary for a New York attorney to tell us when to substitute fact-finding commissions for the jury system in this state?

Leibowitz may have a poor opinion of the intelligence of the people of Alabama, but The Daily assures him they have too much sense to take advice from him in any shape, fashion or form.

Leibowitz makes an appeal to prejudice, shedding crocodile tears over the fact that the International Labor Defense is using the Scottsboro case to raise funds for defense of the accused negroes.

He says the ILD seeks to tear down our system of government but when did Leibowitz first discover the connection of the ILD with the Scottsboro defense? Certainly he knew it at the time of the first Scottsboro trials here. He served with attorneys representing that organization and we do not know of him declining their legal help or advice.

Leibowitz prates of the "unbiased" opinion of the newspaper reporters covering the Scottsboro trials here. Does he include in the list of "unbiased" ones the noted Jack Spivack, whose name appeared in the ILD news sheets as author of articles on the Scottsboro case?

Leibowitz says he is willing to submit the case to a fact-finding commission. All of those who are willing to take the defender of Vincent Coll and other New York gangsters at his word have the privilege of standing on their heads to show their credulity.

Leibowitz says the United States supreme court has twice reversed the Scottsboro cases. No one disputes that statement, but Leibowitz does not explain that not once has the United States supreme court reversed the cases because of lack of evidence of guilt.

On one occasion the cases were reversed on the grounds the defendants did not have adequate counsel. On the second occasion they reversed the cases on the plea that negroes had been excluded from the jury lists of Jackson and Morgan counties.

The supreme court did not explain either that there never had been a negro as a member of the nation's highest tribunal but emphasized the declaration that there had been no negroes on Jackson or Morgan juries in a generation.

Leibowitz expresses much concern over the "expense" to Alabama of continued prosecution of the Scottsboro cases. Where, may we ask, was Leibowitz's concern about the cost to Alabama taxpayers when he summoned witness after witness in an effort to uphold his pleadings here and once threatened to summon all of the people on the Jackson county jury lists to show that they were not negroes.

As this is written, Governor Graves has made no public statement in reply to the egotistical and unwanted suggestions of Samuel Simon Leibowitz.

If the governor deigns to reply at all, The Daily trusts that his reply will be confined to a terse invitation to accept residence in a region said to possess the warmest climate in the universe.

Pathfinder
Washington, D. C.
APR 20 1935

Scottsboro Case Likely to Reopen

In spite of the fact that the United States Supreme Court has twice set aside death sentences for two of the defendants in the long-fought Scottsboro cases involving nine Negro youths, Alabama officials are said to be determined to prosecute them to the end. However, the four-year legal fight must begin all over because the Supreme Court has ruled that the Negroes had been deprived of their constitutional rights due to systematic barring of Negroes from jury duty. The probable procedure now with the addition of Negroes to the jury rolls will be new indictments and new trials for all of the defendants, eight of whom have previously been sentenced to death for their alleged assault of two white girl "hoboes" on a freight train. The case of the ninth is still pending before the juvenile court.

Some Southern law enforcement officials see the Supreme Court decision in these cases as a "body blow" which may have far-reaching effect in the South. The fact that Negro jury duty is virtually unknown in Southern state courts, however, is no reason for such fears. Negroes serve on juries in other sections of the country and so far there has been no widespread complaint of their actions. As a matter of fact, there are no laws in Southern states barring Negroes from jury duty. It is only due to long established custom that few of them are called for such duty.

Even in those Southern states where Negroes are sometimes drawn for such service they themselves nearly always present suitable excuses which are generally accepted. Some Southerners also point out that one of the main reasons Negroes are not seen on juries he sun, the first fact to be learned oncerned the way in which the temperature varies at different heights. Up to the base of the stratosphere (about 10 miles) it drops rapidly, going ower than 100 degrees below zero, ut from there on up to a certain point he change is much less marked. Then t a higher level the temperature reerses its previous trend and begins o rise, ultimately attaining summer eat or greater. Above this zone, how-

Norris, Patterson May Leave Kilby

Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, two of the negro Scottsboro case defendants, who have been confined at Kilby Prison since they were sentenced to death following their respective convictions in the Morgan Circuit Court at Decatur, which judgments were recently reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States—will probably be transferred to the Jefferson County Jail at Birmingham where their co-defendants are now being held, within the next few days, and will remain there pending retrial.

Representing Osmond K. Fraenkel, of New York, retained as counsel for the negroes by the International Labor Defense, C. B. Powell, Birmingham attorney, yesterday called on Atty.-Gen. Albert A. Carmichael and Lieut.-Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., special prosecutor for the State in the Scottsboro cases—and stating that as a matter of right, since the decision of the United States Supreme Court, Patterson and Norris are entitled to be removed from death cells at Kilby, to some other place of confinement to await retrial, proposed the removal of the prisoners to the Jefferson County Jail.

The attorney-general and the lieutenant-governor took the view that the matter is one that addresses itself to the courts, but told Mr. Powell so far as they were concerned, they had no objection to Patterson and Norris being transferred to the jail in Birmingham where the other defendants are confined. At the request of the attorney, they thereafter signed a statement to that effect. This statement, it is understood, will be presented without delay by Mr. Powell, to either Judge W. W. Callahan at Decatur or Judge A. E. Hawkins at Scottsboro, with a petition for issuance of the necessary transfer order.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5030

Smithfield, N. C. Herald
April 9, 1935

EDUCATION IS THE ANSWER

Some Southerners are somewhat disturbed over the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Scottsboro case in Alabama, as a result of which negroes are now eligible to serve on juries. Newspaper comment has brought out, as a matter of fact, that already in some Southern states the names of negro jurors are drawn, but they are rejected in court. The Supreme court decision has served to bring the question of negro participation in governmental affairs again to public attention—a question that will continue to persist until an answer is found.

No further away than our state capital is an instance of another phase of the negro question. The News and Observer concedes that the city manager form of government recently voted upon in Raleigh was defeated by the negro vote which was controlled by opponents of the city manager plan and the newspaper expresses the opinion that the negroes hold the balance of power in the forthcoming city election.

Education is the answer to the negro question. With the probability of negroes figuring more largely in public affairs in the future, the negroes need to be taught to do their own thinking and voting rather than to follow blindly the dictates of ward heelers. It was not amiss then that Governor Ehringhaus appoint, as he did last June, a commission of one hundred, half of whom were white leaders and half negroes, for the purpose of studying negro education. The report of the commission is just off the press, and a statement concerning the eight major findings of the commission, by one of the negro members quoted in the foreword fits not only the negro educational situation but the negro political situation as well.

The statement is as follows:

"We realize that these problems cannot be solved by waving a magic wand. We believe, however, that scientific study will furnish the facts as a basis on which intelligent plans can be formulated for their adequate solution in a reasonable length of time by the establishment of the logical succession of objectives and approximate time for their attainment."

Nashville, Tenn., Tennessean
April 5, 1935

The Scottsboro Decision.

The decision in the Scottsboro case was the first in recent years in which the United States Supreme Court upheld the right of negroes to sit in juries.

It is not, however, the first time the court has ruled that deliberate denial of jury places to negroes in trials of negro defendants is a violation of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

The decision in the case of Neal versus Delaware in 1880, is often quoted. The court ruled that the fact that no negro had ever sat on a Delaware jury although about 15 per cent of the population of the state was negro, presented a prima facie case of denial of the constitutional right of equal protection of the law. It was held to have been a "violent presumption" on the part of the state court that exclusion of negroes over many years had been solely because the whole negro race in the state was unfit for jury service.

In the Scottsboro case the court set aside the conviction and death sentence of two negroes, ruling that the indictments on which they were tried were invalid because negroes had been systematically barred from jury rolls in Jackson County, Alabama.

It does not seem probable that the recent decision, any more than did that of 1880, will result in any far-reaching changes in judicial procedure in the Southern states, or in any other section of the country, for that matter. It might cause the retrial of a case now and then, but as a general thing even this might be prevented by the administration of fair and impartial justice for the negro in the courts.

The fact that Judge Horton, presiding at the second trial of one of the Scottsboro defendants, with a change of venue to Decatur, Morgan County, set aside a verdict of guilty as contrary to the weight of the evidence, added to the doubt, already existing that fair and impartial justice was being meted to these negro defendants and strengthened the feeling that race prejudice was playing a major part in the case. The meddling by lawyers from the North was justly resented, yet when the courts of the South establish a reputation for giving to the negro defendant the brand of justice to which any defendant is entitled, there will be no excuse for meddling lawyers from the North, there will be no widespread demand for negro jurors, and trials can proceed with little likelihood that the verdict will be challenged because of all-white juries.

The case emphasizes the responsibility of courts, staffed throughout with white men and operating under laws of white men toward the negroes who are brought into them. Race prejudice has no place in a courtroom and it is within the province of any court of justice to keep it out.

Columbus, Miss. Dispatch
April 9, 1935

COME TO MISSISSIPPI

ALABAMA ought to come over to Mississippi and get some points on constitutional provisions for jury service.

If Alabama had done this, the State wouldn't be in a mess about the Scottsboro case.

The Supreme Court of the U. S. holds that negroes must be permitted to serve on juries in Alabama, and Governor Bibb Graves has issued a statement instructing all courts to see that the mandate of the high court is carried out.

Negroes in Mississippi are permitted to serve on juries on certain conditions.

The first provision is that they must be qualified electors, and to qualify as electors they must pay poll taxes, be able to read and write, and understand any section of the Constitution.

Next the Boards of Supervisors are permitted to use their discretion in putting electors in the jury panels, selecting those who in their judgment are good and substantial citizens of the community.

These provisions of the Mississippi constitution have been upheld and sustained by the Supreme Court.

If Alabama had patterned after Mississippi organic law—law that has stood the test of the courts—the State today wouldn't be having trouble with the Scottsboro case.

After all, the question involved in the Scottsboro case should be whether or not they had a fair trial and whether they were convicted on the evidence in the case.

This regardless of whether white men, negroes or Chinamen served on the trial jury.

Scottsboro, Ala., Sentinel
April 4, 1935

A COSTLY CASE

(By Fred H. Gormley in Montgomery Journal)

Alabama was brought face to face with a big problem and found relief from another as a result of decisions of the United States supreme court Monday. The big problem involves the right of negroes to serve on juries in Alabama and the relief came when the United States supreme court held that the democratic party can hold primaries exclusively for white democratic voters.

In granting new trials to Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris negroes involved in the notorious Scottsboro cases, the United States supreme court indicated that indictments against the negroes must be quashed because negroes were "systematically" excluded from the juries of Jackson county, where indictments charging the negroes with attacking two white women, were returned.

Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., who represented the state at the trials and in the United States supreme court, when the appeals were submitted, and Albert A. Carmichael, attorney general, offered no extensive comment pending receipt of the text of the supreme court's opinion. However, every indication is that the indictments must be thrown out of court and other true bills returned by a grand jury, from which negroes have not been "systematically" excluded.

The serious question now is whether the state will care to bring the negroes to trial again under the new rules established by the United States supreme court. And its decision must be construed as establishing new rules because it said, in effect, that negroes must be on the jury rolls and subject to call for jury service in Jackson county before valid indictments can be returned the negroes.

Thousands Spent in Trials

Alabama's contention was that negroes were not systematically excluded from jury service in any county, especially Jackson, and that a jury commission made careful investigation of the qualifications of all persons brought to its attention. The supreme court seems not to have been impressed with this contention. Reports from Washington indicate that the chief reason for ordering another trial was the non-appearance of the names of negroes on the jury roll.

Alabama has spent thousands of dollars in the trial of the negroes. Jackson county is almost bankrupt as a result of these cases. A bill will be introduced in the legislature at the summer session for an appropriation from the state treasury to reimburse the county. Citizens of Jackson contend that the state and not Jackson county should bear the burden since the problem is a state one and the crime had its setting by accident in Jackson county. If the train carrying the negroes and two white women had gone a few miles farther the burden would have been placd on Madison county.

NEW YORK TIMES

APR 2 1935

JUSTICE FOR NEGROES.

It is more than four years since the case of the Negro boys condemned to death at Scottsboro began to trouble the consciences of Americans in all parts of the country. It is not necessary now to recall all the circumstances of the trial. Its conduct and some of the evidence admitted were of a sort to make many doubt the real guilt of the accused, but far more important than this was the growing conviction that they had been denied their constitutional rights and made the victims of race prejudice. Largely on this ground the case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, which held that the constitutional point was well taken—namely, that the defendants had not had full opportunity to obtain counsel. For this reason the original verdict was set aside and a new trial ordered. That was had in due time, the same verdict was reached and another appeal was taken to the Supreme Court. Yesterday it ruled that Negroes had been systematically excluded from the jury, so that the defendants are entitled to a new trial, which the court ordered. Chief Justice HUGHES said that there was no disagreement on the point at issue. It was that, when the evidence showed that Negroes eligible to jury duty were regularly excluded, the trial was vitiated in the constitutional sense and the verdict would not be allowed to stand.

This judgment shows that the highest court in the land is anxious to secure and protect the rights of the humblest citizen. The case originally seemed of comparatively little importance. But with the lapse of years it has taken on the proportions of a celebrated cause. The test under which the Supreme Court was placed has been trying, but the judges have met it in the finest tradition of judicial independence and integrity. They have showed that their love of justice extends to the smallest as well as the greatest. The records which they have made in this case cannot fail deeply to impress the whole country. People may well hope to be spared a renewal of the original proceedings in the lower court. Might not the Governor of the State find sufficient reasons in what has already taken place for issuing a pardon in order to do substantial justice and at the same time free the courts from the duty of going on with a case which has become a public symbol of the mischief that may be wrought when prejudice is allowed to invade the place dedicated to impartial justice?

Sheffield, Ala., Daily
April 6, 1935

An Opportunity To Improve Their Race

From all appearances the time is drawing near when negroes will be granted the privilege of serving on juries in Alabama, outside of the federal courts where they have had that privilege for years, as a result of the United States supreme court's latest decision in the Scottsboro case.

This transformation from an old procedure in Alabama to a new one is a chance for the negro to make a better and more useful citizen, if the members of such race sitting on juries do their duty properly, or it is a chance for them to become involved in a new racial issue if they do not.

Let us hope that radical members of both races, with respect to racial issues, will be barred in this respect and that the new arrangement will work for amity and understanding, even better than that which now prevails in the state, despite all of the agitation which has been fostered in the four corners of the nation in recent years to the contrary.

Governor Bibb Graves does well to call to the attention of the judges and solicitors of the state that the practice of "systematically excluding" negroes from jury service in the state is a thing of the past if we are to live up to the letter and spirit of the supreme court ruling, interpreting the federal constitution.

Rather than attempt to effect new restrictions to nullify the effect of the high tribunal's ruling it will be better for us to adhere to the federal constitution and attempt to educate the negro into a better citizenship that will enable him to properly perform the important duties which go hand in hand with jury service.

Suffolk, Va., News-Herald
April 2, 1935

"THE SCOTTSBORO CASE"

The United States Supreme Court yesterday did the expected when it ordered a new trial for a group of Negroes, two of whom had been condemned to death on the charge of assaulting a white woman hobo traveling with them and her companion in a box car in Alabama. Both women accused the Negroes of attacking them, but one later confessed that it was false, repudiating the charge.

These ignorant black boys never had a ghost of a show for justice after a certain organization with headquarters in New York sent a "Yankee" lawyer down into Alabama to defend them. If this same organization had had the good sense to employ a local attorney to defend them there would have been no outcry and a just verdict would have been reached.

It was utterly impossible to give these Negroes a fair and impartial trial in the atmosphere prevailing at Scottsboro at the time their cases were called. The jury was so prejudiced that the members could not see any extenuating circumstances even if these white women deliberately herded themselves with blacks.

They may be guilty as charged and if so ever, following the precedent of the Delaever should be punished, but the death penalty is ware case of fifty-odd years ago, that an too extreme in this case. If given a trial in examination of the facts shows that in another community they will receive a just tual practice negroes have not served on verdict whether it be conviction or acquittal. Alabama juries."

Hickory, N. C. Record
April 3, 1935.

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

The United States Supreme court has again brought the famous Scottsboro case before the public, and the doomed negro defendants have been given a new trial because the high tribunal holds that whereas Alabama does not permit negroes to serve as jurors the accused have been denied their constitutional rights.

Theoretically, of course, it would be impossible to argue that this isn't ground for setting aside the Alabama verdict. Actually and viewed from a practical standpoint we all know that it is an extremely flimsy excuse.

The Record believes that probably even Supreme court justices are sometimes forced to avail themselves of technicalities when they become convinced that justice has miscarried and yet may not have adequate grounds upon which to announce such an opinion.

It has never seemed to us that the negroes who were charged with criminal assaults on two white women were guilty in the usual sense of such a grave charge. The questionable character of the white women and the circumstances which may have invited the alleged crime, are too generally known to need repeating—but certainly it is highly unfortunate that the South has been given so much notoriety over a racial issue wherein the decision of the lower court is not better supported.

We are hearing much concerning the effect of the decision as it will apply to the general practice by which negroes are denied the right to serve as jurors. It is not likely that this will have any far-reaching or significant results, The Record believes, and particularly it will not if we are correct in our inference that the high court fell back on the technical excuse because of necessity.

The Asheville Citizen recalls that "So far as the law itself is concerned, the court's decision does not appear to have broken any new ground. As long ago as 1880, in a Delaware case, the Supreme Court had held that deliberate denial of jury places to negroes in trials of negro defendants was a violation of constitutional rights where there were negroes who might have done jury service. There is nothing in the Alabama laws, it is stated, to prevent the service of negroes on juries. The Supreme Court has held, how-

We have no way of knowing how generally negroes are permitted to serve on juries throughout the North, but we do know that most states throughout the entire nation manage in some way to have only white men and women impaneled as jurors.

It seems evident to us, that it was something more than the "constitutional rights of negroes to serve as jurors" which caused the Supreme Court to set aside the verdict of the Alabama court. We recall too vividly the fact that two years ago the trial judge had the temerity to set aside a verdict of guilty by a jury in the case of one of the Scottsboro defendants, because he was convinced that the weight of the evidence did not justify such a decision. He was defeated in the Democratic primary which followed and there was everytice was demanding the conviction of the evidence that prejudice rather than jus negroes.

Lynchings - 1935

Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

5031

Florence, Ala., Herald
January 11, 1935

The Supreme Court of the United States has agreed to review the cases of Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, Negroes under sentence of death in the famous Scottsboro case, whose execution had been set for February 8.

Scottsboro Rally Blocked In Birmingham

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 17.—A Scottsboro mass meeting was blocked yesterday afternoon by Birmingham police, whose squad cars and motorcycle battalions gathered before the C. M. E. (Negro) Church at 14th Street and Avenue C, where the meeting was to be held.

Negro and white workers, climbing the hill at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, were met by policemen whose principal object was to arrest the speakers and disrupt the protest rally, arranged by the local Scottsboro-Herndon Action Committee.

At the last moment, the pastor of the church, Rev. Gropm, realizing that the lynch rulers were opposed to any action in defense of the Scottsboro boys, refused to permit the meeting to be carried through when the workers, undeterred by the police terror, prepared to open the meeting.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.
TELEGRAM
JAN 9 1935

THE LAW STILL SHELTERS

ONCE more the United States Supreme Court has reminded Ajabama and other states that Negroes as well as whites are entitled to fair trial.

Nearly four years ago nine Negro boys, one only 13 years old, were captured and thrown into an Alabama jail. There have been trials, mistrials and retrials.

With a threatening mob standing in the Scottsboro courtyard, the eight older boys were found guilty and sentenced to death. The United States Supreme Court reversed the conviction, saying that the defendants had been denied "due process."

New trials were held and two of the boys were convicted again. Their lawyers again appealed, and again the high tribunal has assumed jurisdiction, promising to review defense charges that the boys were tried unfairly, amid hostile surroundings, before a prejudiced court, and by a jury from which Negro citizens were excluded.

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES
JAN 9 1935

In Defense of the Humble.

In the decision of the United States Supreme Court to review for the second time the findings of the Alabama courts in what has come to be known as the Scottsboro case, the Constitution is seen functioning at its best in the protection of the rights of even the humblest of citizens. The right to "due process of law" in all matters affecting life and property is guaranteed by the Constitution to everyone.

At the time of the court's first intervenion two years ago it ordered new trials for the seven Negroes condemned to death on charges of attacking two white women. At present two of these defendants are again under sentence of death as a result of their second trials while the five others have yet to be tried. In reaching the decision for new trials in the first review of the cases the court did not at all pronounce upon the question of innocence or guilt, but ruled that ordinary methods of fair trial had not been followed in the Alabama State courts and that a new trial must therefore be granted.

Allegations have again been made that the rights of the defendants had been infringed by the courts of Alabama; that in violation of the Constitutional rights of fair trial they were placed on trial in an atmosphere and community that was decidedly hostile, where appeals had been made to race prejudice and Negroes were denied the right of service on juries.

The decision of the Supreme Court to review the case a second time means that the execution of the sentences on the two found guilty will be suspended until the arguments in the case have been heard. In accepting the responsibility of determining the fairness of the second trial the court once more stands forth as a defender of the humblest.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
JAN 10 1935

Behind the Scottsboro Case

In reviewing death sentences against the two Scottsboro Negroes, the Supreme Court of the United States will also be reviewing the whole judicial apparatus of the South as it is used for day-to-day repression of Negro rights.

Patterson and Norris, sentenced to die on February 8, are Negroes tried for rape by a jury drawn from a panel from which all Negroes were systematically excluded.

Exclusion of Negroes from jury panels is certainly a denial of the "equal protection of the laws" granted to all in the Fourteenth amendment. It is a violation of the right of any man to be tried by "a jury of his peers" and a violation of the right of Negro citizens to serve on juries as clearly laid down in the Fifteenth amendment.

The Supreme Court has held several times that exclusion of Negroes from jury lists was a violation of the Constitution. Except in the specific cases on which the court has ruled, however, most Southern States have continued the practice.

Exclusion made the conviction of the Scottsboro defendants just so much easier. But exclusion is constantly used for repression of the Negro in thousands of civil and criminal cases which don't make the front pages.

We shall see the workings of that machine exposed as the Supreme Court reviews the Scottsboro case. Americans will expect the high court to take positive action for democracy.

HAMMOND, I
TIMES
JAN 9 1935

THE LAW STILL SHELTERS

Once more the U. S. Supreme court has reminded Alabama and other states that Negroes as well as whites are entitled to fair trial.

Nearly four years ago, nine Negro boys, one only 13 years old, were captured and thrown into an Alabama jail. There have been trials, mistrials and retrials. With a threatening mob standing in the Scottsboro courtyard, the eight older boys were found guilty and sentenced to death. The U. S. Supreme court reversed the conviction, saying that the defendants had been denied "due process."

New trials were held and two of the boys were convicted again. Their lawyers again appealed, and again the high tribunal has assumed jurisdiction, promising to review defense charges that the boys were tred unfairly, amid hostile surroundings, before a prejudiced court, and by a jury from which Negro citizens were excluded.

Demand Boys' Release

THE hearing, now taking place in the United States Supreme Court, on the appeals against the Scottsboro lynch verdicts, occurs at a time of rising fascist reaction in this country, of widespread fascist plots to suppress the civil liberties and rights of the working class and the oppressed Negro people.

In this situation there is the greatest need for the vigilance of all friends of the Scottsboro boys. The desperate attempt of the American ruling class to carry through the legal lynching of these innocent Negro lads is part and parcel of the general drive against the working class and the Negro masses, aimed at forcing down our living standards, perpetuating the jim-crow oppression of the Negro people and smashing the growing unity of Negro and white workers.

Every workers' organization, every opponent of fascism, every friend of the Negro people should flood the U. S. Supreme Court, Washington, D. C., with protests against the lynch frame-up of the Scottsboro boys, and demands for the reversal of the death sentences against Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, for the unconditional release of all nine of the innocent Scottsboro boys! Funds to aid the appeal should be rushed at once to the International Labor Defense, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

Scottsboro Verdict Affects the Basic Rights of Negroes

By HARRY HAYWOOD

The decision of the U. S. Supreme Court to review the cases of Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris brings sharply before that court the burning question of jury rights for the Negro people.

The white ruling-class says to the Negroes: "You are not fit to take part in political life. You may not vote. You may not hold office. You may not sit on juries. White men may sit in judgment on you, but you may not sit in judgment on either white men or members of your own race." This denial of the fundamental right to sit on juries has become, along with the denial of the right to vote, the symbol of the political status of the Negro people, particularly in the South.

The first appeal of the Scottsboro boys to the Supreme Court also raised the jury question. But the court managed to side-step that particular issue, although it was forced by the world-wide outcry against the Scottsboro frame-up to reverse the lynch-decision against the boys.

The basic issue raised in the second Scottsboro appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court is precisely this question of the right of the Negro people to serve on juries. The International Labor Defense demands that the verdicts against Patterson and Norris be reversed, and gives as its basic argument the fact that there was not a single Negro on the jury that convicted them, or on the grand jury that indicted them, and that the barring of Negroes from juries in that county is a systematic practice.

The Supreme Court must now answer this question, and it must be made to give the right answer. It must be made to reverse the death sentences against the boys, and it must be forced to admit the constitutional right of the Negro people to serve on juries. It can be made to give the right answers by the storm of protest from every corner of world.

Thus, with the decision on the Scottsboro case, there is bound up the most fundamental rights of the Negro people. Such a fight deserves the heartiest support and cooperation of every Negro, of every militant white worker, of every honest intellectual. To continue the fight, to lay the necessary papers before the Supreme Court, funds are urgently needed. Rush these funds to the International Labor Defense, Room 610, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

'Scottsboro Cases' Draw Knight East

Lieut. Gov. Knight, appointed by Atty. Gen. Carmichael as special prosecutor of the "Scottsboro cases," has gone to Washington to present an oral argument on behalf of the State, before the Supreme Court of the United States in support of action of Alabama's courts in the conviction of Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, two of the seven negro defendants concerned, and the subsequent affirming of the judgments. No definite date has been set for the submission of arguments before the Nation's highest tribunal, but it is understood they will be heard by the court some time this week.

Appeals now pending before the U. S. Supreme Court are from Patterson's third and Norris' second conviction of criminally assaulting two young white women on board a moving freight train, near Paint Rock, Jackson County, in the Spring of 1931. The appeals were in the form of applications for certiorari, seeking review of the cases on the insistence by defense lawyers that the negroes had been deprived of their constitutional rights because negroes were systematically and arbitrarily excluded from the jury rolls from which jurors were chosen for their respective trials.

The high court granted the reviewal and arguments are now to be presented by Liut. Gov. Knight and defense attorneys for and against, respectively, sustaining of the judgments of conviction. As Attorney General Lieut. Gov Knight personally directed prosecution of the "Scottsboro cases" in both trial and appellate courts.

Scottsboro Appeal Set For Argument

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.— (AP)— The appeals of two negroes sentenced to die in the "Scottsboro case" were docketed by the Supreme Court for argument tomorrow.

The review was granted on a contention the boys, Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, were denied constitutional rights by exclusion of negroes from the State juries which tried them for an attack upon two white girls aboard a freight train near Scottsboro, Ala.

Tommy Knight, Alabama lieutenant governor who as State attorney general prosecuted the cases, has been designated by Governor Graves of Alabama to represent the State before the Supreme Court. H was expected to contend negroes were not excluded from the juries.

Supreme Court Hears Scottsboro Arguments

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—(AP)—The supreme court was told today the negroes condemned in the Scottsboro case" were denied their constitutional right in the exclusion of negroes from juries which tried them.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, attorney for the men, Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, said "no negroes in the memory of man, ever served on a jury in Jackson county," Alabama, where the negroes were convicted.

He cited testimony by old county citizens in an effort to substantiate his statement. Leibowitz offered the jury roll as evidence of his charge that the names of negroes were added after the roll was closed.

Tommy Knight, Alabama lieutenant governor, appeared by special appointment of Governor Graves to represent Alabama.

Atty. Liebowitz Makes Brilliant Plea Before U. S. Supreme Court

Scottsboro Case Argued Before Highest Court On Friday, Feb. 15

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Before the United States Supreme Court here, February 15, Samuel S. Leibowitz, attorney for Clarence Norris, one of the Scottsboro boys, charged that his defendant, as well as Haywood Patterson, whose case is also before the Court, had been denied their constitutional rights because of their race. The brilliant criminal lawyer, supported by the American Scottsboro Committee, Inc., proved to the judges by unanswerable evidence that the names of six Negroes had been forged upon the jury rolls to defeat his motion to quash and cancel the indictment of the Scottsbor boys. Attorney Leibowitz exhibited a huge book containing the jury rolls of Jackson County, Ala., which excited keen interest from all the judges and showed where the six names of Negroes had been fradulently written in on top of red lines drawn before hand to close the list of names. The attorney was questioned by the justices, and told them that Negroes had been excluded from all right of jury service in Jackson County since the memory of man. He reviewed testimony and other evidence which he had presented to both Judge Horton at the first trial and Judge Callahan at the second trial at Decatur, Ala., to support motions for them to dismiss the indictments against the boys. The motions were denied.

In his argument about the fraudulent names in the book, Leibowitz pointed out, in addition, the difference in color of the ink, in the handwrtng and blurring of letters across dates previously written in; and the fallure of the record to show that these six Negroes had ever been called for jury service. He further stated that the book of jury rolls had been refused them at the first trial in Decatur, but was offered "with alacrity" in court at the second trial about nine months later.

By his ease of manner and mastery of the case the attorney made a marked impression upon the court which was commented upon by several prominent lawyers who witnessed the hearing.

Upon invitation of Attorney Leibowitz, Attorney Walter H. Pollack presented a brief argument on some of the points of constitutional law involved. General George W. Chamlee of Chattanooga, Tenn., the original attorney in the case, was present to assist Attorney Leibowitz.

Representing the American Scottsboro Committee at the hearing, Dr. George E. Haynes, the committee's Executive Vice-Chairman, stated, "Those who believe in justice and freedom for the Scottsboro boys should take hope for a favorable verdict if the brilliant, masterly presentation such as Attorney Samuel S. Leibowitz made for the constitutional rights of these boys is to weigh in the matter as it is now before the highest tribunal of our land. His powerful plea for the rights of Negro citizens to sit on grand and petit juries an dhis vivid presentation of the denial of that right in the Scottsboro case was a master stroke for Negroes rights, and certainly a complete answer to any who have doubted his ability to defend these boys before the U. S. Supreme Court. The American Scottsboro Committee supports Mr. Leibowitz to the end in bringing justice and freedom to every boy in the case."

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama.

5832

Lag Hurts Scottsboro Fund Drive

Only $220.78 received by the International Labor Defense Monday and Tuesday, although $8,629.26 more urgently is needed for the appeals.

"I cannot sit by and allow the loss of the Scottsboro boys and Angelo Herndon. I remember Sacco and Vanzetti," a New Hampshire farmer writes the International Labor Defense. "Have already contributed five dollars previously.

"Enclosed find $5.33 collected from several Finnish lumberjacks, a farmer, a road foreman, a house-worker, the Marlow Unit of the Communist Party, and my family and myself.

"As a member of the National Grange, the Executive Committee of the New England United Farmers Protective Association, and the Communist Party, U. S. A. it is my duty to help along in the great work of freeing the Scottsboro boys, Angelo Herndon, and other class-war prisoners.

LEWIS W. FENNER"

Funds urgently needed for the Scottsboro and Herndon appeals in the United States Supreme Court should be rushed to the national office of the International Labor Defense, Room 610, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

Scottsboro Quota Set By Denver

By George Kaplan

Denver District Secretary, International Labor Defense.

The Denver district has decided to raise its quota for the Scottsboro-Herndon Defense Fund from the fifty dollars suggested by the National Executive Committee, to one hundred dollars, and has pledged to raise this sum immediately.

We will raise this money through mobilization of every organization sympathetic to the cause of the freedom of the Scottsboro boys and Angelo Herndon, especially through the actions of our branches over four Rocky Mountain states.

Our district challenges every other district of the International Labor Defense to double its quota, and fulfill the increased pledge, for Scottsboro-Herndon defense.

Funds urgently needed to carry through the United States Supreme Court appeals in the Scottsboro and Herndon cases should be rushed by air mail to the national office of the International Labor Defense, Room 610, 80 East 11th St., New York City.

Women Aid Scottsboro Fund Drive

How funds are being collected for the Scottsboro-Herndon defense in New York is illustrated by this letter received Friday by the International Labor Defense:

Dear Friends:

I submit herewith $10, which was collected at a house party given at the home of Mrs. Weinstock, 740 Sutter Ave., Brooklyn.

The women who contributed the funds have had no previous contact with this sort of work. When the case was explained to them, they saw immediately the importance and justice of your work.

Sincerely,
A SYMPATHIZER

Funds urgently needed to carry the Scottsboro and Herndon appeals through the United States Supreme Court should be rushed to the national office of the International Labor Defense, Room 610, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

Scottsboro Appeal Made In France

PARIS, France, Jan. 27. — Two petitions for the freedom of Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, the two Scottsboro boys whose cases are now before the U. S. Supreme Court, have been circulated here by the Committee to Save the Scottsboro Boys and signed by many nationally known figures.

The Committee announces that it is asking Sinclair Lewis, famous American writer, to take one of these appeals in person to President Roosevelt.

Included in the list are the names of G. Monnerville, depty from Guiana; Gustave Charpentier, member of the French Institute; Henry Torres, deputy from the Maritime Alps; Victor Basch, Honorary Professor at the Sorbonne and president of the League for Human Rights; Hadamard, member of the French Institute and professor at the College of France; Guignebert, professor at the Sorbonne, and the writers Romaine Rolland and Andre Gide.

A second petition, which has been transmitted to the U. S. authorities by the French Scottsboro Committee, is signed by Leon Jouhaux, general secretary of the Federation of Labor; Gabriel Cudenet, president of the Radical Socialist Party "Camille Pelletan," Albert Reyal, secretary of the National Union of Co-operative Groups; R. Goehringer, general secretary of the Republican Youth; Emile Farinet, federal secretary of the Seine Federation of the Socialist Party; Jacques Duclos, secretary of the Communist Party of France; Raymond Guyot, secretary of the Young Communist League; Fred Zeller, federal secretary of the Seine Federation of the Young Socialists; Bernard Lecache, president of the League Against Anti-Semitism; Imache, editor of the "North-African Star;" Cordier, secretary of the French International Labor Defense; J. Barnes, secretary of the Teachers Union; Semard, secretary of the Federation of Railway Workers; Mansouri, president of the League for the Defense of Algerian Muselmans; Dadot, secretary of the Union of Civil Service Employes, and many others.

Albany-Decatur, Ala. Daily
January 24, 1935

Knight As Prosecutor

Having noted with pleasure the splendid manner in which former Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, Jr., conducted the prosecution of the Scottsboro case and the high level to which he kept his conduct of the case at all times, it is with unusual gratification that friends here received news of his appointment as special prosecutor.

Attorney General Albert Carmichael made the announcement, paying a deserved tribute to the work Mr. Knight had done previously in the cases and explaining that since he already had gone so far with them it was nothing but good judgment to permit him to continue the task he had undertaken.

Mr. Knight's many North Alabama friends applaud the comment of the Montgomery Advertiser, which says of the appointment:

"The Advertiser hastens to congratulate Attorney-General Albert A. Carmichael upon the wisdom and rightness of his decision in appointing Thomas E. Knight, Jr., his predecessor as Attorney-General, to conduct future trals arising from the infamous 'Scottsboro cases.'

"This action by Attorney-General Carmichael should be immensely pleasing to Alabamians. It is not only poetic justice, it is good sense. It is sound patriotism.

"No other living Alabamian knows as much about these cases as our new Lieutenant-Governor. No other Alabamian would have it in him to put more of conscience, sense and patience into the trial of these cases than Tommy Knight.

"Since the outer world has chosen to make an issue of Knight, the only fair and decent thing for the State of Alabama to do is to throw Knight back into the teeth of all vilifiers of this commonwealth.

"If Knight were a cheap blatherskite, instead of an honest, able lawyer ,it would be different. But Knight has been conscientious about the Scottsboro mess, he has been dignified, he has been clean, and yet he has suffered at the hands of outsiders who vilified him unscrupulously and made him the symbol of a lost and degraded civilization, whereas the young man is controlled only by a sense of honor as a lawyer and a sense of decency as a patriot.

"Bravo, Carmichael Step on it, Tommy!

Eufaula, Ala. Tribune
January 24, 1935

KNIGHT IS APPOINTED

That was a fine move Attorney General Carmichael made when he requested former Attorney General Thomas E. Knight to continue prosecution of the noted Scottsboro cases. Mr. Knight knows these cases and he knows how to handle them and his selection is an ideal one.

Commenting on the appointment, The Montgomery Advertiser remarks:

The Advertiser hastens to congratulate Attorney-General Albert A. Carmichael upon the wisdom and rightness of his decision in appointing Thomas E. Knight, jr., his predecessor as attorney-general, to conduct future trials arising from the infamous "Scottsboro cases."

This action by Attorney-General Carmichael should be immensely pleasing to Alabamians. It is not only poetic justice, it is good sense. It is sound patriotism.

No other living Alabamian knows as much about these cases as our new lieutenant-governor. No other Alabamian would have it in him to put more of conscience, sense and patience into the trial of these cases than Tommy Knight.

Since the outer world has chosen to make an issue of Knight, the only fair and decent thing for the state of Alabama to do is throw Knight back into the teeth of all vilifers of this commonwealth.

If Knight were a cheap blatherskite, instead of an honest, able lawyer, it would be different. But Knight has been conscientious about the Scottsboro mess, he has been dignified, he has been clean, and yet he has suffered at the hands of outsiders who vilified him unscrupulously and made him the symbol of a lost and degraded civilization, whereas the young man is controlled only by a sense of honor as a lawyer and a sense of decency as a patriot.

Bravo, Carmichael! Step on it, Tommy!

SCOTTSBORO APPEALS IN HIGH COURT SOON

Amsterdam News Lies About I.L.D.—The Role of Leibowitz in Norris Appeal

By Benjamin J. Davis, Jr.

The appeals of Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, two of the nine innocent Scottsboro boys, will be argued in the United States Supreme Court this week or early in the week of February 17.

Despite the fact that the broadest united front is necessary at this crucial moment to force a reversal of the death sentences handed down by the lynch courts of Alabama, all of those forces which have for the last four months attempted to divide and weaken the Scottsboro defense continue their disruptive activities. The broadcasting station for these forces has been the unprincipled "Amsterdam News," Negro reformist newspaper published in Harlem and owned by William H. (Kid) Davis.

The February 9th issue of the Amsterdam News carries the following headline: "I. L. D. QUITS AS SCOTTSBORO LAD PICKS LEIBOWITZ." Following this headline is an article which says, among other things: "Finally it was brought out that the I. L. D. lawyers had failed to file the Patterson appeal to the Alabama Supreme Court in the time specified by law." The article continues, "Norris, however, has stuck steadfastly to Mr. Leibowitz during the defense fight and has repeatedly stated that the New York attorney would argue his appeal before the Supreme Court."

Matter of Public Record

This same issue of the Amsterdam News also prints a photostatic copy of a United States Supreme Court document in which it is agreed that Walter H. Pollak and Osmond K. Fraenkel, attorneys retained by the I. L. D. withdraw from the Clarence Norris appeal in favor of Samuel S. Leibowitz and George W. Chamlee, both former I. L. D. attorneys.

Pending an official statement by the I. L. D. and the attorneys of record in charge of the appeals, the Daily Worker has learned:

That by agreement between the attorneys, Walter H. Pollak and Osmond K. Fraenkel remain as attorneys of record in the appeal of Haywood Patterson now before the U. S. Supreme Court. Samuel S. Leibowitz and George W. Chamlee are attorneys of record in the case of Clarence Norris. This is a matter of public record in a document signed by all four attorneys, filed with the clerk of the United States Supreme Court.

Although no public statement has been made by the I. L. D. or its attorneys in the appeals, all friends of the Scottsboro boys regard this as a definite step toward a unified defense in the U. S. Supreme Court and to prevent the splitting apart of the cases in their presentation before that court.

The agreement was made following filing of a motion by the court, by Leibowitz, asking for a change of attorneys based on a retainer obtained in January from Clarence Norris.

"Kid" Davies Lies

The I. L. D. is not only continuing its efforts for the lives and freedom of Norris and Patterson and all the Scottsboro boys, but is daily intensifying and broadening its mass campaign to force a reversal of the lynch decrees in the United States Supreme Court. No matter who the attorney for the Scottsboro boys may be, the I. L. D. will double and re-double its defense of widest mass pressure—the decisive factor which has thus far halted the hand of the Southern lynchers. This is in sharp contrast to the statement of Dr. George E. Haynes, executive vice-president of the American Scottsboro Committee, who declared that "unless the boys repudiate the I. L. D., we will wash our hands of them and let them take their medicine." Certainly if the lives of the Scottsboro boys were the first consideration of the unscrupulous Dr. Haynes and his crew, nothing could prevent him from joining the fight to save them.

The statement that the "I. L. D. lawyers failed to file the Patterson appeal in the time specified by law" is not only a shameless lie, but it brands the "Amsterdam News," which makes it and its owner, Kid Davis, as among the worst enemies of the Scottsboro boys, and the struggle for Negro rights.

This argument has already been set forth in the brief of the State of Alabama as a "technical" reason for throwing the Patterson appeal out. The Negro-hating attorney-general, Tom Knight, who will argue in the U. S. Supreme Court for the Alabama lynchers, and Kid Davis' Amsterdam News, are therefore in perfect agreement. The I. L. D. exploded this lie when it forced the United States Supreme Court to review the Patterson as well as the Norris cases.

Statement About Norris Untrue

The statement that "Norris, however, has stuck steadfastly to Mr. Leibowitz during the defense fight, etc.," is no less untrue. Until quite recently, both Norris and Patterson repeatedly wrote letters of confidence to the I. L. D. and to myself personally. After Norris and Patterson first signed with attorney Leibowitz, I visited them and both of them sent letters of renewed confidence to the I. L. D. and to Attorneys Joseph Brodsky and Fraenkel. When Messrs. Fraenkel and Pollak obtained stays of execution for Norris and Patterson and later filed the writs requesting reviews of their cases in the United States Supreme Court, they did so upon retainers signed by both Norris and Patterson. This was done well after the so-called "defense fight" was begun. On the contrary Norris remained steadfast with the I. L. D. and its attorneys until the terror of the lynchers against him became so fierce and inhuman that he could not possibly bear it. His mother, Mrs. Ida Norris, now on tour under I. L. D. auspices for the Scottsboro defense, has steadfastly maintained her faith in the I. L. D. defense policies and conduct of the case, behind which all the Scottsboro mothers stand.

The present agreement between the attorneys actually strengthens the legal defense since it prevents any possible controversy in the Supreme Court between the attorneys themselves and gives them the possibility of spending all their energies on the vital issues (exclusion of Negroes from juries, exclusion of Ruby Bates' testimony from Patterson trial) as presented in the defense briefs, which were prepared in line with I. L. D. policies by the attorneys retained by the I. L. D.

Such unity of legal defense is in accord with the united front policy of the "controversy" with Leibo- clearly stated at the very inception of the "contraversy" with Leibowitz. The National Scottsboro-Herndon Action Commitee which supports the defense policy of the I. L. D. in the Scottsboro case has also made three united action proposals to the "American Scottsboro Committee." All three have been flatly rejected. Every effort has been put forth by the I. L. D. and by the Action Committee to accomplish unity in the defense.

Boys Are First Consideration

The record of the I. L. D. in organizing and leading the Scottsboro defense for almost four years proves that the lives of these boys are its first and only consideration.

The attacks and slanderous distortions of the "Amsterdam News" against the Scottsboro defense and the I.L.D. are nothing new. This yellow sheet has followed a disruptive policy, and finally lined up with the Alabama lynch courts to try to throw the Patterson appeal out of the United States Supreme Court.

William H. (Kid) Davis has many times exposed himself as an unmitigated liar, in close competition with anti-labor William Randolph Hearst. Kid Davis sent a telegram to Haywood Patterson last October in which he stated that the I. L. D. was "bulldozing the Scottsboro mothers." When a delegation of four Scottsboro mothers and others, visited him, he squirmed but he was forced to eat those words. Before 5,000 Negro and white workers at Rockland Palace last August Davis promised to turn over every cent he collected for Scottsboro defense to the I.L.D. but since then, although he has collected large sums of money for Scottsboro defense, he has not turned one red copper to the I.L.D. In fact no one knows what Kid Davis has done with this money as neither he nor his handpicked American Scottsboro Committee have made public any accounting whatsoever of the funds they have faithlessly dragged out of honest and sincere contributors.

Kid Davis' game is clear. He works hand in glove with the treacherous Negro misleaders—the Dr. George Haynes, the Reverend A. C. Garners, L. H. Kings, Richard Boldens, et al.—who have their own interests to serve. Their interests are to prolong the miserable oppression of the Negro masses under the capitalist system, so that they too along with their white ruling class masters can continue to exploit them. Kid Davis intends to build the circulation of his lying sheet, at the expense of the lives of the nine innocent Scottsboro boys.

The experience of Attorney Pollak in successfully arguing the first Scottsboro appeals, attests his unquestionably brilliant selection by the I. L. D. and recommends him to the attorneys for Norris in the present appeals. There should be the closest cooperation of all attorneys in both cases, thus insuring the best defense for both Norris and Patterson.

It remains for the Negro masses and white workers, all friends of the Scottsboro boys and Angelo Herndon and all sympathizers and fighters for Negro liberation to unite in joint activities for the Scottsboro defense.

Funds Urged

Telegrams, protest resolutions, letters, must flood the United States Supreme Court demanding the freedom of the Scottsboro boys and Angelo Herndon. Protest post cards are available by the thousand at the offices of the I. L. D., all over the country. Funds must be rushed to the national office of the I. L. D. Room 610, 80 E. 11th Street, New York City.

Scottsboro - Herndon conferences must be set up all over the country, drawing together and welding all forces fighting for the lives and freedom of the Scottsboro boys and Angelo Herndon, and for the complete liberation of the Negro people.

Decatur, Ala. Daily
February 16, 1935

Has It Changed

The Supreme Court, now reviewing the Scottsboro case again, granted the review the first time on the grounds that the defendants were not properly represented by counsel.

The defendants, at least some of them, now have the redoubtable Samuel Simon how-do-you-spell-it for counsel ,which makes us wonder if the Supreme Court will not grant another hearing on the same grounds?

General Tax Bill To Get 11-Day Study In Senate

Measure Reported Out Of Committee With Recess Till June 25 Proposed

Hearings Slated

Appropriation Of $25,000 To Install Elevator In Capitol Wins Approval

The finance and taxation committee of the Senate yesterday reported the State's $22,000,000 general revenue bill "without recommendation" and agreed to support a resolution adjourning the Senate from Friday until June 25 for hearings on the 456-page measure.

The finance and taxation committee will hold public hearings on the measure next week with all members of the Senate especially invited to attend, making the sessions, in theory, committee of the whole meetings.

In the event public hearings do not last throughout the week, Senator Shelby Fletcher, chairman, said the Senate likely would go into actual session as a committee of the whole.

The voluminous bill came over from the House late Wednesday containing a $2,000 homestead exemption clause, a section greatly reducing auto tags, a 10 per cent tax on snuff and tobacco, a 50cedure for study of the revenue bill, then andreduced from $35,00 to $25,000, the appropriation in the House-approved O'Neal bill to defray expenses of counties in the prosecution of the "Scottsboro case."

In its reduction, the committee overstepped a suggestion by Senator Robin Swift, oneof Escambia that the amount be made $50,000 to "advertise we want this mess over with and show that the State of Alabama whole heartedly is behind the pro-

In offering an amendment to reduce the appropriation Senator J. M. Bonner, of Wilcox, said he was opposed to anticipating costs "that have not yet accrued."

Senator I. J. Browder, of Jackson and Morgan Counties already had exceeded $25,000 and Swift said he would offer his $50,000 amendment when the bill reaches the floor.

Lynchings—1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5033

Whole Scottsboro Defense Should Emulate Unity Seen In Courtroom, Urge Writers

By A. W. Berry and Benj. J. Davis, Jr.

DEPRIVED of the opportunity to play one attorney against another at the Scottsboro hearing last week, the Supreme Court resorted to the most subtle maneuvers to stem the brilliant offensive launched against the Southern lynch system by a unified legal defense.

When Justice Hugo Black interrupted the defense counsel and stated, "It is not so much whether Negroes have ever been seen on the Morgan County juries, but the point is whether they have ever been called for jury service," it was clear that he was trying to find a loophole in the legal defense through which the Supreme Court could reach down and pull the Alabama lynch tribunals to victory.

Veil Ripped

But the basic International Labor Defense policy of fighting for the lives and freedom of the Scottsboro boys ripped aside the thin veil of "impartiality" with which the white ruling class surrounds the Supreme Court.

The essence of the united legal defense was that the Norris and Patterson appeals were presented as one case. The briefs prepared by Attorneys Walter H. Pollak and Osmond K. Fraenkel, were used by Attorneys Leibowitz and Chamlee, although the latter were attorneys of record for Norris. The main issue in these briefs was the unconstitutional exclusion of Negroes from the Alabama juries.

By agreement of all four attorneys of record, Leibowitz presented the facts of both cases and Pollak argued the constitutional law of both cases. While Leibowitz presented a very able explanation of the methods of jury exclusion and the jury roll forgery, there can be no question about the fact that Pollak, eminent constitutional authority, was the guiding force of the legal defense.

The use of Pollak's briefs together with the agreement of counsel themselves to entrust him with the law in the case amply prove this fact. Certainly, Mr. Leibowitz himself cannot honestly assert the contrary.

Yet, Dr. George E. Haynes, head of the American Scottsboro Committee and shameless disrupter of the Scottsboro defense, has stated:

"Those who believe in justice and freedom for the Scottsboro boys should take hope for a favorable verdict if the brilliant, masterly presentation such as Attorney Samuel S. Leibowitz made for the constitutional rights of these boys is to weigh in the matter as it is now before the highest tribunal of our land. . . . His powerful plea for the rights of Negro citizens to sit on grand and petit juries and his vivid presentation of the denial of that right in the Scottsboro case was a master stroke for Negroes' rights, and certainly was a complete answer to any who have doubted his ability to defend these boys before the Supreme Court."

In other words, Mr. Pollak did not even figure in the case.

To Dr. Hynes and his high-class Uncle Tom friends, the Scottsboro hearings were significant only so far as they vindicated Mr. Leibowitz, and only so far as they provide a springboard for further attacks on the unity of the Scottsboro mass defense.

The Negro reformist newspapers—the Amsterdam News, the New York Age, etc.—are leaving no stone unturned to build the reputation of a lawyer at the expense of the Scottsboro boys.

Evade Unity

Not once do these lackeys mention the necessity of the broadest unity of the Negro masses and white toilers in struggle for the lives and freedom of the Scottsboro boys. They have already feverishly begun the task of building the confidence of the Negro people in the U. S. Supreme Court by trying to lull them into depending upon the "fairness" of these puppets of their white ruling class masters.

Victory in Scottsboro Case Must Be Gained, Appeal Says

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 1.—A reversal of the Scottsboro lynch verdicts will not only aid the fight for the lives and freedom of these innocent boys, but will also constitute a tremendous step forward in the fight for Negro rights, the Birmingham Scottsboro-Herndon Action Committee declared in an appeal to all groups and individuals to flood the U. S. Supreme Court with demands for the reversal of the sentences.

"The United States Supreme Court," the appeal states in part, "is asked to reverse these convictions on the proven ground that Alabama deliberately and systematically exclude Negroes from the grand and petit juries in contravention of the 14th and 15th Amendments to the Federal Constitution. A victory must be gained."

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
APR 2 1935

STARS FALL ON ALABAMA

The action of the Supreme Court of the United States in setting aside the death penalty imposed upon two Negroes in the famed Scottsboro case will meet with sympathetic approval from most people who have followed the apparent attempt to railroad to the chair a group of boys about whose guilt there is grave doubt.

The case is one of that kind that exhibits Southern justice at its worst—one of alleged criminal assault upon a white woman. It has been very much in the public eye for nearly four years; and once before the Supreme Court has had to intervene because the Negroes had been unconstitutionally deprived of the aid of counsel in preparation for their first trial.

The opinion of the Court was this time predicated upon a question of fact, undisputed, that Negroes had been "arbitrarily, and systematically excluded," although qualified, from jury service. Chief Justice Hughes, who read the opinion, asserted that the absence of Negroes from the jury rolls should have caused the trial court to quash the indictments; and he declared, "We think the evidence that no Negro has been called for jury service in Jackson County for a generation establishes there had been discrimination."

Those who have followed the case as reported in great metropolitan newspapers and in the magazines in full detail will feel a little disappointed that the Supreme Court ruled only on the technical question of exclusion. Probably that was all it could be asked to rule on, since it appears to be the only constitutional question raised. From the evidence reported, there were many other indications that considerably less than justice was meted out to the seven defendants in the Scottsboro case.

It is hard for those who live far from "the Negro problem" to get the Southern point of view. And to be perfectly fair, it should be said that the defense counsel in the case, supplied by a Northern society, was so bluntly uncompromising in allegations of injustice reflecting forcibly upon the Southern code of honor and the Southern politico-social system as to preclude anything but the harshest judgment from being visited upon his clients.

It seemed during the trial that the Negroes were doomed in advance to receive the death penalty. Perhaps some way will be found to mete it out in such a way that the United States Supreme Court will be unable to intervene. At least, the Negroes during four years have had a semblance of legal rights, without interposition of lynch law. Probably now, so persistently has their case been a national problem of country-wide interest, there is less danger that the law will be short-circuited by mob action. Another trial is to be expected, but an acquittal is hardly to be thought probable.

It may even be that the men are guilty as charged; but the unconstitutional denial of their rights by the state authorities must be thought prima facie evidence that in Alabama a charge of this kind against a Negro is tantamount to a death warrant, no matter what the facts actually are. The Supreme Court has given not only the Negroes, but the state of Alabama itself another chance. It must be hoped that a new trial will establish guilt or innocence beyond peradventure.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL COURIER
APR 4 1935

Scottsboro Decision.

The Supreme Court of the United States has rebuked the state of Alabama again for its Negro policy. The Civil War ended seventy years ago, but anti-militarists may well point to these latest cases for evidence of war's futility. The war was fought, of course, to save the union; emancipation was never its major purpose as Mr. Lincoln understood it, but became a necessary item in the great pattern of statecraft which Mr. Lincoln composed. But emancipation was to prove more formal than real in the whole southern expanse. The slaves were no longer slaves, but their rights were hardly more.

Three years ago the Supreme Court rebuked Alabama's refusal to give the Scottsboro boys the benefit of counsel. The opinion reproduced the semi-literate colloquy between bench and bar on the point at the original trial; the record itself was eloquent of the denial criticized. The same result is reached again, now, by a different road; for the court finds due process is impugned when Negroes, duly qualified, are excluded from the juries. The federal judiciary has done its part in the name of the heroic generosities of democracy; the spotlight turns again to Alabama.

MOVE TO UNITE SCOTTSBORO DEFENSE - DELEGATION PROPOSES UNITY CONFERENCE

NEW YORK - (CNA) - An important step toward effecting unity of all forces in the Scottsboro defense was taken here last Wednesday. A delegation from the National Scottsboro-Herndon Action Committee and other organizations visited the office of the American Scottsboro Committee, in an effort to discuss with the executive officers of the latter organization, a basis for achieving complete unity of action.

When the delegation arrived at the office of the American Scottsboro Committee shortly after noon, no executive officer was present. A secretary, Miss Jetter, informed the delegation that the executive secretary, Dr. George E. Haynes, had received the letter from the National Scottsboro Herndon Action Committee requesting the conference and had dictated a reply earlier in the morning, but that he would not be in the office until late in the afternoon. Miss Jetter also stated that the American Scottsboro Committee would not meet before the middle of March, since the executive officers were leaving for the South.

The chairman of the delegation, Mr. A.W.Berry, urged that the American Scottsboro Committee set a date for a conference at the earliest possible time. The Delegation included Mrs. Mary Crain Speed, a native white mother of Alabama; Alfred Hirsch of the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners; Richard B. Moore and Anna Damon of the International Labor Defense; Milton Herndon, brother of Angelo Herndon, and M. Rodnia.

The Reverend Shelton Hale Bishop, prominent Negro clergyman and rector of Saint Phillip's Parish House, endorsed the proposals of the delegation and answered it to use his name.

CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER
APR 2 1935

Justice to Reach Scottsboro.

The United States Supreme Court again saves the Scottsboro defendants. It reverses the convictions of two of the seven Negro youths, holding that their trial was invalid because Negroes were barred from service on the jury which found them guilty. Since the five other defendants were named in the same indictment it is probable that yesterday's decision will apply to all.

The Supreme Court does not pass upon the merits of the charges against the Negro youths. That is beyond its jurisdiction. They could all be tried again in Alabama.

It does not seem likely that they will be. In the first place the evidence upon which they were originally convicted has been well shattered in the two trials and subsequent appeals. In the second place, the Supreme Court has now twice served notice upon Alabama that it is still part of the United States and that it cannot continue to gauge justice by color. It is time for Alabama to pay attention.

Thus yesterday's decision does much more than bring a brighter hope of belated justice to seven obscure youths. It outlaws the custom, common in many other states than Alabama, of Jim Crowing the law. That is a scoring for justice which will be felt far beyond Scottsboro. It is refreshing to every American not biased by racial prejudice.

ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
APR 2 1935

Justice and Alabama

For a second time the United States Supreme Court has ruled that the Scottsboro case was not fairly conducted, and that the young Negro defendants are entitled to a new trial.

The point at issue in the appeal was one of constitutional rights. It was shown that Negroes eligible for jury service had been systematically excluded from the Scottsboro jury, as they have been in all trials conducted in Jackson and Morgan Counties, Alabama, for a generation.

To a dyed-in-the-wool Southerner, this practice may seem perfectly justifiable. But to the rest of the country it is a flagrant violation of the rights guaranteed by the American constitution. There can be no fairness in a trial, or in any other human activity, when race prejudice is allowed to dominate.

In the opinion handed down by Chief Justice Hughes, it was held that there is no controversy as to the constitutional principle involved, that: "Whenever by any action of a State, whether through its Legislature, through its courts, or through its executive or administrative officers, all persons of the African race are excluded, solely because of their race or color, from serving as grand jurors in the criminal prosecution of a person of the African race, the equal protection of the laws is denied to him, contrary to the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States."

If that prejudice-ridden section of the State of Alabama is unwilling to give the Scottsboro boys a fairly conducted trial, the case should either be moved elsewhere or dropped. This see-sawing with the Supreme Court cannot go on indefinitely.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
APR 3 1935

SCOTTSBORO CASES AGAIN

In 1933 the Supreme Court of the United States ordered new trials for the seven Negroes condemned to death at Scottsboro, Ala., on charges of attacking two white girls in 1931 the court holding that the "due process" clause of the Constitution had not been observed by the trial court. The chief factor was the claim of the defense that the accused men had been forced to go on trial within a few minutes after appointment of counsel—before there had been any adequate opportunity to prepare their cases. This application of the "due process" clause, supported by all members of the court except Justices Butler and McReynolds, was commonly approved as an expression of sound policy.

Comes now another Supreme court decision in two Scottsboro cases, those of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, both condemned to death after trial on the selfsame charge that had led to the previous seven convictions. Again the court finds for the defendants. In one case it holds that there was discrimination because for years Negroes have been barred from jury service in the Alabama counties where the trials were held, the testimony showing that there were Negroes in these counties who could qualify for such service. In the other case, the jurisdiction of the Supreme court was challenged, and it sent the issue back to the courts of Alabama for "further proceedings." The decisions in both cases were supported by eight members of the court. Justice McReynolds had nothing to do with either case.

The decisions in all the Scottsboro cases re-emphasize that at the heart of the American system of government there is a tribunal which is as much concerned to protect the rights of the humblest citizen as the rights of the most influential. The Supreme court, in effect, has called upon the courts of Alabama to demonstrate that they will not yield to the pressure of mob opinion and that the legal rights of a defendant, no matter what his social rating may be in the South, will be respected. The fact that the rights of these Negroes were disregarded in certain important particulars has made the Scottsboro cases a basis for Communistic propaganda. It must be hoped that if these men are again to be tried everything possible will be done to assure a proper regard for due process, in the vital spirit as well as in the form of it.

Scottsboro, Ala., Apr
April 4, 1935

The decision of the U. S. Supreme Court handed down Monday in the famous "Scottsboro" case is one of the most far reaching in many years, especially as it effects the South. The opinion seems to have been practically unanimous, at least there was no dissenting opinion and it will have the effect of changing entirely our jury system. This court specificallyy says that because of the fact that there were no negroes on the jury that indicted the negroes or on the petit jury that tried them, their trial was null and void. In other words any negro can claim his right of having negroes in the jury box when they are tried and of course will necessitate our laws conforming to this decision or risk such consequences as this.

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

5034

MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER
APR 4 1935

MR. HUGHES HAS NOT SAID ENOUGH

To the Honorable Charles Evans Hughes:

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from seats on the Supreme Court of the United States. Has that circumstance affected the justice of the Court's decisions involving the races?

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from the bench in Federal court districts.

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from seats on the bench of the Supreme courts of the States, except possibly in the Reconstruction years. There may have been some Negroes on the Supreme court of one of the Southern States in that period, although at the moment The Advertiser has no recollection of any exception to the rule.

For more than 140 years Negroes have been "systematically excluded" from the bench of nisi prius courts, at least in the Southern States, if not in all others. Have these circumstances prejudiced the cause of white or black citizen? If not, why not?

Yet the Supreme Court of the United States remands for rehearing a cause in which two Negroes were convicted of the capital offense of rape in Alabama, all upon the ground, not specifically that no Negro sat on the jury that convicted the defendants, but upon the ground that for a "generation"—about 30 years, we believe—Negroes had been "systematically excluded" from jury service in Jackson County, Alabama.

The Advertiser herewith takes the liberty of asking Mr. Hughes and his colleagues of the Supreme Court of the United States this question: If Negroes had served on Jackson County juries every year for 29 years before the "Scottsboro" infants came into court in their diapers and shaking their baby rattlers, but for some reason—any reason—had not been drawn to serve on the jury that tried the infants aforesaid, would the solemn Supreme Court of the United States have solemnly averred that justice had been outraged?

Does it follow that, in the light of the decision of the court as read by Mr. Hughes, no black man, no matter what the evidence against him may be, can have his sentence affirmed by the republic's highest court unless black men sat upon the jury that convicted him in the first instance?

Does it follow that an oathbound jury is entirely without virtue and respectability if only white men serve on it when Negroes are on trial?

Has the Supreme Court of the United States ever reversed the verdict of a trial court involving the liberity or life of an Indian upon the ground that no Indian sat upon the jury that convicted him? Or a Spaniard, of an Italian, or a Frenchman, or a Russian or a Japanese or a Chinese?

There is no relevancy in the observation of the Chief Justice to the effect that Negroes had been excluded from jury services for a generation before the Scottsboro infants were put to trial. The only relevant question is whether Negroes served on the jury that convicted these infants.

Suppose Negroes had been on all Jackson County juries for 29 years but that for some reason they were not accepted for jury service in the year that these puling infants were tried and convicted—would that not have been a miscarriage of justice?

We just wanted to know.

Charleston, S. C. News & Courier
April 3, 1935.

A "One Big State" Decision

The necessary inference from the decision of the supreme court of the United States ordering a new trial for two negroes condemned to death in Scottsboro, Alabama, on the ground that their "constitutional rights were violated because negroes were excluded from jury service at their trials," is that unless negroes shall be allowed to serve on juries any negro convict may have a new trial if his case shall be carried on appeal to the United States supreme court.

As every Southern man of common sense well knows, non-discriminating acceptance of white and negroes alike on juries would revolutionize Southern jurisprudence and demoralize Southern civilization.

The decision of the court can and probably will be evaded. Its language, whether or not by intention, suggests a loophole. Hear it: "We think the evidence that no negro has been called for jury service in Jackson county for a generation established that there has been discrimination." That might be interpreted that if in a county half a dozen negroes were called for jury duty in a generation it would be sufficient to convince the United States supreme court of non-discrimination. In some Southern counties negroes are found on jury panels. Occasionally they were summoned for service in Richland county, this state, a few years ago and may still be. Of course in a capital case, or in any case, they can always be asked to "stand aside," if they are not too many.

We shall not discuss the supreme court's decision further than to say that in South Carolina it cannot and will not be obeyed in spirit. We cannot have mixed racial juries in this state. The state has not yet arrived at a point when that would be safe. The Northern negro associations and their sympathizers have been striving years for this decision. It is a victory for them. It strikes at the heart of the social order in the South. The right or wrongness of the Southern way of doing things is not at this moment concerning The News and Courier. It is deciding realistically in contradiction to the court's decision—and our decision, which has only the force of prediction, will be vindicated by events as they come to pass.

It is quite useless to say it to the South Carolinians, but we tell them that their present disposition toward the Washington government invites decisions inimical to their handling of the "race question." They are enthusiastic for the One Big State. Its establishment is primary in the New Deal's plans. Manifestly, when state rights shall be destroyed, the handling of the jury question within the states without federal interference will come to an end.

The truth is that support of centralization in Washington implies approval of the decision that "thrills" Mr. Liebowitz, the defender of the Scottsboro negroes. In One Big State a negro will be "as good as a white man." That is certain.

Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser
April 7, 1935

MAKING THE NEGRO THE GOAT

The masses of Negroes in Alabama are law-abiding, well-behaved people. All they want is peace and a chance to make a living and a chance to improve their status as a social and economic unit.

Whenever a member of their race commits a serious offense against society respectable Negroes are embararssed. They despise the criminal Negro more than whites do, for criminal conduct by a Negro reflects upon all Negroes and so creates unnecessary difficulties for them.

The Advertiser for three years has been impressed with the fact that the controversy about the "Scottsboro case" was and is a white man's row.

The Advertiser has no doubt that if only Negroes had served on the juries in the Scottsboro cases there would have been as many indictments and as many convictions as we have had.

The average law-abiding Negro despises the lawless member of his race with a passion quite unknown to white people. He feels that every Negro criminal is a Judas to his race.

The Advertiser is close to the Negro leadership of Alabama. No Negro leader, great or small, hesitates to come by The Advertiser to talk frankly of any problem that troubles him.

All of them know that The Advertiser has always been their sympathetic friend, and so Negroes usually talk freely to The Advertiser. In the light of this circumstance it is remarkable that never at any time has any Negro in Alabama ever appealed to The Advertiser against the courts that indicted and convicted the Scottsboro defendants. We have never heard from a Negro any expression of opinion regarding these defendants.

No Negro leader in Alabama has lent his voice to the world chorus against Alabama since the Scottsboro case first became a cause celebre.

In Alabama Negroes and whites understand how to get along together, but whites elsewhere in the world do not seem to be quite satisfied with the arrangement.

What we mean to say is this: The average Negro in the South, especially in Alabama, stands for law and order, he stands for good citizenship. He ought not to be humiliated unduly by the criminals of his race. He ought not to be humiliated by the debates involving public policy which follow.

Ft. Payne, Ala., Times
April 11, 1935

Scottsboro, Supreme Court and Governor Graves.

—o—

THE decision of the Supreme Court of the United States reversing the well-known Scottsboro cases on account of the exclusion of negroes from jury rolls in Jackson County, where the indictments were returned, was received by our people with such calmness and lack of rancor that one almost marvels at the progress that has been made in the abatement of the animosities that the cases originally incited. The daily press of the state is almost, if not quite, unanimous in its commendation of the order of Governor Graves to Judges and Jury Commissions to give effect to the decision in making up jury rolls in the future.

We are not disposed to rub it in, but, as a Republican newspaper in the deep South, we can scarcely refrain from saying that, if this had to come, we are glad it came while we have a Democrat in the White House and a Democratic Governor at the helm in the state. It is indeed a far cry from the time, not so long ago, when such spell-binders as Tom Heflin and Buck Oliver were coming into the old Seventh District and lashing Republicans with the fury of their oratory on the ground that Republican rule was threatening white supremacy in the South, to the time when a Democratic Governor, in plain words, says that negroes are to be given recognition equal with whites in making up jury rolls in Alabama. As Brisbane would probably say, that's progress. We suppose that some one will rise to remark that it was a Republican Chief Justice that handed down the decision, but it must be remembered that there are three Democrats sitting as Justices on the Court and up to the time of going to press we had not heard of either of them filing a dissenting opinion.

When one reflects upon it, there is nothing so very radical about the decision after all. The Courts of this state have affirmed time and again that negroes must not be denied the equal protection of the law, and there is nothing so vital to equal protection of the law as the fair and equable selection of juries to determine our rights under the law. And there is a vast difference between equal protection under the law and social equality between the races.

With one declaration of Governor Graves we are in particular accord. That is where he states that Alabama, as one of the states of the American Union, must observe the supreme law of America. Therein lies our safety and security as a nation, as a state and as individuals.

Valdosta, Ga., Times
April 4, 1935

NEGROES NOT BARRED

The decision of the United States supreme court in reversing the conviction of two Scottsboro, Ala., negroes on the ground that negroes were systematically excluded from jury duty in that state causes widespread comment among officials of southern states.

It is pointed out by officials that there are no laws barring negroes from jury duty in the states where comment was heard, although they rarely are called for service. There have been instances of negroes serving on juries in the Southern states but most officials point out that "they are just left out of the jury boxes, although there is no law against their names being included."

Most of the comments have emphasized that the decision will have little or no effect on future trials. In Alabama, Circuit Solicitor Bailey, who prosecuted the original indictments, said the decision was a "body blow" to criminal procedure in the state. Alabama officials have been emphatic in their statement that the negroes, whose convictions were reversed, will be tried again, even if it is necessary to indict them again or even if it is necesary to revise the jury lists so as to include negroes.

The decision has also served to direct attention to the various methods used in the Democratic primaries in the Southern states to prevent negroes from voting in primaries. In Georgia voting by negroes in the primary "just isn't done"; it is custom and not the law.

In Texas, Florida and Arkansas membership in the Democratic party is limited to whites. Louisiana and Mississippi require persons registering to "interpret" any portion of the constitution the registrar may put his finger upon. Alabama requires the voter to be able to read, write and understand the constitution. South Carolina Democrats require both whites and negroes to read and interpret the constitution relative to voting qualifications. Certain educational qualifications are necessary in Virginia. Tennessee allows them to vote. North Carolina has no law on the subject. Texas excludes negroes from the Democratic primary by ruling of the state Democratic convention.

The whole question of negroes serving on juries or voting in the primaries is an evolution from the carpet bagging days. Very few of them are able to comply with educational qualifications and they are, therefore, barred from jury service and from voting. It is a situation which the negroes themselves, for the most part, understand and there is little show of resentment. Negroes realize that certain regulations are necessary and they feel the inability to qualify is the fault of their own race.

Savannah, Ga. Press
April 5, 1935

NEGROES ON THE JURY

The decision of the Supreme Court will probably have no effect in the South besides the retrial of the Scottsboro negroes

No Southern state has a law against negroes serving on the jury. No Southern state for instance has a law against a colored man serving as governor, but no one would think of electing a colored man governor. It is a question of intelligence and prominence.

Jurors are drawn from panels fixed by the jury commissioners of each county and men are not excluded for race or color but for intelligence. The South regulates the jury question entirely within the Constitution without any illegal amendments such as the United States Supreme Court charged in its decision.

A review of the laws in the Southern states discloses no objectionable or unconstitutional provision such as the Supreme Court seemed to imagine prevailed in some of the Southern statute books. The court itself took cognizance of this fact in its decision about the Texas state primary. The court drew the correct conclusion in that case but it seemed to be convinced that there was an illegal statute on the books of some of the Southern states barring out negroes from service on the jury.

Wilmington, N. C. Morning Star
April 6, 1935

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

THE first repercussions from the recent sweeping decision of the supreme court regarding negroes on juries in southern states came yesterday from Montgomery, where Governor BIBB GRAVES ordered all county and judicial officers to provide a list of negro citizens for jury call. At the same time it was announced that a new indictment would be sought for the two men whose implication in the celebrated Scottsboro case, called down the reversal of the nation's highest tribunal.

In his message, Governor GRAVES set forth that 'whether we are in accord or otherwise the ruling of the supreme court is the law of the land and must be obeyed." It was intimated that in other states a similar pronouncement would be forthcoming.

North Carolina's supreme court has on two occasions held that the mere fact that negroes do not commonly sit on juries is not evidence that they are barred, and this precedent is expected to govern for the time at least. Negroes have, however, sat on superior court juries in Wake, Durham and other counties and occasionally have appeared on federal panels in Wilmington and other places throughout the state.

This newspaper is not inclined to be worked up over the matter. In fact it does not believe in juries in the first place, and would prefer to see the administration of criminal justice left in the hands of men learned in the law, as in Maryland and sometimes in Pennsylvania. At the same time, we candidly feel the country's most august court is stirring a tempest from a teapot for the simple reason that regardless of the names inserted in a jury box, and regardless of their color, creed or classification, the ultimate twelve will be selected only after the opposing attorneys have exhausted every means possible to obtain the dozen they desire. If the names of all negroes who pay taxes are placed on the jury rolls of every southern state, and the negro shows the slightest inclination to follow the white man, he will move heaven and earth to dodge service if and when called.

It is quite a time and distance from Ranymede and King John and the jury system as it now exists has become quite shopworn in the interim.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama.
5035

5035

DEFYING PUBLIC SENTIMENT

WITHOUT A DOUBT, the arrogant and unjust attitude of Special Prosecutor Thomas E. McKnight, in which he brazenly and unjustly defies public sentiment which is overwhelmingly favorable to dropping the attack charges against the nine Alabama Negro youths, of Scottsboro fame, excels in unfairness any attitude that has been noted on the part of a public official of our nation in many years.

Hardly had the last word been uttered by Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, in which he announced the decision of the highest court of our land, pointing out the injustices exhibited by the Alabama courts and ordering new trials for the defendant Negro youths, than did the apparently prejudiced prosecutor of the youths express determination to place the commonwealth of his state to the enormous expense of conducting trials on the charges again 4-4-35

The fiery lieutenant-governor may be spurred on to further persecution of these Negro youths by the recent honor that has come to him at the hands of the electorate of his state, wherein it appears that his elevation to the lieutenant-governorship was a reward bestowed upon him in view of his vigorous prosecution of the Negroes on the altogether too flimsy attack charge. If such is the case, the young Alabamian will do well to think of other ambitious men who chose to ride into office by catering to the race prejudice on the part of their race toward the Negro racial group. There is Heflin, of his own state, who was noted because of his tirades directed at the Negro, and in recent years, no man has suffered more because of his defeats and unpopularity than has Tom Heflin. Then Tillman and Blease, of South Carolina; Vardaman, of Mississippi, and others of those who thrived for a short time because of their unexcelled ability to send forth volumes of Negrophobia, but it is plain that they built on foundations that were altogether flimsy, as is indicated by their ends.

The decision of the United States Supreme Court offers consolation to our citizenship, especially as that high tribunal directs criticism at the lower courts of Alabama because of their toleration of gross and flagrant injustices toward their Negro citizens. Reference is made to the failure on the part of Alabama jury commissions to select Negroes for jury service. Just such an unjust and unlawful attitude is practiced in more states than Alabama, and those sections where such a condition prevails, should promptly set about to remedy the same. Certainly it should not become necessary for any defendant on trial in the courts of our land to spend enormous amounts of money that his constitutional rights might be protected and in ored to have justice prevail.

It will be extremely difficult for the average Negro on trial to have his case reviewed by the United States Supreme Court, in view of the great expense involved, but this should not serve as an excuse for the lower courts refusing to protect his rights.

In the meantime, it does seem that there are a sufficient number of influential, justice-loving advocates of fair play among the white citizenship of Alabama to bring pressure to bear on Prosecutor McKnight to desist from further persecuting those nine Negro youths. In view of the statements of one of the original witnesses for the state, that the defendants are not guilty as charged, and because of the flimsy evidence produced at the trials, the ends of justice would be properly met by turning these boys out to return to their homes and their loved ones. Certainly such would be the exhibition of fairness and justice. It is greatly to be regretted that it was not within the power of the high court to issue such an order as they sent the cases back for new trials.

NEW YORK SUN

APR 2 1935

Seeking Scottsboro Solution

Alabama Officials Determined to Resume Prosecutions of Accused Negroes.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 2 (U. P.).—Alabama officials today determined to prosecute the Scottsboro assault cases "to the end."

The four-year legal fight over the lives of the nine Negro defendants must begin all over, because the United States Supreme Court ruled yesterday that systematic barring of Negroes from jury duty invalidated indictments and convictions.

Few officials would comment, but they agreed there was no possibility that the Negroes would be released without further prosecution.

The course of procedure was undecided. It probably will involve addition of Negroes to the jury rolls in Jackson county (Scottsboro) and the empanelling of a special Grand Jury to re-indict all the defendants.

Circuit Solicitor H. G. Bailey, who obtained the original indictments in Scottsboro late in March of 1931, saw the Supreme Court decision as "a body blow" that might have far-reaching effects in the South.

Southern Viewpoint.

Negro jury service is virtually unknown in Southern State courts. Southerners contend that Negroes are not seen on juries because so few can meet the qualifications and not because of a systematic racial exclusion.

The Supreme Court decision may force more consideration of Negroes for jury service in all Southern States, Bailey said. He added that he expected a move from defense attorneys to free Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, whose convictions were reversed by the Supreme Court yesterday, on writs of habeas corpus. If released, the State could promptly re-arrest them on new warrants to await new Grand Jury action, he said.

To make the new indictment valid the Jackson county jury commission would have to revise its rolls to include Negroes. From the rolls a venire of sixty or seventy would be selected. The eighteen names to compose the Grand Jury would be drawn by lot.

In all probability the trials would be transferred from Jackson county on a change of venue. A similar process of jury roll revision would be necessary in the county where the new trials would be held.

Attorney-General A. A. Carmichael would say only that "the case will be prosecuted vigorously when they come up in the natural course of events at a later date." Lieut.-Gov. Thomas E. Knight Jr., former Attorney-General, will continue to lead the prosecution.

Patterson 'Playing Crazy.'

The Supreme Court ruling made Clarence Norris "a happy person." He and Patterson are confined in separate cells in death row at Kilby Prison here. Patterson, a tall, black Negro whom Warden Frank Bowell said "has been playing crazy lately," refused to talk to reporters. He lay on his cell cot, mumbling "Go ahead and do what you want to with me—I don't care—new trial, new trial, new trial . . ."

Norris wrote to his New York attorney, Samuel S. Liebowitz:

"It is beyond words how I feel over being granted a new trial. I am a happy person to know that the grand argument which you made for this new trial was a great success. The high court's opinion should pave an avenue for my complete freedom in my next trial. . . ."

Norris and Patterson have been in death cells at State Prison here for more than a year. They are two of nine Negroes accused of assaulting Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, white girl "hoboes," on a freight train near Scottsboro on March 25 1931. Two of the nine cases are pending in juvenile court.

In the fall of 1932 the Supreme Court reversed convictions and death sentences for the seven defendants convicted at Scottsboro, on the ground that they had not had time to prepare a defense. The following spring Patterson was convicted the second time when tried at Decatur on a change of venue. But Circuit Judge James E. Horton gave him another trial on grounds of insufficient evidence.

Patterson was convicted for the third time and Norris the second time in trials before Judge W. W. Callahan at Decatur in December of 1933.

NEW YORK SUN

APR 1 1935

Scottsboro Ruling Expected

Supreme Court May Give Opinion Also Today on Rail Pension Act.

WASHINGTON, April 1 (A. P.).—The lives of two Negroes convicted of assaulting two white women four years ago near Scottsboro, Ala., hung in the balance today as the Supreme Court met to hand down decisions after a two weeks' recess.

It was expected generally that the justices, in a session beginning at 12 noon, would pass for the second time upon the validity of Alabama trials, which resulted in death sentences for the Negroes.

The capital also looked to the court for a decision on the constitutionality of the railroad pension act. Observers were mindful of the possible effect of this opinion upon the social security legislation that President Roosevelt has asked Congress to pass.

Death sentences imposed on Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, Negroes, twice convicted in the Scottsboro assault cases, have been suspended while their second appeal to the Supreme Court has been pending.

They were among nine Negroes originally accused of assaulting two white women who were riding a freight train from Tennessee into Alabama. One of the nine was acquitted and one freed because of his youth.

After Alabama courts convicted the remaining seven and sentenced them to death, the Supreme Court set aside the convictions, saying the Negroes had been denied proper counsel. Norris and Patterson who were tried and convicted again, contended in their appeal this time that they were indicted and tried before juries from which Negroes had been excluded systematically.

The Alabama Supreme Court said the evidence failed to show that Negroes had been so excluded.

Rail Act Passed Last Year.

The railroad pension act was enacted last year. It provides for retirement of railroad employees with pay after thirty years of service, or after they reach 65 years of age.

The railroads have contended that the act is unconstitutional and would impose an unbearable financial burden.

After handing down decisions the court is expected to hear arguments in a suit testing the legality of the Frazier-Lemke farm moratorium measure. Passed at the last session of Congress, this act gives hard-pressed farmers a five year mortgage moratorium if they are unable to reach an agreement with their creditors.

New York Herald-Tribune

APR 2 1935

Alabama Ready To Rush Retrial At Scottsboro

Lt. Gov. Knight, Special Prosecutor, Announces Move for Re-indictment

Leibowitz Hails Decision

Calls Ruling Greatest for Negroes Since Dred Scott

By The Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 1.—New indictments to prosecute the Scottsboro attack cases "to their conclusion" will be sought promptly, Lieutenant Governor Thomas E. Knight jr. announced today. The Lieutenant Governor, who as Attorney General prosecuted Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, the Negroes whose sentences for alleged attack on a white woman were set aside by the United States Supreme Court today, has been retained as special prosecutor to conduct the state's case.

Mr. Knight said he did not know whether a special session of the grand jury would be called at Scottsboro, or whether the case would await a regular session.

The news brought joy to eight of the defendants, but the ninth, Patterson, greeted it with shouts of derision from his cell, in death row at Kilby prison near here.

In the Jefferson County jail, from the other seven defendants awaiting trial, it brought shouts of joy.

History of Alabama Trials

DECATUR, Ala., April 1 (AP).—Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, two of nine Negro defendants in the Scottsboro case, were convicted and sentenced to death in Morgan circuit court, under a change of venue, in December, 1933. The Negroes, tried separately, were charged with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price, Huntsville, Ala., mill worker, aboard a Southern Railway freight train on March 25, 1931, in Jackson County.

Ruby Bates, who testified in the original trial that she also was attacked, in April, 1933, appeared here to repudiate her previous testimony, but in the trials in December, 1933, she testified through interrogatories.

On the appeal from the original convictions in the case in April, 1931, the Alabama Supreme Court confirmed the sentences of seven of the Negroes, including Patterson and Norris, but set aside one, that of Eugene Williams, holding he was a juvenile.

The seven convictions upheld by the Alabama court in a decision on March 25, 1932, were set aside by the United States Supreme Court on November 7, 1932.

On motion of counsel supplied by the International Labor Defense, the cases were then transferred to the Morgan circuit court here, and on April 9, 1933, Patterson was convicted a second time. This conviction was set aside on June 22, 1933, by Judge A. E. Horton, who presided at the trials.

In December, 1933, Patterson was found guilty for the third time, and Norris was again convicted.

Leibowitz Doubts Retrial

The Scottsboro Negroes who have won the right to a new trial by yesterday's decision of the United States Supreme Court will never be tried again unless the State of Alabama revolutionizes its jury system, Samuel S. Leibowitz, counsel for the defense, said last night at his offices, 225 Broadway. "Any grand jury which indicts them will have to have Negroes on its roll, and any jury which tries them will also have to be drawn from a roll in which every qualified Negro in the county is listed," he said.

He indicated strong doubt as to whether there would ever be another trial, and said it was probable that an airplane would be used to bring the Negroes north from Alabama, after their ultimate release.

"No words can express how much that decision by the Supreme Court means to me," Mr. Leibowitz said. "It is the greatest milestone in the story of Negroes' rights in our courts since the Dred Scott decision."

Birmingham, Ala. News

April 2, 1935

The Supreme Court's Ruling On The Scottsboro Cases

Again the United States Supreme Court has set aside the verdicts in the Scottsboro cases and ordered new trials for two of the defendants. In the other review of the cases by the Supreme Court the verdicts imposed on all the defendants were annulled on the ground that the Negroes had been unconstitutionally deprived of the aid of counsel in preparation for their first trial. There was a dissenting opinion on that occasion.

In the latest review the verdicts were set aside on the ground that the defendants had been deprived of constitutional rights because they were indicted by a Grand Jury and convicted by a trial jury from which members of their race had been "systematically excluded." This time there was no dissenting opinion, although one member of the court, Justice McReynolds, took no part in the case. Thus we have the United States Supreme Court saying to the Alabama courts, in an opinion unanimously concurred in by all the justices participating, that trials of Negroes in this state, where members of their race are excluded from jury duty, are illegal. Chief Justice Hughes, who read the opinion, said that the absence of Negroes from the jury rolls should have caused the trial court to quash the indictments.

This opinion by the highest tribunal in the land raises a question for Alabama which is far greater than the immediate issue involved in the Scottsboro cases. According to the Supreme Court's ruling, no case involving Negro defendants which has been tried in Alabama in a court from which Negroes were excluded as jurors has been legal. The court, of course, did not make reference to any other cases; but it plainly follows from the opinion in these cases that the court would consider unconstitutional any trial involving a Negro in which members of his race were excluded from jury duty.

The conclusion is inescapable, it seems to The News, that Alabama will have to take steps to correct the situation criticized by the Supreme Court wherever it holds true. If this should not be done, every case, either of a major or a minor nature, involving a Negro defendant, hereafter tried in Alabama, could conceivably be appealed to the United States Supreme Court, and each conviction set aside, where Negroes are excluded from the jury rolls.

Negroes have not only been included on jury rolls in Alabama, but they have in some instances actually served as jurors. Negroes have served as jurors in federal courts in this state. Probably they have served, or at least they have been eligible to serve, on juries in state courts in some counties. They have served, or been eligible to serve, in some other Southern states. The Supreme Court is convinced that in Jackson and Morgan Counties, scenes of the Scottsboro trials, Negroes were "systematically" excluded from the jury rolls. That is almost certainly not true of every county in Alabama. It is apparent, then, that there is nothing in Alabama law which would prevent the inclusion of the names of Negroes on jury rolls. Even if there were, such provision, according to the Supreme Court, would be unconstitutional.

The court's opinion unquestionably calls for remedial action in those counties where Negroes are excluded from the jury rolls. This is the absolute minimum of change of current practice in Alabama necessitated by the court's ruling.

Lynchings-1935
& Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5836

GOVERNOR GRAVES'S LETTER ABOUT NEGRO JURORS

The Advertiser does not see how Governor Bibb Graves could have done less than to assume his full responsibility as the chief executive and the titular leader of Alabamians in urging all judges and solicitors to take steps immediately to have this State conform its jury practices to the demands of the Supreme Court of the United States since there is no other court to which this State may appeal. Advertiser

The Advertiser several days ago said that it would now be necessary for Alabama jury commissions immediately to recognize the demands of the Supreme Court, otherwise it would be useless to expect that body to affirm any conviction of a Negro by an Alabama court, regardless of the evidence. 4-6-35

Governor Graves in his letter to circuit judges and solicitors merely recognizes the realities of the situation. It is vital that whatever readjustment to the Supreme Court's decision is to be made should be made immediately. We think it is the function of the Governor to point the way, and so we are glad, but not surprised, that Governor Graves should have acted in the forthright manner that he did. He could not have done less. Montgomery, Ala.

There is talk of new legislation on the subject. The Governor indicates that he will advise the Legislature in May to enact whatever legislation may be necessary to bring State practice into line with Charles Evans Hughes's opinion.

We doubt if new legislation is necessary or desirable. Certainly Senator Miller Bonner's suggestion that we revise the law so that only qualified voters may be eligible for jury duty would seem to be far enough to go. The Advertiser's opinion is that the matter can be safely entrusted to the jury commissions of the counties and the lawyers practicing at the bar.

We do not anticipate serious difficulties. Everybody knows that there are hundreds of Negroes in Alabama who are qualified by native intelligence and personal character to serve on a jury drawn to hear any cause. They are as well qualified for jury service as any other citizens. They do not especially desire to be called for jury service and we have no doubt that colored men of this calibre and rank are naturally embarrassed by recent developments.

It is not in response to any demand from them that the Supreme Court has nullified the action of the oathbound courts of the sovereign State of Alabama.

Nevertheless the great majority of Negroes are not yet prepared for the responsibilities of jury service, and for the information of Mr. Charles Evans Hughes The Advertiser will here say upon its own responsibility that the great majority of Negroes in Alabama are not likely to be summoned for jury duty in future. If they are the respectable practitioners at the bar on both sides of a cause will strike their names.

Finally and in conclusion: The Advertiser does not believe that if the 12 Apostles, returned to life, should declare the Scottsboro infants guilty, the Supreme Court of the United States would affirm the verdict.

The Advertiser does not believe that the Supreme Court of the United States would affirm any verdict of guilty against these puling infants.

The Advertiser believes that the State of Alabama should resolutely prosecute these sucklings to the bitter end! It believes that this sovereign State should at last have its way. If these sucklings are innocent they should be acquitted in an Alabama court.

If they are guilty they should be convicted in an Alabama court, if it takes 100 years to convict them!

After which the Governor of Alabama, whoever he may be at that time, may properly take into account certain extenuating circumstances and act in his own wisdom to save these sucklings from the supreme sacrifice.

It would be weak, apologetic and cowardly for Alabama to back down now!

Therefore, we hope that Thomas E. Knight, Jr., as weary as he may be of these nasty cases, will pursue them to the very end. Let Alabama continue to drop these sucklings into the laps of the ponderous, querulous old men who quaver aimlessly in the chambers of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The dignity of a self-respecting State can demand no less.

WILMINGTON, N. C.
NEWS
APR 5 1935

Editorial Comment From Other Angles

EPOCHAL DECISION
(The Charlotte Observer)

Attorney General Seawell makes no unlikely prophecy in contending that the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the celebrated case of the negroes tried in Scottsboro, Ala., opens the way for unlimited appeals to that tribunal in view of the finding that in this particular case, negroes were excluded from the jury as they are customarily in the South.

The Supreme Court three years ago reversed the findings of guilt of the defendants on the ground that at that time, they had been denied their right to obtain counsel.

The latest reversal, pivoting upon the point that negro jurymen had been deliberately and systematically denied the right of service in this case, opens, of course, a wide range of involvements in respect to racial distinctions in the South.

And while our negro element has desisted generally from claiming its rights in such jury service in our courts in the past, this decision will unavoidably inspire them with new determinations to claim such as the court now clearly invests them with, and in the event of denial, adverse verdicts rendered in such cases as their people may be involved in the courts of the State may give the Unitd States Supreme Court an abundance of other similar instances.

Charlotte, N. C., News
April 2, 1935

Constitution vs. Local Customs.

The supreme court has set aside the death sentences imposed by an Alabama court upon two of the Scottsboro Negroes and has ordered a new trial for them. Its reasons are simple and not to be misunderstood: "We think," read Chief Justice Hughes,

> ". . . the evidence that no Negro had been called for jury service in Jackson county for a generation established that there had been discrimination. We find no justification for excluding Negroes from the trial jury."

This is a disturbing opinion. The fact is that in by far the greater part of the South Negroes are not called for jury duty. It might be shameful, but it is true; and being true it would seem to suggest grounds on which to perfect any number of appeals from convictions rendered at the hands of all-white juries.

Which would crystallize an issue that, notwithstanding the Scottsboro case and the fallibility of justice generally, had much better be left in a state of flux. No great constitutional principle is involved, merely the obnoxious 14th amendment which was designed not so much to better the status of the Negro as to subjugate a defeated enemy, the South. Section 2 of that amendment, apportioning representation in congress, is ignored by tacit agreement yet more and more Negroes are voting and the matter is adjusting itself. Time and the increasing understanding between the two races of the South will eventually settle the question of jury duty. Until then, let sleeping dogs lie.

SCOTTSBORO RULING DISTURBS THE SOUTH

4-7-35

Move to Put Negroes on Jury Lists in Alabama Follows Supreme Court Decision.

NEW TRIAL IS DISLIKED

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., April 5.—Symphony Orchestra, and who, with a group of Negro friends in the right and wrong of the matter of Southern newspapers and the Thirty-six hours after the United evening dress, occupied the stage these Alabamians undoubtedly had ambiguity of the first statements States Supreme Court ordered new boxes as honor guests of the asso- a certain satisfaction and relief in issued by officials. In so far as the Scottsboro case itself is concerned, the guilt or innocence of the Negroes long since has ceased to be the paramount issue in the minds of most Alabamians.

The real question is whether there is to be a spectacle of defeat for communism and of punishment for rape. That circumstances make such a spectacle necessary to the social stability of this section, in spite of the fact that Samuel Leibowitz, counsel for the Negroes, has dissociated himself from the International Labor Defense and that the crime is doubtful, is the inflexible if misguided conviction of many Alabamians who will insist that a fresh start be made now in the business of getting the accused men to the electric chair.

Governor's Action.

Prompt action by Governor Bibb Graves to have the names of Negroes placed in Alabama jury boxes in conformity with the decision and his statement that "Alabama is going to observe the supreme law of America" are being taken as fresh examples of a political realism and an executive courage which have made him one of the strongest Governors in Alabama's history. Nearly all daily newspapers in the State gave the announcement a leading place on their front pages.

Birmingham papers are unanimous in praise. Although there has not been time yet to estimate the general reaction, indications are that the statement gives Alabamians a clue to which they are quite likely to respond, in spite of efforts on the part of some politicians to seek new devices against bona fide admission of the Negro to jury service.

Thus far, Southern comment on the Supreme Court decision runs more to the general than to the particular implications in the matter of admitting Negroes to jury service. Although there are many suggestions that the subterfuges and legal fictions employed heretofore to exclude Negroes will have to be replaced now with other devices to accomplish the same end, more thoughtful opinion, particularly in the press, inclines to a belief that the decision must be accepted in dead earnest and that Negroes must be admitted to jury duty henceforth in Southern courts if convictions are to stand on appeal to the highest court in the land.

Views of the Press.

That the change in Southern practice will not be as revolutionary in what it calls for or what it threatens as some Southerners may fear, is the opinion of The Birmingham News. Pointing out that Negroes serve already on Federal juries in Alabama and that they are included in jury rolls and sometimes drawn for service in State courts in some counties, The News thinks the conclusion inescapable "that Alabama will have to take steps to correct the situation criticized by the Supreme Court wherever it holds true. The court's opinion unquestionably calls for remedial action in those counties where Negroes are excluded from the jury rolls."

Long before last Monday's decision the matter of admitting Negroes to juries had been under discussion in the South and many voices were being lifted in favor of it. Not only are the ideas of Southern white people changing but the Negro himself is continually improving and many who would have held him unfit for the duties and rights of citizenship a decade or so ago consider him qualified today. It is safe to suggest that the South is not half as shocked at the prospect of Negro jurors as it is at the threat of another Scottsboro trial.

How Much to Rejoice

The Scottsboro victory in the Supreme Court last week is significant because it virtually orders every Southern state to revise its jury lists so as to include colored people as well as white.

The AFRO-AMERICAN sees in this a step forward, but it is not yet ready to admit that this solves the problem of even-handed justice.

To place one colored man or even two on a jury list of sixty or one hundred might comply with the Supreme Court ruling, but, after all, counsel for either side in a single case may exercise the right to strike off names and easily eliminate from any jury one or two persons.

Had the Supreme Court said, as it could have said, that equal protection of the law in this case means that jury lists should contain the names of colored persons in proportion to the population, that would have been a different matter.

It did not say that, so a real honest-to-goodness reform of the South's jury system is not likely to follow from the Scottsboro ruling.

I. L. D. Rival Asks To See 'The Boys'

A communication was transmitted yesterday to the office of Atyt. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael from Dr. George S. Hayes, vice-chairman of the American Scottsboro Committee, Inc., of New York, which has been endeavoring to keep the Scottsboro case defendants from remaining under the influence of the International Labor Defense, stating he wants to interview the two Scottsboro case prisoners now confined at Kilby Prison.

He said he would like to see these two men, Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, Saturday morning during a stopover he will make in Montgomery en route to Tuskege, and asked permission to talk to them, though he did not state the purpose of the interview.

Advising that it has no authority to issue a permit to anyone to visit any inmate of Kilby or any other prison in Alabama, the Attorney General's office told Dr. Hayes that such permission is given by the State Convict Department; suggested that he apply for it there, and added that he should have no difficulty in obtaining the permit desired.

In addition to being vice-chairman of the American Scottsboro Committee, Inc., Dr. Hayes is also secretary of the Federated Council of Churches in America, it is stated.

NEGROES SUMMONED FOR GEORGIA JURIES

40 Names on List for Criminal Cases

NORFOLK, Ga., April 9. —(INS)— Following the recent supreme court ruling on the "Scottsboro Negroes" case, judges of both corporation courts today ordered that the names of 40 negroes be added on the jury rolls for trial of criminal cases.

The jury rolls of the circuit court and the court of law and chancery, which deal with civil matters, were not affected by the order.

Negroes have been barred from jury duty in state courts here since reconstruction days.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
APR 2 1935

The Supreme Court's Ruling On The Scottsboro Cases

Again the United States Supreme Court has set aside the verdicts in the Scottsboro cases and ordered new trials for two of the defendants. In the other review of the cases by the Supreme Court the verdicts imposed on all the defendants were annulled on the ground that the Negroes had been unconstitutionally deprived of the aid of counsel in preparation for their first trial. There was a dissenting opinion on that occasion.

In the latest review the verdicts were set aside on the ground that the defendants had been deprived of constitutional rights because they were indicted by a Grand Jury and convicted by a trial jury from which members of their race had been "systematically excluded." This time there was no dissenting opinion, although one member of the court, Justice McReynolds, took no part in the case. Thus we have the United States Supreme Court saying to the Alabama courts, in an opinion unanimously concurred in by all the justices participating, that trials of Negroes in this state where members of their race are excluded from jury duty, are illegal. Chief Justice Hughes, who read the opinion, said that the absence of Negroes from the jury rolls should have caused the trial court to quash the indictments.

This opinion by the highest tribunal in the land raises a question for Alabama which is far greater than the immediate issue involved in the Scottsboro cases. According to the Supreme Court's ruling, no case involving Negro defendants which has been tried in Alabama in a court from which Negroes were excluded as jurors has been legal. The court, of course, did not make reference to any other cases; but it plainly follows from the opinion in these cases that the court would consider unconstitutional any trial involving a Negro in which members of his race were excluded from jury duty.

The conclusion is inescapable, it seems to The News, that Alabama will have to take steps to correct the situation criticized by the Supreme Court wherever it holds true. If this should not be done, every case, either of a major or a minor nature, involving a Negro defendant, hereafter tried in Alabama, could conceivably be appealed to the United States Supreme Court, and each conviction set aside, where Negroes are excluded from the jury rolls.

Negroes have not only been included on jury rolls in Alabama, but they have in some instances actually served as jurors. Negroes have served as jurors in federal courts in this state. Probably they have served, or at least they have been eligible to serve, on juries in state courts in some tionably calls for remedial action in those counties where Negroes are excluded from the jury rolls of change of current practice in Alabama necessitated by the court's ruling.

Lynchings-1935

Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

5037

COLUMBIA, S. C.
STATE
NOV 21 1935

Again the Scottsboro Case.

We have long been wondering what Alabama really thinks about the Scottsboro case. So very little has been publicly said about it there, outside of the court rooms and off the political stump. One is permitted, however, to draw some conclusions from reading between the lines.

In the introduction to a special article on this case appearing in The New York Times, and written by John Temple Graves, 2nd, son of the celebrated Southern orator and editor of that name, we find this:

New indictments in the Scottsboro case point to an early resumption of all the noise, bitterness, notoriety and expense that attended the earlier trials. Alabamians still are divided on the merits of the case, but of one mind in the wish to be rid of the thing for better or for worse.

There is no present disposition in the press or anywhere else to debate the guilt or innocence of the defendants any longer. Comment everywhere runs now to regret that the ugly business must be brought forth again and to hope that this time it will be settled permanently one way or another. To meet the decision of the supreme court a Negro sat on the grand jury that found the new indictments.

Tom Knight, who was attorney general at the time of the last trials and who conducted the prosecution in that capacity, has since been elected lieutenant governor, largely as a result of prestige won in opposing "Communists and New Yorkers" allied against him in the case. Detailed as special prosecutor for the new trials, he is said to have gubernatorial ambitions which new triumphs in the Scottsboro case would serve handsomely. Those close to him are convinced that he believes absolutely in the guilt of the Negroes, who are charged with assaults upon two white girls.

In the opinion of many Alabamians the prime thing to be considered today is whether the International Labor Defense shall be permitted to win a famous victory and exploit it to further the Communist movement among Southern Negroes. These Alabamians would be well satisfied if the defense could be taken over by some well-known Southern lawyer or lawyers and an acquittal won under such command. They do not believe acquittal would be wise if the International Labor Defense were in a position to claim credit for it and they do not believe an acquittal will be possible if the defense is conducted by this or any other group identified with what has come to be known as "outside interference in Alabama's affairs." This is in all probability the essentially realist attitude toward the case.

From the very outset the tactics of the spokesmen for the International Labor Defense and other Northern organizations ostensibly rallying to the defense of those accused Alabama Negroes, as well as the conduct of the Northern lawyers sent down here to defend them in their several trials, increased instead of lessened the jeopardy of the defendants. Those people, seemingly for publicity purposes for themselves, not only intensified the already existing race feeling, but created new and bitter prejudices. No policy could have been adopted better calculated to insure the conviction of those defendants by Alabama juries, than the policy pursued by these "outsiders" who injected themselves into the case in the role of defenders. What crass stupidity to assail Alabama juries and judges and courts while the lives of the accused rested upon unprejudiced action by the courts!

Prejudice may be condemned; it may be bitterly denounced. And all that is said against it may be true, but it cannot be removed by such methods. One wonders whether the International Labor Defense and its agents were really concerned in saving the lives of those defendants?

John Temple Graves of Alabama says: "Alabamians would be well satisfied if the defense could be taken over by some well-known Southern lawyer or lawyers and an acquittal won under such command. They do not believe acquittal would be wise if the International Labor Defense were in position to claim credit for it." So it seems that because of these new prejudices created the International Labor Defense has become more conspicuous as a defendant in the dock than the six Negroes, and to prevent its triumph it is regarded as "unwise" to set the Negroes free.

Of course, it is deplorable that "expediency" should ever be considered instead of "justice." But when bitterness has been created that is what happens. Nowhere is it easy to hold the scales of justice evenly balanced; when prejudice gets a foothold it is impossible. It is most deplorable that exploitation of persons or organizations should be placed above human lives or justice.

CHARLESTON, W. VA.
MAIL
NOV 29 1935

Involving the Issue

For persons who had hoped for a calm and ordered justice in the impending trial of the Scottsboro case defendants, there is not much reassurance in the reports that have come recently from Alabama. From Birmingham, a correspondent of the New York Times writes of this cause celebre that present signs point to "an early resumption of all the noise, bitterness, notoriety and expense that attended the earlier trials" and that Alabamans generally, although divided on the merits of the case, are "of one mind in the wish to be rid of the thing for better or for worse."

The United States supreme court twice has intervened to set aside sentences of death because of the denial of constitutional safeguards by the state courts of Alabama. The Times correspondent continues:

In the opinion of many Alabamans the prime thing to be considered today is whether the International Labor Defense shall be permitted to win a famous victory and exploit it, to further the Communist movement among southern Negroes. These Alabamans would be well satisfied if the defense could be taken over by some well known southern lawyer or lawyers and an acquittal won under such command. They do not believe acquittal would be wise if the International Labor Defense were in a position to claim credit for it and they do not believe an acquittal will be possible if the defense is conducted by this or any other group identified as "outside interference in Alabama's affairs."

West Virginians, who occasionally get a taste of outside interference in the mining regions, may share the dislike of the Alabamans for the way in which New York communists have capitalized the Scottsboro case. Nevertheless, it has to be admitted that "'no well known Southern lawyer" so far has come forward to take over the defense, and had the International Labor organization not intervened, several, if not all, of the defendants might have been executed under a procedure that the supreme court has condemned. The ominous aspect of the whole situation is the continued tendency on both sides to lose sight of the simple issue of justice involved and to make these seven Negroes, charged with criminal attacks upon two women, symbols either of capitalistic oppression or "outside interference."

KANSAS CITY, MO.
TIMES
NOV 23 1935

Alabama Resents Interference.

Reports that have come from Alabama in connection with the new indictments in the Scottsboro case are far from reassuring. A correspondent of the New York Times writes from Birmingham that present signs point to "an early resumption of all the noise, bitterness, notoriety and expense that attended the earlier trials" and that Alabamans generally, although divided on the merits of the case, are "of one mind in the wish to be rid of the thing for better or for worse."

The correspondent then continues with respect to a case in which the United States supreme court has twice intervened, to set aside sentences of death because of the denial of constitutional safeguards by the state courts of Alabama.

In the opinion of many Alabamans the prime thing to be considered today is whether the International Labor Defense shall be permitted to win a famous victory and exploit it, to further the Communist movement among southern Negroes. These Alabamans would be well satisfied if the defense could be taken over by some well known southern lawyer or lawyers and an acquittal won under such command. They do not believe acquittal would be wise if the International Labor Defense were in a position to claim credit for it and they do not believe an acquittal will be possible if the defense is conducted by this or any other group identified as "outside interference in Alabama's affairs."

Many outsiders will share the dislike that such Alabamans feel for the way in which New York Communists have sought to capitalize on this case. In all fairness, however, it must be admitted that so far no "well known southern lawyer" seems to have come forward to take over the defense and had the International Labor organization not intervened, several, if not all, of the defendants might have been executed under a procedure that the supreme court has condemned. The ominous aspect of the whole situation is the continued tendency on both sides to lose sight of the simple issue of justice involved and to make these seven Negroes, charged with criminal attacks upon two women, symbols either of capitalistic oppression or "outside interference."

ROCKFORD, ILL.
REGISTER REPUBLIC
NOV 23 1935

SCOTTSBORO AGAIN.

The nine defendants in the famous Scottsboro case have been indicted again. This time organization of the grand jury which returned the indictments was slightly different from the one which voted the original charges, for one of the jurors was colored. He helped vote the new charges.

A ruling of the United States Supreme court in the case hit the "systematic" exclusion of colored men from grand and trial juries in Alabama and made it necessary to reindict the defendants. Inclusion of the single colored juror was not a voluntary act of Alabama.

It will be interesting now to see what disposition Alabama will make of the case against the colored defendants. Their case has attracted wide public attention. Many have considered the previous conduct of the case a miscarriage of justice.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM

NOV 18 1935

Scottsboro Slants

THE celebrated Scottsboro case, getting off to a new start, may move faster. Conviction of the accused Negroes, net result of more than four years' fighting in the courts, was invalidated by the United States Supreme Court on the ground that Negroes had been systematically excluded from the grand and trial juries. A Negro served on the grand jury which has just returned new indictments. All is ready for rewarming old evidence.

It is hard to discern any gain to civilization in the amendment to the Scottsboro technique. One Negro could not, of course, affect the will of 17 white members of the new grand jury, where a majority is enough. Inclusion of a Negro in a new trial jury would be unlikely to affect the verdict. Again we speak of practice, not theory.

The Scottsboro appeals and the Supreme Court decision have established obedience to the letter of the United States Constitution. What is obedience to the letter worth? Meantime the Scottsboro prisoners have had a long wait. The best they can say of that is that it leaves them still among the living.

In addition to forcing the inclusion of Negroes in juries all over the South, these Scottsboro proceedings may yield another by-product. We note that Mr. Horton, the Alabama jurist who conducted the first trial, is under serious consideration for a seat on the Federal bench in succession to the late Judge Grubb. We hope he gets it. We are sorry Alabama's Senators have not endorsed him.

He bore himself at the Scottsboro trial in a civilized and judicial manner to bring credit to his profession and his state. As a result he was defeated of re-election by a small margin. It would be a very happy joke on the unbalanced elements that defeated if they have merely succeeded in kicking him far upstairs.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
MORNING POST

NOV 15 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASES.

The presence of a negro on the Alabama grand jury which brought new indictments against the nine negro defendants in the noted Scottsboro cases surely presented a novelty in court procedure in that state. Possibly, in reconstruction days negroes were permitted to perform jury services in Alabama, but certainly not in recent years. The fact that the prejudice was laid aside to the extent of placing a black man on the grand jury evidently was due to the intense desire to bring the accused men to trial.

The Supreme Court of the United States had set aside the verdicts in the cases because of the systematic exclusion of negroes from jury service in the state. Therefore, the exclusion heretofore practiced was set aside sufficiently to admit one grand juror of the proscribed race. That, evidently, was felt, to be sufficient to comply with the Supreme Court ruling.

The Scottsboro cases, which have been pending in the courts of Alabama for five years, grew out of an alleged attack by the negroes on two women. Because of the reputed character of the women, doubt was felt of the guilt of the accused and their plight aroused sympathy. Their cause was taken up by some outside interests and handled by them until the final decision was reached by the Federal Supreme Court. One of the women who were prosecutors in the original trial has disappeared. The outcome seems to hang on the credit given to a single woman who claims to have been attacked when both she and the accused were permitted as free riders on a freight train.

The doubt of the guilt of the accused men ed to the effort in their behalf. However, having once started to prosecute the black men and having encountered rebuffs in the effort, the desire to convict and execute them apparently became more intense. It is possible that the way has been cleared for a conviction and execution, though the character of the prosecuting witness would seem to warrant a doubt. That there has been so great delay, and so many obstructions have been interposed, appears to have increased the desire to put the blacks to death. The doubt attending the case may not be sufficient to save them, if they be not guilty. Therein is their peril.

NOW THAT THE SCOTTSBORO defendants have been reindicted by the grand jury—with one Negro juror—the business of a new trial will doubtless proceed with all possible speed. Since the available constitutional avenues of relief have been exhausted, the fate of the nine Negroes will be decided by the State of Alabama. This being true, it is necessary for the defense to put up the strongest possible case. If they are to be defended by a Northern lawyer—and the difficulties in the way of getting competent Southern counsel seem to be enormous—such a lawyer should be unhampered by friction extraneous to the case itself. A very large number of persons have been interested in the fate of the defendants, and numerous groups have been active in attempting to save them from the electric chair. It is hardly necessary to review the past history of unpleasant quarrels among these groups, all of them working for the same end but some of them unable to endure the others. What is obviously needed now is teamwork and concentration on the immediate task of freeing the Negroes from a charge of which there is every reason to believe them innocent.

COLUMBIA, MO.
MISSOURIAN

NOV 20 1935

Scottsboro's Pride and Prejudice

IN Scottsboro, Ala., new indictments charging criminal attack were returned against nine Negro defendants who are charged with attacking two white women aboard a freight train in Jackson County on March 25, 1931. A Negro was sitting on the Grand Jury for the first time in the county's history.

The first three trials were only the beginning. The Supreme Court has at last handled the case but only decreeing that Alabama give the Negroes another hearing and also admit Negroes to the jury panel. Alabama has at no time shown disposition to give the Negroes any quarter. In spite of the most doubtful evidence and witnesses, Alabama convicted and sentenced them all to death.

One bit of irony about the affair is that it all happened back in 1931. And, closer now to five than four years, the case is still dragging along. For over four years nine Negro boys have been in Alabama prisons under sentence of death.

At no time in the case was the evidence against them stronger than the word of two white women of questionable character.

If not stopped soon this affair may go on for many years. Soon, the public will get tired of reading about Alabama's pride and prejudice.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.
TIMES

NOV 20 1935

The Scottsboro Case

DISCUSSING the Scottsboro case, in his editorial correspondence to The New York Times, John Temple Graves 2d puts forward a timely and sensible suggestion.

There is no longer in Alabama, he finds, a disposition to argue the guilt or innocence of the defendants. Many Alabamians, he thinks, would be well satisfied to see the Negro youths acquitted, provided their defense were conducted by some well known Southern lawyer or lawyers, so that the victory could not be used to exploit Communism among the Negroes.

The point is well made. Forgetting the past of this case, it is time for the defense to be placed in the hands of lawyers whose very presence will not excite animosity in the minds of Alabama people.

Lynchings- 1935
& Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5038

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
JOURNAL

APR 6 1935

Alabama the Real Defendant

Almost, it might be surmised, the United States Supreme Court has grave disbelief in the guilt of the Negroes who have come to be known as the Scottsboro boys. Twice this great tribunal has sent back the Scottsboro cases for new trials. Both reversals, it is true, were on technical grounds. But it begins to look as though the Justices at Washington had heard attentively from some source the old yarn about the man who was thrown out of the dance hall three times, finally remarking he was on the point of concluding they didn't want him in there.

The State of Alabama may well take note. For the Scottsboro case goes back now on the ruling that there has been systematic exclusion of Negroes from jury service in that State. The reversal is of immediate significance to the defenders of these Scottsboro boys, but it reaches much farther than this. It serves notice on the States that no color line is to be drawn in the selection of citizens for jury service.

To be sure, this in itself is not sufficient reason for suspecting the Supreme Court's doubt of the Scottsboro boys' guilt. But it does betoken an impression that all is not well with judicial procedure and the defense of justice in Alabama.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

APR 3 1935

Scottsboro Justice

THE Supreme Court of the United States has ordered a new trial for one of the Scottsboro defendants on the ground that the exclusion of Negroes from the jury which tried his case and placed a noose around his neck, was in defiance of the principle of equal protection of the law for all.

Chief Justice Hughes declared that it has long been held that the exclusion of qualified persons of African descent from jury service because of their race or color rendered the court proceedings invalid.

The charge had been made, Chief Justice Hughes said, that qualified Negroes had been arbitrarily and systematically excluded from the jury in the Scottsboro case, wherein a number of Negro youths were accused of assaulting a white woman, and the absence of Negroes from the jury rolls should have caused the trial court to quash the indictments.

Any other ruling by the Supreme Court would have been difficult to compose with Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment, which provides that no State shall make or enforce "any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States."

The exclusion of qualified Negroes from jury service is an abridgment of the privilege of American citizens to do jury duty, as well as an abridgment of the far more vital privilege of Negro defendants to be tried by a jury of their peers.

DURHAM, N. C.
HERALD

APR 6 1935

NEGRO JURORS IN THE SOUTH NOW SOMETHING INEVITABLE

(Raleigh Times)

Comments from a number of southern states, including North Carolina, show that the decision of the supreme court in the Scottsboro case, which went off on the point of Negroes being denied the privilege of jury service, is taken at its face value as a new problem.

It is unfortunate, however, that a number of official commentators attempt a kind of plea of confession and avoidance by pointing out that in their states there is no overt attempt by law to disqualify the Negro citizen from performance of jury duty. Theoretically, they insist, Negroes have the same right to serve on juries as they would have if white. Suppose, then, it happens that they do not serve? How is the federal constitution violated?

All such comment is no better than specious window dressing with argument. Its essential futility is shown by the fact that the supreme court itself recognized that the absence of Negroes from jury panels was not an open defiance of the constitution but an evasion of its provisions. Whereupon the supreme court took judicial notice of the prevailing customs by which the constitution was evaded in this respect and cut through it with sure strokes to say that it in reality violated the constitution. This talk and comment, therefore, is worth no more than that of a lawyer who criticizes a definite adverse decision after he has lost his case.

COLUMBUS, O.
CITIZEN

APR 2 1935

JUSTICE

EIGHT United States Supreme Court justices united in striking down the conviction of two Scottsboro defendants. The court held that Negroes had been illegally barred from acting as jurymen in the trials. Alabama now must either dismiss the famous cases or re-indict and re-try the defendants with Negro jurymen on the panels.

This is the high court's second rebuke to the prosecutors of these Negro youths and their companions. In November, 1932, the court ordered retrials on the ground that Alabama had denied the defendants due process on other grounds.

In these two opinions the Supreme Court has done much more than save the lives of obscure boys. It has done more than hearten the faith of 15,000,000 American Negroes in their country's courts. It has helped reenforce the very foundations of the Republic.

In his first inaugural address Thomas Jefferson said that equal and exact justice to all men of whatever state or persuasion, through trials by juries impartially selected, forms the surest bulwark against anti-republican tendencies. This is even truer today than in 1801.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

APR 8 1935

Negroes o Alabama Juries

With becoming ace, Governor Graves o Alabama has followed the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Scottsboro case with a suggestion to the circuit judges and solicitors of the State that the jury lists be revised to include Negroes. At the same time he announces that he will ask the legislature when it convenes on April 30 to cover the dumping and refilling of Alabama jury boxes. "Whether we like the decisions (of the Supreme Court) or not," the Governor states, "it is the patriotic duty of every citizen and the sworn duty of every public officer to accept and uphold the law in letter and in spirit."

No one need be apprehensive that this change will bring Negro majorities to juries even in those communities where the colored population outnumbers the white four to one. Negro illiteracy in Alabama is 26.6 per cent and the franchise is extended to an even smaller percentage of the population. Moreover to the necessity of being a voter it may well be that such a requirement as the payment of a poll tax will be added for qualification as a juror. Nonetheless, if it happens, that occasionally one man of eleven on a jury dealing with Negro cases is himself a Negro, it will be a gain. Slowly as the illiteracy disappears and Negro schooling improves under national, if not local, initiation and financing, the numbers are likely to increase. It is the entering wedge of the first few men that is sure to be the hardest to drive.

TOLEDO, O.
NEWS BEE

APR 2 1935

Justice

EIGHT United States Supreme Court justices united in striking down the conviction of two Scottsboro defendants. The court held that Negroes had been illegally barred from acting as jurymen in the trials. Alabama now must either dismiss the famous cases or reindict and retry the defendants with Negro jurymen on the panels.

This is the high court's second rebuke to the prosecutors of these Negro youths and their companions. In November, 1932, the court ordered retrials on the ground that Alabama had denied the defendants due process on other grounds.

In these two opinions the Supreme Court has done much more than save the lives of obscure boys. It has done more than hearten the faith of 15 million American Negroes in their country's courts. It has helped reinforce the very foundations of the republic.

In his first inaugural address Jefferson said that equal and exact justice to all men of whatever state or persuasion, through trials by juries impartially selected, forms the surest bulwark against anti-republican tendencies. This is even truer today than in 1801.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
Transcript

APR 4 1935

The South's Dilemma

Comment by two Southern attorneys general upon the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Scottsboro case presents a sharp difference of opinion. Attorney General William McGraw of Texas is quoted as saying: "Texas statutes and the conduct of criminal trials are in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court. Generally when Negroes are drawn for service a suitable excuse is presented and always accepted. Texans have demonstrated perfect ability to properly control the Negro question within the Constitution." On the other hand, Attorney General A. P. Staples of Virginia expresses the opinion that "If the Supreme Court has held it necessary to have Negroes on juries, chances are we shall have to take cognizance of it."

In the light of the decision of the Court it would seem that the Virginian takes the sensible view. Chief Justice Hughes wrote in one portion of the opinion that "although the State statute defining the qualifications of jurors may be fair on its face, the constitutional provision affords protection against action of the State through its administrative officers in effecting the prohibited discrimination"; and elsewhere: "For this long-continued, unvarying and wholesale exclusion of Negroes from jury service we find no justification consistent with the constitutional mandate." The Texas attorney general admits that there has been long continued and wholesale exclusion of Negroes from jury service in his State.

But the claim is made that the Texas procedure is within the Constitution. When Negroes are drawn for service a suitable excuse is generally presented and always accepted. To excuse a man from jury duty is obviously not unconstitutional. But if administrative officers accept excuses in such manner as to draw the color line when it comes to jury service, it is conceivable that the Supreme Court would find, should a Texas case be brought before it, that there was no justification under the Constitution for this wholesale exclusion of Negroes.

Attorney General A. A. F. Seabury of North Carolina says the present decision "gives us pause for thought." That is a reasonable view. It suggests dispassionate approach to the subject. The way out of the difficulty may be found in the fact that Southern States, in the light of the opinion of the Court, are not under compulsion to accept for jury service Negroes who are not qualified. The Court threw emphasis on the evidence that there were such Negroes who would have been available for service in the Scottsboro case had they been called. The fixing of the qualifications is within the hands of the States, so long as racial discrimination is not involved. Raising the standards would not keep Negroes of education and ability from the jury box, but it would tend to keep out undesirables both black and white. The South in this matter might set an example to the North. The problem of finding jurors of the right sort is not sectional.

Chicago First I. L. D. District To Respond to Call to Build $20,000 Scottsboro Fund

With $300 wired from the Chicago district of the International Labor Defense, in response to the appeal of the National Executive Committee of the organization, and $30 from other sources, the Scottsboro defense fund of the I. L. D. rose yesterday to $1,852.

Chicago was the first district of the I. L. D. to answer the call to build a $20,000 defense fund to defeat the efforts of the authorities to re-indict the Scottsboro Boys, bring them to a new lynch trial and railroad them once again to sentences of death in the electric chair.

Immediate steps being prepared by the I.L.D. to fight the lynchers, who have so far not only refused to free the Scottsboro boys, but are busy whipping up lynch sentiment against them, following the second reversal of the convictions against Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris by the U. S. Supreme Court, are the development of a mass campaign around the slogans of "No re-indictments, no new trials, immediate, unconditional freedom for the nine innocent Scottsboro Negro boys."

At the same time, the I.L.D. attorneys, Osmond K. Fraenkel and Benjamin J. Davis Jr., are working out legal steps in the case. These will require thousands of dollars for expenses in printing of legal papers, court charges and expenses. The daily outlay in connection with these steps is very heavy. Thousands of dollars are needed immediately.

Rush them in immediately to the national office of the International Labor Defense, Room 610, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

Total received yesterday, $330: —Chicago I.L.D., $300; Cleveland I.L.D., $20; Buffalo District Communist Party, $10. Still to be raised in $20,000 fund drive, $18,248

Sylva, N. C., Journal
April 4, 1935

NEGROES AS JURORS

Chief Justice Hughes, who was defeated for President in 1916 by Woodrow Wilson, read a decision of the United States Supreme Court, in the Scottsboro case, the other day, that will place all Southern States in a dilemma. The court said, in effect that the Negroes, twice convicted of the rape of white girls, must be given a new trial, because there were no Negroes in the panel from which the jury that convicted them, in Jackson county, Alabama, was drawn.

Again, after we had thought that things had pretty much righted themselves in the South, as concerns the amity between the races, the post War Between the States amendments to the Constitution, which were, almost of us down here verily believe, illegally adopted and forced upon us, rise up to bedevil us. There are no laws prohibiting Negroes from serving on juries, but Southern officials have generally made a practice of ignoring the Negro race when placing names in the jury box; and it is this that the Supreme Court drives up as a peg upon which to hang its decision granting the Scottsboro Negro rapists a new trial.

Hereafter, when a Negro is on trial in any Southern State, he can raise the same point as grounds for a new trial or in a motion to quash a bill of indictment for any trial, no matter how grave or how trivial.

That Negroes will be generally placed on juries in the South is inconceivable. Yet, we have the Supreme Court telling us that unless they are, there is the ever-present danger of all Negro criminals defeating the sentences imposed, through appeal to the United States Supreme Court. Taking it by and large, we fear that the court of Judge Lynch has been given its biggest boost in 50 years, by that decision. Watch and see if it doesn't turn out that way.

There is no apparent way to get the bedeviling, unconstitutional amendments out of the Constitution. International labor organization, Reds, and the Society for the Advancement of Colored People, all of which are foreign to the South, wont allow us to continue them, and Judge Lynch, who has been impeached of late years, may again be elevated to the bench. There is no appeal from his decisions. There would be no difficulty in white people and Negroes living amicably together in the South, if outsiders would but let Southern Negroes and Southern white people, who know and understand each other, work it out alone.

It is outside interference that has caused practically all the race problem in the South.

No matter what comes or goes, the white men of the South are going to protect the white women from black fiends; and if trial in the court of Judge Lynch, revolting to sensibilities as it is, is the only recourse, they will see to it that his courts operate.

Athens, Ala., Democrat
April 11, 1935

THE WISE STEP

Gov. Graves, in our opinion, acted wisely in immediately calling on the judges of the state to see that the fiat of the United States supreme court as to the names of negroes being put in the jury box is observed. It was the sensible thing to do and the governor did it in a forthright, courageous way.

We all know that these names in the past have been omitted from the jury rolls; we now know that under the supreme court's ruling any negro's conviction could be set aside if we continue to disregard the decision of the court in the Scottsboro case. Hence, there is nothing left for the jury commissioners to do but put the names of some worthy negroes in the jury boxes. Few believe they will serve on the petit juries as attorneys will likely exercise their right to strike them off.

Athens, Ga., Banner-Herald
April 10, 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the Scottsboro cases, in reversing the Alabama court in which two negroes were convicted of criminal assault on a white woman, is indeed, perplexing. The ruling of the highest court in the country did not touch on the guilt of the convicted, but based its decision on the fact that no member of the race of the criminals were members of the jury before which they were tried.

The Supreme Court has set a precedent and a standard for trials in the future. If this decision is to remain a law, then it occurs to us that the juries must be made up of all nationalities in case foreign born are brought before the state courts for trial on charges of violation of the laws of the respective states. The decision was purely one of racial question and not of guilt. If these negroes were proved to be guilty, and, they were by a jury made up of white citizens supposed to be of good character and integrity, certainly the verdict of the state court should have been affirmed.

The Supreme Court judges, high and mighty, are all members of the white race. We do not presume that they were prejudiced against the trial jury, who were all white men, but if justice is to appertain, under the decision that no negroes were on the jury that convicted the Scottsboro criminals, it occurs to us that the same condition should exist on the Supreme Court of the United States.

Alabama.

5039

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Scottsboro Again

Alabama is getting ready for another legal lynching. A Jackson county grand jury includes in its list two Negroes. The world wonders whether or not these two Negroes, even though meeting the "letter" requirement of the law, harmonize with the spirit of our constitutional government. Black Dispatch

In other words, we question whether there was constitutional regularity practiced by Alabama when these two blacks landed on the jury list. We know that Attorney General Knight of Alabama, and his jury commission were guilty of "jury exclusion." Are they now guilty of "jury inclusion" not according to law? 11-16-35

It is common knowledge, and was exposed before the United States Supreme court, that in Morgan and Jackson County, Alabama, crude attempts were hurriedly made during the now famous Scottsboro cases, to falsify court records to show that Negroes were included in the jury lists. No one in official life of Alabama considered it wrong to "fix" a trial and violate their sworn oaths so long as the objective was to legally lynch Negroes. We wonder if the records are "fixed" this time.

Attorney General Knight, who is now the lieutenant governor, has just recently broken into print with the statement that the "inclusion of Negroes" this time would meet any constitutional question raised in previous trials of the Scottsboro boys. Oklahoma City

But even though by naming two Negroes, Knight may meet the mechanics of justice, we wonder whether the State of Alabama is meeting the spirit of justice in the retrial of Clarence Norris, Heywood Patterson, Roy Wright, Andy Wright, Willie Robertson, Olin Montgomery, Ozzie Powell and Charlie Weems?

Take, for example, the evidence. One of the girls who formerly alleged that these boys raped her, has repudiated her statement, and has made the allegation before thousands of people that she was lieing when she made the false charge. The other girl, Victoria Price, when the trial was held, offered such flimsy testimony that Judge James E. Horton, the presiding officer at the trial, set the death verdict of the jury aside, declaring the evidence of guilt insufficient.

Ask yourself this question: Do you believe that a learned judge would wilfully cast himself into political oblivion as in the case of Judge Horton, unless he had discovered some violent and revolting miscarriage of justice was about to happen, and for which he was unwilling to take moral responsibility? Unlike Pontius Pilate, Judge Horton did not believe he could conspire in the murder of helpless human beings and then wash the stain of guilt from his hands.

Thomas E. Knight aspires to be governor of Alabama. The basic shame in this picture rests in the fact that as his atrocious conduct and monstrous figure rise above the farcial trial, the populace applauds. Alabama gives public sanction not only to mob murder, but to legal lynching, and Thomas E. Knight knows this.

Scottsboro Boys See New Hope In Labor's Fight for Herndon

(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—Returning from a visit with the Scottsboro Boys in Jefferson County Jail, Birmingham, Anna Damon today reported the youths find renewed hope for their own release in the strength and breadth of the workers' campaign to free another Negro labor prisoner, Angelo Herndon.

"I was astonished at the knowledge the Scottsboro Boys, especially Heywood Patterson, have of the Herndon case," said Miss Damon, acting secretary of the International Labor Defense. She continued:

"Heywood has been corresponding with Angelo. Heywood told me, 'We didn't organize workers to fight for relief like Herndon did, but we know that, like him, we are in jail largely because of our color. We know that, like Herndon, we have been kept alive this far by the campaign of our friends in the I.L.D. and other workers' organizations. All us boys know that. We talk about it on Sundays. And we know that the I.L.D. and all the people will get us out yet, like they'll get Herndon out.'"

'Within the Law' Frame-Up

Miss Damon commented that it would take renewed efforts indeed, of "all the people" in the broadest mass campaign to save the Scottsboro boys now. For, she pointed out, they "are the victims of a new 'within-the-law' frame-up." The state of Alabama is striving to rush them to conviction by a "compliance" with the latest Supreme Court ruling which "still in spirit and in fact denies them justice."

The lone Negro on the Alabama jury which has just reindicted the youths is a sample of the state authorities' new technique, Miss Damon pointed out. Close to half of the state's population are Negroes, but the division of the jury was one Negro and seventeen white jurymen.

"Their lives are in graver danger now, perhaps, than ever before," she added. "Their morale is strikingly good, though they are tired, very tired of imprisonment, as one can well understand since several were taken as mere children and have grown up behind the bars."

Mass Support Needed

"Now, more than ever the case demands the united efforts of Negro and white trade unions, liberal groups, church people, all organizations."

Miss Damon went to Alabama after attending the habeas corpus hearing for Angelo Herndon, in Atlanta. With her in Atlanta were several of the Joint Committee to Aid the Angelo Herndon Defense which is broadly representative of trade unions and workers' defense organizations and political parties.

The decision in this procedure is expected soon. Should the habeas corpus writ be denied, Miss Damon announced, the defense will seek to have Herndon released on bail while the case is carried again to the United States Supreme Court.

Olin Montgomery Is Going Blind

Just before surrendering, Herndon spent some days with Mrs. Viola Montgomery, mother of Olin, the Scottsboro Boy. Several of the Herndon Committee also went to see Mrs. Montgomery and Mrs. Powell, the mother of Ozie Powell. Miss Damon made arrangements for both mothers to visit the boys in Alabama. One has not seen them for a year, the other for two years. Mrs. Powell is not well, but she pleaded to make the trip.

Olin soon will undergo an operation for the removal of an eye. It was affected at the time of his arrest; since then it has become almost sightless and the vision of his other eye is dimming too. Incarceration has aggravated the condition Miss Damon believes. She sent C. B. Powell, I.L.D. attorney in Alabama, to obtain permission for the operation to be performed by a specialist.

SCOTTSBORO HEARING SET FOR DECEMBER 16

Constitution

First of New Trials Slated January 6 Under New Court Order.

11-20-35

DECATUR, Ala., Nov. 19.—(AP)—Arraignment of the nine negro defendants in the "Scottsboro case" under new indictments charging them with attacking two white women was set for December 16, today by Judge W. W. Callahan, with the trials fixed for January 6, 1936. Ga.

The dates of the trials were announced after Judge Callahan had conferred by telephone with Lieutenant Governor Thomas E. Knight Jr., retained by the state as special prosecutor in the case that has been in the Alabama courts since 1931.

The new indictments, returned at Scottsboro last week by a grand jury that included one negro, Creed Conyers, charge each of the defendants with participating in alleged mass attacks on Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates in Jackson county March 25, 1931.

Lieutenant Governor Knight said in Montgomery on announcement of the dates, that Judge Callahan had agreed to postpone the trials in event a special session of the legislature was called before they were finished.

Governor Bibb Graves recently announced he would call the legislature into special session early next year, and it generally is believed in official circles the call will be for January 14.

This Knight said, would permit one trial at least, before he must return to Montgomery to preside over the senate in his capacity as lieutenant governor.

The new indictments were necessitated, if the negroes were to be brought to trial again, by a decision of the United States supreme court which last spring held in the case of Clarence Norris, then under death sentence, that negroes were "systematically excluded" from grand and trial juries in Jackson and Morgan counties.

Under Alabama procedure, the cases automatically revert from Jackson county to Morgan county, on reindictment, under a change of venue granted in March, 1933.

Norris was tried and convicted here in December, 1933, the week following the conviction and death sentence of Haywood Paterson.

Further trials then were postponed on motion of Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel for the negroes, who held further proceedings were useless until the United States supreme court review the constitutional question raised.

Birmingham, Ala. News
November 13, 1935

NEGRO CHOSEN ON GRAND JURY FOR SCOTTSBORO CASE

New Group Named To Reopen Probe Into Attacks On White Women

SCOTTSBORO, Ala.— (AP)—Creed Conyers, Negro farmer of Paint Rock, was one of 18 members of a Grand Jury organized here Wednesday to reinvestigate the "Scottsboro case."

Conyer was one of two Negroes drawn in the venire of 36 from which the jury was chosen. He was the fourteenth juror drawn. The other Negro, Bird Hill, farmer of Bridgeport, was excused because of his age as the jurors were qualified. Hill said he was 74.

The Grand Jury will be asked to return indictments against nine Negroes accused of mass attacks on Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates aboard a freight train March 25, 1931.

Previous convictions and death sentences in the case were set aside by the Supreme Court of the United States, first on the grounds that the Negroes were without benefit of adequate counsel, and more recently on the ground that the defendants were deprived of constitutional rights by the exclusion of Negroes from the grand and trial juries.

Conyer is chairman of the board of trustees of the Negro school at Paint Rock, where the nine defendants in the case were arrested as they were taken from the train.

Wiley Whittaker, a farmer, of Woodville, was named foreman of the Grand Jury.

Judge A. A. Hawkins, in delivering a charge which took less than two minutes, did not specifically mention the "Scottsboro case." He told members of the jury the special session had been called "for several reasons for the public good."

Solicitor H. G. Bailey will have charge of the presentation of evidence before the Grand Jury. Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, special prosecutor in the cases, left for other business in Athens and Decatur after conferring with Judge Hawkins and Solicitor Bailey.

Mrs. Price, one of the alleged victims in the "Scottsboro case," was here and it was expected that she would be among the first witnesses called.

In addition to Foreman Whittaker and Conyer, members of the Grand Jury are: Europe Smith, Otis V. Thomas, Rankin L. Airheart, Burt L. Vann, Jim Bryant Potter, Jeremiah Hester, John A. Snodgrass, Carl Gross, Leonard Tiffin, Ben Rudder, Robert McMahan, Sam G. Milligan, Robert Wellborn, J. Wyatt Moore and George W. Oliver. Most of them are farmers.

New York Herald-Tribune

NOV 14 1935

Negro on Jury That Reindicts 9 in Scottsboro

Citation Against Defendants in Attack Case Follows Ruling of Supreme Court

County Precedent Is Set

First Mixed Panel in Resident's Memory Takes Action

By The Associated Press

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., Nov. 13.—New indictments charging criminal attack were returned against the nine Negro defendants in the Scottsboro case today by a Jackson County grand jury upon which a Negro sat for the first time in recent history.

Each of the defendants was indicted on two counts of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, white women, aboard a freight train in Jackson County on March 25, 1931. The crime is punishable by death.

The re-indictments were made necessary by a ruling of the United States Supreme Court in reversing death sentences previously imposed on two of the defendants on grounds of "systematic" exclusion of Negroes from grand and trial juries.

Creed Conyers, farmer of Paint Rock, Ala., and chairman of the board of trustees of Negro schools there, was the Negro on the jury returning the indictments today. Old residents said it was the first time in their memory a member of the race had served on a jury here.

The names of two Negroes were included among the venire of thirty-six prospective jurymen called for the eighteen man grand jury. The other Negro was disqualified because of age.

Judge A. E. Hawkins in his brief charge did not mention the Scottsboro case, but it was apparent that the grand jury immediately took it up, as Mrs. Price was one of the first witnesses called.

New York World Telegram

NOV 13 1935

2 NEGRO VENIREMEN IN SCOTTSBORO CASE

Grand Jury to Reinvestigate Eighth Death Penalties.

By the Associated Press.

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., Nov. 13.—A Jackson County Grand Jury was summoned today to reinvestigate the five-year-old "Scottsboro case," in which nine Negroes are charged with attacking two white women aboard a freight train.

Judge A. E. Hawkins, who in April, 1931, sentenced eight of the nine defendants to death, issued the call after a new jury roll had been completed. On the venire of thirty-six from which the Grand Jury of eighteen will be chosen were two Negroes.

Lieutenant Governor Thomas E. Knight, Jr., Special Prosecutor, said the inclusion of Negroes would meet any constitutional question raised in previous trials.

The new inquiry was necessitated by the United States Supreme Court decision in March which upheld a defense contention that Negroes had been "systematically excluded" from the Grand and trial juries in Jackson and Morgan counties.

New York World Telegram

NOV 14 1935

NINE MEN REINDICTED IN SCOTTSBORO CASE

Jurors, Including One Negro, Deliberate an Hour.

By the United Press.

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., Nov. 14.—A Grand Jury, on which a Negro sat for the first time in Scottsboro history, reindicted the nine Negro defendants in the famous Scottsboro assault case last night, facing one of the defendants with his fourth trial on the four-year-old charges.

The jury deliberated little more than an hour. There was no indication what part its lone Negro member, a Scottsboro laborer, played in the secret discussion.

Reindictment of the nine was necessitated by the decision of the United States Supreme Court that conviction of one of the defendants Haywood Patterson, was illegal because Negroes were excluded from Scottsboro Grand Juries.

Winston-Salem, N. C., Sentinel
November 13, 1935

NEGRO ACCEPTED FOR NEW SCOTTSBORO JURY

Scottsboro, Ala. (UP).—A special grand jury containing one Negro—Creed Conyer—was impanelled and went into session in record time to consider new indictments today against the nine Negro defendants in the famous Scottsboro case.

Scottsboro, Ala., Age
November 14, 1935

Thursday, Friday and Saturday will be Rabbit days for Scottsboro and the county. The annual North Alabama Rabbit Show will be in progress here in Scottsboro and promises to be one of the best yet held. Rabbit breeders from all over the country have signified their intentions to enter the show. Scottsboro raisers have taken many prizes in shows all over the country and they are anticipating the taking of many prizes this week. Rabbit breeding has become a very important industry in the county and much pleasure and profit is realized from it. All are invited to come over and see the exhibit. It will be held at the Hosiery Mill building.

Charlotte, N. C. Observer
November 13, 1935

NEGROES DRAWN AT SCOTTSBORO

Two Listed Among 36 on Grand Jury Venire as Celebrated Case is Started Anew.

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., Nov. 12.—(AP)—From its starting point nearly five years ago, "the Scottsboro Case" tonight had been moved back to Jackson county where a new grand jury tomorrow will again investigate the alleged mass attacks on two white women on March 25, 1931.

The venire of 36 from which the 18-man grand jury will be selected contained the names of two negroes, the first to be called in Jackson circuit for many years, but whether they will serve was not known.

Lt. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., special prosecutor retained by the State, said he would call as many witnesses as necessary, and would ask that true bills be returned against the nine negro defendants charging them with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates.

Mrs. Price has appeared in all seven trials in the case thus far, but the Bates girl after appearing in the first four here, two years later at Decatur, repudiated her previous testimony. She asserted she was not molested.

LINCOLN, NEB.
EVENING STATE JOURNAL

NOV 16 1935

Again the defendants in the Scottsboro case are to be tried. Indictments have been returned against them on the basis of the crime with which they were charged in 1931. The supreme court stepped into the case after the last conviction and held that Negroes had been systematically excluded from jury service in Jackson county, Alabama, so the convictions in these cases involving Negroes were faulty. Jackson county is using Negro jurors, since the supreme court acted in this manner. There is, of course, no hope of an improvement in the machinery for dispensing justice, just because the system has been changed to conform with the law. As long as the prejudice against the race remains in the south methods for legally keeping them from jury service in cases where prejudice dictates the verdict, will be found. Jackson county merely neglected to keep up appearances. It had made the mistake of dropping the pretense of drawing Negroes for jury service.

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

5040

ANOTHER TRIAL FOR THE SCOTTSBORO BOYS

Associated Press.

Last week new indictments were returned. Some of the defendants at a previous trial at Decatur are shown as they marched to court under guard of militiamen.

ALABAMA SEEKS END OF SCOTTSBORO CASE

By New Indictments the State Hopes to Meet Supreme Court Ruling and to Conclude Trials Speedily

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES 2d.
Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 15.—New indictments found this week in the Scottsboro case point to an early resumption of all the noise, bitterness, notoriety and expense that attended the earlier trials. Alabamians still are divided on the merits of the case, but of one mind in the wish to be rid of the thing for better or for worse.

There is no present disposition in the press or anywhere else to debate the guilt or innocence of the defendants any longer. Comment everywhere runs now to regret that the ugly business must be brought forth again and to hope that this time it will be settled permanently one way or another. To meet the decision of the Supreme Court a Negro sat on the grand jury that found the new indictments.

Tom Knight, who was Attorney General at the time of the last trials and who conducted the prosecution in that capacity, has since been elected Lieutenant Governor, largely as a result of prestige won in opposing "Communists and New Yorkers" allied against him in the case. Detailed as special prosecutor for the new trials, he is said to have Gubernatorial ambitions which new triumphs in the Scottsboro case would serve handsomely. Those close to him are convinced that he believes absolutely in the guilt of the Negroes, who are charged with assaults upon two white girls.

"Outsiders" Not Wanted.

In the opinion of many Alabamians the prime thing to be considered today is whether the International Labor Defense shall be permitted to win a famous victory and exploit it to further the Communist movement among Southern Negroes. These Alabamians would be well satisfied if the defense could be taken over by some well-known Southern lawyer or lawyers and an acquittal won under such command. They do not believe acquittal would be wise if the International Labor Defense were in a position to claim credit for it and they do not believe an acquittal will be possible if the defense is conducted by this or any other group identified with what has come to be known as "outside interference in Alabama's affairs." This is in all probability the essentially realist attitude toward the case.

When the United States Supreme Court ordered a new trial in the cases of two of the defendants last April on the ground that members of their race had for years been barred from jury duty in Jackson and Morgan Counties, Alabama's Governor, Bibb Graves, took immediate steps to comply with his interpretation of the decision by having the names of Negroes placed on the jury rolls of this State's courts. Similar steps were taken in other Southern States.

But it is a long cry from a jury roll to a jury room, and thus far few Negroes have made it. Negroes are being listed in jury venires and on grand jury panels, and some of them get as far as the grand jury itself, but a Negro on a trial jury is as rare as ever in the deep South, except in Federal courts.

Lawyers Bar Negroes.

The ordinary procedure from jury roll to jury room for criminal cases is that a venire of 50 to 180 names is drawn each week from the list of those on the roll, and from this venire, by a process of letting each side strike names until only 12 remain, a trial jury is selected.

In civil cases the judge draws 24 names from a box and each side strikes 6. In both criminal and civil cases, if Negroes survive the drawing they can be—and are—easily eliminated by one or both sides through the striking privilege.

Because of the relatively small number of Negroes on the original jury rolls only a very few are ever drawn for venires. These are generally struck by both sides at once opposing counsel advising the court that to avoid advantage or disadvantage to either side the striking is by mutual agreement.

In the selection of grand juries there is a different situation. The judge draws the 18 names from a panel of 36 and inevitably, if the drawing is properly conducted, some of the Negroes on the panel will be chosen.

At Decatur, in the same court room where the last Scottsboro trials were held, three Negroes were drawn a few weeks ago for service with 15 white men on the Morgan County grand jury. Judge A. A. Griffith administered the oath to them without comment. But when a Negro warehouse employe was qualified for trial jury duty in Jefferson County the same week he was promptly stricken from an assault case panel by Assistant Solicitor Long.

Many "Race-Conscious."

In other States of the deep South the situation seems to be much the same. Georgia and Mississippi report a few Negroes on grand juries but none on trial juries. Florida has no Negroes on any juries at all. In Louisiana a Negro was admitted to a trial jury at Orana which convicted a member of his race accused of attacking a white woman. In Tennessee Negroes are appearing occasionally on grand juries and there is report of one on a trial jury in Criminal Court at Knoxville.

In the rare instances in which Negroes are allowed to serve on trial juries in cases involving members of their race the effect must be a matter of speculation and hearsay, of course, but it is not likely that the defendant's cause is served appreciably. The Negro juror is inclined by the circumstances to be painfully race-conscious.

Southern lawyers with whom this writer has discussed the situation are convinced that the now apparently South-wide practice of placing the names of Negroes on jury rolls is legally faithful to the point made by the United States Supreme Court last April, and that their continuing absence from actual juries is something against which there can be no recourse at law now.

The Issue Raised.

They point out that even though Chief Justice Hughes mentioned "evidence that for a generation or longer no Negro had been called for service on any jury in Jackson County" he lodged his specific criticism against the fact "that, according to the practice of the jury commission, their names would normally appear on the preliminary list of male citizens of the requisite age, but that no names of Negroes were placed on the jury roll." In other words, they believe that the placing of names on the jury rolls was all the Supreme Court ordered, or could order.

There is no doubt of the fact that Negroes are just about as successfully and consistently excluded from jury duty in this part of the South today as they were before the Supreme Court's decision. And there are enough legal loopholes and human ingenuities on hand to keep them excluded, apparently, for a long time to come.

The letter of the court's injunction is being served, perhaps, but its spirit will not prevail until the white men themselves are convinced that it is safe, comfortable and wise to rub elbows in jury rooms with their colored brothers.

REINDICTED

International.

Heywood Patterson, among the accused in the Scottsboro case.

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE.

Suggestion of Local Lawyers for Defense Is Approved.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In THE TIMES last Sunday John Temple Graves 2d, your editorial correspondent of Birmingham, Ala., wrote freely, frankly and very impressively of the Scottsboro case, again acutely in the news because of a new indictment of the involved Negro youths handed up by a grand jury that included a Negro in its personnel.

From Mr. Graves's summation, after thoroughly going into several Alabama points of view, it is not so difficult to reach the conclusion that Alabama would be glad to "save its face" and let the Scottsboro boys go free, provided the fait accompli could be done in its own way. And so long as freedom of the boys is the sole objective of their well-wishers, there could be no reasonable objection to providing no further occasion for the Lieutenant Governor of Alabama to realize his political ambitions from "defending his State against the Communists and New Yorkers allied against him" in previous Scottsboro trials. Then Attorney General, designated to prosecute, he got to be Lieutenant Governor and as such has again been designated to prosecute at the new trials.

As Mr. Graves found it, there is a feeling that the boys would fare better if defended by local talent next time, and I am inclined to agree. Like the man who discovered a bleeding victim alongside a railroad track and stanched the flow of blood, thereby preserving his life until the doctors got hold of the injured man in a hospital, the International Labor Defense completed its work in the Scottsboro case when it prevented the boys' electrocution in execution of the judgment at the first would-be trial and eventually got two favorable decisions by the United States Supreme Court.

Very properly, the previous Scottsboro trials were conducted from the standpoint of having the record contain grounds for successful appeals. Eventually, the highest court will find no Federal question involved, and then it will be "just too bad."

Not one of the Scottsboro youths has yet indicated any desire for martydom, and the Communists require "martyrs" to propagate their cause.

It seems to me that, presently, the youths are foils of the I. L. D. on the one side and of Jack Knight's ambitions on the other side, and if, as John Temple Graves obviously suspects, the Scottsboro case would be consummated with the boys' release from custody if defended by home talent at the new trial, then let us give home talent a chance. RIENZI B. LEMUS.

New York, Nov. 18, 1935.

PASSAIC, N. J.
HERALD
NOV 15 1935

The Scottsboro Case Again

FOR THE FIRST time in 60 years since the carpet-baggers' regime, a member of the Negro race sits upon the Grand Jury in and for the County of Jackson in the State of Alabama.

The Supreme Court of the United States threw out the famous Scottsboro case in which nine Negroes were condemned to die for attacks upon white women which there is good reason to believe never occurred. It threw it out because of the practice, common throughout the South, of excluding Negro citizens from grand and petit jury service.

To meet this situation the authorities included the names of two Negroes in the venire of 36 prospective jurymen for the eighteen-man Grand Jury, and so it happened that Creed Conyers, farmer and chairman of the trustees of the Negro schools in Paint Rock, achieved the distinction of being actually drawn for service, his name being the fourteenth out of the box. The Grand Jury promptly re-indicted the nine defendants, who now will be tried again after five years of suffering in jail. Twice their conviction has been achieved, twice it has been reversed by our highest court.

This time the Scottsboro defendants who have been incarcerated in Birmingham since the last ordeal, may have a fairer trial, for a change of venue was granted nearly three years ago, and this time the case will be tried before the Circuit Court judge of Morgan County.

In justice to the defendants, and for the honor of Alabama and the whole South, it is to be hoped there will be an utter absence of prejudice now, and that the case will be tried upon its merits this time.

Newport, Tenn. Plain Talk
November 15, 1935

A lot of people are hoping that the noted "Scottsboro Cases" will soon be off the dockets in Alabama. Several negroes were convicted of assaulting two white women several year ago and all were given the death sentence. The matter was taken up by the Civil Liberties League of New York and finally got into the federal courts. They have been trying the case in Alabama ever so often since that time and the trials are still going on. Maybe some of these days all of the cases will finally be settled in some manner.

Blood Money

The Scottsboro boys are in the gravest peril. In the past they could depend upon the supreme court to save them from the penalty of illegal convictions. But now Alabama calls Negroes to jury service along with whites. If found guilty the boys can only pay the penalty.

Alabama is doubly determined to convict. It hates them for their race and for the radicals who have befriended them. Even should a Negro qualify for the trial jury, there is nothing to stop the state from exercising its right and "striking off" the objectionable juror as is done every day in courts all over the land. Alabama has the power to take the life of these boys!

It is said that Attorney Leibowitz, he whose brilliant defense made this commonplace criminal trial the hammer which destroyed the South's jury system, is willing to defend the boys again—if he is not made to work with the I. L. D. attorneys. The boys would be fortunate to have his services. Yet they may be unable to see beyond the aid the I. L. D. has given them and their parents, and for that reason decide to trust it with their further defense.

Whatever the motives of the radicals, the International Labor Defense did have its attorneys associated in the defense. If Alabama cannot see that the boys were not to blame for the company they found themselves in, so much less will the boys see the extra danger they incur if they go to trial now with I. L. D. attorneys defending them.

Having publicly declared its intention to live up to the spirit of the supreme court's decision, Alabama has taken a decided step forward toward law observance. If only it would now see how pitifully humble are these accused persons, victims of a system that had slain their people ruthlessly, and therefore not to be blamed for turning toward any outstretched hand, it might also call upon the world to behold its justice! No matter how much Alabama dislikes radicals, it cannot be little enough to take its revenge out on these Negro boys.

Both the boys and Alabama are on trial in the coming Scottsboro case. They are going to be tested for judgment, it for its humanity. The great good to society, a new jury system, has already been smelted out of situation. What a blessing it would be if there came along as a by-product an effort of both races to understand each other!

Lynchings–1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

5041

Supreme Court Again Reverses Scottsboro Convictions

FOR the second time the supreme court has stepped in to prevent the execution of the Negro boys who have been under sentence of death since 1931 for an alleged attack on white girls near Scottsboro, Alabama. The reversal in this instance sustains the argument of the defense that, by barring Negroes from jury service, the state of Alabama denies the "equal protection of the laws" to Negroes who are on trial. In sending the case back to the Alabama courts a second time the supreme court held that there had been error in not quashing the indictments in view of this racial discrimination practiced in the process of jury selection. There was no dissenting opinion, although Justice McReynolds, a southerner, took no part in passing on the case. All who perceive the relation of racial justice to the future welfare of the nation will rejoice at the decision of the supreme court. Once more it has been demonstrated that the federal authority will not wittingly permit human rights to be treated as subordinate to color prejudices. But even in the hour of rejoicing there should be clear perception of two immediate and practical issues raised by the court's reversal. First, there is the issue as to how Alabama will deal with the boys. Will it now quash the indictments, as virtually directed by the supreme court? If it does so, will it see to it that the boys themselves are protected against mob violence? Second, there is the issue which most of the southern states now confront as to the justice of their legal processes. Alabama is not the only state which habitually keeps Negroes off jury rolls. If the Scottsboro conviction was a perversion of justice because of the reasons set down by the supreme court, few criminal convictions rendered against Negroes in the south would stand federal review. In other words, this most recent Scottsboro decision will not only provide a test of the worth of the legal protection afforded the racial minority in Alabama, but it should produce an overhauling of the machinery of justice generally throughout the south.

AND SCOTTSBORO REMAINS

The decision of the United States Supreme Court on April first setting aside the death sentences of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson in the Scotsboro case sends the matter back to Alabama for legal adjudication. And so Scottsboro will remain for a while longer. The fact of the decision has been recorded. It has been given to the country by news dispatches This recalls the fact that previous to this the Supreme Court ordered a new trial for these and five others on the ground that they had been unconstitutionally deprived of the aid of counsel in the preparation for the first trial. In this latest case the contention was that the two had been deprived of their constitutional rights by being indicted by a grand jury and found guilty by a trial jury from which Negroes had been systematically excluded. Evidence was presented to show that forgery had been resorted to in Jackson County Alabama to get names of Negroes on the jury rolls after the indictments had been returned. The significance of this decision of the Supreme Court is too vast to have adequate treatment in the brief compas of this editorial; however, space must be allowed now for two or three patent observations.

Alabama must know by this time that the verdict of the public is that these Negro boys have not committed any crime that merits the death penalty. That verdict rests not only upon the conditions surrounding the alleged crime and the atmosphere in whiich the trials have been conducted, but upon the evidence itself as it stands in the record. The United States Supreme Court has no desire nor willingness to become a part to the judicial lynching of these helpless boys in order to satisfy a cross section of unreasonable, defiant race prejudice. If there has been any doubt on that point, that doubt has been dispelled by now. It is also very clear to the enlightened public that the commonwealth of Alabama, and not the Scottsboro boys, is on trial now! Is Alabama capable of conducting a fair, impartial court in which helpless Negroes can be tried according to their constitutional rights and upon the basis of evidence tested by enlightened judicial cannons? Alabama must answer, and she knows that by now. And there are thousands of honest, fairminded white men and women of Alabama who are anxious to give to the world the correct answer, only they want that answer to dignify Alabama in the eyes of the civilized world.

Another word. Discrimination in jury service based on race or color in this country is doomed, if civilization is to have any meaning, and if courts of justice are to function in upholding the law and protecting the rights of all the citizens. But have Negro people learned the value of orderly persistence in contending for their rights in the courts of the land? Have not many of our people suffered grave injustice because they were not willing to contend for their rights, and others were unwilling to contend for them? And do black people know that it cost something more than a lot of hot air and reckless speaking and acting to put up a wise, common sense, orderly, courageous and effective fight for justice? And do they know that the freedom they desire and the justice they seek will not be theirs in any large and permanent way until they are willing to pay the price? Until then Scottsboro will remain—reference here is not merely to Alabama, but to what Scottsboro at the present time symbolizes.

Selma, Ala. Times
April 2, 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE AND OUR JURY SYSTEM

It is a bit strange that the U. S. Supreme Court should have waited until the celebrated Scottsboro case was brought before them a second time to find that a reversible error had been committed by the trial court in excluding negroes from the jury. Why was it necessary to incur the heavy expense involved, together with the enormous waste of time and effort, to try this case a second time when the defense at the original trial presented the evidence to show that negroes had been excluded from the jury panel? Many thousands of dollars might have been saved to Jackson county, which it is reported, has been brought to bankruptcy by the heavy costs of these trials.

Now the Supreme Court holds that the indictment should have been quashed because there were no negroes on the jury. Our own state Supreme Court in affirming the findings of "guilty" by the Decatur trial court made the extraordinary admission that a deliberate exclusion of negroes from the jury box would make the procedure unconstitutional and void, but it held that this had not been done and cited the proof that the names of a number of qualified negroes did actually appear in the jury lists of Jackson county. The High Court at Washington did not trust this evidence, believing the names had been interpolated after the trial had begun. It is rather amazing that the state should have pitched its entire defense program on the absurd contention that negroes do serve on juries in Alabama, when every ten-year-old school boy knows that they do not. A frank, courageous avowal of this fact would have put our courts in a better light. A very certain aftermath of this malodorous case, it appears, will be the slow break down of our white jury system and the substitution of mixed juries. Of course, this nauseous situation will be resisted as stubbornly as possible.

NEW YORK TIMES

APR 2 1935

NEW TRIAL ORDERED BY SUPREME COURT IN SCOTTSBORO CASE

Chief Justice Hughes Rules Negroes Were Barred From Juries in Norris Ruling.

SECOND CASE SENT BACK

If Alabama Does Not Grant New Trial to Patterson, High Court Will Order It.

The text of the Supreme Court's decision is printed on Page 15.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, Negroes condemned to death on charges of having assaulted a white woman in the celebrated Scottsboro case, must have new trials, the Supreme Court held today in two opinions by Chief Justice Hughes.

The whole weight of the opinion in the Norris case was that Negroes had for years been barred from jury duty in Jackson and Morgan Counties, Alabama, where the Scottsboro cases were tried. The opinion on Patterson dealt almost entirely with Alabama's protest that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction.

Asserting that Negroes had been arbitrarily and systematically barred from jury duty, Justice Hughes in the Norris case held that court proceedings were invalid where citizens were excluded because of race and color from jury duty. He reviewed the evidence that Negroes had not been called for jury duty and the addition of Negroes' names to the jury rolls after the first trial.

"While there was testimony which cast doubt upon the qualifications of some of the Negroes who had been named, and there was also general testimony as to the lack of 'sound judgment' of the 'good Negroes' in Jackson County," the Chief Justice said, "we think that the definite testimony as to the actual qualifications of individual Negroes, which was not met by any testimony equally direct, showed that there were Negroes in Jackson County qualified for jury service."

Holds Discrimination Shown.

"We think that the evidence that for a generation or longer no Negro had been called for service on any jury in Jackson County; that there were Negroes qualified for jury service; that according to the practice of the jury commission their names would normally appear on the preliminary list of male citizens of the requisite age, but that no names of Negroes were placed on the jury roll, and the testimony with respect to the lack of appropriate consideration of the qualifications of Negroes established the discrimination which the Constitution forbids," the opinion added.

Chief Justice Hughes condemned the "sweeping characterization of the qualification" of Negroes in Alabama as stated by the authorities of Morgan County.

"Upon the proof contained in the record now before us, a conclusion that their continuous and total exclusion from juries was because there were none possessing the requisite qualifications cannot be sustained," he declared.

In the case of Norris the court specifically ordered that he must be tried again, but in the Patterson case the issue was sent back to the Alabama courts for "further proceedings." Lawyers and court officials agreed that if a new trial should be refused to Patterson he could approach the Supreme Court for a direct order for a new trial.

In other Scottsboro reviews the court had set aside the convictions of seven of the nine Negroes accused of assaulting two white girls in a box car in 1931. The court then held that the defendants had not had full opportunity to consult counsel.

Norris and Patterson alone were tried the second time in Alabama. Two of the other Negroes were not brought to trial and the remaining five whose convictions were set aside still await trial.

Justice McReynolds did not hear argument and took no part in the consideration and decision of either of the cases ruled on today.

Patterson Case Sent Back.

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—While both the Norris and Patterson cases were sent back to the Alabama courts for further proceedings by the Supreme Court today, the status of the two cases differed.

The court found no doubt of its right to set aside the death sentence in the Norris case on constitutional grounds, but it sent the Patterson case back for decision as to whether the lower courts, notwithstanding technical objections, will grant him a new trial.

Chief Justice Hughes said it would be wrong to set aside the death sentence in the Norris case and on a technicality be unwilling to retry Patterson, in whose case the same constitutional objections with regard to absence of Negroes from the juries existed and where a new trial should be granted on constitutional grounds if technical objections could be removed.

The State had contended in the Patterson case that the high court had no jurisdiction because a bill of exceptions had not been filed within the required time. In a separate opinion on this case, Chief Justice Hughes said:

"We have power to make such disposition of the case as judgment requires."

The judgment then was ordered reversed.

TO ASK NEGROES' RELEASE.

Leibowitz Prepares to Seek Federal Writ if Alabama Refuses.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of counsel in the Scottsboro cases, announced yesterday that he will go to Montgomery, Ala., on receipt of the official decision of the Supreme Court and ask for the dismissal of the proceedings against all nine Negro defendants.

He said he expected the decision tomorrow or Thursday. In order that no time be lost in the move for dismissal of the indictments Mr. Leibowitz said he will make the trip by airplane.

"I am going to ask that the indictments against the nine defendants be quashed," Mr. Leibowitz said. "Under the Supreme Court decision the defendants should be released. If the Alabama authorities refuse I shall sue out a writ of habeas corpus in the Federal court.

"The next move is up to the State authorities of Alabama. We are certain of our position in the case."

In commenting on the decision by Chief Justice Hughes, Mr. Leibowitz said, "I am thrilled beyond words."

"The victory just won for the 'Scottsboro boys' in the Supreme Court of the United States is the culmination of the hopes and ambitions of 15,000,000 Negro souls in America. More than two years ago when I took up the case in behalf of these innocent Negro boys I knew then that our only salvation lay in the highest court of the land, and I then laid the groundwork for an appeal in the event of a conviction, which was a foregone conclusion.

"For the first time in the history of American jurisprudence actual proof by way of living witnesses was produced in open court in an attack against bigotry and prejudice which bars the Negro citizen, although qualified, from serving on a jury in any of the State courts in that part of the country.

"The decision of the highest court, just handed down, is a triumph for American justice and is an answer to all those subversive elements who seek to engender hatred against our form of government."

This reference was directed by Mr. Leibowitz to the Communists and other radicals who were active in one form or another in the Scottsboro cases.

Mr. Leibowitz and an associate, Walter H. Pollak, argued the appeal in the Supreme Court a month ago. Briefs were prepared by Mr. Pollak and Osmund K. Fraenkel.

Mr. Leibowitz defended the nine Negroes in Decatur, Ala., in 1933, when they were convicted in a retrial before Judge William W. Callahan. The conviction was affirmed in the Alabama Supreme Court.

In addition to Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, whose convictions were set aside, the other defendants are Roy Wright, 17, his brother Andy, 21; Eugene Williams, 18; Olen Montgomery, 22; Ozzie Powell, 21; Charlie Weems, 23, and Willie Roberson, 22 years old.

BRITISH PRESS HAILS RULING.

New Scottsboro Trial Called 'Tremendous Blow for Negro.'

LONDON, Tuesday, April 2 (AP).—The United States Supreme Court's decision in the Scottsboro case received prominent display today in British newspapers.

It was featured as the biggest news of the day in The Liberal News Chronicle, which also carried an editorial asserting, "the Supreme Court struck a tremendous blow for the rights of the American Negro generally."

Minor Status Of 2 Menaced In Scottsboro

Daily Worker

DECATUR, Ala., Nov. 20.—Eugene Williams and Roy Wright, the two youngest of the Scottsboro boys, will be taken out of the jurisdiction of the Juvenile Court and put on trial for their lives together with the seven older boys, Lieutenant Governor Thomas E. Knight, Jr., who has been appointed special prosecutor in the case, indicated today.

11-21-35

"They have now come of age and may be tried in the Circuit Court," Knight declared, referring to the fact that the two lads, 13 and 14 years of age respectively at the time of their arrest, have reached the legal age during their incarceration of nearly five years.

The two boys were remanded to the Juvenile Court after a mistrial in the case of Roy Wright during the original Scottsboro trials, and reversal of the death sentence against Eugene Williams by the Alabama Supreme Court on an appeal by the International Labor Defense. Their trial before the Juvenile Court was blocked time and again by Knight, who conducted the prosecution of the boys, first as Attorney General of Alabama and later as special prosecutor appointed by the Governor.

According to present plans of the Alabama lynchers, the nine boys who were recently reindicted, will be arraigned in Decatur, Ala., on Dec. 16, and put on trial on Jan. 6. There are indications, however, that Knight will attempt to further speed up the dates for arraignment and trial of the boys.

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Arkansas.

5042

TWO ARE ORDERED TO DIE

Negroes Found Guilty of Attack By Blytheville Jury

BLYTHEVILLE, Ark., April 10—(AP)—A circuit court jury, reporting late last night, prescribed the death penalty for Jim Caruthers and Bubbles Clayton, negroes, on a charge of attacking a 19-year-old girl.

The jury deliberated three hours before returning a verdict of conviction and fixing the sentence at death.

The young woman and her male companion identified the two on trial as the pair who held them up in a parked car on a lonely road and attacked the girl.

STAY NEGROES' EXECUTION

Futrell Grants Time For Appeal To Alleged Attackers

LITTLE ROCK, May 13.—(AP)—Governor Futrell stayed the execution of two negro youths today who were scheduled to die in the electric chair Friday morning.

The negroes were Jim X. Caruthers and Bubbles Clayton, convicted in Mississippi County on April 9 for an alleged attack on a young woman. Governor Futrell said he had been importuned to stay the sentences for 30 days in order that appeals might be perfected.

SENTENCE FARM HAND TO DEATH FOR ATTACK

Hogan to See Mother Before Going to Penitentiary

FORT SMITH, Ark., May 13.—Overruling a motion for a new trial, Circuit Judge J. Sam Wood today sentenced George Hogan, former Cash, Craighead County, farm hand, to be electrocuted July 26 for assaulting a 10-year-old girl. The sentence will be appealed.

Hogan, whose attorneys were given 59 days to prepare the appeal, was granted a request to see his mother before going to the state penitentiary.

Execution Stay Is Won for Two Negroes in Eastern Arkansas

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., May 22.—Having obtained a stay of execution just one week before the date set for the execution of James Caruthers and Bubbles Clayton, Negro youths held in the death-cell at Tucker Farm, the Caruthers-Clayton Defense Committee here has taken steps to bring these cases before the Arkansas Supreme Court. Attorney John R. Thompson, employed by the Defense Committee, will present the appeal.

Caruthers and Clayton, 18 and 19 years old, respectively, were arrested in Blytheville on a charge of "rape," one month after the rape was supposed to have been committed. Investigation by the Little Rock branch of the International Labor Defense showed that there is every reason to believe the "rape" charge was a frame-up. On the initiative of the I. L. D., a Caruthers-Clayton Defense Committee was set up. The Defense Committee characterizes the case against the two youths as the climax of a reign of terror that has gripped Eastern Arkansas for several months. The avowed object of this reign of terror, conducted by landlords and their agents, was to smash the Southern Tenant Farmers' Union.

In the course of the landlords' drive against the union, Ward Rodgers, Socialist, was arrested during the course of his activities in organizing sharecroppers and tenant-farmers. Students from Commonwealth College, assisting the organization work on the farms, were "taken for a ride" and beaten.

Following the "rape" cry that was raised in Blytheville, twenty-nine Negroes were rounded up. Caruthers and Clayton were arrested only a month after the accusation. The woman in the case —known to be of loose habits—said at the time of the supposed "rape" that she would be able to identify her assailants positively. However, she failed to accuse Caruthers and Clayton, although they were daily to be seen on the streets of Blytheville, a very small town.

The Southern Tenant Farmers' Union has made a financial contribution for the defense.

The Caruthers-Clayton Defense Committee asks that protests against the frame-up be sent to Governor J. Marion Futrell, and to the State Supreme Court, both at Little Rock, Arkansas.

TWO NEGROES TO DIE FOR ARKANSAS ATTACK

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 18.—(AP)—The Arkansas supreme court affirmed today the death sentences of two negroes for criminally assaulting a white woman with the ruling that there was nothing in the records to show they were denied the privileges and immunities guaranteed under the constitution.

The condemned negroes are Bubbles Clayton, 21, and Jim X. Caruthers, 19.

Lynchings-1935

Georgia.

Legal Punishment for Rape

5043

2 NEGROES EXECUTED AT GEORGIA PRISON

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., April 5.—(AP)—Two negroes, one accused of attacking a young white girl, and the other of murder, were electrocuted today.

Albert Rivers was convicted in Screven county in the attack case and Isaiah Ashley was convicted in Appling on a charge of slaying J. W. Holton.

Superintendent R. H. Lawrence, of the prison, said Rivers never confessed but that Ashley had "admitted his guilt all along."

Lynchings- 1935

Legal Punishment for Rape

Kentucky

5044

Kentucky Assaulter Is Hanged

Doomed Man Harangues Wi[illegible] from Gallows

After Long Speech To Crowd

By DILLARD STOKES
Associated Press Staff Writer

SMITHLAND, KY., April 19.—(AP)—A 23-year-old white man was hanged at dawn today in the presence of the woman he allegedly attacked, after a 15-minute tirade from the gallows, in which he called her a cold blooded murderer and taunted the crowd to shoot him.

Nine times the man, William T. De Boe, Jr., of Paducah, shook his manacled hands over the heads of the 1,500 onlookers at 32-year-old Mrs. Marjorie Johnson and denied her accusation. Only once when he shouted, "If I had $500 I wouldn't be on this scaffold; she would have taken it," did she reply.

"Not if you had offered me $1,000," came back her strident voice. Spectators, some 150 crowded into the enclosure and about 1,400 jammed outside, had pointed her out at De Boe's demand as she stood beside her husband, Randall Johnson, a storekeeper. She watched with tightly compressed lips the rest of the time.

De Boe declared he had not had a fair trial here and taunted the crowd.

"I'm going to sleep in McCracken County (where his father lives)," the youth shouted. "A man can get justice there."

"And if any of you night adjusters out there like horsewhipped that 62-year-old woman (an outrage of several years ago) and you night riders have guts enough to shoot a man off the scaffold then go ahead and shoot!"

His attitude toward Sheriff G. H[illegible] Heater, the hangman, and G. Phil Hanna, consulting expert on hangings who had promised De Boe an easy death, contrasted with his bitter scorn of the woman accuser in the crowd.

"Look at him, this good sheriff," De Boe shouted. "See him standing there white as a sheet. I pray God to be with him and strengthen his hand." He also spoke in friendly terms of Hanna.

Patting the sheriff on the back, De Boe asked if he were talking too much. The Sheriff told him he was entitled to have his say before he died.

The hanging was the indirect cause of another death. Miss Neveline McClaren, 16, of Earlington, Ky., died of a broken neck when the automobile in which she and six others were going to the execution overturned.

De Boe's mother, Mrs. W. T. De Boe, Sr., and his 19-year-old sister, Margaret, accompanied the youth to the foot of the scaffold steps. The sister was red-eyed from three sleepless nights as she journeyed back and forth from Frankfort in a vain plea to Gov. Ruby Laffoon. The mother is dead.

A friend held his arm around the youth's waist as the two talked. The sister leaned heavily against her father. When the black hood was slipped over De Boe's face, she collapsed and her father led her away, crying, "Oh, I wish I could die with him."

When Kentucky adopted the electric chair 15 years ago for executions the provision was made, as in most other Southern States, that one crime—that against women—should be punished with hanging in the county where it was committed. Legislators explained they feared execution at the Eddyville Penitentiary would not bring home the stern lesson that hanging would. The hangings technically are private but for some score or more of legal witnesses, but few small county jails are large enough for a gallows.

Hanged In Jail Yard

De Boe was hanged inside a small eight-foot high enclosure erected in the jail yard. The gallows towered high above the wooden fence. People poured into Smithland last night to be assured of seeing the execution. Clouds and threat of rain kept down the number far below the thousands who in recent years have swarmed to hangings of negroes but the restaurants and beer parlors sold out long before dawn. It was an orderly crowd throughout the long tirade by De Boe, but after the drop had broken his neck those inside the enclosure rushed forward. Deputies and State police pushed them back. The crowds had left tonight and the village was quiet.

De Boe's harangue to the crowd was without precedent in the history of executions in Kentucky. The hanging automatically fell on Good Friday when the State Court of Appeals five weeks ago denied his petition for a rehearing. Gov. Laffoon refused to intercede, saying, "there is nothing I can do for him."

De Boe bitterly criticized Commonwealth's Atty. Alvin Lisanby, declaring Lisanby was "a party to a terrible miscarriage of justice."

"Why don't you speak?" he shouted at Mrs. Johnson. "Are you willing to stand there, say nothing and see me die? You should be here in my place!"

De Boe declared that if he had had money to settle the case with the prosecuting witness he would not have been sentenced to death.

When she denied, in the exchange of words before the hanging, that she would have taken money to drop the case, De Boe shouted:

"Oh, yes, you'd have taken the money and let me go."

Denied Attacking Women

De Boe denied that he had attacked women but admitted three robberies.

"Yes, I robbed those stores," he told the crowd. "I went in there and put the gun on them and took the money and goods. I'm guilty of that, but I didn't do those other things, not that assault."

He charged the Governor refused clemency because "he was afraid of big headlines in the newspapers."

De Boe also denounced Randall Johnson, his accuser's husband, and also a witness against him, and Shelly Wilson, a relative of the Johnsons. When he charged Wilson with trying to get on the jury, Wilson shouted back from the crowd: "I didn't try to get on that jury."

Sarcastically, De Boe replied: "No, you didn't. You went into that box and how you hated to tell them when they asked you, 'yes, I am a relative.' But it wouldn't have made any difference. That jury was set to send me here."

The "night riders" denounced by De Boe are reputed to have been active as vigilantes in "law enforcement" activities in western Kentucky. At the 1934 session of the Kentucky Legislature State Representative John W. Taylor, of Caldwell County, which adjoins this county, denounced the "night riders" and the "Ku Klux Klan," charging that the Klan was responsible for the lynching of a white man in Caldwell County in 1932.

De Boe was convicted of criminally attacking Mrs. Johnson during a holdup of her husband's store near here. Ezra Davenport, of Okemah, Okla., convicted as an accessory, is serving a 20-year prison term for aiding in the attack and a 27-year sentence for robbery.

Davenport stated at his trial he entered the store only to rob it and denied he held Johnson at the point of a pistol while De Boe attacked Mrs. Johnson. De Boe was indicted for another robbery and attack in Kentucky and accused of an attack in Tennessee. Captured at Dyersburg, Tenn., he and Davenport were spirited away from an angry mob and brought to Kentucky for trial.

fore the court.

The sheriff said of the Smithland hanging yesterday: "It is difficult for me to understand how the officials could permit such an outrage. If Montjoy hangs, he will be given a few minutes to speak and make his peace with God, but if he should commence attacking his victim like DeBoe did, the trap will be sprung immediately."

HUSBAND INVITED TO SPRING TRAP

Negro Convicted in Kentucky Assault Case

COVINGTON, Ky., April 20.—(AP)—Sheriff Louis Voght said today he will invite the husband of a woman allegedly assaulted by John Montjoy, 20, Covington negro, to spring the trap if Montjoy is denied a reprieve from a death sentence.

A jury convicted Montjoy last week. Kentucky law provides death by hanging for the offense. A motion for a new trial is pending be-

The Law In Kentucky!

Courier 4-27-35

Death Penalty For Rape Applied Only to Negroes, Petition Said.

PADUCAH, Ky., April 25— William DeBoe, 23 and white, was hanged last week for alleged rape of a white woman, but not before he had ranted for an hour on the gallows [illegible] become first-page copy in metropolitan dailies ... and the real attitude of Kentucky placed on paper.

In a petition signed by 900 white residents and presented to Governor Laffoon, Thursday, the following significant statement was included:

" ... This law fixing the penalty of death was and is primarily intended for Negroes who commit such crimes against white women and that punishment from 10 to 20 years is ample and will satisfy each and every red-blooded Kentuckian."

Lynchings – 1935

Legal Punishment for Rape

Maryland.

5046

Denies Assault Charge.

ROCKVILLE, Md., April 20.—(AP) James Poindexter, negro, was arraigned before Judge Charles W. Woodward in circuit court here today on an indictment charging him with criminally assaulting the young daughter of a Bureau of Standards official near Chevy Chase [illegible] months ago. He pleaded not guilty and asked for a jury trial. Judge Woodward set the case for trial on May 6.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

North Carolina

5047

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
APR 5 1935

PUBLIC PULSE

THE CASE OF GEORGE WHITFIELD.
Editor of The Daily News:

"Consistency, thou art, indeed, a jewel."

I read in the Daily News of the 29th ultimo the following news item:

"Raleigh, March 28.—(AP)—George Whitfield, Guilford county negro sentenced to die tomorrow in the electric chair for criminal assault upon a white woman in Greensboro, today was granted a 90-day reprieve by Governor Ehringhaus to allow further study of his case."

Now since our governor, out of the goodness of his heart, has seen fit to grant Whitfield another reprieve and 90 days lease of life, the writer wishes to say this:

I am unacquainted with the young man, Whitfield, I do not know Governor Ehringhaus either but when he was a candidate for the office he now holds, I learned of him from a co-worker, when I was vice-president of the A. and M. college (now the A. and T. college) for 13 or 14 years.

He told me that Mr. Ehringhaus is a fine man and a friend to our people, that he knew what he was saying to be true, as he was born and reared in the same section of the state in which the governor was born.

Far be it from me to try to influence our governor, even if it were possible, against the dictates of his conscience in the premises. I am writing this article only in behalf of simple justice.

There appeared in the Greensboro Record of the 28th ultimo a personal article from two of George Whitfield's court-appointed counsels, who have made a profound study and investigation of his case in its most exact details, without any more pay or hope of reward than what the court will grant them for their services, viz: $25, so I am informed.

"If Whitfield is executed Friday morning, a gross miscarriage of justice will have occurred. We are firmly convinced that he is innocent of any capital offense.

"Whitfield was tried a day and a half after counsel had been appointed for him, and at a time when he could not possibly present evidence of innocence or extenuation. The subsequent matter presented since that time not only has not been given proper consideration and investigation by the officers charged with the duty of investigation, but has been summarily dismissed.

"If justice is to be administered properly, the solicitor's militant attitude should cease after he secures a conviction."

I trust you will pardon this personal sketch and observation.

I am a native of the Old North state and have resided in Greensboro and in the regions round about for over half a century. Moreover, I have made a study of both races and their respective approach towards each other in this community during these years; and what applies in this case here, applies elsewhere in the south, so far as my observation and knowledge go.

There are some white people of a specific caste, who prefer to live in a community where a similar type of negro lives than among their own race, because whenever they are inclined to do something which may be questionable or contrary to the law of the land, they do not wish their own people to know anything about it. But whenever anything happens contrary to the law because of the mixing together, the negro is the goat and charged as the culprit and his word isn't believed, nor any of the negro witnesses in preference to a white witness, whether the negro witness or witnesses tell the truth or not.

I'll, however, admit there are a few exceptions; but the exceptions prove the rule true.

According to the write-up of the alleged crime by the local press, it was stated that the white family was advised several times by the police to move out of that community of colored people. But no, they preferred to remain there, for reasons best known to themselves. But according to the scriptures, some people love the darkness rather than the light.

The writer believes some negroes have been electrocuted or hanged for committing the statuatory offence who were innocent. But they had no friend at court to speak in their behalf.

Only recently, within a period of eight months, I believe, a colored boy down about Sanford, Lee county, was framed by two white girls of a criminal assault. He was kind enough to give them a ride in his car, at their own request, while they were hiking somewhere along the highway.

He was tried, convicted and sentenced to be electrocuted and would have been before now dead, but providentially, as I am advised, Mrs. Blanche Carr Sterne of this city, knowing the reputation and character of the girls, went to Raleigh, saw Governor Ehringhaus, and interceded in behalf of the boy; the result, he was saved by the sentence being commuted.

The writer is not pleading for mercy but justice, in view of such untoward circumstances in the case, for he believes if George Whitfield is electrocuted, the state will be guilty of putting to death a person who is innocent of the crime for which he was charged and convicted.

It would be presumptious in me, a human being, to say that the following scripture reference applies altogether to George Whitfield; but somehow I can't help believing that a part of the verse does: Job 33-9th verse.

CHAS. H. MOORE,
Greensboro.

PUBLIC PULSE

THE CASE OF GEORGE WHITFIELD
Editor of The Daily News:

"Consistency, thou art, indeed, a jewel."

I read in the Daily News of the 29th ultimo the following news item:

"Raleigh, March 28.—(AP)—George Whitfield, Guilford county negro sentenced to die tomorrow in the electric chair for criminal assault upon a white woman in Greensboro, today was granted a 90-day reprieve by Governor Ehringhaus to allow further study of his case."

Now since our governor, out of the goodness of his heart, has seen fit to grant Whitfield another reprieve and 90 days lease of life, the writer wishes to say this:

I am unacquainted with the young man, Whitfield, I do not know Governor Ehringhaus either but when he was a candidate for the office he now holds, I learned of him from a co-worker, when I was vice-president of the A. and M. college (now the A. and T. college) for 13 or 14 years.

He told me that Mr. Ehringhaus is a fine man and a friend to our people, that he knew what he was saying to be true, as he was born and reared in the same section of the state in which the governor was born.

Far be it from me to try to influence our governor, even if it were possible, against the dictates of his conscience in the premises, I am writing this article only in behalf of simple justice.

There appeared in the Greensboro Record of the 28th ultimo a personal article from two of George Whitfield's court-appointed counsels, who have made a profound study and investigation of his case in its most exact details, without any more pay or hope of reward than what the court will grant them for their services, viz: $25, so I am informed.

"If Whitfield is executed Friday morning, a gross miscarriage of justice will have occurred. We are firmly convinced that he is innocent of any capital offense.

"Whitfield was tried a day and a half after counsel had been appointed for him, and at a time when he could not possibly present evidence of innocence or extenuation. The subsequent matter presented since that time not only has not been given proper consideration and investigation by the officers charged with the duty of investigation, but has been summarily dismissed.

"If justice is to be administered properly, the solicitor's militant attitude should cease after he secures a conviction."

I trust you will pardon this personal sketch and observation.

I am a native of the Old North state and have resided in Greensboro and in the regions round about for over half a century. Moreover, I have made a study of both races and their respective approach towards each other in this community during these years; and what applies in this case here, applies elsewhere in the south, so far as my observation and knowledge go.

There are some white people of a specific caste, who prefer to live in a community where a similar type of negro lives than among their own race, because whenever they are inclined to do something which may be questionable or contrary to the law of the land, they do not wish their own people to know anything about it. But whenever anything happens contrary to the law because of the mixing together, the negro is the goat and charged as the culprit and his word isn't believed, nor any of the negro witnesses in preference to a white witness, whether the negro witness or witnesses tell the truth or not.

I'll, however, admit there are a few exceptions; but the exceptions prove the rule true.

According to the write-up of the alleged crime by the local press, it was stated that the white family was advised several times by the police to move out of that community of colored people. But no, they preferred to remain there, for reasons best known to themselves. But according to the scriptures, some people love the darkness rather than the light.

The writer believes some negroes have been electrocuted or hanged for committing the statuatory offence who were innocent. But they had no friend at court to speak in their behalf.

Only recently, within a period of eight months, I believe, a colored boy down about Sanford, Lee county, was framed by two white girls of a criminal assault. He was kind enough to give them a ride in his car, at their own request, while they were hiking somewhere along the highway.

He was tried, convicted and sentenced to be electrocuted and would have been before now dead, but providentially, as I am advised, Mrs. Blanche Carr Sterne of this city, knowing the reputation and character of the girls, went to Raleigh, saw Governor Ehringhaus, and interceded in behalf of the boy; the result, he was saved by the sentence being commuted.

The writer is not pleading for mercy but justice, in view of such untoward circumstances in the case, for he believes if George Whitfield is electrocuted, the state will be guilty of putting to death a person who is innocent of the crime for which he was charged and convicted.

It would be presumptious in me, a human being, to say that the following scripture reference applies altogether to George Whitfield; but somehow I can't help believing that a part of the verse does: Job 33-9th verse.

CHAS. H. MOORE,
Greensboro.

MAN, 70 YEARS OLD, MUST DIE FOR RAPE

OXFORD, N. C., Nov. 21 (ANP).—John Kenyon, age 70, who in August was saved from a mob by State Highway patrolmen, was found guilty of charges of raping a young white woman in Creedmore and sentenced to die in the electric chair on Dec. 27. At the trial, which was held here Thursday, Kenyon again denied being guilty of the charges but the jury decided otherwise and the aged man must pay the death penalty.

Oklahoma

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

5048

Doomed Negro Gets New Trial On Race Issue

WASHINGTON, May 13.—(AP)—The Supreme Court pounded home anew today its fiat that negroes may not be excluded from juries but failed to rule on two controverted laws—NRA and the farm mortgage moratorium.

In a 20-minute session, the high tribunal set aside a death sentence imposed on Jess Hollins, Oklahoma negro convicted of criminal assault on a white woman, ruled on four other minor cases and granted two of 19 petitions for review.

When the court announced it would deliver decisions on the next two Mondays of May and the first Monday of June, on any of these days it may determine the constitutionality of the Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage law and rule on basic features of NRA challenged in the Schechter live poultry case from Brooklyn, N. Y. Rulings on these and 17 other cases were considered certain before the Summer recess.

Chief Justice Hughes delivered the blunt, 170-word unanimous decision in the Hollins appeal from Okmulgee County, Okla. It sent the case back for further proceedings. This will mean a new trial. Word from Oklahoma county officials was that the trial will be sought "as soon as possible."

Hughes cited directly the court's recent Scottsboro, Ala., opinion setting aside a death sentence imposed on Clarence Norris for alleged attack on a white woman on grounds that Norris had been deprived of constitutional rights because negroes had been excluded from jury service.

The Chief Justice said Hollins had "challenged the jury panel upon the ground that negroes for a long period had been excluded from jury service in that county solely on account of their race or color and that this discrimination had deprived petitioner of equal protection of the laws in violation of the constitution of the United States."

On the basis of this plea and an examination of evidence, the court returned the case for proceedings consistent with the Scottsboro ruling.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Oklahoma.

5049

Chattanooga, Tenn., News
May 20, 1935

A Second Hint

IN REVERSING an Oklahoma case recently, the Supreme Court of the United States repeated the hint that it will confirm no decision against a Negro in a criminal case unless it be convinced that, because of race or color, Negroes have not been excluded from grand or petit juries concerned in the case. In view of this prompt renewal of the Court's decisive declaration in the Norris Scottsboro case, the South can expect a flow of similar decisions until it heeds the behest of the Court.

An Oklahoma Negro named Jess Hollins had been convicted of criminal assault on a white woman and had been sentenced to death. As the Chief Justice put it, Hollins then "challenged the jury panel upon the grounds that Negroes for a long period had been excluded from jury service in that county solely on account of their race or color, and that this discrimination had deprived petitioner of an equal protection of the laws, in violation of the Constitution of the United States."

The opinion, read by Chief Justice Hughes, was unanimous. The Chief Justice said that the evidence showed that the case called for an application of the principles in the Scottsboro case. Therefore the judgment was reversed and the case remanded.

The South cannot ignore the Supreme Court's ruling. Gov. Graves of Alabama has already urged the judges of his State to see to it that Negroes were placed upon the panels for grand and petit jury service. Unless this course be followed, not only in Alabama but all over the South, no criminal conviction of a Negro can be sustained in the appellate courts.

Greenwood, S. C. Index-Journal
May 17, 1935

ANOTHER ONE

The Supreme Court of the United States a few days ago decided another case in the same way in which it decided the case of the two colored boys convicted and sentenced to death in Scottsboro, Alabama. The Court in this case from Scottsboro held that the evidence sustained the plea of the defendants that Negroes for a long period had been excluded from jury service in that county and that this discrimination had deprived the petitioners of that equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

The case just decided was that of Jess Hollins, an Oklahoma Negro, who had been sentenced to death by trial court of that State for criminal assault and the Supreme Court of Oklahoma had sustained the action of the trial court in refusing to grant a new trial to Hollins.

The attorney for Hollins carried the case to the Supreme Court of the United States and as stated in the first paragraph above that Court followed its own decision in the Scottsboro case and ordered the case sent back for further proceedings which means that a new trial must be given Hollins. A report from Oklahoma says that a new trial "will be had as soon as possible." The jury lists will contain the names of Negro citizens eligible for jury duty. This does not mean that they will be accepted as jurors either by the State or the defense but their names will be on the list as eligible jurors.

The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in this Hollins case was unanimous, all associate justices concurring in the one hundred and seventy-word decision read by Chief Justice Hughes.

The instruction of Circuit Judge Hayne Rice, of South Carolina, to the jury commissioners of Spartanburg county some time ago that names of Negro qualified electors in that county be placed in the jury bov was timely. Judge Rice took action immediately after the Scottsboro case and before this case from Oklahoma had been argued.

Twice the Supreme Court of the United States has handed down a unanimous decision in cases in which this discrimination was alleged.

That some case from South Carolina may be headed for that same route is about as certain as anything human can be. Some lawyer or lawyers are certain to remember and to use this move to delay execution of the sentence of a State court.

In Alabama, Governor Bibb Graves immediately after the decision in the Scottsboro case ordered jury commissioners in that State to see to it that names of eligible colored citizens be placed on the jury lists. "This is the law of the land," he said, "and must be obeyed."

PROSECUTING WITNESS SLEEPS WHILE SENSATIONAL AND SORDID CHARGES ARE AIRED IN COURT

NEGRO NAMES MARKED WITH "C" ON ASSESSMENT RECORDS.

Probable New Trial On June 1

MUSKOGEE, Okla., May 27.—A hung jury in the court of Judge Enloe S. Vernor, refused to declare Charlie Miller, bellboy at the New Jersey hotel, guilty of rape upon the person of Maudie Miller, white girl.

Scarlet Woman Accuses

The alleged rape occurred March 5, according to the diminutive prosecuting witness, who was proved in open court to be a member of the scarlet sisterhood, woman's oldest profession.

Eight Believe Innocence

After two days of testimony in which the sordid story of underworld life in a cheap rooming house and Muskogee hotels, the jury stood 8 to four when it reported to Judge Vernor they were unable to agree. The case will doubtless go back to trial June 1, according to a statement coming from J. A. Beavers, assistant county attorney.

Hot About "Dates"

The defendant went on the stand in his own defense just before the case ended. He told of trouble he had had in the hotel because two white girls, the prosecuting witness and Morine Miller, accused him of giving "dates" to other girls in the illicit rendezvous and discriminating against them. He declared that the whole story of rape was fabricated because of their dislike for him.

The fact that in a southern city eight white men refused to convict the Negro on the charges made by these two white prostitutes indicates that there was plenty of evidence that Charles Miller is not guilty.

N. A. A. C. P. Defends

Attorney Cecil Robertson, attorney for Miller, and employed by the Muskogee Branch of the N. A. A. C. P., made a brilliant defense of his client. In a court room packed and jammed with blacks whites and Indians, Robertson deftly brought out the necessary testimony to convince the jury the girls were lying and the county attorney's office persecuting the defendant.

Hears Spicy Testimony

The arguments began shortly after 1:30 o'clock and continued until nearly 5 o'clock. A crowded courtroom was treated to a spicy afternoon of entertainment while the lawyers went into the sordid details of the alleged offense.

Maudie Goes To Sleep

All the while Maudie sat silently and was so quiet that one of the defense attorneys accused her of going to sleep "for the third time during the trial."

Jury Issue

Interest in the case was enlarged Friday when Attorney Robertson filed a motion to quash the entire district court jury panel on the grounds of discrimination against the Negro race. Judge Vernor overruled the motion and praised the county jury commission for its good work in selecting jurymen.

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Oklahoma

5050

Jess Hollins Wins 30-Day Stay From Supreme Ct. Justice

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Thirty hours to the minute before he was scheduled to be executed in Oklahoma, Jess Hollins was granted another thirty days of life by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The stay was secured by Charles H. Houston, vice dean of the Howard University law school, acting for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Hollins was scheduled to be executed at 12:01 a. m. January 4. At 6 p. m. January 2, Mr. Houston secured from Mr. Justice VanDevanter of the highest tribunal, a stay, notice of which was telegraphed at once to the warden of the state penitentiary at McAlester, Okla. The additional month will be utilized by the N. A. A. C. P. counsel to prepare and file a writ seeking a review of the case by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Hollins was first convicted of criminal assault late in December, 1931. His apepal dragged along under the direction of the International Labor Defense and nothing was done for him for eight months. An appeal was sent to the N. A. A. C. P. in February, 1932, by friends of the condemned man in Sapulpa, Okla., but when the N. A. A. C. P. investigated and found the I. L. D. in charge, it left matters to that organization.

Hollins was sentenced to die August 18, 1932, and a frantic appeal for help came to the N. A. A. C. P. on August 15. Since at that late date nothing had been done to carry on Hollins case by the I. L. D., the N. A. A. C. P. stepped in by telegraph and long distance telephone and through its Oklahoma state president, Roscoe Dunjee, secured a stay of execution and filed notice of appeal to the Oklahoma high courts.

A new trial was quickly granted, the Oklahoma high court handing down a blistering rebuke to the lower court for the way Hollins had been robbed of his rights. It was brought out that Holins had been tried in the basement of the jail at night without a lawyer and wholly in the presnce of his enemies and that he had been threatened with lynching if he did not confess.

After a new trial, a wrangle over a change of venue and an airing of the exclusion of Negroes from the jury, Hollins was again convicted and the Oklahoma court of appeals upheld the sentence. At this stage, the Oklahoma N. A. A. C. P. branches, which had been carying on the fight, turned it over to the national office in New York, which in turn, referred it to Mr. Houston as he is located in Washington. Mr. Houston, who had nothing to do with the conduct of the cases in Oklahoma, will set about combing the record for grounds upon which an appeal to the U. S. court may be based. Needless to say, funds fort his phase of the work are badly needed by the N. A. A. C. P., and gifts and contributions to legal defense work will be greatly appreciated.

Hollins was convicted after direct appeal to race prejudice by attorneys and that members of the Negro race were excluded from the jury.

Before the Supreme court granted Hollins a review of his case Mr. Houston dispatched letters to the attorney general of Oklahoma and the warden of the state penitentiary at McAlester, calling attention to the fact that Hollins cannot legally be executed before the Supreme court had acted on the certiorari writ.

This action was taken so that in case the Supreme court did not act on the writ before April 5, the execution date, the state would not proceed with the execution.

HIGH COURT TO HEAR JESS HOLLINS' CASE

Oklahoman Doomed to Die Granted Review on April 29

4-5-35

WASHINGTON. — Jess Hollins, Oklahoman scheduled to die on Friday, April 5, was granted a review by the Supreme court of the United States Monday, this action automatically staying execution. The high court will hear the case on Monday, April 29.

Hollins is in the Oklahoma state penitentiary at McAlester where he has been held for several years while the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and civic minded organizations of Oklahoma have sought to save his life. He was convicted on a charge of attack. His home is in Sapulpa, Okla.

Houston Handles Defense

Hollins' case was taken to the Supreme court by Charles H. Houston of the Howard university law school faculty and the defense committee of the N. A. A. C. P.

The case was taken to the Supreme court on a writ of certiorari in which it was pointed out that

5050

DEATH SENTENCE SOUGHT FOR NEGRO YOUTH WHO ANGERED ALLEGED WHITE PROSTITUTE

Oklahoma City, Okla

PRETTIER GIRLS CLAIMED ATTENTION OF "CUSTOMERS"; HOMELY GIRL FRAMES HOTEL PORTER

Aid Sought From Headquarters of N. A. A. C. P.

MUSKOGEE, Okla., Apr. 16.—Charging that a penniless Muskogee Negro is being railroaded to the penitentiary, because of the testimony of an aleged white prostitute, officials of the Muskogee Branch of the N. A. A. C. P. have written Walter White, New York, asking assistance from the national office.

The Negro, Charlie Miller, hotel porter, is charged with the crime of rape by the prosecuting witness, whom the evidence shows has once before charged another Negro porter with the same offense.

The letter from the Muskogee Branch to White follows:

"As president of the Muskogee County Branch of the N. A. A. C. P., I respectfully call the following matter to your attention.

"Charlie Miller, a young Negro, has been employed in a local hotel here for sevtral years as a porter and bell boy, in which hotel several prostitutes (white) ply their trade. On or about the 1st day of March, 1935, one of the prostitutes complained to the county attorney of this county that Miller had raped her. Miller was promptly arrested and held without bond, and on his preliminary hearing, he was bound over to the District court without bond for a jury trial, and the State is trying to get a verdict of death in the electric chair.

"Our local Branch promptly swung into action, and is now actively engaged in raising a fund for his defense, but because of the severity of the depression here, little progress is being made.

"At the preliminary hearing, Miller was represented by two white attorneys who tried the case fearlessly; the alleged victim admitted on the witness stand that she was and is a prostitute; that she was the complaining witness in another case in another county in which another Negro porter had been sent to the penitentiary for an alleged rape upon her; that after the alleged rape, she went to sleep for about 30 minutes before going to the county attorney's office to file her complaint; and that she never told any one in the hotel or any other person of the attack before going to the county attorney's office.

"The alleged victim is of the homely type, and Miller's story is, that she became angry with him because he directed men patrons to the prettier girls who consequently made more maney than she did.

"One of the other prostitutes testified that on the day preceding the alleged attack, the victim told her that 'Tomorrow, there is going to be a new porter around here.'

"The white public was highly incensed when Miller was first arrested and there were some threats of violence, but because of the nature of the evidence adduced at the preliminary, the excitement has subsided.

"The white attorneys and the defendant, have called in a Negro attorney to assit in the defense, and this attorney will raise the question of the exclusion of Negroes from jury service.

"This will be the first case since the Scottsboro decision, in which the question of the exclusion of Negroes from the jury will be raised, and great interest is being manifested in this connection.

"Our local branch is bending every effort to raise funds for this man's defense. He is a poor man and has no money or property and besides, he has a wife and two children, and is now in a delicate condition.

"We will highly appreciate any assistance you may give us either by way of advice or otherwise.

"Respectfully yours, C. E. Robertson, president, Muskogee County Branch, N. A. A. C. P."

Makes Brilliant Plea Before Supreme Court In Jess Hollins' Case

Shows Negro Never Called For Service In Oklahoma County

WASHINGTON, May 3.—Argument on the unconstitutional exclusion of qualified Negroes from jury service was heard in the United States Supreme Court Monday and Tuesday, April 29 and 30, in the case of Jess Hollins vs. State of Oklahoma. Hollins had been convicted and sentenced to electrocution in Okmulgee County, Oklahoma, for the alleged rape of a white girl.

In the United States Supreme Court the N.A.A.C.P.'s brief showed that no Negro had ever served on a jury in Okmulgee County since Oklahoma became a State in 1907, in spite of the fact that Negroes constituted seventeen per cent of the total population in the County and were fully qualified in every respect for jury service. Neither the jury commissioners nor the sheriff had ever called a Negro for jury duty.

At the trial the Sheriff had testified that he just did not summon Negroes for jury duty although he admitted there was a large number of Negro voters in the County and he personally knew some of them to be good citizens. One of the Deputy Sheriffs testified at the trial that the reason Negroes were not called for jury service was because Oklahoma had laws segregating the races. The Assistant County Attorney unsuccessfully tried to make a Negro witness admit that it would be just as embarrassing for a Negro to serve on a jury with white men, as it would be for white men to serve on a jury with a Negro. The colored witness denied it would cause a Negro juror any embarrassment, but the statement of the Assistant County Attorney remained in the record as an admission of segregation as the official policy of the County.

Judges Rebuke Oklahoma Attorney

In arguing the case for the State the Attorney General of Oklahoma attempted to go into the facts of the crime and prove that Hollins raped the girl at the point of a pistol; but the United States Supreme Court rebuked him and stated it was not interested in anything except the jury issue. The Attorney General then argued at great length about the failure to prove that any particular Negro citizen has been kept off the jury on account of race or color, but he failed to deny the policy of segregation.

Charles H. Houston, Special Councel for the N.A.A.C.P., hammered this official segregation policy home to the Court in his final argument. Associated in the case with him were his father, William L. Houston and Edward P. Lovett. A decision is expected soon.

N. A. A. C. P. Takes New Step

For the first time in its history last week a Negro lawyer argued one of the NAACP cases before the Supreme Court of the United States. Dean Charles H. Houston of the Howard University School of Law argued the famous Jess Hollins case from Oklahoma; and he argued that case ably, and undoubtedly with far more insight into "the unwritten practices" which play so important a part in the law, as any white member of the NAACP legal staff could possibly have argued it.

This is a step forward. Let us hope that the NAACP will never present another case before that high court without a Negro lawyer at the counsel table.

The Right To a Fair Trial

We want to repeat: Negroes have lost most of their battles for justice, not because they could not win, but because they do not have the courage, faith and perserverance to march on to the top of the hill. In almost every instance where prejudice strikes at the citizenship rights of Negroes there is a straight open road down which black folk could walk to freedom.

This week the United States Supreme court has told the governing agencies of Oklahoma that Negroes are systematically barred from jury service and that the same must be corrected. This is the first instance since statehood when Negroes have shown enough unity to stick together long enough to reach the Supreme court. Always, and ever, there has been some Uncle Tom standing on the sidelines, when we start towards the Supreme court, saying "It can't be done."

We want also to call attention to those carping critics who have withheld support from Jess Hollins, alleging that they would put their money behind another, and higher type of case—but not this one. This sort of Negro must have a tailor-made case, or he will not be identified with it. He is always afraid that he will be protecting some criminal (or at least that is his excuse for not lending financial assistance).

The Supreme court of the United States, we feel, aptly answered the question asked by such Negroes, when it admonished Attorney General Williamson in Washington recently. Oklahoma's attorney general was in the midst of a highly colored statement regarding the alleged rape by Hollins and the charge was being made that Hollins had a gun, etc., when the court interrupted with the statement that "We are not interested in whether the crime was committed or not. We are interested in whether Negroes are allowed to serve on juries in Oklahoma."

That is the answer to the critical Negro who looks askantly at any action which seeks to throw legal protection around Negroes who might be guilty of commiting a felony. The Oklahoma Branches primarily were not so much interested in the guilt or innocence of Jess Hollins. They were, however, vitally interested in determining whether the state had one method by which it tried and convicted white people and another for its citizens of darker hue.

The N. A. A. C. P. knew when it entered this case that Jess Hollins had been kangarooed. The N. A. A. C. P. knew that to drag a man into a midnight court and sentence him to die, all within a few minutes, was not due process of law. The flimsy, forced confession upon which the court stood was a travesty upon justice. The lone evidence of a delinquent white girl, whose testimony has since been many times impeached, was not sufficient to warrant the death penalty.

The evidence in this case is sufficient to warrant any fair minded person in the belief that Jess Hollins is not guilty of the crime of rape. He is perhaps guilty of a misdemeanor for which the state could not in justice exact more than a jail sentence or a light fine. Certain it is that if the defendant were white he would never have been subjected to the loss of liberty and a sentence of death.

It therefore appears that all of the 200,000 Negroes in Oklahoma had much to gain by the defense made in the courts for Jess Hollins. It has caused state officials to know that there can be but one type of justice administered by the courts, and it has caused the Supreme court to lay down a rule regarding jury service. As we go back to the trial of this cause every Negro should assume his individual responsibility in financing the court action. Keep in mind that unless we make Oklahoma legally safe for all Negroes, we may, each one of us, later find ourselves in the insecure position of Jess Hollins.

South Carolina

Lynchings - 1935

Legal Punishment for Rape

5051

Negro Must Die.

BARNWELL, S. C., April 10.—(AP)—Thurmond Harris, 24-year-old negro, today was sentenced to die in the electric chair June 7 following his conviction here on a charge of attempting to assault a 69-year-old white woman.

NEGRO PAYS PENALTY IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

COLUMBIA, S. C., June 7.—(AP)—Under the glare of arc lights in the high-walled death house, Thurmond Harris, 24-year-old negro, was electrocuted at 12:10 a. m. today for criminally assaulting a 68-year-old white woman near Williston March 3.

It was the first night time electrocution in this state. It installed the electric chair in 1912. Prison officials said the electrocution was held at night to avoid breaking prison routine and exciting the convicts.

The negro confessed as he was seated in the chair.

Lynchings - 1935.

Legal Punishment for Rape.

Tennessee.

5053

NASHVILLE, TENN.
EVE. TENNESSEAN

JAN 26 1935

A Wise Decision.

Bedford County and the state at large have every reason to welcome news that Judge Coleman has granted a change of venue to Nashville for the trial of E. K. Harris, the negro charged with criminal assault. Any doubt as to whether this defendant could get a fair trial, or any trial at all in Shelbyville, was removed by the mob violence of last month in which blood was shed and the courthouse burned to the ground.

An early trial in Nashville is said to be desired by the court, and there is every assurance that it will be conducted in a quiet and orderly manner, and that a jury verdict will be quickly returned on the legal evidence presented. If the defendant is found guilty it may be assured that the penalty will be promptly carried out.

It is unfortunate that the change in venue was not granted before the now-famous attempted trial began in Shelbyville on December 19, but the events of that day have plainly taken the wisdom of this latest decision out of the realm of opinion and speculation.

JURY VERDICT DOOMS NEGRO FOR ASSAULT

Telegraph

'That Black Devil Over There Attacked Me,' Girl Testifies in Nashville

2-19-35

TROOPS GUARD HIS TRIAL

Monday 18a.

Second Hearing of Case That Brought Fatal Shelbyville Clash Is Brief

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Feb. 18. (AP) E. K. Harris, 22-year-old Negro, whose rescue by national guardsmen from a Shelbyville mob December 19 cost four lives, tonight was convicted of criminally assaulting a young white girl and sentenced to die in the electric chair.

The jury was out eight minutes.

Jack Norman, attorney for the Negro, gave notice that he would file a motion for a new trial and Judge Charles Gilbert allowed him 30 days for that purpose.

No date for the execution was set, pending ruling on the motion.

Arrangements were made to take Harris immediately under heavy guard to the state penitentiary.

He was tried here on a change of venue after the mob had caused a mistrial at Shelbyville and subsequently burned the court house.

More than 200 national guardsmen, in addition to sheriff's deputies and city police, were on duty here as a precaution against a recurrence of violence.

The 14-year-old school girl identified Harris and said, "That black devil over there attacked me."

Harris, the only witness in his behalf, denied the charge and said he had spent the afternoon of Nov. 19, when it was alleged the attack occurred, in a Shelbyville poolroom.

Barricades Are Set Up

Brought here on a change of venue, Harris faced a jury of five farmers, an architect, two carpenters, a painter, a roof repairman, a merchant and a retired collector today.

Outside the court house, 200 national guardsmen and scores of police and sheriff's deputies patrolled the streets. Six sand bag machine gun barricades were thrown up and all persons entering the building were searched for weapons.

Under questioning by General Loser, the girl said that Harris tried to choke her and "said he would kill me if I hollered."

Her school teacher, Vassa Mai Scales, was called to testify as to the girl's condition after the alleged attack.

Frequent clashes between attorneys enlivened the proceedings, and as the trial sped toward conclusion Jack Norman of defense counsel charged General Loser with "deliberately" attempting to prejudice the jury.

Negro Is Only Defense Witness

With the conclusion of testimony of Mrs. Sam Osborne, who with her husband operated a store in the Fall Creek section, the state rested its case in chief. Mrs. Osborne testified regarding the condition of the girl after the alleged attack.

Harris himself was the only defense witness, and with conclusion of his testimony the defense rested.

He told the jury that he had been working during the morning the girl was attacked and that he spent the afternoon in a Negro pool room at Shelbyville.

Harris answered "no sir" to every question designed to link him with the attack.

Lynchings-1935
6
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Tennessee

5054

Negro Sentenced To Die In Chair For Assaulting 14-Year-Old Girl

NASHVILLE, TENN., Feb. 18.—(AP)—E. K. Harris, 22-year-old negro, whose rescue by national guardsmen from a Shelbyville mob Dec. 19 cost four lives, tonight was convicted of criminally assaulting a young white girl and sentenced to die in the electric chair.

The criminal court jury was out but eight minutes.

Jack Norman, attorney for the negro, gave notice that he would file a motion for a new trial and Judge Charles Gilbert allowed him 30 days for that purpose.

No date for the execution was set, pending ruling on the motion.

Arrangements were made to take Harris immediately under heavy guard to the State Penitentiary.

He was tried here on a change of venue after the mob had caused a mistrial at Shelbyville and subsequently burned the courthouse.

More than 200 national guardsmen, in addition to sheriff's deputies and city police, were on duty here as a precaution against a recurrence of violence.

The 14-year-old school girl identified Harris and said "that black devil over there attacked me."

Harris, the only witness in his behalf, denied the charge and said he had spent the afternoon of Nov. 19, when it was alleged the attack occurred, in a Shelbyville poolroom.

Shortly after his arrest a mob formed, but officers rushed him to Nashville for safe-keeping.

He was returned there for trial a month later, but the trial was interrupted by a mob charging the courthouse. Guardsmen fired into the crowd, fatally wounding four men. A mistrial was declared and the negro, disguised with a guardsman's uniform and wearing a gas mask, was brought back here. Later he was granted a change of venue to Nashville.

By The Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Feb. 18.—E. K. Harris, 22-year-old negro whose rescue by national guardsmen from a Shelbyville mob Dec. 19 cost four lives, tonight was convicted of assaulting a 14-year-old school girl and sentenced to die in the electric chair.

The jury was out but eight minutes.

Jack Norman, attorney for the negro, gave notice that he would file a motion for a new trial and Judge Charles Gilbert allowed him 30 days for that purpose.

No date for the execution was set,

Taken to Penitentiary

Harris was taken under heavy guard to the state penitentiary.

The attack occurred on the afternoon of last Nov. 19, in the Fall Creek section of Bedford County during a school recess.

On the witness stand today the girl interrupted a question of District Attorney General J. Carlton Loser to point out Harris and say:

"That black devil over there attacked me."

Harris was saved from a mob at Shelbyville last December when he first was placed on trial. Four men fell fatally wounded before the bullets of national guardsmen as a mob stormed the courthouse. The building and several national guard trucks were burned by the mob after Harris had been spirited away, clad in the uniform of a national guardsman.

Brought here on a change of venue, Harris faced a jury of five farmers, an architect, two carpenters, a painter, a roof repairman, a merchant and a retired collector today.

Sand Bag Barricades

Outside the courthouse, 200 national guardsmen and scores of police and sheriff's deputies patrolled the streets. Six sand bag machine gun barricades were thrown up. All persons entering the building were searched for weapons.

In the courtroom, Criminal Judge Charles Gilbert maintained strict order, insisting upon silence among the spectators.

After questioning by General Loser, the girl said that Harris tried to choke her and "said he would kill me if I hollered."

The girl was nervous on the stand, and asked that her sister be permitted to sit beside her during her testimony. This request was granted.

Teacher Testifies

Her school teacher, Vassa Mai Scales, was called to testify as to the girl's condition after the alleged attack, along with Dr. S. S. Moody of Shelbyville.

Frequent clashes between attorneys enlivened the proceedings, and as the trial sped toward conclusion Jack Norman of defense counsel charged General Loser with "deliberately" attempting to prejudice the jury.

Harris himself was the only defense witness, and with conclusion of his testimony the defense rested.

He told the jury that he had been working during the morning the girl was attacked and that he spent the afternoon in a negro poolroom at Shelbyville.

Harris declared he did not start home until "dusky dark," and that he was picked up as he walked from town by Moody Snell, a dairyman and his employer, and was returned to Shelbyville, where shortly afterward he was placed under arrest.

SHELBYVILLE NEGRO MUST DIE FOR CRIME

Execution Date Deferred—Girl Points Out Attacker

JURY OUT EIGHT MINUTES

Defendant Given Change of Venue Following Riots at First Trial—Spectators Are Searched for Weapons

E. K. Harris Case Argued In Tennessee Supreme Court

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Dec. 19—The appeal of E. K. Harris, who escaped a lynching at Shelbyville, Tenn. on December 19, 1934 and was later convicted of criminal assault and sentenced to death, was argued before the Tennessee Supreme Court December 10 by Jack Norman, Esq.

Will Real Facts in the Harris Case Ever be Revealed?

Twice Saved From Tennessee Mob, Then Convicted In Record Time, Guilt of E. K. Harris Is Still Doubted.

By Staff Correspondent
(Name withheld)

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Feb. 28—What is the "lowdown" behind the hasty conviction of E. K. Harris, who twice cheated a mob, but was convicted in record time here last Monday and sentenced to die for the alleged rape of a white girl?

Is the illiterate 22-year-old man with a boy's mind actually guilty of the crime which resulted in the death of four whites in Shelbyville, where they tried to lynch him, or is there a story which could be told but won't be?

Harris is in the death cell at the Tennessee State penitentiary, awaiting the outcome of his attorney's motion for a new trial.

Is He Really Guilty?

Is Harris really guilty? Reports from Shelbyville are to the effect that Harris had been going with the girl for a long time, and that when the pair were discovered in their "love tryst" the age-old hokum made its appearance once aga

Other reports also state that couple had been keeping company, but that the young girl, angered because of a quarrel, "told" in a heat of anger, and then had to hold to her story.

It is further rumored that there are any number of witnesses in Shelbyville who could free Harris by testimony as to their knowledge of Ruby Gibson, but are afraid to come to the front and talk, for fear of endangering their lives and those of other people in the community.

Conflicting Story

The trial, which lasted nine hours, from the time jury selection started until the verdict was brought in, proved highly salacious.

In the courtroom, in addition to Harris, were two other Negroes. Ruby Lillian Gibson was afraid to sit on the witness stand alone and her sister sat near her and prompted her answers. When the girl hesitated when asked "What do you know rape to mean?" her sister cried out in court: "Tell him what it is."

During her time on the stand, in which she was forced to disclose details of her alleged relationship with the accused, she repeatedly used the term "that old black devil" in referring to Harris.

Conflicting testimony of the girl tended to show that, instead of going away from the schoolhouse at recess time, she had asked to be excused.

On cross-examination she was asked if it would hurt her to say "yes, sir," instead of saying "yes." Her answer was "yes."

Also during her cross-examination she had said at one time "he ran through the bushes like an old nigger will."

Later on, she said "he walked off."

Queried as to what she did after the alleged attack, she said: "I got up, put on my dress and panties and went to the school and told Miss Scales what that old black devil had done."

The defense attempted to bring out that it was unusual for a rape victim to sit down and calmly put on their dress and panties.

Danced Same Week

The girl testified that Dr. Moody had examined her the same afternoon, that she was sore for two weeks, but had gone to a dance that Friday night. This fact was brought out after she had first denied it.

Miss Scales, the teacher, admitted that the girl had told her of the alleged attack, but said she didn't ask the name of the man. She also admitted, under cross-examination, that the girl had never told her that she had taken her dress or panties off.

Doctor Testifies

Dr. Moody, next on the stand, testified that he found no evidence of an actual attack, although the girl did show she was bruised. He finally admitted that there was a possibility of intercourse, and that he could not have seen the signs, although he admitted examining the girl a short while after the attack.

Mrs. Samuel J. Osborne, who testified later, could not positively identify Harris, although she had known him for some time, and was within 60 feet of him at one time.

Harris, on the stand, admitted that police examined him closely, but could find nothing to connect him with the crime. He further stated that he had worked for a family named Snell that day. When Snell was on the stand, he and Attorney Norman clashed when Norman said:

"Why don't you just tell the court and jury that you are afraid to tell the truth and that he did work for you on that day?"

Melbin Batts Talks

The testimony of Melbin Batts, cell-mate of Harris, who said Harris told him he would "play crazy and fool the court and jury" was discounted when Attorney Norman brought out the fact that Batts was freed from a housebreaking and larceny charge to swear to his testimony. He said Batts was freed without a trial.

Texas.

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

5855

TEXAS NEGRO DIES IN ELECTRIC CHAIR

HUNTSVILLE, Tex., June 7.—(AP)—Albert Carr, Houston negro, paid with his life in the state electric chair early today for criminally attacking a white woman.

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Virginia.

5056

Negro Gets Chair For Twin Killing

FINCASTLE, VA., Jan. 5.—(AP)—A mountain jury in this ancient Virginia county today told Philip Jones, a negro, that he must die in the electric chair for the murder of two little girls near Clifton Forge and an attempt to ravish one of them.

It took the jury 55 minutes to decide the case after Jones's counsel had completed his arguments for mercy on the grounds of insanity.

Judge Benjamin T. Haden fixed March 11 as the execution date.

Jones took the verdict, delivered by silver-haired jury Foreman Noffsinger, without blinking an eye. He was seated unable to stand, because of a shotgun wound in his leg which he received on the night of the crime, Nov. 18. State officers were placed around the negro at the order of Judge Haden who feared the negro might attempt to do himself bodily harm.

State troopers guarded all doors and gates. They had been sent here as a result of the mob violence threats which caused the change of venue from Covington, the Alleghany County seat. There was only a small crowd to witness the condemned negro's exit.

The verdict was the jury's answer to the defense plea for mercy. The jurymen had been told by defense counsel T. Warren Messick that "electrocution is what the mob would have you do." The lawyer asked mercy if the jurymen thought the negro guilty and commitment to an asylum if they believed him insane.

Public Barred as Accused Slayer of Girls Faces Trial

FINCASTLE, Va. — With only newspaper men admitted, the trial of Philip Jones, accused of murdering two small white girls of Clifton Forge, on November 8, after criminally attacking one of them, opened here, Wednesday, January the 2nd.

Jones has been held, at intervals, at both Richmond and Roanoke, where he was rushed immediately after his arrest. The cabin in which he lived was burned by members of a mob when news of the crime became known.

His trial originally scheduled to be held at Covington, was transferred here after citizens of Covington and Clifton Forge expressed fear of serious consequences in the event the trial should be held so near the scene of the crime.

Arthur Smith, Jr., cab driver; John Pryor, farm hand, and Jones's wife, Nannie, whom Jones at first accused of complicity in the slaying, but later absolved, have also been held, but no arrangements for their trial have been made.

NEGRO BEGINS DEFENSE

FINCASTLE, VA., Jan. 21 (AP)—Asserting through his court appointed counsel that he did not murder two little Clifton Forge girls and did not criminally assault one of them as charged in indictments against him, Philip Jones, a negro, today told the Fincastle Court that, to the contrary, he had received an ugly leg wound while trying to defend them from a white man.

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

JAN 6 1935

Killer Escapes Two Lynchings But Gets Chair

Fincastle, Va., Jan. 5 (U.P.).—Saved twice from threatened lynching, Philip Jones, 25-year-old colored apple peddler, was found guilty today of attacking and murdering two young white girls. He was sentenced to the electric chair.

Crowds about the courthouse, including many persons who sought to seize Jones at Roanoke and at Clifton Forge, scene of the double murder, were quiet as the trial reached its last stages.

The slain girls, Alice B. Hill, 13, and her sister Ellen, 9, were found near Jones' farm on Nov. 19. Two State troopers flanked Jones as he silently heard his fate.

Ruling of Chief Justice Hughes in the Scottsboro Cases

Time 4-2-35

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—The text of the Supreme Court's decision in the case of Clarence Norris, holding that Negroes were unjustifiably omitted from jury service in the Scottsboro case, reads as follows: New York Times

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

No. 534—October Term, 1934.

Clarence Norris, petitioner, and the State of Alabama, on writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of the State of Alabama.

Mr. Chief Justice Hughes delivered the opinion of the court.

Petitioner, Clarence Norris, is one of nine Negro boys who were indicted in March, 1931, in Jackson County, Alabama, for the crime of rape. On being brought to trial in that county, eight were convicted.

The Supreme Court of Alabama reversed the conviction of one of these and affirmed that of seven, including Norris. This court reversed the judgments of conviction upon the ground that the defendants had been denied due process of law in that the trial court had failed in the light of the circumstances disclosed, and of the inability of the defendants at that time to obtain counsel, to make an effective appointment of counsel to aid them in preparing and presenting their defense. Powell versus Alabama, 287 U. S. 45.

After the remand a motion for change of venue was granted and the cases were transferred to Morgan County. Norris was brought to trial in November, 1933. At the outset a motion was made on his behalf to quash the indictment upon the ground of the exclusion of Negroes from juries in Jackson County, where the indictment was found.

Trial Judge Denied Motion.

A motion was also made to quash the trial venire in Morgan County upon the ground of the exclusion of Negroes from juries in that county. In relation to each county the charge was of long continued, systematic and arbitrary exclusion of qualified Negro citizens from service on juries, solely because of their race and color, in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

The State joined issue on this charge and after hearing the evidence, which we shall presently review, the trial judge denied both motions, and exception was taken. The trial then proceeded and resulted in the conviction of Norris, who was sentenced to death.

On appeal, the Supreme Court of the State considered and decided the Federal question which Norris had raised and affirmed the judgment. 156 So. 556. We granted a writ of certiorari. 293 U. S. 552.

(1). There is no controversy as to the constitutional principle involved.

The principle, long since declared, was not challenged, but was expressly recognized by the Supreme Court of the State. Summing up precisely the effect of earlier decisions, this court thus stated the principle in Carter vs. Texas, 177 U. S. 442, 447, in relation to exclusion from service on grand juries:

"Whenever by any action of a State, whether through its Legislature, through its courts, or through its executive or administrative officers, all persons of the African race are excluded, solely because of their race or color, from serving as grand jurors in the criminal prosecution of a person of the African race, the equal protection of the laws is denied to him, contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303; Neal v. Delaware, 103, U. S. 370, 397; Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S., 565." This statement was repeated in the same terms in Rogers v. Alabama, 192 U. S. 226, 231, and again in Martin v. Texas, 200 U. S. 316, 319."

Applied to Petit Juries.

The principle is equally applicable to a similar exclusion of Negroes from service in petit juries. Strauder v. West Virginia, supra; Martin v. Texas, supra. And although the State statute defining the qualifications of jurors may be fair on its face, the constitutional provision affords protection against action of the State through its administrative officers in effecting the prohibited discrimination. Neal v. Delaware, supra; Carter v. Texas, supra. Compare Virginia v. Rives, 100, U. S. 313, 322, 325; in re: Wood, 140, U. S. 278, 285; Thomas v. Texas, 212, U. S. 278, 282, 283.

The question is of the application of this established principle to the facts disclosed by the record. That the question is one of fact does not relieve us of the duty to determine whether in truth a Federal right has been denied. When a Federal right has been specially set up and claimed in a State court, it is our province to inquire not merely whether it was denied in express terms but also whether it was denied in substance and effect.

If this requires an examination of evidence, that examination must be made. Otherwise, review of this court would fail of its purpose in safeguarding constitutional rights.

Thus, whenever a conclusion of law of a State court as to a Federal right and findings of fact are so intermingled that the latter controls the former, it is incumbent upon us to analyze the facts in order that the appropriate enforcement of the Federal right may be assured. Creswill v. Knights of Pythias, 225, U. S., 246, 261; Northern Pacific Railway Company v. North Dakota, 236, U. S. 285, 293; Ward v. Love County, 253, U. S. 17, 22; Davis, County, 253, U. S. 17, 22; Davis, Director General v. Weshsler, 263, U. S. 22, 24; Fiske v. Kansas, 274, U. S. 380, 385, 386; Ancient Egyptian Order v. Michaux, 279, U. S. 737, 745.

Reviews State Jury Law.

(2). The evidence on the motion to quash the indictment.

In 1930 the total population of Jackson County, where the indictment was found, was 36,881, of whom 2,688 were Negroes. The male population over 21 years of age numbered 8,801, and of these 866 were Negroes.

The qualifications of jurors were thus prescribed by the State statute (Alabama Code, 1923, Sec. 8603):

"The jury commission shall place on the jury roll and in the jury box the names of all male citizens of the county who are generally reputed to be honest and intelligent men and are esteemed in the community for their integrity, good character and sound judgment, but no person must be selected who is under 21 or over 65 years of age, or who is an habitual drunkard, or who being afflicted with a permanent disease or physical weakness is unfit to discharge the duties of a juror, or who cannot read English, or who has even been convicted of any offense involving moral turpitude. If a person cannot read English and has all the other qualifications prescribed herein and is a freeholder or householder, his name may be placed on the jury roll and in the jury box." (See Gen. Acts, Alabama, 1931, No. 47,659.)

Negroes Not Called on Juries.

Defendant adduced evidence to support the charge of unconstitutional discrimination in the actual administration of the statute in Jackson County. The testimony, as the State court said, tended to show that "in a long number of years no Negro had been called for jury service in that county." It appeared that no Negro had served on any grand or petit jury in that county within the memory of witnesses who had lived there all their lives. Testimony to that effect was given by men whose ages ran from 50 to 76 years. Their testimony was uncontradicted. It was supported by the testimony of officials.

The clerk of the jury commission and the clerk of the Circuit Court had never known of a Negro serving on a grand jury in Jackson County. The court reporter, who had not missed a session in that county in twenty-four years, and two jury commissioners, testified to the same effect. One of the latter, who was a member of the commission which made up the jury roll for the grand jury which found the indictment, testified that he had "never known of a single instance where any Negro sat on any grand or petit jury in the entire history of that county."

Negroes Qualified as Jurors.

That testimony in itself made out a prima facie case of the denial of the equal protection which the Constitution guarantees. (See Neal v. Delaware, supra.) The case thus made was supplemented by direct testimony that specified Negroes, thirty or more in number, were qualified for jury service. Among these were Negroes who were members of school boards, or trustees of colored schools and property owners and householders. It also appeared that Negroes from that county had been called for jury service in the Federal Court.

Several of those who were thus described as qualified were witnesses. While there was testimony which cast doubt upon the qualifications of some of the Negroes who had been named, and there was also general testimony by the editor of a local newspaper who gave his opinion as to the lack of "sound judgment" of the "good Negroes" in Jackson County, we think that the definite testimony as to the actual qualifications of individual Negroes, which was not met by any testimony equally direct, showed that there were Negroes in Jackson County qualified for jury service.

The question arose whether names of Negroes were in fact on the jury roll. The books containing the jury roll for Jackson County for the year 1930-31 were produced. They were produced from the custody of a member of the jury commission which, in 1931, had succeeded the commission which had made up the jury roll from which the grand jury in question had been drawn. On the pages of this roll appeared the names of six Negroes. They were entered, respectively, at the end of the precinct lists which were alphabetically arranged.

Entries on Rolls Disputed.

The genuiness of these entries was disputed. It appeared that after the jury roll in question had been made up, and after the new jury commission had taken office, one of the new commissioners directed the new clerk to draw lines after the names which had been placed on the roll by the preceding commission.

These lines on the pages under consideration, were underlines, and the clerk of the old commission testified that they were not put in by him. The entries made by the new clerk, for the new jury roll, were below these lines.

The names of the six Negroes were in each instance written immediately above the red lines. An expert of long experience testified that these names were superimposed upon the red lines, that is, that they were written after the lines were drawn. The expert was not cross-examined and no testimony was introduced to contradict him. (a.)

In denying the motion to quash, the trial judge expressed the view that he would not "be authorized to presume that somebody had committed a crime" or to presume that the jury board "had been unfaithful to their duties and allowed the books to be tampered with." His conclusion was that names of Negroes were on the jury roll.

Not Justified by Evidence.

We think that the evidence did not justify that opinion. The Supreme Court of the State did not sustain it. That court observed that the charge that the names of Negroes were fraudulently placed on the roll did not involve any member of the jury board, and that the charge "was, by implication at least, laid at the door of the clerk of the board."

The court, reaching its decision irrespective of that question, treated that phase of the matter as "wholly immaterial" and hence passed it by "without any expression of opinion thereon." The State court rested its decision upon the ground that even if it were assumed that there was no name of a Negro on the jury roll, it was not established that race or color caused the omission.

The court pointed out that the statute fixed a high standard of qualifications for jurors (Green versus State, 73, Ala. 26; State versus Curtis, 210 Ala. 1) and that the jury commission was vested with a wide discretion. The court adverted to the fact that more white citizens possessing age qualifications had been omitted from the jury roll than the entire Negro population of the county, and regarded the testimony as being to the effect that "the matter of race, color, politics, religion, or fraternal affiliations" had not been discussed by the commission and had not entered into their consideration, and that no one had been excluded because of race or color.

Method of Selection Shown.

The testimony showed the practice of the Jury Commission. One of the commissioners who made up the jury roll in question and the clerk of that commission, testified as to the manner of its preparation. The other two commissioners of that period did not testify. It was shown that the clerk, under the direction of the commissioners, made up a preliminary list which was based on the registration list of voters, the polling list and the tax list, and apparently also upon the telephone directory.

The clerk testified that he made up a list of all male citizens between the ages of 21 and 65 years without regard to their status or qualifications. The commissioner testified that the designation "col." was placed after the names of those who were colored.

In preparing the final jury roll, the preliminary list was checked off as to qualified jurors with the aid of men whom the commissioners called in for that purpose from the different precincts. And the commissioner testified that in the selections for the jury roll no one was "automatically or systematically" excluded, or excluded on account of race or color; that he "did not inquire as to color," that was not discussed.

But, in appraising the action of the commissioners, these statements cannot be divorced from other testimony, as we have seen, there was testimony, not overborne or discredited, that there were in fact Negroes in the county qualified for jury service. That testimony was direct and specific. After eliminating those persons as to whom there was some evidence of lack of qualifications, a considerable number of others remained. The fact that the testimony as to these persons, fully identified, was not challenged by evidence appropriately direct, cannot be brushed aside.

Overrules State Court.

There is no ground for an assumption that the names of these Negroes were not on the preliminary list. The inference to be drawn from the testimony is that they were on that preliminary list and were not placed on the jury roll. There was thus presented a test of the practice of the commissioners. Something more than mere general asseverations was required. Why were these names excluded from the jury roll? Was it because of the lack of statutory qualifications? Were the qualifications of Negroes actually and properly considered?

The testimony of the commissioner on this crucial question puts the case in a strong light. That testimony leads to the conclusion that these or other Negroes were not excluded on account of age, or lack of esteem in the community for integrity and judgment, or because of disease or want of any other qualification. The commissioner's answer to specific inquiry upon this point was that Negroes were "never discussed." We give in the margin quotations from his testimony. (b).

We are of the opinion that the evidence required a different result from that reached in the State Court. We think that the evidence that for a generation or longer no Negro had been called for service on any jury in Jackson County, that there were Negroes qualified for jury service, that according to the practice of the Jury Commission their names would normally appear on the preliminary list of male citizens of the requisite age but that no names of Negroes were placed on the jury roll, and the testimony with respect to the lack of appropriate consideration of the qualifications of Negroes, established the discrimination which the Constitution forbids. The motion to quash the indictment upon that ground should have been granted.

(3) The evidence on the motion to quash the trial venire.

The population of Morgan County, where the trial was had, was larger than that of Jackson County, and the proportion of Negroes was much greater. The total population of Morgan County in 1930 was 46,176, and of this number 8,811 were Negroes.

Within the memory of witnesses long resident there, no Negro had ever served on a jury in that county or had been called for such service. Some of these witnesses were over fifty years of age and had always lived in Morgan County. Their testimony was not contradicted. A clerk of the circuit court, who had resided in the county for thirty years and who had been in office for over four years, testified that during his official term approximately 2,500 persons had been called for jury service and that not one of them was a Negro; that he did not recall "ever seeing any single person of the colored race serve on any jury in Morgan County."

There was abundant evidence that there were a large number of Negroes in the county who were qualified for jury service. Men of intelligence, some of whom were college graduates, testified to long lists (said to contain nearly 200 names) of such qualified Negroes, including many business men, owners of real property and householders.

When defendant's counsel proposed to call many additional witnesses in order to adduce further proof of qualifications of Negroes for jury service, the trial judge limited the testimony, holding that the evidence was cumulative.

Exclusion Held Illegal.

We find no warrant for a conclusion that the names of any of the Negroes as to whom this testimony was given, or of any other Negroes, were placed on the jury rolls. No such names were identified. The evidence that for many years no Negro had been called for jury service itself tended to show the absence of the names of Negroes from the jury rolls and the State made no effort to prove their presence.

The trial judge limited the defendant's proof "to the present year, the present jury roll." The Sheriff of the county called as a witness for defendants, scanned the jury roll and after "looking over every single name on that jury roll, from A to Z," was unable to point out "any single Negro on it."

For this long-continued, unvarying and wholesale exclusion of Negroes from jury service we find no justification consistent with the constitutional mandate. We have carefully examined the testimony of the jury commissioners upon which the State court based its decision. One of these commissioners testified in person and the other two submitted brief affidavits.

By the State act (gen. acts, Ala., 1931, No. 47, p. 55), in force at the time the jury roll in question was made up, the clerk of the jury board was required to obtain the names of all male citizens of the county over twenty-one and under sixty-five years of age, and their occupation, place of residence and place of business. (Id., p. 58, Sec. 11.) The qualification of those who were to be placed on the jury roll were the same as those prescribed by the earlier statute which we have already quoted. (Id., p. 59, Sec. 14.)

State Evidence Failed.

The member of the jury board who testified orally said that a list was made up which included the names of all male citizens of suitable age; that black residents were not excluded from this general list; that in compiling the jury roll he did not consider race or color; that no one was excluded for that reason and that he had placed on the jury roll the names of persons possessing the qualifications under the statute. The affidavits of the other members of the board contained general statements to the same effect.

We think that this evidence failed to rebut the strong prima facie case which defendant has made. That showing as to the long-continued exclusion of Negroes from jury service and as to the many Negroes qualified for that service could not be met by mere generalities. If, in the presence of such testimony as defendant adduced, the mere general assertions by officials of their performance of duty were to be accepted as an adequate justification for the complete exclusion of Negroes from jury service, the constitutional provision—adopted with special reference to their protection—would be but a vain and illusory requirement.

Statement Too Sweeping.

The general attitude of the jury commissioner is shown by the following extract from his testimony:

"I do not know of any Negro in Morgan County over twenty-one and under sixty-five who is generally reputed to be honest and intelligent and who is esteemed in the community for his integrity, good character and sound judgment, who is not an habitual drunkard, who isn't afflicted with a permanent disease or physical weakness which would render him unfit to discharge the duties of a juror and who can read English and who has never been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude."

In the light of the testimony given by defendant's witnesses, we find it impossible to accept such a sweeping characterization of the lack of qualifications of Negroes in Morgan County. It is so sweeping, and so contrary to the evidence as to the many qualified Negroes, that it destroys the intended effect of the commissioner's testimony.

In Neal versus Delaware, supra, decided over fifty years ago, this court observed that it was a "violent presumption," in which the State court had there indulged, that the uniform exclusion of Negroes from juries, during a period of many years, was solely because, in the judgment of the officers charged with the selection of grand and petit jurors, fairly exercised, "the black race in Delaware were utterly disqualified by want of intelligence, experience or moral integrity to sit on juries."

Such a presumption at the present time would be no less violent with respect to the exclusion of the Negroes of Morgan County. And, upon the proof contained in the record now before us, a conclusion that their continuous and total exclusion from juries was because there were none possessing the requisite qualifications, cannot be sustained.

We are concerned only with the Federal question which we have discussed, and in view of the denial of the Federal right suitably asserted, the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Mr. Justice McReynolds did not hear the argument and took no part in the consideration and decision of this case.

NOTES.

(a) The books containing the jury roll in question were produced on the argument at this bar and were examined by the court.

(b) "Q.—Did you ever exclude from the jury rolls any Negroes because you found, first, he was a man under 21 years old or over 65, and he was excluded by reason of his age; secondly, because he was a person who wasn't esteemed in the community for being a decent and honorable citizen, for good sound common sense and judgment, did you ever see or hear of them not going to take that Negro because he wasn't esteemed in the community for good sense and judgmen? A.—No, sir.

"Q.—Did you ever have occasion to say, I can't take that Negro because he is a fellow that has a disease which may affect or does affect his mentality, did you ever say that to yourself, with reference to any particular Negro? A.—No, sir, Negroes was never discussed.

"Q.—Did you ever say to yourself as a jury commissioner in compiling those lists, I am not going to take that Negro because he was convicted before of a crime involving moral turpitude; have you ever excluded a Negro on that ground; did you ever find any Negro that came within that category, under your personal knowledge, in Jackson County? A.—I couldn't recall any; no, sir, I don't know.

"Q.—Have you ever known of any Negro in Jackson County who was excluded by reason of the fact that he could not read English, and that Negro at the same time wasn't a freeholder or householder; did you ever say, I can't take that Negro because he is prohibited under the rules from serving by reason of that provision? A.—No, sir.

"Q.—Or anybody in your presence? A.—It never was discussed.

"Q.—You had been a jury commissioner how long? A.—I was on it under Bibb Graves's administration, 1928, 1929, 1930.

"Q.—Three years? A.—Yes, sir.

"Q.—And you never had occasion to exclude any Negro in Jackson County by reason of the disqualifying provisions I have just called to your attention? A.—Not to my personal knowledge, no, sir.

Scottsboro Reversal Points Road to Herndon Victory

Protests Can Force Release Of Negro Hero

Herndon Bail Fund Is Tribute to Labor's Solidarity

By Anna Damon

(Acting National Secretary, International Labor Defense)

The tremendous victory of the I. L. D. in the Scottsboro case proves what mass pressure can do in an appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

We have a task now to complete this victory, to prevent new indictments against these innocent boys, to win their immediate, unconditional and safe release.

The same Supreme Court which was forced to grant a second reversal of the lynch-verdits against the Scottsboro boys, now has before it the case of Angelo Herndon. Our victory in the Scottsboro case points the road for victory in the Herndon case.

The day when the U. S. Supreme Court is to hear the sentence against Angelo Herndon appealed, is drawing very close. On or about April 1, Whitney North Seymour, attorney for the International Labor Defense, will bring before that court the arguments of the workers, against sending this young Negro organizer to serve a term of 18 to 20 years on the Georgia chain gang —in reality, to his death.

After 26 months in the terrible dungeon of Fulton Tower prison in Atlanta, Angelo Herndon stepped forth last August, for the time being a free man. Penny by penny, the workers had raised $15,000 to get Herndon out of prison, on bail. The story of how Herndon was taken from jail is a stirring story of working-class devotion. Today, when the Herndon case is again drawing to a climax, it is worth while to recall that story.

For more than two years the Georgia lynchers refused to set bail for Herndon. While the boy's health was slowly being drained away by the filth, the discomfort, the starvation, and the extremes of heat and cold in his cell in Fulton Tower prison, the Georgia officials were deaf to all the demands of the International Labor Defense, voicing the desires of the workers, that bail be set for Herndon, so that he might have at least a few months of freedom. But at last the voice of the indignant workers became so loud that even the Georgia lynchers had to listen. They set the sum of $15,000 for bail — certain that it would never be furnished.

The I. L. D. sent out a call—and the workers responded. In 23 short days, they raised, penny by penny, dollar by dollar, not the $15,000 the Georgia rulers demanded, but the enormous sum of $18,723.85! Those of us who were in the headquarters of the I. L. D. at this time, who received the workers coming with contributions, who read the letters that accompanied the hundreds of loans and donations arriving in the mails, saw passing before our very eyes a drama of working-class sacrifice, devotion and heroism.

Two hundred and fifty-five individuals gave from $1 to $5; 55 gave as much as $100 or more. But every penny, every dollar given or loaned meant a sacrifice.

In those days the American workers knew Angelo Herndon only through what they heard and through what they read. But now, almost eight months later, hundreds of thousands from coast to coast have seen Angelo Herndon, have heard him speak, have pressed his hand. They know him for the courageous youthful leader that he is. And to these thousands, the thought that Herndon must go back to the chain gang, to torture and death is intolerable.

There is much at stake in the decision which the Supreme Court will render, after it has heard the appeal of the I. L. D. in the Herndon case. There is at stake the right of the workers to organize, to strike, to read workers' literature, to demand bread and shelter, and to belong to the organizations of the working-class. There is at stake the elementary rights of the Negro people.

The working-class that, out of its hunger and its poverty brought forward the sum of $15,000 to free Angelo Herndon, will not let Herndon go to the chain-gang. The struggle must now, more than ever, take the form of demonstrations that will be heard in the very chambers of the Supreme Court. What that court will decide depends not so much upon the proof of Herndon's innocence — if innocence and constitutional rights were the chief basis for decisions, Herndon would never have spent a day in prison. What the U. S. Supreme Court decides in the case of Angelo Herndon, depends first of all upon the sentiment they feel among the people, the extent to which the determination of the masses that Herndon shall go free, can make itself known to that court.

To this end, greater demonstrations, a greater flood of protests.

It has taken thousands of dollars to free Herndon temporarily, and the cost of the campaign and legal expenses in connection with the fight to win his complete freedom are mounting daily. Money for the defense fund of the International Labor Defense, which is defending him, should be rushed to Room 610, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

Wm. Patterson Hails Reversal On Scottsboro

Cable from I.L.D. Head Urges Fight for Other Class-War Prisoners

NEW YORK.—"Congratulations on this history-making victory," William L. Patterson, National Secretary of the International Labor Defense, cabled the I. L. D. today from Moscow, after receiving news of the reversal by the U. S. Supreme Court of the death sentencee against two of the Scottsboro defendants, Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris. Patterson, whose health broke down chiefly as the result of his intense activities for Scottsboro freedom, is resting in a sanatorium in the Soviet Union.

"Congratulations on this history-making victory. It is a complete vindication of international working class solidarity and actions, and of the policy of the International Labor Defense. It is a vindication of our fight on Scottsboro as a broad struggle for democratic rights for all American toilers, and in Negro liberation struggles in particular.

"Consolidate these historic movements against reaction. Intensify the struggle for the fredom of Mooney, Billings, Herndon, McNamara, on the basis of this victory. Prepare the masses to meet the danger of lynching. Fight the illusions of the fairness of the Supreme Court, which remains the court of last illusions.

"This victory revives the heroic revolutionary traditions of the Negro people. It raises the struggle for national liberation to a higher political level.

"Build the I. L. D. in struggle."

Greetings from Red Aid

From the Executive Committee of the International Red Aid, parent organization of the International Labor Defense in all countries, came the following cable on the Scottsboro victory:

"Hearty congratulations to the International Labor Defense and to the American toilers. The Scottsboro decision is a victory for the world campaign of the International Red Aid and for the solidarity of the black and white workers."

* * *

From the Canadian Labor Defense League, came the following telegram:

"The National Executive Committee of the Canadian Labor Defense League greets the mighty victory of the International Labor Defense in the Scottsboro cases. It pledges its steady support in the struggle for Negro rights and workers' freedom."

600 Daily Workers Sold at West Virginia Parade of Coal Miners

BECKLEY, W. Va., April 5.—More than 600 copies of the Daily Worker were sold here April 1, when 4,000 members of the United Mine Workers of America paraded to celebrate Mitchell Day, anniversary of the institution of the eight-hour day for miners.

Daily Worker salesmen declared they could have sold hundreds more, if they had had them on hand.

Among the banners carried in the parade was one calling for the freedom of Tom Mooney.

Carter Is Cheered By Latest Victory In Scottsboro Fight

By LESTER CARTER
(Defense Witness)

I am glad to know of the great victory which has been won in the Scottsboro case. It has been a long, hard struggle, and I am glad to say I never let up for one minute. I know it was mass pressure that helped us win this victory, because I toured all the country with Mrs. Patterson and Richard B. Moore, and we spoke in more than 80 cities and organized the campaign.

The U. S. High Court had to give these boys a new trial after all the evidence that was given them and all the protest they got from all over the U. S. The I. L. D. is going to fight this case to a finish, which means complete freedom for these boys, and I hope all those people who have supported the fight until now will continue to do all they can and get the others to do the same.

Chicago Unions Back Metal Workers' Strike At Die Casting Plant

(Daily Worker Midwest Bureau)

CHICAGO, Ill., April 5.—Assisted by other workers' organizations, strikers of the Paragon Die Casting Company entered the third week of their struggle. A picket line of more than 100 marched before the plant today. Police intimidation failed to break the fine spirit among the strikers.

The Metal Workers Industrial Union and Mechanics Educational Society are helping the strikers to collect relief funds. Unions and sympathetic organizations were asked to help supply pickets, who should report daily, at 7 a.m., at 2701 North Crawford Avenue.

British Press Features News Of Scottsboro

Engdahl-Wright Tour Recalled in Story of U.S. Frame-Up

LONDON, April 2.—The decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in the Scottsboro case received prominent display yesterday in newspapers here and throughout England.

The London News Chronicle featured it as the biggest news of the day, and also commented editorially on the decision.

The London Mirror recalled the trip to England by the Scottsboro Mother, Mrs. Ada Wright, who, with the late J. Louis Engdahl, toured many European countries under the auspices of the International Red Aid to mobilize mass protests against the lynch verdicts. Engdahl and Mrs. Wright were hounded throughout the entire tour by the U. S. State Department. At the instigation of the State Department, they were arrested in several countries, held in jail overnight on one occasion and were deported from Belgium. They were permitted to remain in England only ten days.

Engdahl, former national secretary of the International Labor Defense, died in Moscow, at the end of the tour, as a result of his persecution by police in the capitalist countries he visited with Mrs. Wright.

I. Sack, Philadelphia, writes: "The Daily Worker is undoubtedly the most powerful instrument of the workers in their strike struggles. . . . Enclosed you will find a check for $6 for renewal."

Officials Fear Facts on Negro Life in Harlem

'Red Scare' Fails to Conceal Source of Poverty, Misery

By I. Amter

District Organizer, Communist Party, N. Y.

"The Grand Jury and the District Attorney are trying to get information against people who advocate the overthrow of the republican form of government by force and violence. We are going after them and we expect to get them."—District Attorney Dodge, N. Y. Times, March 29, 1935.

The above statement makes it clear that District Attorney Dodge and the LaGuardia administration are not anxious to learn what caused the so-called "riot" in Harlem on March 19. On the contrary, LaGuardia and Dodge know that a real exposure of conditions in Harlem will not only show up the Fusion-Wall Street Administration, but also the whole Tammany gang control of New York City.

Any one at all conversant with conditions in Harlem — even the worst enemy of the Communist Party in Harlem — frankly admits today that the Communists were not to blame for the riot in Harlem, but that basic to the elemental outburst of hatred and resentment displayed on March 19 were the hunger, misery, high rents, denial of rights, police brutality, etc., to which the nearly 300,000 Negroes of Upper Harlem and the 150,000 Latin-Americans of Lower Harlem are subjected.

Does District Attorney Dodge dare to deny that relief in Harlem is lower than in other parts of the city? Of course not. Is it not a well-known fact that more than a year ago instructions were issued by the Welfare Department of New York that "those nationalities that are accustomed to a lower standard of living shall get a lower standard of relief"—specifying Negroes, Latin Americans and Italians? Is it not a well-established fact that the Harlem Relief Buros are given less funds to distribute in relief and rent than the "better sections" of the city? Is it not a fact that tuberculosis is far more widespread in Harlem than in other sections? Is it not a fact that rent for Negroes in Harlem is far higher than for whites? And above all, can any one dispute that unemployment is more widespread among the Negroes of Harlem—as among the Negroes throughout the city and country—than among the whites?

LaGuardia and Dodge are trying to dodge these facts. They are trying to find a Communist "riot" as having caused this explosion of anger in Harlem. In other words they are trying to find a goat for the brutality and hunger system that the capitalist class of New York has established against the Negroes.

We Communists have nothing to conceal. Where the workers are in struggle, there the Communists will be found organizing and leading the workers. For years Communists have pointed out the fearful conditions in Harlem. We were called "demagogues," "exaggerating conditions" for the purpose of bringing forward the Party. For years Communists in the Unemployment Councils have led the unemployed in struggle for relief, for clothes, to prevent evictions, etc. We have forced the authorities to grant more relief, while at the same time police clubs and jail sentences have rained on the head of Communists and militant workers, both Negro and white.

For years we have fought against the butchery of Negroes in the Harlem hospitals, and the discrimination against Negroes in all the institutions in New York. For three years and more Communists have pointed out to the Negroes and white workers of Harlem that Scottsboro is not only in the South, because the conditions in the north are leading to more frame-ups, more murders of Negroes.

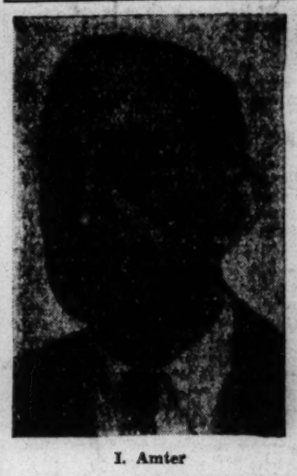
Now we have Harlem—and the Communists "are to blame!"

District Attorney Dodge thinks that he can cover up the criminal conditions which the Negroes of Harlem and of this country are subjected to by raising the howl of "overthrow of the republican form of government by force and violence." Who is using force and violence in Harlem and throughout the country? Who murdered 16 workers during the textile strike? Who smashes the heads of workers on picket lines in New York City and throughout the country? Who organizes gangs of vigilantes and American Liberty Leagues, etc., against the workers? Who, but mayors like LaGuardia, district attorneys like Dodge all over the country!

The Communists cannot be ousted from Harlem, Messrs. Dodge and LaGuardia. Neither Negro Communists nor white Communists. Wherever there is a suffering worker, there the Communists will be. Wherever workers are attacked and assaulted, as were the workers of Harlem, both Negro and white, on March 19, there the Communists will be. Wherever efforts are not made to change these conditions, more Communists will be developed, both Negro and white. Neither LaGuardia, Dodge, the fascist Hearst, the Rev. Wm. R. McCann nor the whole capitalist class will be able to drive the Communists, white and Negro, out of Harlem.

On the contrary, the Negroes of Harlem today know that there is only one Party that really fights against all the degradation they have to accept in Harlem as throughout the country, and that is the Communist Party.

And while we are about it, let us ask LaGuardia and Dodge and the Wall Street bankers whom they represent a few questions. What about the conditions among the Negroes in Brownsville, in Williamsburg, in Crown Heights, in Queens? Are they not living in "houses" unfit even for a dog to live in? Are these "houses" not tumble-down shacks without a single accommodation? Is relief for the Negroes in these sections the same as relief for whites—as miserable as the latter is, as reported by LaGuardia's own Unemployment Relief Commission? Is unemployment not just as rife among the Negro masses in the other sections of the city as in Harlem? Perhaps the Communists are "to blame" for this, too, Messrs. LaGuardia and Dodge.



And how about the Negroes in Chicago, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Detroit, St. Louis, and throughout the South? They, too, probably have no grievances—and if they have, the Communists are "to blame"—they want to "overthrow the republican form of government by force and violence."

We tell you, as we tell the Negro and white masses of this country, that there will be no end to hunger, discrimination, terror, denial of all rights, etc., until the workers of this country, Negro and white, put an end to this "republican form of government" and establish a revolutionary Workers' Government in the U. S.

And who will use force and violence then as they are using it today against the Negro and white workers? It will be the LaGuardias, Dodges, Hearsts, Coughlins, Huey Longs, MacFaddens, etc., the outspoken champions of fascism in the U. S. today. The workers will have to face your violence then as we face it today. But the workers will be assured, as they are today, that they will have a Communist Party that can and does organize them for this struggle.

We can assure you, Messrs. Dodge and LaGuardia, that you will not find goats in the Communists. The Harlem "riot" will lead to the exposure of all of you as nothing before has. We Communists pledge to the masses of Harlem and the workers throughout the country that this will be so. And in this exposure we will organize the workers in a struggle that will put an end to your hunger and police terror, and at last liberate the masses of this country.

ASSAILS DODGE

I. Amter

'Epic' Leader Fights United Front Actions

Upton Sinclair Opposes Joint Struggle for the Sacramento Defendants, Repeal of Vicious Criminal Syndicalist Law on the Coast

By Harold J. Ashe

(Harold J. Ashe, the author of this article, was state secretary of the Socialist Party, at the time Sinclair joined the Democratic Party and announced his candidacy for Governor. While Sinclair was forming a "united front" with the party of reaction, Ashe was fighting within the Socialist Party for a united front with the Communist Party, and finally in complete disgust with the Socialist Party joined the Communist Party. For that reason, Ashe's analysis of the Sinclair statement on the united front is particularly significant.—Editor's note.)

LOS ANGELES.—Bitterly assailing united fronts of the working class, Upton Sinclair, Epic leader, in a thousand word article in Epic News, has warned his followers against the "tactics" of the Communist Party.

Sinclair, whose contact with his own followers daily is becoming more remote, lamely admits that he learned through "a friend of mine," of a united front of Epics, Utopians, Communists, trade union groups, etc.

This friend told Sinclair that "it was fine to see some of the young Epics there and some of the young Utopians. The Communists are planning an organization in which they can all cooperate."

Silent on United Front Aims

The united front, which Sinclair does not call by name and which he carefully does not describe as to its purposes, is the Joint Action Conference for Protection of Labor's Civil Rights. Its program includes fighting for release of the 15 Sacramento prisoners, repeal of the Criminal Syndicalism Law, reinstatement of the locked-out Los Angeles railway strikers and several other fundamental issues involving concretely the rights of California labor.

"The basic principle upon which the Epic movement stands is the right and power of the people to solve our present economic problems by democratic consent," explains Sinclair in his article. "The basic principle upon which the Communist movement is founded is a conviction that democracy is a delusion and a snare for the workers, and that the only way our economic problems can be solved is by the overthrow of democratic government and the setting up of a dictatorship of the proletariat."

Sinclair insist that "between these two points of view there can be no compromise, and consequently there can be no cooperation between Epics and Communists."

Sinclair, by his own logic, no doubt would raise the question of political differences even in a sinking life-boat, and debate the question of whether an Epic and Communist might bail out the water together or not. And, while the argument was raging, the boat would sink.

ITEM: Sinclair, the leader, is not in the sinking boat. Sinclair is on the shore, shouting through a megaphone to his drowning Epicite.

Mr. Sinclair must be reminded that, despite his protestations of poverty, that this "poverty" is only relative. He must be reminded that he is not on county relief or S. E. R. A.; he is in no danger of going to a transient labor camp; he is not on trial at Sacramento, or remotely likely to be; he is not a worker and therefore not economically concerned with the necessity for unionization; nor is he on strike and up against Fascist terror and police brutality; he is not in danger of disfranchisement because he is a "pauper."

On "Democratic Consent"

These things, which Mr. Sinclair is aloof from, which leave him untouched, are profoundly affecting workers and the middle-class. An Epic unemployed worker feels an S. E. R. A. cut as desperately as does a Communist or Utopian or Mug-Wump.

Sinclair, himself, on Nov. 7 bitterly hinted that the election had been stolen from him by the Merriam gang, yet he talks about "democratic consent." If the election was stolen from him—and there is reason to so believe — then the "democratic consent" of the voters went for naught, and was only one more piece of evidence providing to the workers that for them, at least, capitalist democracy is indeed "a delusion and snare."

Mr. Sinclair's "young friend," who is properly enthusiastic about our united front for labor civil rights, can himself set Mr. Sinclair right on one point, namely: that Communsts in this united front are the ones most eager to broaden the united front and are doing all in their power to keep it from becoming a narrow, hide-bound group. Mr. Sinclair's editorial, to the contrary, if it has an effect upon Epic followers, will tend to narrow the United Front.

Thanks to Mr. Sinclair's definition of the essential characteristics of the Epic movement, namely "democratic consent," it is now possible to point out to Epic members and sympathizers that if they depend solely upon this formula, they must wait patiently until the Fall of 1936, almost two more years ere they may again battle for their rights against the master class.

Unity for Immediate Needs

The Communist Party, on the other hand, believes in fighting for immediate demands for the workers here and NOW—not in waiting until the apparatus of "democratic consent" is again made "available."

Regardless of the politicians in office and the labels they may happen to wear, workers can force concessions from them NOW. Workers can force them to stop their attacks upon the working class. But workers cannot do this, so long as "leaders," such as Mr. Sinclair, raise the question of whether the workers accept the principle of "democratic consent," or the principle of the "dictatorship of the proletariat." Certainly, the Communist Party, which Mr. Sinclair would have you believe is very sectarian and hidebound, does not ask workers to accept the dictatorship of the proletariat as a requirement for participation in united front struggles. It remains for Mr. Sinclair to inject such an issue.

Strongly as does the Communist Party feel upon the question of the dictatorship of thhe proletariat, it does not raise this issue in the immediate struggles of the workers as expressed in united fronts. Being rooted in the working class, having as its leaders members of the working class who are not merely close to, but a part of the victims of capitalist oppression, the Communist Party insists that the burning issues, Mr. Sinclair, are (1) food, clothing and shelter and economic security; (2) right of workers to organize, strike and picket; (3) War and Fascism.

These, Mr. Sinclair, are the issues! These are the issues that workers in their daily struggles are confronted with. These are the issues that impel and compel workers to unite, each with the other, regardless of their programmatic, political, religious and other differences.

Unity "From Above"

Two other points raised by Mr. Sinclair must be cleared up. He says further that "They (the Third International) explain that by this policy (United Front From Below) they will not have anything to do with the leaders of Socialist or Democratic movements, but merely try to win the rank and file."

The Communist Party of the U. S. A. has gone to the Socialist Party of America almost every time its national executive committee has met for the past two years, trying to effect a united front with the latter. Without exception they have been rebuffed by the same kind of specious arguments advanced by Mr. Sinclair.

In Germany, too, the Social Democrats haughtily refused to unite with the Communists against Hitler. The results are so painfully apparent, that Socialists do not like to dwell upon it. Yet, today, Socialist leaders are repeating the mistakes of the Social Democratic leaders of Germany.

Moreover, Sinclair's eagerness to denounce the united front reveals quite clearly that he wishes to "condition" his followers to the point where, upon the basis of his unfair statement, they will reject a united front whenever and wherever it may be presented to them for democratic action. In the meantime, it is significant that this question, as with many other most questions, has not even been permitted to go to your membership, but is allowed to die in the bureaucratic, narrow, unrepresentative End Poverty League Board of Directors. This last is expecially significant in view of Sinclair's enlightening declaration that Epic subscribes to the principle of "democratic consent." Inner-organizational practice of the principle of "democratic consent," evidently cannot be permitted the rank and file.

In closing, I wish to propose as recommended reading for Mr. Upton Sinclair, his own newspaper, namely: The Epic News, March 4, 1935, issue, and the article on Imperial Valley where "democratic consent" and democratic institutions are playing havoc with workers' rights. This article appeared in the same issue and on the same page as Sinclair's tirade against United Front. It, by simple reporting of fact, should make Sinclair blush with shame.

Change Urged In Marine Bill

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Opposition to the discrimination against seamen on small ships, embodied in the Sirovich Bill to increase liabilities of big ship owners in case of accident, was voiced Wednesday by William L. Standard, seamen's attorney, when the bill was discussed before the House Merchant Marine Committee, here.

The Sirovich Bill is designed to increase the liability of steamship companies in sea disasters such as the burning of the Morro Castle, on which 135 lives were lost.

The bill, however, makes provisions for liability on the basis of the tonnage of vessels, at the rate of $100 per ton. This gives seamen who work on tugs, lighters, barges and canal boats very little protection, Mr. Standard pointed out.

Standard proposed that the bill be amended to make owners of vessels of 500 tons or less carry insurance amounting to $10,000 for each member of the crew. As the bill reads now, he said, seamen on small crafts will be discriminated against.

"We have been able to increase our bundle and obtain subs," writes Betty Moore, East Liverpool, Ohio. "But in order to have success in the drive, every Party member must be made Daily Worker conscious."

Professor Williams Honored by Soviet Masses

By Vern Smith

(Special to the Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, April 5 (By Cable).—"I have passed through three revolutions—and not simply passed through but actively participated in them." That was the answer of 72-year old Professor Vassily Williams to a young English scientist who asked how the old academician had managed to preserve the qualities of fervent energy and efficiency.

Today the entire Soviet press notes the 50th anniversary of Professor Williams' scientific work as a member of the Academy of Science. Williams has written over 130 scientific works which created a new epoch in agriculture. They made his name as a world scientist. During half a century of scientific labor, Williams taught a whole generation of scientists. Thousands of his students are now working on collective farm fields.

Aided Early Struggles

Professor Williams is the son of an American engineer and a Russian peasant woman, and as far back as the eighties of the last century, when he wrote his first book, he was a friend of revolutionary youth.

The Moscow Governor-General, Dubasoff, had good cause to complain in his report to the Czar on the revolutionary events of 1905 about the disorder in the Agricultural Academy, directed by Williams. In 1906 the "disorder" reached such a point that the governor-general himself came to search the students' quarters. Williams warned the students of the search, and no "compromising" materials were found.

Outwitted Police

At the beginning of 1907 a secret Bolshevik meeting was held in the Academy. The police made a raid. The students were in danger of severe punishment. Before the police had time to enter the hall where the meeting was proceeding, Director Williams unexpectedly entered. He stepped on the platform and began to lecture: "Gentlemen, we ended our last lecture on the significance of soil structure and the role of the plow. . . ."

This improvised lecture by the professor lasted two hours. The police were forced to apologize that they had "come to the wrong place."

"My free creative scientific work for socialism began from October, 1917," said Williams once. "Since then I began to grow young." That this statement is not mere words is shown by the fact that 35 works were written during 33 years of the pre-revolutionary scientific work of Williams, but 97 works were composed during the 17 years after the October Revolution. From the first days of October Williams entered the ranks of its active fighters. The doors of the Agricultural Academy were held wide open before the proletarian youth. At Williams' initiative the workers and faculty in the Academy were thoroughly organized.

"What if the walls of the lecture-halls burst? What if lines form at the doors of laboratories? Soak up knowledge, carry it to the people," Williams urged the youth.

Millions of collective farmers know the name of Williams in revolutionary science. His modest home near Moscow is a place of pilgrimage for collective farmers, agricultural specialists and young scientists from all parts of the country. With good reason he is called the "Senior Agricultural Specialist of the Soviet Union."

Joined C. P. Soviet Union

Six years ago Williams joined the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. He bears with honor the high title of Bolshevik. His breast is decorated with the order of the Red Banner of Labor. Since 1922 Professor Williams has been a member of the Moscow Soviet and since 1928 an irreplacable member of the Central Executive Committee of the Soviet Union.

Today in the columned hall of the Moscow House of Trade Unions the government will present the Academician with the honorable and well-earned Order of Lenin.

Masses of greetings from the collective farms, scientific organizations, educational institutions and scientists in the Soviet Union and abroad have arrived for Williams. Greetings were received from the biggest soil specialists and scientists in the United States, France, Germany, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Switzerland, Holland, Sweden and Australia.

Classified

CHICAGO, ILL.

ROOM WANTED PRIVATE HOME

HYDE PARK. Telephone District, unfurnished, with basement radio workshop space, young couple, off time kitchen privilege only, use of our phone. Must be bargain. Hyde Park 3380.

Scottsboro Boys Going Blind, but Still Optimistic

Four of Seven in Birmingham Jail Are Wearing Glasses.

PATTERSON, NORRIS AT KILBY PRISON

Jailer Calls Youths Best Prisoners, Others Riot.

(Continued from preceding page)

greatly in aptness and appearance since last seen by this writer three years ago. At that time they were sullen, dull-witted and morose. Their clothing was the shabbiest of overalls and jumpers.

Still Optimistic

Today the boys are prompt in their answers to questions, and are keenly interested in what is going on in the world. They are optimistic and feel certain that they will get out soon.

The boys who are wearing glasses are: Andy Wright, Roy Wright, Ollie Montgomery and Charlie Williams. The other boys are: Eugene Williams, Willie Robinson and Ozzie Powell. The glasses, they say, were provided by a white woman in New York who heard of their plight.

The boys were spick and span in white shirts, which they were able to purchase with money saved from contributions of occasional visitors. The cigarette problem is still acute as they find difficulty in keeping supplied.

Want Leibowitz

When asked how they felt about the I.L.D. controversy with Leibowitz, they declared that they were inclined to stick to Leibowitz "to the end."

"He fought hard to save us, and I think he can," Williams said. "They don't like Communists down here so we are through with them."

Best Prisoners

According to Capt. J. D. Pinson, jailer, they are the best boys in the jail. At the present there are about thirty murderers, both women and men, incarcerated in the jail either awaiting trial or appeals.

"I wish all I had were as good as they are," said the captain.

Riot Staged

Last week prisoners staged a riot in the cells and stopped up the plumbing with bed-sheets, caused the water to overflow and drench the courts on the floors below, interfering with court. "These boys don't take part in no nonsense like that," said the captain.

Two Hundred Visitors

So crowded is the jail with lawbreakers that on visiting day, Thursday, approximately two hundred visitors called on friends incarcerated therein.

Visitors are forced to line up outside and are taken up in batches of twenty-five. Ofays, however, are permitted to visit without this formality.

Twin Killers

Among the visitors in Thursday's group was one youth who went up to call on his twin brother. The brother is in formurder and under sentence of twenty-five years. The caller is on bond for killing two other men since his brother's trial. They are said to have been prosecuting witnesses.

—o—

Roman Catholic Church, Washington, with the Rev. Fr. Alonzo Olds officiating.

The bride, a graduate of Miner Normal School, taught in Gary, Ind., for two years.

Mr. Johnson is an alumnus of St. John's College, where he received his A.B. in 1931 and his law degree with honors two years later. He is associated with the law firm of Metcalfe and Branch, in New York.

The couple were at home to friends at their new residence, 9 Rivera Place, Sunday.

Mrs. Sims Claims African Bishop Has Deserted Her

(Continued from preceding page)

She is now living with a widowed mother in Greenwood, S.C.

Editor's Note—As all AME bishops are now on half pay, Mrs. Sims's $100 a month check represents one-half her husband's salary.

Mrs. Sims quotes from a letter purporting to come from Mrs. M. S. Hughes, president of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society in which Mrs. Hughes says she gave the bishop an order for $1,000 with no other purpose than to pay his wife's traveling expenses to his field of labor since the church does not allow such expenses for a bishop's wife.

Wife in Africa Mentioned

Despite the fact that she is still in the United States, she quotes an African newspaper, Umteteli Wa Bantu, Johannesburg, Africa. February 25, 1933, as follows:

"The reception to the Rt. Rev. and Mrs. H. D. Sims, M.A., B.Sc., Ph.D., D.D., LL.D, which was to have been given at the Bantu Men's Social Center on March 4, has been postponed to March 18."

And from the same paper, dated April 1, 1933:

"Dr. and Mrs. Sims, of the A.M.E. Church, accompanied by the Rev. and Mrs. Tansi, of Sophiatown, were accorded a hearty reception by the residents and others in the Communal Hall, Western Native Township, last Saturday."

Not Notified of Any Divorce

If the bishop has divorced her and has remarried, she has never been notified of his intentions, she says, and in addition he is violating the law of his church by having two living wives.

Mrs. Sims adds that she filed these charges together with others still more serious with the bishops' council last year; that the bishops ordered her husband home to answer them, but that he has failed to return. She has learned, she says, that he will not come until 1936.

Comes to Washington

MISS LOUISE BEAVERS, who will make a personal appearance in Washington, D.C., next week.—Co-op.

Crawford Okeys Houston Request to Take the Lid Off

NAACP Takes First Move to Answer Charge of Muddling Va. Case.

DR. HOUSTON IN TRIP TO RICHMOND

Prisoner Permits Lawyer to Reveal "Confidences"

(Continued from preceding page)

and received a life sentence for that murder. He is now confined in the Virginia State Penitentiary at Richmond.

Houston Visits Crawford

Dr. Houston and George B. Murphy made a trip to Richmond Saturday to obtain Crawford's consent for the release of certain information, which he said would fully explain his handling of the case.

Houston was not expected at the penitentiary, and experienced some difficulty getting in until the arrival of Major R. M. Youel, superintendent of the prison, a short while later. Major Youel knew Dr. Houston and gave instruction that he be permitted to see Crawford.

Within a short time Crawford, dressed in brown trousers, khaki-colored shirt, and a brown lumber jacket, ambled into the visitors' section.

Dr. Houston told Crawford that he had been receiving a lot of criticism because people did not understand the real reasons back of his handling of the case, but he could not make a public statement because it would mean disclosing certain confidential information. He asked Crawford if he would authorize him to tell the facts about the investigation and trial of the case.

Consent Obtained

Crawford replied that he had been some criticisms about the case in the paper and had already written Dr. Houston about it. Dr. Houston answered that he had received the letter, but needed an authorization to make a public statement. Crawford asserted Dr. Houston could say anything he pleased because no one could do anything more to him as the cases were over, and that Dr. Houston was the only one who had done anything for him in Virginia.

Following the conversation Dr. Houston handed Crawford a copy of the New Masses, containing Miss Gruening's article. Crawford read it. When finished he said he was ready to write a statement. Crawford then wrote out an authorization for Dr. Houston to make public the facts back of his case.

Is Prison Barber

Crawford, his head shaved, appeared to be in good spirits. Asked what his work was in the prison he said laughingly:

"Well, you see my head, that's my job. I'm a barber here."

Following the interview, which

—o—

Hampton Group to Sing at White House, March 8

HAMPTON INSTITUTE, Va. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and her guests will hear thirty-five trade school singers in the East Room of the White House on March 8, in a 30-minute after-

Supreme Court Is Interested in the Scottsboro Jury

(Continued from preceding page)

constitutional rights and in all probability preventing a review by this court."

He explained that a red line had been drawn on each page by the new jury commission to show where the work of the old commission had ended and the work of the new commission had begun. He stated that an expert witness had testified that the names of the colored men, arranged alphabetically and according to precincts, had been superimposed upon the red lines indicating that they were inserted after the red lines had been put there.

Judges Question

Chief Justice Charles E. Hughes and Justices Van Devanter, Owen J. Roberts, Pierce Butler and Harlan F. Stone questioned him, one after another, to ascertain how the clerk of the old jury commission had got possession of the book after he went out of office and what explanation he had made with respect to the alleged spurious names.

Mr. Leibowitz replied that he himself would like to find out how the old clerk had got access to the book and that no explanation had been given when the old clerk testified regarding the jury rolls and the alleged forged names were brought to his attention.

Rights Violated

Mr. Leibowitz contended that the rights of the petitioners had been violated by the systematic exclusion of colored persons from jury service solely because of race and color.

He made no complaint with respect to the Alabama statute prescribing the qualifications of jurors, but contended that "the administration of the statute is the gravamen of the complaint we lay before you."

Always Lily-White Juries

He said, "we were able to show that no colored person has ever served within the memory of man on grand or petit juries in Jackson County."

"Do you mean by that," asked Justice Van Devanter, "that they were never called, or, although called, they were excused?"

Custom for 60 Years

Mr. Leibowitz replied that it is a matter of custom in Jackson County that no colored person can sit on juries. That custom, he said, has prevailed for at least 60 years.

He asserted it was proved there are colored persons in Jackson County qualified to serve. He said it was testified there were those in the county who had served on Federal juries.

"We showed not only the absence of service on juries by colored persons," he declared, "but we actually produced living specimens in the court who we contended were legally qualified and whose qualifications were not challenged by the state."

Pollak Colors Case

Taking up the argument where Mr. Leibowitz had left off, Walter H. Pollak, of New York, who presented the first appeal in the Supreme Court which resulted in a reversal of the conviction of seven youths for alleged attacks on two white women, described the situation in Morgan County, Alabama, where the second and third trials were held after a change of venue had been granted.

"As to Morgan County," said Mr. Pollak, "no claim is made by the state that the names of colored persons appeared on the jury rolls, although the proportion of colored people to whites is even considerably larger than in Jackson County."

Neal Case

Mr. Pollak pointed out that the Scottsboro case had arisen fifty years after the case of Neal against Delaware in which the court found that there was a presumption of qualified persons.

"Colored people obviously have progressed immeasurably in the interval," declared Mr. Pollak, "and we have a case where there is no problem of relying upon the presumption of qualified colored people because we have proof of the existence of them."

Argument Resumed Monday

When argument was resumed after the court had handed down its decision in the gold clause cases on Monday, Mr. Pollak took up the question of the striking of the motion for a new trial and the bill of exceptions in the case of Haywood Patterson.

But Mr. Pollak contended that the striking of the bill of exceptions did not affect the constitutional question because the issue of exclusion of colored persons from jury duty was raised by separate motions in writing.

Knight's Reply

Mr. Knight declared that the issue was solely whether or not colored persons were systematically excluded from jury service. He said he was not concerned with whether the names of the six colored men had been placed on the jury list illegally or not. He added that the state of Alabama was not concerned with whether or not the name of a single colored person appeared on the book which Mr. Leibowitz had produced in court.

"I am not telling the court those names were forged in there," he declared. "I am not telling you they were not."

Mr. Knight was then subjected to a series of questions respecting the meaning of testimony that race or color was not discussed by the jury commissioners in making up the jury rolls.

Discretion?

"No colored man was ever called or served on the jury," commented Justice Van Devanter. "What answer do you make to that?"

Mr. Knight said he was inclined to think that the commissioners had acted within their discretionary powers.

Judge's Rebuke

"I do not understand they had any discretion to exclude colored people because they were colored," replied Justice Van Devanter.

Justice James C. McReynolds, who dissented when the Supreme Court reversed the convictions, did not sit during the argument of the case.

By stipulation Mr. Leibowitz argued the appeal of Haywood Patterson and Mr. Pollak the appeal of Clarence Norris, both of whom are under death sentence in Kilby Prison, Montgomery, Ala.

Patterson and Norris were found guilty in December, 1933, of attacking Victoria Price, a white mill worker. Appeals from their convictions were taken to the Supreme Court of Alabama. That court affirmed their convictions. From the decision of the Alabama Supreme Court the cases are now before the United States Supreme Court for review for the second time.

Is the AFRO

SOUTHERN PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
ATLANTA, GEORGIA
CLIPPING SINCE 1895
ORDER NUMBER _____
This Clipping from

NEWS CLIPPINGS FILE
TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE ARCHIVES

Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser
April 6, 1935

...is guilt or innocence. Negroes charged with crime have always preferred white men on the juries. There is nothing to be alarmed about. The whole thing is like making a mountain out of a molehill.

"In my practice when negroes were on sleep because of the constant p...

(Turn to Page 2, Col. 7)

Prison officials and the court judges have consented to the operation for Cannon.

The accused man evaded most questions asked him, but said that he was married many years ago to a woman in Cleveland, whose name he did not give.

I. L. D. Lawyer Reaches City; Graves Calls For Negro Jurors

Late yesterday afternoon, some five or six hours after Gov. Graves had issued a statement announcing that the recent holding of the U. S. Supreme Court in reversing judgments of conviction in two of the Scottsboro cases that where there is systematic exclusion of negroes from juries it is discrimination against race in violation of the Federal constitution, means the names of negroes must be put in the jury boxes of every county in Alabama, O. K. Fraenkel, of New York, I. L. D. attorney for the defense in these cases, arrived in Montgomery and reports were current that the purpose of his visit was to file, on the basis of the same ruling, habeas corpus proceedings for the release of all Scottsboro case defendants.

It later developed, however, that though such proceedings have been actually drawn, Mr. Fraenkel left them in New York and it is his opinion no immediate action toward filing them will be taken. It was learned also in this connection, that the Alabama Supreme Court has not yet received formal official certificated notice of the U. S. Supreme Court's decision. Until such notice is legally served, it is understood, the courts of Alabama retain jurisdiction in all of the cases.

The purpose of Mr. Fraenkel's visit, he was quoted as saying, was solely "to see the boys," the term "boys" presumably being used to apply to all of the seven Scottsboro case defendants, including Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris whose convictions and death sentences were recently reversed by the nation's highest court of law. He was to see Norris and Patterson at Kilby Prison before leaving for Birmingham to interview the other five negroes who are confined in the Jefferson County jail.

"E Pluribus Unum"

After being associated as defense counsel for the negroes, with Fraenkel and other I. L. D. attorneys, Samuel Liebowitz, also of New York, disagreed with them and terminated the association, declaring he was representing personally, all of the seven negroes with the exception of Patterson. Fraenkel, on the other hand, it is understood, claims he is representing all of them as counsel, including Patterson, and he is now here to confer with his clients, "beating Liebowitz to the punch," so to speak, following the high court's decision. Liebowitz sent Norris a telegram of felicitation on the court's ruling, but has not since been to see him.

Fraenkel was at the Capitol for a short while, where he called to pay his respects to Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael and Asst. Atty. Gen. T. S. Lawson, who assisted Lieut.-Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., while he was Attorney General, to prosecute the Scottsboro cases. The Lieutenant Governor whose services have been retained by Atty. Gen. Carmichael by appointment, as special prosecutor for the State in the cases, has already announced he will ask a Jackson County Grand Jury to return new indictments in all of them.

In connection with his announcement that the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court means the names of negroes must be placed in all jury boxes in the State, Gov. Graves announced also that he had written all trial judges in Alabama enclosing a copy of the high court's opinion and advising them he does not assume or intimate that the contents of their jury boxes fail to conform to all legal requirements, suggested that if any nonconformity exists, steps be taken to remedy such a condition. A copy of his letter to the judges was forwarded to all solicitors.

Governor's Statement

In his public announcement the Governor said:

"Holdings of the United States Supreme Court are the supreme law of the land. Whether we like the decision or not, it is the patriotic duty of every citizen and the sworn duty of every public officer to accept and uphold them in letter and spirit.

"I have received the Supreme Court's decision in the Scottsboro case, holding in effect that when there is systematic exclusion of negroes from juries, it is discrimination against race in violation of the United States Constitution.

"This decision means that we must put the names of negroes in jury boxes in every county in the State.

"Alabama is going to observe the supreme law of America.

"The Governor is the chief law enforcement officer of the State and the conservator of all laws. All laws, of course, include the supreme laws of the land.

"It is unusual for the Governor to undertake to suggest to the judicial department things which, under our State

(Turn To Page 2, Col. 3)

Blindfold, Bible Combine To Let Jury See Show

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., April 4.—(AP)—A blindfold and a Bible combined today to allow members of a Jefferson County jury to see a motion picture, and to keep clear the conscience of one of its members, the Rev. Arthur O. Garner, who does not "believe in such entertainment."

Eleven jurors wanted to see the movie, but Mr. Garner was not easily moved from his convictions, and the law provides that the members of the jury must remain together.

After arguments pro and con, a happy solution presented itself. The Rev. Garner attended the movie, his back to the screen, and a blindfold over his eyes.

But in return for this compromise with his conscience, the Rev. Garner was allowed to give a Bible reading and a 30-minute sermon to the other jurors.

Mack M. Johnson, bailiff, who attends the jury and ministers to its wants while it is "kept prisoner" in a downtown hotel, would not comment on either the show or the sermon.

The jury is hearing evidence in a criminal case and its members are not allowed to talk with outsiders.

The Rev. Garner is listed on the jury roll as a "foreman." Johnson quoted him as saying he was a minister in the Seventh Day Adventist Church.

11-Year-Old Girl Drowned In Creek Near Geneva

Gas Prices Down C... Quotations Range...

Gasoline prices in this city yesterday anged from 20 to 25 cents a gallon, the ariation being one of the widest reorted here in years. Some of the com-

Lynching:
Legal Punishment for Rape
(Scottsboro Case)

„Die Szene wird zum Tribunal."

Von der verdienstvollsten und künstlerisch hochstehendsten Theater-Organisation in den Vereinigten Staaten, der New Yorker Theater Guild, wird zur Zeit unter dem Titel "They shall not die" in einer großartigen, tief erschütternden und die stärksten Empfindungen aufwühlenden Aufführung ein Stück gegeben, das den Fall der neun jungen Neger von Scottsboro in all ihren gräßlichen Einzelheiten gegeben, das den Fall der neun jungen Neger verschiedenen Gerichtshöfen des Staates Alabama wegen der angeblichen Vergewaltigung zweier weißer Prostituierten zum Tode verurteilt, obgleich keine zweifelsfreien Schuldbeweise da sind.

Für europäisches Rechtsempfinden ist dieser Vorgang unverständlich. Man stelle sich etwa vor, daß in einem Theater in der badischen Landeshauptstadt Karlsruhe ein Stück aufgeführt werden würde, in welchem die Rechtspflege Bayerns in der ärgsten Weise angeprangert wird, wobei ein spezieller Fall ganz unmißverständlich und mit nur geringfügig veränderten Namen dargestellt ist. Was würde geschehen? — Es würden keine vierundzwanzig Stunden vergehen und der Staat Bayern würde sich rühren. Entweder wären die Tatsachen falsch dargestellt, — dann würde man sofort die weiteren Aufführungen des Stückes zu verhindern wissen und Verfasser wie Veranstalter zur Verantwortung ziehen. Oder die Tatsachen wären richtig dargestellt, — dann würde man ebenso unverzüglich gegen die schuldigen Beamten vorgehen.

Hierzulande hört man nichts dergleichen. Offenbar besteht keine Möglichkeit, die Darstellung der Tatsachen zu widerlegen, sonst würde das sicher mit großem Lärm geschehen. Aber auch von irgendwelchem Vorgehen zur Gutmachung des Unrechts etwas, was man nicht glauben würde, wenn man nicht gerade jenes Stück gesehen hätte: der zuständige Richter will aus einem winzigen Formalgrund (einem Zweifel über den Ablauf der Berufungsfrist, an dem er möglicherweise selbst schuld ist) die eingelegte Berufung nicht anerkennen und kämpft für die Vollstreckung des Urteils, — obgleich über die Anfechtbarkeit des Urteils auch bei ihm kaum Zweifel bestehen können.

Es hätte keiner stärkeren Bestätigung, wenn eine solche überhaupt noch nötig gewesen wäre, für die Richtigkeit der brennenden Anklage bedurft, die die Aufführung des Stückes bedeutet. Und wieder einmal wird so die Szene zum Tribunal. Angeklagt ist der Rassenhaß, der hier eine wahre Orgie feiert.

Die amerikanische Oeffentlichkeit in allen ihren Instanzen nimmt von dem Vorgang nur sehr beiläufig Notiz. Obgleich sie so beredte Worte zu finden weiß, wenn sie sich über Betätigungen des gleichen Uebels auf der anderen Seite des Ozeans zu ereifern berechtigte Gelegenheit findet...

...OF BEHAVIORAL SCIENCE RESEARCH
TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE
REEL 229
...BLISHED OR REPRODUCED PHOTOGRAPHICALLY
...ISSION OF THE OFFICE OF DEVELOPMENT,
...TITUTE, TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, ALABAMA
0730

but it's a damn good 'un. But anyway, in spite of that, I felt like we ought to of give that fellow ten days and $50 just to give him somethin'. If it hadn't been for Scottsboro he'd a-got somethin' too."

"Yes, that's right," said the other. "Ain't no white man goin' up for killin' a nigger as long as them seven niggers is still breathin' in Kilby prison over there in Montgomery."

Religion in the New Japan

By T. T. Brumbaugh

THE economic, social and political phases of the thought-battle of the past few years in Japan have rather effectively obscured from view the perhaps more fundamental struggle over religious ideas which has been going on. Religious determination is as potent in national life as any other variety and a comprehension of the religious and philosophical factors involved will help greatly in understanding the Japanese situation as a whole.

The struggle has been, until recently, chiefly between the passive, negative and defeatist attitude and influence of Buddhism on the one hand and, on the other, the original positive, vigorous, joyous spirit of primitive Japan more closely identified with the Shinto faith and the unique position held by the 2,600 year old imperial dynasty of Japan.

Buddhism Brings Pessimism

Scholars are agreed that the Japanese spirit, which today is so characteristically fatalistic, self-abnegating, pessimistic and defeatist as to welcome the thought of death and even of suicide when opposition or a reversal of fortune is met, in the early centuries of Japan's history was buoyant, joyous and aggressive. They say the change came about with the advent of foreign culture following the sixth century of our era, and specifically with the coming of Buddhism from Korea and China. Buddhism taught restraint and resignation. Buddhism compromised and coalesced with all it touched, even allowing the old Shintoist forms and names to remain unchanged in the popular mind. But Buddhism gave its peculiar negative and fatalistic interpretation to all with which it amalgamated, and a thousand years of Buddhist influence in the land, though disguised as Double-aspect Shinto (Ryo-bu Shinto) so changed the temperament of the Japanese people as to make them tolerant even of the usurpation of imperial prerogatives by feudal lords, and eventually by the Tōkugawa shogunate whose power was that of an absolute sovereign, while the emperor and his family languished in virtual captivity in Kyoto.

It is true that the discipline which Buddhism brought to the Japanese spirit made for refinement in individual character and in the culture and craftsmanship of Japan. "But at what a cost!" said the group of scholars and patriots who in the eighteenth century set up a cry for purging the land of foreign accretions, Buddhist and Confucian. The Japanese nature, they said, was pure of itself and needed none of the moral codes of the "depraved" Chinese and other Asiatics. The hue and cry of these purists was against incursions of all kinds of Asiatic ideas and the institutions which had corrupted and perverted the originally simple loyalty of the Japanese to their families and to the imperial dynasty as the head of the greater family of Japan.

The Purge of 1868

It is questionable whether this purging movement would have amounted to much had it not been for the appearance of another type of foreign influence at Japan's doors seeking admission. America's commodore diplomat, and the equally belligerent diplomacy of the other western nations, strengthened the cause of those who desired to shake off the dead hand of Asia's past, and the renaissance of Shintoist Japanism which culminated in the political restoration of 1868 saw a purging of the nation's life of much which the patriots believed to be erroneous "foreign" ideas and customs imported from China, Korea and India. Not until much later did these patriots begin to realize that, in fact, Japan had in that great emancipation merely succeeded in supplanting one system of foreign influences with another.

So fascinated, indeed, was she with the new tools and toys of western civilization which were pressed through her treaty-ports in those early days and in ever increasing quantities since, that not until the end of the old century and the beginning of the new did anyone pause to question whether that bargain was in reality favorable to Japan. The number of questioners has been steadily increasing, however, in recent decades and four years ago reached a place where the super-patriots thought they could again successfully challenge the nation to repudiate foreign influence in Japanese life.

As before, the movement is essentially a religious and spiritual one: "In the name of the ancient gods (Kan-nagara) and the glorious imperial way (Kō-dō), down with western materialism!" What do these western nations and people care for Japan's destiny? Do they not exclude Japanese people and Japanese products from their borders, while at the same time denying Japan's steadily increasing population any other natural outlet?

"Down with internationalism!" Is it not merely a scheme on the part of those nations which have to defend their ill-gotten gain from other peoples which have not?

"Down with the capitalists!" Are they not in league with the materialists and the internationalists for their

At the preliminary hearing before a county judge Alec was bound over to the grand jury and his bond set at $1,000. Two members of his family and two friends signed his bond and he was again a free man. Alec could have made his own bond, but these relatives and friends insisted on doing it for him, though they protested that it was a very high bond for nothing more than killing a nigger.

Would the grand jury indict, or would it not? Alec did not know. Some of his friends thought it would not. White men can't afford to indict a white man for killing a nigger in a county where the niggers outnumber the whites four to one. There had been case after case where the grand jury had not indicted. Alec need not worry. The grand jury would turn him loose.

Legal Advice

But other friends advised Alec to get a lawyer. In the old days, they told him, he would never even have been arrested. In more recent days, if arrested, the preliminary hearing would have set him free. But things were different now. A few years ago a white man got three years for killing a nigger. In the next county two white men got ten years for the same offense, a thing that was once little more than a pastime for young bloods who needed experience. Public sentiment no longer approved of unprovoked and promiscuous killing of niggers. People had gotten soft and sentimental on the subject. The new solicitor was a young man with strange ideas. Alec had better get a lawyer.

The lawyer was not reassuring. For the first time Alec began to wonder if he were really in trouble. He couldn't believe it, nor could his friends really believe it, but none the less the lawyer scared him.

"You ain't got no case," said the lawyer. "It was cold-blooded murder. What defense have you got? You shot him in the back of the head and he didn't even have a pocket-knife on him. You may not know it, but it's done got to the place in this county where a jury'll convict for killin' a nigger like that.

"I remember the time when it wouldn't. Twenty years ago when I was county solicitor I prosecuted the first white man ever tried in this county for killin' a nigger. I made enemies of the man and his whole family connection, and I lost the case. The jury turned him loose. I prosecuted the first case that ever got a conviction. The jury gave the man a $25 fine. But, Lord, it ain't that way now. You ain't in no danger of the electric chair. You ain't facin' nothin' like that. Ain't no jury in this county goin' to send a white man to the chair for killin' a nigger. It ain't got to that point yet. But you're liable to get anything up to ten years. In fact, I don't see how a jury can turn you loose. Good God, you shot that nigger in the back of his head. You ain't got no case, except that he was a nigger. The only chance you got is for me to pack that jury with members of the American Legion, and to plead insanity for you.

"I don't like this kind of case. Win or lose, it gets me in bad with people. And I ain't got no right to win it. You wouldn't have a God's-chance if it had been a white man you killed. But I'll take it on one condition. You lay down $200 in cash on this desk and I'll do the best I can for you. But I ain't goin' to touch it, I ain't goin' to turn a hand, until you lay down the cash."

A Hero Haled to Court

Alec laid down the cash. The grand jury indicted and the case came to trial at the fall term of court in November. There were plenty of legionnaires on the jury, and the smart old lawyer played his cards with the hand of a master. He told the jury how Alec had defended his country in the world war, and had been wounded. His health was hopelessly broken and in recognition of this the government had given him a monthly pension. His nerves were shattered and he was often in pain. He drank whisky, yes; but he had to drink to quiet his nerves and to still the pain. Tortured with pain one day, he drank too much, and in a state of total irresponsibility he, a white man, a white man let the jury remember, went out and killed a nigger. Let the jury consider the circumstances and conditions and set free this poor broken wreck, this man who was rather to be pitied than censured for what had happened, this white man who had offered his life in defense of his country and who at best had but a few more years to live.

The solicitor stated the facts of the case, called it cold-blooded murder and asked for the death penalty.

The judge charged the jury as to its duty and its possible findings and those twelve worthy men filed into the jury room.

Thirty minutes later they reported. The foreman stood forward to read the verdict.

"We the jury find the defendant not guilty," he read.

Alec rose up by the table in the bar where he sat. His face beamed with happiness. He had been vindicated. He spoke up in court and asked the judge for permission to shake hands with the members of the jury. The judge replied rather harshly that that was no concern of his, but to step outside if he wished to do it.

And That's How It Was

On the street that night a juryman explained to another citizen just how it was.

"That fellow ought to of had somethin'," he said. "By rights he ought to of got ten years. But I knowed there wasn't no chance of givin' him that much. I tried to get 'em to give him three years, but when I seen they wouldn't do it I said we ought to give him ten days and $50 just to be givin' him somethin'. He ought to of got somethin'. He shot the nigger in the back of the head, you know. Any man who will kill a nigger like that ought to git somethin', and they was others on the jury felt the same way. But some of 'em begun to talkin' about the Scottsboro case. They said we couldn't convict no white man for killin' a nigger in Alabama after that Scottsboro case. I reckon they're right, too. White people got to stick together somehow or other, or we'll have to git out and let the niggers have the state. It ain't a very pretty argument, tional sanctions. Such policies will require changes in, as well as loyalty to, the constitutional tradition; but it is precisely in this combination of conservatism and capacity for innovation that the British political genius expresses itself.

Maturity and Immaturity

The difference betwen British radicalism and American radicalism is the difference betwen responsible maturity and irresponsible youth. The defects of youth can be cured by age and experience. It is therefore to be hoped that the abstract and romantic character of our radical thought does not derive from other sources. There is just a possibility that it may be related to the more mechanical and less organic character of our civilization. It may also derive from the fact that we have never confronted serious political problems in this nation until the very hour in which we are confronted with the possibility of the complete disintegration of our economic order. Our political traditions are consequently not very solid and we are thus at the mercy of every imported abstraction. Radical politics in America is determined by Russian and German thought, every conflict between the left and right representing a controversy between a discredited German social democratic system and a Russian religion which has far more relevance to Asia than to the western world.

One might regard all this with equanimity and be consoled in the hope that experience will correct our flaws in the long run. But unfortunately there is no long run to be hoped for. While radicalism fails to offer a genuine alterative to the ambiguities of middle class politics the latter are rushing us at incredible speed from the futilities of Rooseveltian "liberalism" to the worse confusion of a political program concocted by a radio priest and a Louisiana "kingfish." Perhaps our only hope lies in western agrarianism, which is in one sense the only authentic and indigenous radical movement of America. But that hope is slender too. Western agrarianism, with the exception of the LaFollettes, has not gone much beyond anti-finance radicalism and inflationism, and the LaFollettes are curiously lacking in militancy against the Long peril.

Scottsboro Shadow

By Renwick C. Kennedy

ALEXANDER PRUITT was forty years old and had never killed a nigger though there were more niggers in the county than rabbits in the big swamp on the river where he hunted. This solemn thought impressed him deeply one October morning as he took his tenth drink from a gallon jug of Pensacola Rye. The longer he thought about it the more unjust it seemed. Here was he, a white man, forty years of age, who had killed hundreds of rabbits in the swamp, and yet he had never shot a nigger though the woods were full of them.

As Alexander got drunker and drunker his reasoning became clearer and clearer. He knew a dozen men who had killed niggers. All of them were fine men, free, respected, and looked-up-to in the community because they had killed one or more niggers. The finest one of the lot, Alec reflected, had killed five niggers. But he, Alexander Pruitt, had never killed even one. He had negelected it. He had been careless. But he would change that. He would now do his duty. He would go out and kill himself a nigger. He had been in the army and he thought it probable that he had killed a few Germans, but here at home with niggers all around him he had failed. He would fail no longer.

At 2:00 p.m. Alec brushed tears from his eyes and took a long swig at his Pensacola Rye. He stumbled across the living room to the old secretary and took his .38 revolver from the top drawer. Ten minutes later he was down in the cotton patch behind the house where Long Son Gilmore and Henry Jeter, two Negro men, were picking cotton. Both men were Alexander's tenants and his friends, and had made good crops for him that year. Ordinarily Alec was reasonably just and kind to them. This afternoon his justice and kindness were paralyzed with the most potent whisky available in south Alabama.

The Negroes continued to pick cotton as they watched him stumble and fall along the cotton row.

"Cap'n's sho' drunk," said Long Son.

"He sho'-God is," said Henry. "He'll be cussin' us, drunk as he is."

"Niggers," said Alec solemnly, "you ain't done nothin' since ten o'clock. Git to work. Git this damn cotton out."

The men said nothing. They were so used to the master's drunken abuse they didn't mind it very much. On their knees between the cotton rows they bent lower to their task and their fingers moved a little faster as they tore the locks from the bolls and stuffed them into the great sacks dragging from their shoulders.

Alec stood behind them, cursing. He stepped closer to Long Son, pulled out the .38, and shot him in the back of his head. The bullet smashed Son's brain and came out of his left eye. As Henry later said, Son never knew what hit him. Henry threw his bag down and ran. Alec fired the remaining five cartridges at him, but his drunken aim was no good, and Henry escaped to the village to tell the story.

An hour later a deputy sheriff came from the county seat, and that night Alec slept off his drunk in the county jail. The next morning he said he did not remember anything that had happened since ten o'clock of the previous day, and that he was astonished to find himself in jail.

Lynchings-1935

Legal Punishment of Lynchers.

Florida

4962

KKK Planned Tampa Murder in City Hall

By JACK JAMESON

(Note: This week sees the opening of the trial of the Tampa (Florida) police and vigilantes for the murder-flogging of Joseph Shoemaker, Socialist and labor leader. The trial is not one of a single murder. It is rather, as the author of these articles points out, a case of the "people versus the Ku Klux Klan" the people against the growing trends toward fascism in America—trends which have reached their most brutal form in the South. That this trial is actually taking place, is due only to the united protests of labor and liberal circles throughout the country. These articles give the inside story of the part played by the Klan in this case.)

TAMPA, Fla., March 22.—Robert Lee Chancey, mayor of Tampa, Florida, is a member of the Ku Klux Klan. The seven police-hoggers, including the chief, and the three vigilantes whom Kleagle Fred Bass, of Orlando, sent here to help with the flogging, are all Ku Kluxers. Facing trial in Criminal Court next week in the murder of Joseph A. Shoemaker and the kidnapping of his associates, last November 30, they will be defended by attorneys who are known Klansmen.

The murder of Shoemaker and the flogging of his associates was secretly planned at a meeting held in Tampa City Hall attended by the Mayor and other city and police officials whose names are known, and by Kleagle Bass of the Orlando Klan. Bass also arranged the kidnapping and murder of Frank Norman, Lakeland Citrus organizer and International Labor Defense leader, April 11, 1934.

The East Coast and Gulf shipping interests, headed by the Clyde Steamship Lines, pressed and supported the commission of the crimes of last November 30 as a terroristic attempt to thwart organization and strike action of Negro dock-workers in the Tampa, Jacksonville, and Miami ports.

Witnessed Beating

Frank Henderson, organizer of the International Longshoremen's Association, was arrested and held for questioning in Tampa police headquarters that night, and witnessed the questioning and beating [illegible] by these thugs and Eugene F. Poulnot. Threat of similar treatment was used by the police to drive him out of town. In spite of all intimidation, however, three locals of the I. L. A. have been formed in the above-mentioned city and have received charters from the International.

Only tremendous pressure exerted on a national scale by Communists, Socialists, and trade-unionists forced indictments in the case and a promise that the criminals would be brought to trial.

What Tampa is asking today is: Will that pressure be developed far enough to force an immediate trial and a prosecution of a character that will bring out all the facts in court?

There is ample ground for such questioning here. A Klan dominated city administration, police department and Justice of the Peace, such as are to be found in Tampa, are reason enough. If more be needed, there is evidence to prove that the mayor, attorneys and defendants are all members of the same Klan, and few are certain one way or another about the judge.

Let us first look into the "Knights of the Ku Klux Klan of the Invisible Empire." It is a secret organization. I have seen its members march hooded through the streets of many Florida cities. No one outside the Klan knows when or where it meets. Its membership roll is hidden, and the members won't tell. It shows its face to the public only through a blind mail address.

In the United States Post Office Building in Tampa there is on file an approved application for Mail Box No. 1975. That Post Office box number appears on leaflets distributed after the flogging by the K. K. K., as the place to address application cards for membership.

The Pledge

On the membership application form above the signature, is a line reading: "I want to help save our country and am ready to ride with you." The pledge is in answer to the call of the Klan to join the Midnight Ride of the Ku Klux Klan to "save America from Communism."

One of the two required signatures on the official application for the postoffice box from the K. K. K. required by postal regulations, is E. L. Womack. Womack is prominent among counsel for the defense. Womack is an official of the Ku Klux Klan.

I have not seen the K. K. K. application card for membership signed by Mayor Robert E. Lee Chancey. You will, therefore, say that I cannot prove that the mayor is a Klansman. But I can prove that Mrs. Robert E. Lee Chancey, wife of the Mayor, is a member of the "American Daughters of the Invisible Empire." She belongs to the Betsy Ross Group, and is chairman of the Sick Committee of the Order of "Kamelia." Note the spelling of the name. It begins with the letter "K." You guessed it. The "Order of Kamelia" is the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Klan. With the female organization, as well as with the male, names of all offices begin with a "K."

Any member of the Ladies' Auxiliary will tell you, if she knows you, and you are one to be trusted, that in order to belong one must be a member of a family whose head is a member of the Klan. Mrs. Robert E. Lee Chancey, wife of Tampa's Mayor, is a member of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Klan. Her husband, therefore, is a Klansman.

Police Klansmen

In an organization, the head of which is a Ku Kluxer, you naturally stand a better chance of holding down a job if you are one, too. There are those who say that every policeman and fireman in the city is a member of the Klan. One must be, they claim, in order to be on the city pay roll. I cannot say that and prove it, but I do know, and it is common knowledge in Tampa that the police floggers who come to trial soon, and their Klan accomplices from Orlando, are members of the Ku Klux Klan.

Chancey became Mayor of Tampa after an election that was even more corrupt than if it had been conducted by Tammany Hall of New York or the notorious Vare machine of Philadelphia.

The all-white municipal primary election last September was a farce the sheerest travesty; you would call it comedy, were it not so tragic. The Hillsborough County faction was arrayed against the Tampa municipal group for supremacy. Victory at the primaries is tantamount to election. Florida is Democratic, a one-party state. There was but one issue involved: Which group of politicians was to serve big business and as its remuneration collect protection money from which group of gamblers, racketeers and pimps for the privilege of operating illegally.

The Elections

Police chief R. G. Tittenworth, now under indictment, swore in 1,124 special policemen, many from near-by counties, in addition to his regular force of 105 men. County Sheriff Spencer deputized 600 men of his own from Hillsborough county and Governor Dave Sholtz sent in 300 National Guardsmen to try to keep peace between the armed factions. That's the picture of Tampa's last election.

Imported plug-uglies from Orlando, all Klansmen headed by Kleagle Fred Bass, were captains of groups of heavily-armed huskies stationed by the Chancey forces in front of each of the 29 polling places. The county deputies, put-numbered, appealed for aid and guardsmen of the artillery regiment hastened in trucks from polling place to polling place to stop fights.

When it was all over, the Klan election board announced that Mayor Chancey had been nominated. The vote stood: Chancey, 9,325, as against 5,064 for his opponent, ex-Mayor D. B. McKay, publisher of the Tampa Times who was supported by the County administration.

Everybody "in the know" knows that Chancey was elected by the "Whitaker crowd." That appellation isn't mine. All in Tampa know that gang and call it by that name. Were you here you would hear it on every hand.

Whitaker Crowd

The "Whitaker Crowd" gets its name from two well-known corrupt politicians, both lawyers, the brothers Tom and Pat Whitaker. Pat heads the gang. Pat is Klansman Chancey's brother-in-law. Pat put Klansman Chancey at the head of the city administration—and he has to defend it in time of need. Now is that time for all good Klansmen to come to the aid of the discredited Chancey administration. So Pat Whitaker heads the coterie of counsel for the defense of the Klansmen. Pat is the biggest Klansman of them all, Tampa's public enemy Number One.

No one can take away from Tom Whitaker, Pat's brother, the credit for having organized the Ku Klux Klan in Hillsborough County. Tom is Pat's first assistant with the defense.

When County Solicitor Hardee, of the de eated McKay side, got several convictions against Klansmen who acted as precinct officials in the election and were accused of stuffing ballot boxes, Pat Whitaker came to their defense. Known as one who never lets down a Klansman, Pat appealed to the State Supreme Court and all were freed on some legal technicality. Pat is known to be able to get anything he wants from the Supreme Court. He is one of the men who "make governors in Florida."

Plans Upset

This year Pat Whitaker wanted to make himself Governor. The stage was set and the wheels well oiled—until the mass protest against the Shoemaker murder upset the apple cart. Then a campaign was started to postpone the trial until after the primaries next June, to allow Whitaker to throw his hat into the Gubernatorial ring. Protests to Governor Sholtz from working-class organizations and individuals from all over the country have prevented Whitaker from realizing his dream—so far.

Make no mistake. Ostensibly directed against Communism, the K.K.K. in reality acts as a secret and private police for the financial oligarchy—the capitalist class. The Klan doesn't understand any "isms" and therefore doesn't draw a distinction between, Communism, Socialism, or trade-unionism for that matter.

The similarity between the Communists, Socialists, Modern Democrats, and A. F. of L. unions of Negro stevedores is far greater, to the Klan, than the differences between these groups of the working-class, which are now beginning to work together in Tampa for a Farmer-Labor Party. The Shoemaker murder, this expose by the Daily Worker will show, was really an attack by the bosses against the unity of all laboring men, and it will take a united front of all progressive and labor groups to successfully fight the Klan.

Ku Klux Klan Charged With Fatal Flogging Of Tampa Labor Organizer

TAMPA, FLA., March 24.—(AP)—The Ku Klux Klan was charged with responsibility for the fatal flogging of Joseph Shoemaker, labor organizer, in circulars signed "communist party" and distributed here today during selection of a jury in the case.

"This is the first time in Florida history that the KKK has been brought to trial," the circulars read. "The KKK has a long record of assault and murder of workers in Tampa and all over Florida.

"The pressure and portent of the people of this city and the local and national organizations of workers has brought results. This shows how effective mass pressure is."

While selection of the six-man jury proceeded slowly, another statement signed by the Rev. Walter Metcalf, chairman of the committee for the defense of civil liberties in Tampa. It said the committee "hopes these trials will be the beginning of the end of the brazen disregard for the processes of law and order that has plagued Tampa.

"Many have expressed fear these floggings will be whitewashed and the guilty parties never brought to justice. We hope these facts are unfounded."

Three defendants called to trial today are C. A. Brown, John P. Bridges and C. W. Carlisle, city policemen suspended after Shoemaker and two others were abducted at the door of police headquarters, flogged, tarred and feathered.

Brown, Bridges and Carlisle are to be tried first on charges of kidnaping E. F. Poulnot, one of the victims. Additional charges facing them and eight other defendants include the kidnaping of S. D. Rogers, the third victim; assault to murder Poulnot and Rogers and second degree murder in the death of Shoemaker.

The State has the right to separate the cases of the 11 defendants and try them separately on various charges or try them at the same time and on all charges simultaneously. There was no explanation why the three charges of kidnaping were called ahead of the more serious accusations.

A venire of 108 was drawn for the trial, but only 95 were summoned today and 30 were excused. From the remaining number court attaches will endeavor to draw a jury. Six-man juries usually sit in Florida on all but capital cases.

Shoemaker and his companions were kidnaped and flogged last Nov. 30. On that night, police, without a warrant, raided the home of A. M. Herald and arrested several persons. Policeman Brown, who directed the raid, said it was made on a report that Communistic activities were being discussed at the meeting.

Following questioning at police headquarters those arrested were released. As they left the building, Shoemaker, Rogers and Poulnot were seized and carried away. Shoemaker died nine days later.

Police Chief R. G. Tittsworth, removed following the affair, and his office clerk are under indictment as accessories after the fact.

FLORIDA FLOGGING LAID TO KU KLUX BY REDS

Three Defendants in Fatal Beating Called to Trial in Tampa.

TAMPA, Fla., March 24.—(AP)—The Ku Klux Klan was charged with responsibility for the fatal flogging of Joseph Shoemaker, labor organizer, in circulars signed "communist party" and distributed here today during selection of a jury in the case.

"This is the first time in Florida history that the KKK has been brought to trial," the circular read. "The KKK has a long record of assault and murder of workers in Tampa and all over Florida.

"The pressure and portent of the people of this city and the local and national organizations of workers has brought results. This shows how effective mass pressure is."

There was no immediate comment from Presiding Judge Robert T. Dewell or attorneys.

Three defendants called to trial today are C. A. Brown, John P. Bridges and C. W. Carlisle, city policemen suspended after Shoemaker and two others were abducted at the door of police headquarters, flogged, tarred and feathered.

EVANS DENIES KLAN TOOK PART IN FLOGGING

Dr. Hiram W. Evans, imperial wizard of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, said last night the klan "had nothing on earth" to do with the fatal flogging of Joseph Shoemaker, labor organizer, at Tampa.

TAMPA JURY SELECTION IS STARTED

Defense Seeks to Bar Jurors for Union Membership

(Special to the Daily Worker)

TAMPA, Fla., March 26.—Selection of a six-man jury to hear the Poulnot kidnapping case—promising to be a long and tedious process, began in Criminal Court today after Judge Robert T. Dewell refused to grant a change of venue, asked by the defense, though reserving the right to grant such a motion later.

Late this afternoon, only three jurors had been tentatively seated after questioning as to qualifications by Rex Farrior, prosecuting, and Pat Whitaker for the defense.

The three former policemen on trial, John P. Bridges, C. A. "Smitty" Brown, and C. W. Carlisle, natttily dressed in light brown, white flannels, and light gray, respectively, took great interest in the process of jury selection. They are on trial now for the kidnapping of Eugene F. Poulnot, Socialist 2nd leader of the unemployed, last Nov. 30, in what developes into the Shoemaker murder case.

Five Disqualified

Five prospective jurors have been disqualified for expression of fixed opinion, and two for having testified in an earlier phase of the case that it was possible to obtain a fair trial for the defendants in the Shoemaker-Poulnot-Rogers case in Tampa.

The line of questioning taken by Whitaker in the examination of the jurors gave some indication of the type of political character he intends to give to the defense.

"Do you believe in the principles of Communism?" he asked one of the talesmen. Of another he asked whether he had heard the speech on the Shoemaker case made here in Tampa by Norman Thomas, whom he described as a "nationally-known Communist and propagandist."

Queried on Union

No objection was made by the state to this characterization, or to other oratorical questions obviously made for the benefit of the prospective jurymen—now reduced to fifty-five—in the court room. Of one juryman who was tentatively seated, and who works in a cigar-box factory, Whitaker significantly asked whether he was a union member. Of another he asked whether he had read in the papers that Norman Thomas demanded that President Green remove the A. F. of L. convention from Tampa unless convictions were obtained "regardless of guilt or innocence."

No questions were asked by the State to determine whether any prospective juryman might be a member of the Ku Klux Klan or other political organization which might be interested in the flogging itself, or in protecting the floggers. On the other hand, Whitaker asked all jurymen such questions as whether they belonged to any organization which had passed resolutions condemning the flogging.

Tampa Police Split in Trial Of Floggers

Rising Mass Hatred Against Klan Is Reflected in Court

BARTOW, Fla., April 30.—Florida's flogging trial has split the Tampa police department wide open. Warned by rising mass-hatred against Ku Klux terrorists, important police officials are publicly lined up against Joseph Shoemaker's murderers.

Today a ex-chief detective, yesterday a police lieutenant, testified against seven former colleagues, now before the Bartow bar in the fatal kidnap ride case.

Today former chief detective Bush testified that Chief of Police Tittsworth, one of the defendants, asked him last December not to report evidence Bush had obtained against Sergeant "Smitty" Brown and C. W. Carlisle, two other defendants.

Heard Cries

Giving evidence against his fellow-officers, Bush said he heard loud "hollering" from the pavement, while he was upstairs at police headquarters. Hurrying down he saw Brown and Carlisle slamming an automobile door, and walking away from the curb with smiles, as the car left.

That was the time, other witnesses testified, that Shoemaker, Rogers and Poulnot were being abducted. They had just been officially "released" after being investigated on a charge of "Communistic" activities.

"Tittsworth blew up, when I asked him to get a warrant for the arrest of Brown and Carlisle," the detective testified. "Said he wouldn't do it. He told me not to tell. That was the end of the investigation he asked me to make."

Bush reported another whitewashing attempt.

"Why did you not tell about Brown and Carlisle when you testified before the Aldermanic Investigation Committee?" asked defense counsel Whitaker. "Because the police committee was trying to cover the whole thing up for the department," answered Bush.

Names Erased

Other witnesses including police Lieutenant Eddings, had previously testified to the department's efforts to hide the identity of McCaskill, planted as police spy among the modern Democrats.

Booked correctly under his own name after his arrest with Shoemaker and the rest, McCaskill's name later disappeared from police records. Records produced in court, showed that the name "Sauls" had been written in over a crude erasure.

Prodding another state witness too hard chief defense counsel Pat Whitaker got a shock.

Asking the witness, John Riegel, a war veteran, why he also had not testified fully before the Aldermanic Committee, Riegel repeated his answer of the day before.

"I was scared."

"Of whom?" scoffed Whitaker.

"Of t hat underworld bunch. You know who they are."

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment of Lynchers.

Florida.

4963

FORMER CHIEF OF KKK AMONG EIGHT HELD

Special Grand Jury Acts on Slaying of Joseph Shoemaker

TAMPA, Fla., Dec. 24 — Six policemen and two Klansmen were indicted by a special grand jury today for the murder of Joseph Shoemaker, Socialist and an organizer of the Workers Alliance.

The men in the indictments returned by the jury, were charged with second degre murder, assault with intent to murder and kidnaping in connection with Shoemaker's death following the flogging of three labor organizers.

Indicted were police Sergeant C. E. Brown; Patrolmen John P Bridges, Sam E. Crosby and F. W Switzer; Special officers C. W. Carlisle and R. L. Chappel; and A. F Gillian and Ed Spivey.

Gillian and Spivey are two Klansmen of Orlando, Fla. Gillian was formerly a state officer of the Klan.

The arrests of the men and their indictment in rapid order after several weeks in which the authorities had refused to act at all, are testimony to the effectiveness of the protest movement that has directed its fire against the terror here. Guided by the Committee for the Defense of Civil Liberties, located at 112 East Nineteenth Street in New York City, the movement has included protests by William Green, president of the A. F. of L., Norman Thomas and scores of other individuals and organizations throughout the country.

Schoemaker, E. F. Poulnot and Sam G. Rogers were taken into the woods and flogged on Nov. 30 after they had been held by police for "investigation for Communistic activities." Shoemaker died shortly after.

Although local authorities claimed that the three labor leaders were kidnapped by a mob after they had been released by the police, a recent story in the Daily Worker disclosed that they had been taken into the woods in police cars.

EIGHT MEN INDICTED IN FLOGGING MURDER

Grand Jury Returns Three Charges of Kidnaping, Two of Assault

TAMPA, Fla., Dec. 24.—(AP)—Eight men, including six suspended Tampa policemen, were indicted today by the Hillsborough county grand jury for second-degree murder in the flogging death of Joseph Shoemaker, former state committeeman of the socialist party in Connecticut.

The grand jury also indicted them on three different charges of kidnaping, and on two charges of assault with intent to murder E. F. Poulnot and S. D. Rogers, flogged with Shoemaker after being seized outside Tampa police headquarters on November 30 as they were released after questioning about alleged communistic activity.

Named in the indictments were Policemen C. A. Brown Jr., John P. Bridges, F. W. Switzer, Sam E. Crosby, C. W. Carlisle, and R. L. Chappell and Arlie Gilliam and Edward Spivey, of Orlando, who were employed as special policemen in the municipal primary election here last September. They have made no public statements since their arrest.

Although Sheriff McLeod said the Orlando men were "members of the Ku Klux Klan," there was no reference to the Klan in the indictments, which the grand jury presented without any accompanying report.

Charges the Klan was responsible for the flogging were made by Norman Thomas, former socialist candidate for president, and by David Lasser, national president of the Workers' Alliance, but they were promptly denied by Dr. Hiram W Evans, the Ku Klux Klan's imperial wizard at Atlanta. Thomas also charged there would be a "whitewash" of the flogging case, but officers shot back denial of that.

The six policemen were involved in the arrest of Shoemaker, Rogers and Poulnot in a raid conducted without a warrant on a private home, where they were holding a meeting of the "modern democrats," an independent political organization which offered candidates against Mayor Chancey and others in the last election.

Since the indictments carry charges on which the penalty is less than death by electrocution, the defendants face trial in county criminal court instead of the circuit court. Rex Farrior, state attorney, and R. M. Huntley, assistant state attorney, who prepared evidence before the grand jury, said they would offer any possible assistance to County Solicitor C. Jay Hardee in prosecuting the cases.

FIVE POLICEMEN HELD IN FLOGGING DEATH

Tampa Warrants Charge First Degree Murder of Labor Organizer

TAMPA, Fla., Dec. 18 (AP).—Five Tampa policemen were arrested tonight on affidavits signed by J. R. McLeod, Sheriff, and W. D. Bush, Detective Chief, in connection with the flogging to death of Joseph Shoemaker, a labor organizer.

In the affidavits, the Sheriff and Detective Chief charged that the policeman "unlawfully and from a premeditated design to effect the death of" Shoemaker, "did commit an assault upon" him and "in furtherance of assault did burn, beat and wound the said Joseph Shoemaker, thereby inflicting divers mortal wounds from which the said Joseph Shoemaker did languish and on the 9th day of December, 1935, did die."

R. M. Huntley, Assistant State Attorney, said the warrant charged the men with "first degree murder," which, upon conviction by jury, is punishable by death in the electric chair or life imprisonment.

Those arrested, at the conclusion of a day in which they were questioned behind locked doors, were:

Police Sergeant C. A. Brown, Patrolman John P. Bridges and Sam Crosby, and Special Officers C. W. Carlisle and R. L. Chappell.

The officers previously were suspended by Mayor Chancey, who also relieved Police Chief R. G. Tittsworth from duty, at the latter's request, as the grand jury investigated the death.

The men arrested were members of a police raiding party which seized Shoemaker and five others in a private home, without a warrant, for questioning about alleged communistic activities.

Released after a brief time, Shoemaker, E. F. Poulnot and S. D. Rogers were abducted by a band of men outside police headquarters and carried away to be flogged, tarred and feathered.

SIX TAMPA POLICEMEN FREED ON $9,500 BOND

TAMPA, Fla., Dec. 23. (UP)—Six Tampa policemen, charged with murder and kidnaping in the fatal flogging of a labor organizer, won freedom tonight under bond of $9,500 each.

They were released from the county jail after an effort of authorities to detain them under kidnaping charges was nullified by friends who supplied funds to meet the bail demands.

In each case, bond was set at $7,500 on first degree murder charges and $2,000 on the kidnaping charges filed late today.

2 Orlando Men Held In Flogging

TAMPA, FLA., Dec. 22.—(AP)—Arrest of two Orlando men in the flogging death of Joseph Shoemaker was announced here tonight by Sheriff J. R. McLeod. He named them as Arlie F. Gillam, glove caretaker, and Ed Spivey, typewriter repairman, and said they were employed as special city policemen in the municipal primary here last Sept. 3.

The men were taken into custody at Orlando Saturday night and returned here today.

McLeod said the men are members of the Ku Klux Klan, and he declared Gillam "told me he was a former State officer in the klan."

Norman Thomas, former Socialist party candidate for president, and David Lasser, national president of Workers Alliance, charged the klan was responsible for the flogging of Shoemaker and the two other organizers of unemployed workers. The charge was denied by Dr. Hiram W. Evans, of Atlanta, the klan's imperial wizard.

Arrest of these two men brought to eight the number of persons charged with the crime in advance of tomorrow's special session of the county Grand Jury to investigate the case. Six suspended city policemen were arrested last Wednesday and are held without bond on charges they beat Shoemaker in a "premeditated design" to kill him.

Bail application by the policemen is to be heard by Circuit Judge Harry N. Sandler at 9 a.m. tomorrow, after being postponed from Saturday as the State succeeded in delaying any presentment of its evidence until the Grand Jury reconvened.

Shoemaker was seized outside police headquarters here the night of Nov. 30 with E. F. Poulnot and S. D. Rogers and hauled away to be flogged, tarred and feathered. They had just been released after questioning about alleged communistic activities. The city policemen held in the case were named as the officers who arrested the three men and carried them to police headquarters.

FLOGGING PROBE TURNS TO POLITICS, GAMBLING

Investigation of Vice Conditions Ordered To Prevent Outbreaks

TAMPA, Fla., Dec. 16.—(AP)—The Hillsborough county grand jury today dug into politics and gambling in Tampa apparently to determine whether there was a connection with the flogging murder of Joseph Shoemaker.

The jury, beginning a special session to investigate the murder, was charged by Circuit Judges L. L. G. Parks and Harry N. Sandler, to probe conditions in general as a means toward preventing recurrence of outbreaks of violence.

Immeditely, the grand jury called as witness members of the Junior Chamber of Commerce election investigating committee. Chairman John W. McKay and five members appeared with a bulky record of evidence obtained in a recent investigation.

Informed quarters said wide open gambling operations in the county were halted abruptly soon after the judge's broad charge. The judges described gambling election law violations and unlicensed liquor dealings as "a cankerous conditions," and called upon the jury to find the cure. The Junior Chamber of Commerce recently estimated 1,000 persons were employed in the gambling business, with a money turnover of $1,000,000 a month.

The Junior Chamber claimed responsibility for disrespect for the law and order originated in gambling establishments, and Judge Parks told the jury "that's where the court places it, too."

Lynchings - 1935

Mississippi.

4964

Legal Punishment of Lynchers.

Albany-Decatur, Ala. Daily
September 19, 1935

LYNCHING PROBE IS WITHOUT CLUE

Little Progress Now Being Made In the Investigation

OXFORD, Miss., Sept. 19—(AP)—The lynching of a negro defendant in a murder trial here Tuesday night while a jury was debating his fate, apparently had been referred to the files today.

Circuit Judge Taylor McElroy, in whose court the negro, Ellwood Higginbotham, was on trial, said no progress had been made on the investigation of the lynching, in which a group of between 100 and 150 men participated, storming the jail and wresting the cringing negro, screaming and fighting, from his cell.

Judge McElroy said Sheriff S. T. Lyles had told him that none of the members of the mob was recognized, either by the sheriff, his deputies, or the jailer from whom they obtained keys to the prison by force.

"Sheriff Lyles told me the men were masked and could not be identified, so I don't suppose there is anything that can be done right now," Judge McElroy said.

He indicated that the matter might be referred to the county grand jury when it meets several months hence.

Sheriff Lyles could not be reached for a statement today. His office reported that he was "not in" and did not know when he would be in.

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

SEP 20 1935

ANOTHER LYNCHING.

Justice traveling on its "leaden feet" failed to keep pace with Judge Lynch in Mississippi for Elwood Higginbotham, a negro. In his jail cell this week waiting for a jury of his peers to return a verdict, deciding whether he was guilty of murdering a white man three months before, he was seized by a mob, carried two miles out of Oxford, Miss., and hanged to a tree.

The crime of the mob had its customary accompaniments: There was the usual remonstrating jailer, who had to be overpowered and searched for the keys; delay in getting to the frightened negro until the right key could be found for the lock to his cell. A mob of between 100 and 150 persons, which had set aside the sheriff and three of his deputies in getting to the jail where the negro on trial was being held, was followed by a great crowd of townspeople to the place of execution. With this multitude of witnesses looking on, the officers having admitted attempting to stem the senseless and angry tide, it was still announced shortly after the event that nobody participating in the violence could be identified.

And this sentence was found in the report:

Later in the night Sheriff S. T. Lyles and three deputies went to the scene and cut down the body.

If it were not for faithful local officers, wonder who would retrieve the bodies left by lynching mobs. It appears that without this official service undertakers would be left unassisted and the bodies would lack a formal "cutting down."

It may be beside the point to inquire whether the negro was guilty or not. The Associated Press report said that it was because of the long deliberations of the jury that the mob became "peeved" and did its ugly work. At least this lengthy counsel would seem to show that there was some doubt about it. Or if it was just plain stubbornness on the part of the jury in failing to convict why didn't the mob hang the jury instead?

It is futile to lecture a lynching mob, especially at long range. But it does seem in point to suggest that maybe the anti-lynching legislation proposed for Congress to enact which our senators and representatives from this part of the country have so consistently opposed, has more to it than they at first supposed.

Bronx, N.Y. Home News

SEP 20 1935

Investigation of Lynching During Trial at Standstill

Oxford, Miss.—The lynching of Ellwood Higginbotham, 28, colored, on Tuesday night while a jury was debating his fate at the close of his trial for the murder of Glen Roberts, a white farmer, was apparently a closed incident here last night.

Circuit Judge Taylor McElroy, in whose court Higginbotham was on trial when he was taken out by a mob of between 100 and 150 men and lynched, said no progress had been made in the investigation into the lynching.

Sheriff S. T. Lyles reported to Judge McElroy, the latter said, that none of the mob was recognized by the deputies guarding the prisoner.

"Sheriff Lyles told me the men were masked, so I don't suppose there is anything else that can be done right now," McElroy said.

Lynchings – 1935
Legal Punishment of Lynchers.

Mississippi

5045

Bronx, N.Y. Home News

MAR 13 1935

Officials Cannot Act to Prosecute Lynchers

Scoffing at the possibility of Federal action under the Lindbergh Law, officials of Slayden, Miss., today asserted they will not take action against the lynchers of Ab Young, a colored highway worker, because they have no clues to the identity of 50 men who hanged him to a roadside tree. Young, accused of killing Hardy McKie, 45, was kidnaped by the mob at Rossville, Tenn., and carried across the State line.

EVIDENCE LACKING IN NEGRO'S DEATH

Mississippi Authorities Say Matter Closed

3-14-35

HOLLY SPRINGS, Miss., March 13. — (UP) — Lacking evidence of whether Ab Young, negro killer, was lynched or "committed suicide," authorities said tonight they considered the matter closed.

A mob of 50 men captured the prisoner at Rossville, Tenn., yesterday and tok him to a schoolhouse three miles from Slayden, Miss., holding him prisoner while their leaders debated whether to hang or burn him, or turn him over to local officers.

They decided to hang him. Prosecutor E. C. Wright and two deputy sheriffs rushed to Slayden to plead with the citizens against a lynching, but were unable to locate where the negro was held. Young, 30 years old, wanted for shooting Hardy Mackie during a drunken spree last Saturday night, was hanged to a tree in the schoolyard. He was stood on a truck and roped. The truck was driven from under him and he dangled from an oak tree, strangling to death.

Wright said the officers were unable to learn where the mob was holding the prisoner when they reached Slayden, and could not identify any of the lynchers.

He said he would not summon the grand jury to investigate the case "because we have no proof of whether it was suicide or lynching."

The sheriff, Mrs. Lillian L. Jones, had no comment. Gov. Sennett Conner in Jackson said "all I know about it is what I read in the newspapers.' Regarding a message from a New Yorker protesting the deed, the governor said: "I get those kind of letters every time there is a lynching in this state."

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

MAR 14 1935

DIXIE LYNCHING WHITEWASHED AT SPEEDY INQUEST

Slayden, Miss., March 13 (AP).—A verdict that Ab Young, 29, colored, came to his death "by hanging" at the hands of "parties unknown," was reported today after an inquest into the lynching.

The body of the tenant farmer was found swinging from the limb of a tall oak tree in a school yard two miles east of here late yesterday.

He had been sought in the fatal shooting Saturday of Harry Mackie, 45-year-old State highway employe. The colored man was seized earlier in the afternoon at Rossville, Tenn., and brought here by automobile.

The inquest, held at Holly Springs, was presided over by Coroner W. E. Earney. Four witnesses testified. The dead man was identified as the slayer of Mackie.

NEW YORK SUN

MAR 13 1935

U. S. Is Urged to Act In Mississippi Lynching

Federal action against the mob which lynched a Negro at Slayden, Miss., yesterday was urged in telegrams sent today to President Roosevelt and Attorney-General Cummings by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The association said that the lynching was the second in five months in which a mob had transported a prisoner across a State line. It contends that this action brings the case within the provisions of the Lindbergh law, and that the Federal Government is empowered to intervene.

NEW YORK SUN

MAR 13 1935

No Clew to Identity Of Negro's Lynchers

SLAYDEN, Miss., March 13 (U. P.).—Authorities can take no action against the lynchers of Ab Young, Negro, because they have no clews whatsoever to the identity of fifty whites who hanged him to a roadside tree.

Young was accused of killing Hardy McKie, 45, a highway worker, Saturday. He was captured by the mob at Rossville, Tenn., near here, and conveyed across the State line. He stood on a truck while a rope was thrown over a tree branch and noosed around his neck. The truck was then driven from beneath him.

Ask Roosevelt, Cummings To Go After Mississippi Lynchers

3-14-35

NEW YORK, Mar. [illegible] (ANP) —Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has wired President Roosevelt and Attorney-General Homer Cummings, demanding that the lynchers of Ab Young at Slayden, Miss., be prosecuted under the Lindberg Kidnaping law.

Young, a tenant farmer, was seized at Rossville, Tenn., and returned to Mississippi, where he was hanged to a tree outside a colored school house about three miles from the town. More than fifty men were in the mob which spread the word early Tuesday that Young was to be murdered at sundown.

After tieing a rope around Young's neck and placing the rope around the limb of the tree, the lynchers forced Young to sing religious songs and pray before one of the lynchers drove from under Young the automobile on top of which the victim had been shoved.

Young was seized by the mob after he had a fight with a white man in which the latter lost his life.

Lynchings-1935
& Legal Punishment of Lynchers.

North Carolina

4965

GREENSBORO, N. C.
RECORD

MAR 14 1935

Three Held For Lynching Threat

RALEIGH, March 14.—(AP)—Three young white men were under bond here today by allegedly attempting by threat of lynching to force a confession from Ed Austin, 25, a negro.

The three were Chris Wehbie, 23; George Davis, 23, and Rex Eastman, 18. Police Sergt. W. J. Horton said the trio had attempted to force a confession from the negro that he had stolen three suits of clothes from one of the men.

RALEIGH, N. C.
NEWS OBSERVER

MAR 15 1935

DRAW FINES FOR THREAT TO LYNCH

Three Young White Men Appeal in Case Involving Negro's 'Confession'

Three young white men, who carried a Negro into a woods near here and threatened him with death unless he confessed to stealing clothes from one of them, yesterday were fined $25 and costs in City Court when convicted of an assault with deadly weapons. The weapons were a shotgun and a piece of rope.

The trio, Chris Wehbie, Rex Eatman and George Davis, were arrested Wednesday morning as they rode back into the city with their prisoner, Ed Austin, Lincoln Park Negro.

Davis, when booked, gave his address as 1707 Dare Street. He does not live at this address and police yesterday said they have no record of where he resides.

Austin declared on the stand that the rope was placed about his neck and that one of the boys threatened to shoot him. He confessed to the theft, he said, although asserting he is not guilty.

Wehbie, Eatman and Davis gave notice of appeal from the judgment, but their attorney indicated this may be withdrawn and the fine paid before the case is sent to Superior Court.

The young men denied that they looped the rope around Austin's neck and threatened to hang him. They admitted, however, that they took him to the woods to obtain a "confession." All are free under $50 bond each.

Lee Gooch, charged with drunken driving, was fined $50 and costs.

H. E. Robbins, linotype operator convicted of abandonment and non-support, was given a six-month suspended term and ordered to pay $15 each week to the Wake Welfare Department, to be used for the support of his wife and a minor child. He appealed and gave $300 bond pending trial in Superior Court.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS

AUG 1 1935

Hearing Fails To Link Anyone With Lynching

Testimony Of Witnesses Fails To Unearth Identity Of Those Who Lynched Axe-Killer.

By W. JOYNES MacFARLAN
Associated Press Staff Writer

Louisburg, Aug. 1.—(AP)—No evidence to link any one with the lynching Tuesday of Roosevelt Ward, negro axe-slayer of a Franklin county farmer, was adduced at the forenoon session of a judicial inquiry opened here today.

From officers who arrested Ward, Superior Court Judge W. C. Harris received details of the rampage the negro went on when he chopped off C. G. Stokes' head, but none of the witnesses connected any one wth the lynchng.

Solcitor William Y. Bickett, of Raleigh, did most of the questioning of witnesses, assisted by Attorney General A. A. F. Seawell.

Believes Negro Doped

Dr. H. G. Perry, of Louisburg, who saw the negro an hour or so before he was taken from Sheriff J. H. Moore and two deputies by 25 armed men and hanged to an oak tree, testified he believed Ward was under the influence of a narcotic when he ran amuck.

Some 30 witnesses were summoned for the hearing which opened with the court room of Franklin county's 82-year-old court-house, intended to seat 250, jammed wth upwards of 400 spectators who crowded in despite the stifling heat.

C. O. Wrenn, deputy sheriff of Hayesville township, was the first witness called.

Describes Arrest

He described how he and Deputies A. A. Fuller and Elmer Deal went to the home of Otho Kearney to arrest Ward for assault on Ayscue and learned there of the murder of Stokes and an assault on Rowena Kearney, Ward's sister, by the negro.

Wrenn said he last saw Ward alive when Sheriff John H. Moore and two deputies were putting him into a car to take him from the county because of the high feeling in the Hayesville section.

Wrenn said he drove from Louisburg to Kearney's home then and found about 75 people there, including J. H. Goodson, Coroner R. A. Bobbitt and Ira Weldon. It was there, he said, that he first heard the mob had seized Ward.

He went on home to lunch, he continued, and when he returned was told Ward had been hanged.

Asked by Bickett from which direction most of the cars came which visited Stokes' home. Wrenn replied they came from the Vance county direction, towards Epsom.

A. A. Fuller, resdent of Hayesville township who was deputized to assist in the arrest of Ward, drew a laugh from the crowd when he said he was churning when Wrenn came to get him.

Fuller also related the arrest of Ward and said the negro was sitting in a chair at Otho Kearney's home with Stokes' head in a cloth at his feet when the officers found him. Stokes was killed 75 yards away.

"I've killed one man. Turn me loose and I'll clean the world," Fuller quoted the negro as saying as they were bringing him to Louisburg.

Remembers No One

Fuller said he did not remember any one he saw at Stokes' home or the lynching scene except Clyde Evans, Obey Weldon and one or two others.

Neal followed Fuller to the stand and testified he came to town to bring Ward and went back to the filling station he operates. He said some one in a car told him Ward had been lynched and under questioning by Bickett said it was some one "I never saw on that road before." He added he did not recollect what kind of car his informant was in.

He said a group from Henderson was at his filling station when he returned, but that he did not recall the names of any except Roger Duke, a mail carrier.

L. O. Frazier, justice of the peace of Hayesville township, told of Ayscue swearing out the warrant charging Ward with assault and related that after he heard Stokes had been killed he got his gun and went to Kearney's house where he saw J. H. Goodson and Hugh Burnett.

Calls Names

"I might call every man's name in the community," Frazier replied to a question as to whom he recognized at Stokes' home around 11 A. M. Tuesday, an hour or more before the lynching.

He then named D. T. Dickey, George Ayscue, Warner Ayscue, Henry Jones, Horace Stokes, and "some of the Weldons."

Cars were coming and going all the time, he said, and he saw many people leave the home, but did not see Horace Stokes leave.

Attorney General Seawell took over the questioning when Spurgeon Ayscue, who had been sent for, took the stand. Ayscue related the attack upon him by Ward and said he heard of the killing of Stokes, a cousin of his father, about 10 A. M., while at Weldon's mill. Others at the mill, he said, were Andrew Faulkner, another man named Faulkner, Tom Collins and Ira Weldon. He went to Stokes' home, he continued, but left there about noon and went to Henderson to have the wound in his head treated and first heard of the lynching in Henderson.

Tells of Battle

Dr. H. G. Perry, Louisburg physician to whom the negro was brought after his arrest for treatment of younds inflicted when he resisted the officers, described the battle the negro put up which virtually wrecked his office.

He expresed the belief that Ward was under the influence of a narcotic.

Sheriff J. E. Hamlet, of Vance county, told of being summoned to Epsom early Tuesday, or returning to Henderson after Ward was arrested and of coming back to the lynch scene, which he reached 15 or 20 minutes after Ward was hanged.

He said he could not recollect the names of any persons around the lynching scene.

WINSTON SALEM, N.C.
SENTINEL

AUG 1 1935

Lynching Described at Investigation

Louisburg (AP).—Judge W. C. Harris, of Raleigh, opened a judicial investigation into the lynching Tuesday of Roosevelt Ward, 25-year-old Negro, at 10:40 a.m. today.

The court room of Franklin county's eighty-two-year-old courthouse, seating 250, was jammed with some 400 spectators.

The official record of the lynching which first listed as Goven Ward the name of the victim who had slain Charles G. Stokes, prominent farmer, with an axe a short time before he was lynched was changed to Roosevelt Ward upon the word of relatives that this was his true name.

Solicitor William Y. Bickett, directing the questioning of witnesses, was assisted by Attorney-General A. A. F. Seawell and Charles Green, Franklin county attorney.

The names of some thirty witnesses were called and when Spurgeon Ayscue, who was assaulted by Ward early Tuesday, did not answer he was sent for.

C. O. Wrenn, deputy sheriff of Hayesville township, was the first witness called.

He described how he and Deputies A. A. Fuller and Elmer Deal went to the home of Otho Kearney to arrest Ward for assault on Ayscue and learned there of the murder of Stokes and an assault on Rowena Kearney, Ward's sister, by the Negro.

Wrenn said he last saw Ward alive when Sheriff John H. Moore and two deputies were putting him into a car to take him from the county because of the high feeling in the Hayesville section.

Wrenn said he drove from Louisburg to Kearney's home then and found about seventy-five people there, including J. H. Goodson, Coroner R. A. Bobbitt and Ira Weldon. It was there, he said, that he first heard the mob had seized Ward.

He went on home to lunch, he continued, and when he returned was told Ward had been hanged.

Asked by Bickett from which direction most of the cars came which visited Stokes' home, Wrenn replied they came from the Vance county direction, towards Epsom.

A. A. Fuller, resident of Hayesville township who was deputized to assist in the arrest of Ward, drew a laugh from the crowd when he said he was churning when Wrenn came to get him.

Fuller also related the arrest of Ward and said the Negro was sitting in a chair at Otho Kearney's home with Stokes' head in a cloth at his feet when the officers found him. Stokes was killed seventy-five yards away.

"I've killed one man. Turn me loose and I'll clean the world," Fuller quoted the Negro as saying as they were bringing him to Louisburg.

Fuller said he did not remember any one he saw at Stokes' home or the lynching scene except Clyde Evans, Oeby Weldon and one or two others.

WILMINGTON, N. C.
NEWS

SEP 4 1935

BICKETT IN NEED OF MOB EVIDENCE

Says He Must Have More Information Than Names Of Purported Lynchers

RALEIGH, Sept. 4.—(AP)—Solicitor William Y. Bickett of the seventh judicial district said today he did not expect any further hearings to be held in an effort to identify members of a mob which lynched Govan Ward, negro slayer, in Franklin county in July "unless there is sufficient evidence to sustain a grand jury indictment."

The solicitor had not received data sent Governor Ehringhaus by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People which purported to name nine members of the mob which lynched Ward.

"I certainly must have information and evidence other than the mere mention of the names of nine men suspected of participating in the lynching," Solicitor Bickett said.

Solicitor Bickett said he has been making a careful investigation of the case since a judicial inquiry was held at Louisburg before Judge W. C. Harris but that he had been unable to unearth any tangible evidence with which to justify another hearing.

"I do not know what information has been given the governor, but I do not expect to make public the names of nine Franklin men mentioned by the association unless I find there is evidence to carry the matter before the grand jury," Bickett said.

The solicitor said he planned to confer late today with Governor Ehringhaus and Attorney General A. A. F. Seawell on the matter.

FAYETTEVILLE, N. C.
OBSERVER

SEP 5 1935

GOVERNOR HAS LIST OF NAMES

Of Persons Alleged to Have Been in Lynching Mob

RALEIGH, Sept. 3 (AP)—Governor Ehringhaus today received a letter from the National Association for the advancement of colored people allegedly naming nine persons who were members of a Franklin county mob which lynched Govan Ward, negro, on July 30 near Louisburg, but he did not reveal the names.

"I am not in position to release the names," Governor Ehringhaus said, "but during the day I will turn the communication over to the proper authorities."

He explained he referred to Solicitor William Y. Bickett of the seventh judicial district and Attorney General A. A. F. Seawell who jointly conducted an inquiry before Judge W. C. Harris in Louisburg two days after the lynching.

"The letter contains a very general report but it calls names definitely," the Governor said. "I will leave it up to the solicitor and attorney general whether it be made public at this time."

The association announced in New York last night that it had sent the Governor the report, saying the information was gathered for it by a southern white investigator.

Ward was lynched for the murder of Charles G. Stokes, a white farmer, after he had run amuck and attacked three persons.

WINSTON SALEM, N. C.
SENTINEL

SEP 5 1935

LYNCHING EVIDENCE TERMED INSUFFICIENT

Raleigh (UP).—Solictor William Y. Bickett said today he will not call for further court action in the lynching of Govan Ward, Negro murderer, in Franklin county last July, uuless he received evidence sufficient to sustain grand-jury indictments.

Informed by Gov. J. C. B. Ehringhaus of a letter from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, assertedly giving names of nine members of the lynch mob, Bickett said:

"I certainly must have information and evidence other than the mere mention of the names of nine men suspected of participation in the lynching."

He added that he has been investigating the case for several weeks, but has been unable to find evidence sufficient to justfy a new court hearing.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
OBSERVER

SEP 5 1935

Awaits Further Evidence To Revive Lynching Case

RALEIGH, Sept. 4.—(AP)—Solicitor William Y. Bickett of the seventh judicial district said today he did not expect any further hearings to be held in an effort to identify members of a mob which lynched Govan Ward, negro slayer, in Franklin county in July "unless there is sufficient evidence to sustain a grand jury indictment."

The solicitor had not received data sent Governor Ehringhaus by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People which purported to name nine members of the mob which lynched Ward.

"I certainly must have information and evidence other than the mere mention of the names of nine men suspected of participating in the lynching," Solicitor Bickett said.

Solicitor Bickett said he had been making a careful investigation of the case since a judicial inquiry was held at Louisburg before Judge W. C. Harris but that he had been unable to unearth any tangible evidence with which to justify another hearing.

"I do not know what information has been given the Governor, but I do not expect to make public the names of nine Franklin men mentioned by the association unless I find there is evidence to carry the matter before the grand jury," Bickett said.

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment of Lynchers.

South Carolina.

4966

GREENVILLE, S. C.
NEWS
OCT 31 1935

"LYNCHING" QUESTION AGAIN

That interesting question of when a group-homicide is a "lynching" is raised again by the Anderson Record in a comment on the verdict of a Greenville county jury which held that George Green, slain by a band of hooded men, was not "lynched" and that the county was therefore not liable to the constitutional penalty of a $2,000 payment to his widow.

The Record characterizes this verdict as a "strange conclusion," and asks: if this mob of hooded men did not kill the negro Green 'to punish him for some alleged crime,' what was the provocation? Certainly," it continues, "the Greenville county jury does not admit that there are hooded bands of mobsters in Greenville county going about killing people without some such provocation, even though they are acting outside the law."

As information to our contemporary, we believe the defense counsel (for the county) in this case contended that the cause or reasons which led to this killing were other than for an alleged criminal act on the part of the negro, and the jury accepted that conclusion. Without undertaking to pass on the merits of that judgment, it can be said that killings, not only by individuals but by groups as well, frequently come about as a result of motives other than that of punishing an alleged crime.

However, it is very well to bear in mind that the distinction between a "lynching" and an ordinary murder legally speaking, has to do only with the liability of the county to pay a sum of money to dependents of the deceased. Both are crimes of equal gravity before the law and there is the same obligation upon the authorities in both cases to apprehend and punish the criminals. If that is done uniformly and successfully, the most important and effective step toward deterring crime of either class will be taken.

Greenville, S. C. Piedmont
October 23, 1935

Jury Debates Question Of Whether Negro Was Lynched

The question of whether or not the admitted mob-murder of George Green, Taylors negro, was a "lynching," was still being debated by a common pleas jury early this afternoon after a deliberation that began at 11 o'clock this morning.

A $5,000 suit instituted by Mary Green, as administratrix for the dead man, hangs on the decision of the jury.

Under state law the county of Greenville is liable for the lynching of any citizen, lynching being defined as the mob-murder of a person accused or suspected of having committed a crime.

County Attorney H. K. Townes held that the murder of Green was not a lynching, that he had been neither accused nor suspected of crime, but was killed by a band of robed men acting at behest of the negro's landlord, who desired to have him move from his property.

Counsel for plaintiff alleged that the negro was suspected of violating the liquor laws prior to the mobbing.

A verdict of $3,000 for the plaintiff was returned by a jury late yesterday in the case of Homer Banther, administrator, vs. M. J. Lane, et al. Of the damages awarded as result of the death of Mrs. Banther, struck by a car on the Easley road, $2,000 was against Mr. Lane and $1,000 against J. L. Short and Joe Short.

In the case of R. L. Walker vs. Woods & Collins, et al., begun this morning, Judge T. S. Sease approved the motion of James H. Price, of counsel for the defendant, for a non-suit.

Lynchings-1935

Legal Punishment of Lynchers.

South Carolina

5052

County Balks On Lynching Fine

Black Dispatch

LAURENS, S. C., Jan. 3.—(ANP)—County officials looked the other way last Thursday when W. R. Richey, Sr., white attorney for the estate of Norris Dendy, filed a claim against the county for $2,000 in connection with the lynching of Dendy at Clinton on July 4 last year. 5-35

The state law provides that the county pay the heirs of the victim a minimum of $2,000. Mr. Richey told the county authorities that his clients were willing to settle for the minimum, but if the county refused to recognize the obligation, he would take the matter into the courts.

The county board refused to consider the issue officially, holding that it would be necessary to consult the county attorney. Later, when this official was questioned, he stated that he would advise the board to turn the proposition down.

Columbia. S. C. State

May 17, 1935

LYNCH VERDICT IN HIGHEST COURT

Supreme Judicial Body Hears Appeal From Greenville County.

The state supreme court yesterday heard arguments upon an appeal by Greenville county from a circuit court verdict for Mary Green, widow of George Green, who was alleged to have been lynched November 16, 1933.

The verdict of $2,000, court records said, was awarded in an action asking $5,000. The suit was brought, it was pointed out, under provisions of a statute permitting suits against counties in which lynchings are alleged to have occurred.

The court also heard appeals from Pickens and Kershaw counties.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment of Lynchers.

Tennessee

4967

WHITES ACQUITTED IN DEATH OF NEGRO

Insult To Woman Blamed; Five Face New Charges

ASHLAND CITY, Tenn., Nov. 18 —(AP)—Five white men were acquitted of murder charges in connection with the killing of a Negro Monday and immediately the law manacled them with new accusations.

Hardly had the jury of farmers finished reporting when Circuit Judge Wirt Courtney issued bench warrants alleging conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment. Without moment's freedom the five filed back to jail. They are four brothers, Luther, Jesse, Jimmy and Clyde Dotson, and a cousin, Allie Brown.

On trial they had admitted killing Baxter Bell, 45-year-old Negro, and pleaded self-defense. Two weeks ago Bell was seized from Dickson County officers at White Bluff by five men. Half an hour later in the edge of Cheatham County he was found dead of a bullet-punctured lung.

Luther Doston, with the other four giving corroborative testimony, told the court the intention had been to whip Bell. The Negro was accused of having insulted and slapped Mrs. Luther Dotson. However, Dotson testified, the Negro grabbed for a rock when informed he would be whipped and Luther Dotson shot him.

She said she repulsed him and quoted Bell as saying, "What's the matter?" Mrs. Dotson testified that she warned the Negro not to say that to her again and that he struck her in the face. She said that then she ran to get an officer as Bell began scuffling with a bystander who came up.

A plea of self-defense was entered by the five defendants earlier in the day.

Lynchers' Plea Is Self-Defense

ASHLAND CITY, TENN. Nov. 15.—(AP)—A plea of self-defense was thrust today into the fast-moving murder trial of five white men charged with taking the law into their own hands when a negro insulted the wife of one of them.

Accused of lynching the negro, Baxter Bell, the five contended they had no intention of killing him when they forcibly took him from two officers at White Bluff 11 days ago. The negro was found dead, shot once through the lungs, little more than 30 minutes after he was seized.

Luther Dotson headed the string of defense witnesses as the second day of the trial got underway in a courtroom crowded with both negroes and white persons. Dotson testified that he and four companions rode the negro out of White Bluff in an automobile, intending to whip him.

About five miles away they stopped. "We are going to whip you," Dotson said he told Bell. It was Dotson's wife who was insulted.

"You ain't going to whip me," he testified Bell answered.

The negro stooped to pick up a rock, Dotson said, and he, in self-defense, fired. About 25 minutes after they left White Bluff the men returned and surrendered to officers.

Luther Dotson was followed to the stand by his three brothers, Jesse, Clyde and Jimmy and his cousin, Allie Brown. They gave virtually the same testimony.

"We all made it up to take the negro and whip him," Jesse Dotson said, "but we didn't aim to kill him."

Knoxville, Tenn., Journal
November 24, 1935

FIVE WHITE MEN accused of lynching a Negro were acquitted of murder charges at Ashland City, Tenn., but the court immediately ordered them held on warrants alleging conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment.

Circuit Judge Wirt Courtney sharply criticized the jury's verdict freeing the men.

WOMAN RELATES LYNCHING CAUSE

Husband and Four Others on Trial as Slayers of Negro Claim Self-Defense

ASHLAND CITY, Tenn., Nov. 15. (AP)—Testifying for the defense in the murder trial of her husband and four others, Mrs. Luther Dotson, 26, this afternoon gave a dramatic account of the circumstances leading up to the lynching of Baxter Bell, 45-year-old Negro, who allegedly insulted and struck her.

Mrs. Dotson testified that she was standing on the porch of a store near White Bluff when the Negro approached her.

"He grabbed me by the shoulder and said he would give me five dollars to go with him," she told the circuit court jury.

FIVE TENNESSEE MOB MEMBERS RE-ARRESTED

CHARLOTTE, Tenn., Dec. 5—(ANP)—Five confessed lynchers are to go to trial for the second time here this week, when Clyde, Luther, James and Lesse Dotson and their cousin, Allie Brown, will be tried for the murder of Walter Bell, who was lynched near here November 4.

The five white men were arrested when Luther Dotson entered the sheriff's office and returned the officer's gun after the lynching. At the first trial the quintet was acquitted, but rearrested on the judge's order after he had reprimanded the jury that returned the verdict of "not guilty" despite the confession and the evidence.

Each one admitted to being a member of the mob that lynched Bell, but Dotson, who is alleged to have killed Bell, claimed that he killed him in self defense. According to the story of the lynchers, they took Bell from the officers to administer a beating, but when they reached the place where the whipping was supposed to have been given, Bell picked up a rock and, fearing that he might be killed, Luther Dotson shot and killed him and his body was thrown into a nearby stream.

Mrs. Dotson, who caused the lynching, testified that Bell, a pauper, had insulted her by offering her $500 to "go with him" and when she turned down his offer he slapped her. She reported the incident to her husband and the arrest and subsequent lynching followed.

'I am astounded at your verdict," presiding Judge Courtney told the jurors. "By your action you will make Cheatham county the dumping ground for lawlessness in the future."

Immediately after the verdict was rendered Judge Courtney issued bench warrants charging the five white men with conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment on the slain negro.

The five had testified that the negro was killed in self-defense that they had not intended to kill him when they took him from two officers and carried him into the woods several miles distant. They said they only meant to whip him but when he started to pick up a rock he was shot and killed.

The negro had been arrested on a legal charge of assault and battery after he was said to have slapped the wife of one of the lynchers when she resented an insulting remark from him.

The five defendants were returned to jail after the new warrants were issued.

Charlotte, N. C. Observer
November 24, 1935

Lynchers Acquitted.

AS MIGHT HAVE BEEN expected, a jury of Cheatham county, Tennessee, farmers Monday acquitted the five men on trial at Ashland City on charges of murder in connection with the lynching of a negro near there two weeks previously.

GOES TO JURY

Farmers Deliberate Charge Against Tennesseans.

ASHLAND CITY, Tenn., Nov. 16 (AP)—A jury of farmers today received the case of four brothers and a cousin, charged with lynching Baxter Bell, 45-year-old Negro, whom the wife of one of the defendants had accused of making improper advances and then striking her.

Luther Dotson, husband of the woman who said Bell had insulted her, testified that he and his companions—Jesse, Clyde and Jimmy Dotson and Allie Brown—had intended only to whip the Negro when they wrested him from officers in an adjoining county.

But he said he shot in self-defense when Bell resisted and stooped to pick up a rock. Three of his companions gave similar testimony. Clyde Dotson did not take the stand.

The killing of Bell and the trial of the five white men occurred within a period of less than two weeks. Half an hour after the Negro was seized on the streets of White Bluff November 4, the defendants returned there and surrendered, telling where Bell's body could be found in this county. The Negro had been shot once through the chest.

Deputy Sheriff Clyde Petty and City Marshal Louis Donley, the White Bluff officers from whom the Negro was seized, testified that Bell's body showed marks on the face that indicated he had been struck by a blunt instrument before being shot.

Mrs. Dotson told the jury that she was drinking a bottle of beer at the rural store of Ed Daniels, a Negro, when Bell accosted her. After she had repulsed his advances, she said Bell struck her in the eye, and that he also struck Ellis Parker, a white man who came to her assistance.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

NOV 17 1935

LYNCHING CASE

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
NEWS SENTINEL

NOV 18 1935

5 FREED IN STATE LYNCHING; REBUKED AND JAILED AGAIN

Middle Tennessee Jury Astounds Judge; Fears Results.

SPIRITED AWAY

Jurist Says Verdict Opens Way For Lawlessness.

By Associated Press

ASHLAND CITY, Tenn. Nov. 18 — Five white men on trial on charges of murder in connection with the killing of a Negro near here 14 days ago were acquitted today by a jury of Cheatham County farmers.

Immediately after the verdict was announced, Circuit Judge Wirt Courtney, who presided over the trial, issued warrants charging conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment, against the five—Luther, Jesse, Jimmy and Clyde Dotson, brothers, and their cousin, Allie Brown.

"I am astounded at your verdict," Judge Courtney told the jurors.

"By your action you will make Cheatham County the dumping ground for lawlessness in the future."

The jury had been out since late Saturday. The foreman had reported inability to reach a verdict Saturday night. Judge Courtney then sent the 12 back to deliberate over the week-end and report at the opening of court today.

Two Weeks After Lynching

The acquittal came two weeks almost to the hour after the slaying of the Negro, Baxter Bell, 45, near Kingston Springs on Nov. 4. Five white men had seized him from two officers at White Bluff where he had been arrested on a charge of insulting and slapping Mrs. Luther Dotson on the evening of Nov. 3.

Mrs. Dotson testified that while she was in a store near her home Bell offered her $5 for a date and when she refused him he struck her. She said he also struck a white man, the only other white person in the store at the time.

5 Plead Self-Defense

Admitting the shooting, the five men pleaded self-defense. Luther Dotson testified that after Bell had been driven by automobile to near Kingston Springs he was told he was going to be whipped. The five testified their intention was to whip the Negro, not lynch him.

Dotson said Bell stooped to pick up a rock and he shot Bell once. The Negro died of a single bullet wound in his lung.

After the five men, acquitted of murder, were placed in jail to face still other charges, Sheriff J. W. Keith said there was "too much trouble here" to hold them in Ashland City. He planned to take them either to Nashville or to Charlotte in Dickson County.

Charlotte, N. C. Observer
December 1, 1935

SAVE STATES' RIGHTS BY EXERCISING THEM.

The acquittal of the five white men in Tennessee charged with murder in connection with the lynching of a negro, who was not even accused of the "usual crime," was another in a long series of invitations to Congress to enact a Federal anti-lynching law.

The five men admitted at the trial that they overpowered two officers and took their prisoner from them by force, hauled him away to a thicket, several miles distant and shot him to death. Their defense was that they had not intended to lynch him but that one of them shot the negro to death in self defense when he started to pick up a rock. Also they pleaded as an extenuating circumstance that the negro had made an insulting remark to the wife of one of the five men and when she resented it he slapped her. He was arrested and charged with assault and battery.

After hearing all the evidence, including the testimony of the officers, the jury "deliberated" for two nights and a day and brought in a verdict of not guilty. The judge expressed himself as "astounded," but he had no reason to be, if he had been keeping posted on the record of such cases. As a rule the evidence and the law do not count with juries in lynching cases any more than they count with a mob bent on committing a lynching.

For some months now North Carolina has maintained a standing invitation to Congress to enact an anti-lynching law by its failure to punish or even to arrest any member of the mob of 20 or 25 men who in mid-day light took a negro prisoner from the sheriff and his deputies in Franklin county and lynched him. At a brief formal hearing before Judge W. C. HARRIS, sitting as a committing magistrate, immediately after the lynching, the sheriff and the deputies swore they were unable to identify a single member of the mob or get the number of any one of the group of automobiles used by the lynching party. And that seems to have ended the State's interest in the case.

Of course the absurdity of the testimony of the sheriff and his deputies in a rural county like Franklin, with a population of barely 30,000—where everybody knows the sheriff and the sheriff knows everybody in the county—made no difference.

These two recent cases of lynching—one in North Carolina and one in Tennessee—widely different in their aspects—illustrate the manner in which States generally deal with lynchers, in South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana and elsewhere.

And yet, when Congress convenes again and an anti-lynching bill is introduced to provide for more certain punishment of lynchers, the Senators and Representatives from all of these States will be expected to make a determined fight in opposition, with orations in defense of States' rights, maintaining that a Federal law is unnecessary because the several States "are amply able to deal with lynchers and are doing so."

Certainly the matter of dealing with lynchers should be one for the States and not for the Federal government, and should be left to the States—if they will deal with this crime of combined murder and anarchy.

But, sooner or later, if the States will not deal with it—if they will not punish or arrest lynchers, or if State court juries persist in acquitting lynchers regardless of the evidence and the law—then the arguments against a Federal anti-lynching law will become generally recognized as absurd and ridiculous and the matter of dealing with lynchers will be taken over by the Federal government.

The Nation as a whole has some rights as well as the individual States in the matter of the disgrace of continued and frequent instances of lynch law and sooner or later will insist that the Federal government take action to deal with lynchers if the States will not.

Frequent lynchings with virtual immunity for the mob are more dangerous to the constitutional rights of the people of the States than a Federal anti-lynchings law would be.

In the interest of States' rights the States should prove that they can deal effectively with lynchers.

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment of Lynchers.

Tennessee.

4968

5 MEN ARE INDICTED IN TENN. LYNCHING

ASHLAND CITY, Tenn., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Five white men held in connection with the lynching of Baxter Bell, 45, a negro, last Monday were indicted on first degree murder charges today by the Cheatham county grand jury.

11-9-35

Circuit Judge Wirt Courtney announced shortly afterward that trial of the five would start Thursday morning.

Those indicted are Luther Dotson Clyde Dotson, Jimmy Dotson an Jesse Dotson, all brothers, and Alli Brown, a cousin.

Chattanooga, Tenn. Times
November 6, 1935

SLAYERS OF NEGRO IN NASHVILLE JAIL

Five Held After Lynching at White Bluff — Victim Said to Have Insulted Woman.

NASHVILLE, Nov. 5 (AP).—Owing to crowded jail conditions in Cheatham county, five men charged with murder in connection with the lynching of a Negro yesterday near White Bluff, Tenn., were brought to the county jail here today.

Brought here by Deputy Sheriff Robert H. Williams, the group will remain here until Friday, when their preliminary before Magistrate W. B. Adkinson at Ashland City has been scheduled.

They were arrested yesterday after Baxter Bell, 45, Negro, had been found shot to death in a thicket near White Bluff, just across the Cheatham county line.

Charged by Mrs. Luther Dotson that he had insulted her, the Negro was taken from officers in the business section of White Bluff only a short time before he was shot once through the chest.

Deputy Williams removed the men to Ashland City yesterday and swore out a warrant charging them with murder. He said their names were listed as Luther Dotson, husband of the allegedly insulted woman; his three brothers, Jimmie Dotson, Clyde Dotson and Jesse Dotson, and Allie Brown, their cousin.

Their preliminary hearing was set originally for today, but Magistrate Adkisson postponed it shortly before the men were transferred to Nashville

Clarkesville, Tenn., Chronicle
November 5, 1935

Trial Today For Suspects In Lynching

White Bluff, Tenn., Nov. 5—(AP)—A preliminary hearing was scheduled at Ashland City today for five men charged with murder in connection with the lynching of Baxter Bell, forty-five-year-old Negro in the country four miles from here.

The hearing was set before Magistrate W. B. Adkinson.

Deputy Sheriff Robert H. Williams of Cheatham County said last night that he had sworn out a warrant charging the group with murder, listing their names as Luther Dotson, Slyde Dotson, Jimmie Dotson, Jesse Dotson, all brothers, and Allie Brown, their cousin.

The Negro was found shot to death in a thicket just across the Cheatham County line yesterday after he had allegedly insulted a white woman the night before at a bus stop near Kingston Springs. Deputy Sheriff Clyde Petty arrested the Negro on charges brought by Mrs. Luther Dotson.

Yesterday Petty and City Marshall Louis Donnelly were delivering the Negro to Cheatham County authorities when five armed men surrounded the car in the White Bluff business section and took the Negro.

Donnelly said they were armed with three pistols and two shotguns. He said they came back a short while later and surrendered to officers who locked them up.

Later in the day Deputy Williams moved the men to Cheatham County Jail at Ashland City.

Marshall Donnelly quoted Mrs Dotson as saying that as she alighted from a bus at Kingston Springs the Negro approached her and said he would "give me $5 for a date to walk down the road."

Donnelly said she told him she "cursed the Negro" and that then he slapped her.

Jury Holds Fate Of 5 In Lynching

ASHLAND CITY, TENN., Nov. 16.—(AP)—Unable to reach a decision tonight, a jury of farmers sitting in the lynch trial of five white men charged with murdering a negro was instructed by the court to report again at 9 a.m. Monday.

"This jury can reach a decision as well as any other," said Judge Wirt Courtney as he refused to dismiss it. The case went to the jury late this afternoon.

Four brothers and a cousin are on trial charged with lynching Baxter Bell, 45-year-old negro, whom the wife of one of the defendants had accused of making improper advances and then striking her.

Luther Dotson, husband of the woman who said Bell had insulted her, testified that he and his companions—Jesse, Clyde and Jimmy Dotson and Allie Brown—had intended only to whip the negro when they wrested him from officers in an adjoining county.

But he said he shot in self-defense when Bell resisted and stopped to pick up a rock. Three of his companions gave similar testimony. Clyde Dotson did not take the stand.

The killing of Bell and the trial of the five white men occurred within a period of less than two weeks. Half an hour after the negro was seized on the streets of White Bluff Nov. 4, the defendants returned there and surrendered, telling where Bell's body could be found in this county.

Nashville, Tenn.
Morning Tennessean

NOV 6 1935

5 HELD IN LYNCHING ARE BROUGHT HERE

Cheatham County Temporary Jail Full; Hearing Set for Friday in Ashland City

Charged with murder in the lynching of a negro near White Bluff Monday, five men, four brothers and a cousin, were brought to the Davidson county jail late yesterday to await their preliminary hearing.

The Cheatham county jail burned last March. Since then a garage building has been used to house county prisoners. It is crowded.

The five men are scheduled to appear Friday for preliminary hearing before Magistrate W. B. Adkisson at Ashland City. They were brought here by Deputy Sheriff Robert H. Williams.

They were arrested Monday after Baxter Bell, 45, negro, had been found shot to death in a thicket just across the Cheatham county line from White Bluff, which is in Dickson county.

Charged by Mrs. Luther Dotson that he had insulted her, Bell was taken from officers in the White Bluff business section only a short time before he was shot once through the chest.

Deputy Williams removed the men to Ashland City Monday and swore out a warrant charging them with murder. They are Luther Dotson, husband of the allegedly insulted woman, his three brothers, Jimmie, Clyde and Jesse Dotson, and their cousin, Allie Brown.

The insult charged by Mrs. Dotson is alleged to have occurred in a negro beer parlor four miles from White Bluff Sunday night.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
PRESS SCIMITAR

NOV 4 1935

5 SURRENDER AFTER NEGRO IS LYNCHED

Declare Victim Had Insulted Wife of One

By Associated Press

WHITE BLUFF, Tenn., Nov. 4.—A 35-year-old negro, Baxter Bell, was killed early today by a group of white men who riddled his body with bullets for an alleged insult to a white woman as she alighted from a bus last night.

The killing occurred on a road to Kingston Springs some distance from White Bluff. The negro's body was thrown from the raodside into a thicket.

A short time later five white men, appeared at the jail here and, Deputy Clyde Petty reported, surrendered. They told the officer the white woman whom they claimed had been insulted was the wife of one of their number.

Petty and another officer were taking the negro to Charlotte in an automobile to place him in Kickson County jail when the white men stopped them. They disarmed the two officers and took away the negro.

NASHVILLE, TENN.
BANNER

NOV 10 1935

Negroes May Ask Investigation of Cheatham Lynching

Negro ministers of Nashville will meet at the Colored Y. M. C. A. Monday morning at 10 o'clock to discuss problems affecting Negroes here. The call for the meeting was issued by the Interdenominational Church Ministers' Alliance. Among questions to be discussed are the problem of getting "honest expression at the polls" for Negroes, and the recent lynching in Cheatham County.

Dr. W. S. Ellington will speak on "The Negro's Contribution to Clean Government." Dr. J. D. Ridley's subject will be "How I Built My Sunday School." Dr. S. H. Simpson will talk on "My Church's Relief Program." A committee made up of Dr. S. S. Morris, Dr. W. J. Faulkner, Dr. A. Myron Cochran, Dr. Ridley, and Dr. Spencer Jackson will report on the question as to whether Governor McAlister shall be asked to investigate the Cheatham County lynching in which a Negro was shot to death.

Chairman J. T. Patton has asked that reports on Community Chest solicitation be given at this meeting for every Negro church in the city.

DYERSBURG, TENN.
STATE GAZETTE

NOV 6 1935

Five May Be Moved To Nashville Jail

ASHLAND CITY, Tenn.,—Due to crowded conditions at the Ashland city jail, five men held in connection with the lynching of Baxter Bell, forty-five-year-old negro, near White Bluff yesterday, were expected to be removed to the Davidson county jail at Nashville Wednesday afternoon.

Exact time for trial of the five has not been set, although it may take place this afternoon, Magistrate W. B. Adkinson said.

NASHVILLE, TENN.
BANNER

NOV 7 1935

Grand Jury May Take Up Negro Lynching Case

Ashland City, Tenn., Nov. 7—(Special)—The Cheatham County Grand Jury has been called to meet Friday and probably will take up the case of five men charged with murder in connection with the lynching of Baxter Bell, Negro, it was reported today.

Magistrate W. B. Adkisson said today no definite time had been set for the preliminary trial and the case might go directly to the Grand Jury for consideration.

The men were taken to Nashville because of the crowded jail facilities here. Those held are Luther Dotson, Clyde Dotson, Jimmie Dotson, Jesse Dotson, all brothers, and Allie Brown, their cousin.

The Negro was taken from two White Bluff officers and shot to death Monday after he was alleged to have insulted a white woman.

KNOXVILLE, TENN
JOURNAL

NOV 9 1935

Grand Jury Indicts Five for Lynching

ASHLAND CITY, Nov. 8 (AP)—Five white men held in connection with the lynching of Baxter Bell, 45, a Negro, last Monday, were indicted on first degree murder charges today by the Cheatham county grand jury.

Circuit Judge Wirt Courtney announced shortly afterward that trial of the five would start Thursday morning.

Those indicted are Luther Dotson, Clyde Dotson, Jimmy Dotson and Jesse Dotson, all brothers, and Allie Brown, a cousin.

Bell was shot to death near Kingston Springs in Cheatham county close to the Dickson county line after five armed men had seized him from two Dickson county officers at White Bluff.

Five on Trial in Lynching

ASHLAND CITY, Tenn., Nov. 14 (AP).—Five white men were placed on trial in Circuit Court today on murder charges in connection with the lynching ten days ago of a Negro railroad laborer, Baxter Bell. The five are Luther, Jimmy, Clyde and Jessie Dotson, brothers, and Allie Brown, their cousin. A jury of twelve farmers was chosen in an hour.

Bell was killed November 4 by a single shot through the chest. A short time before five white men had seized him from two officers at White Bluff.

SELF-DEFENSE PLEA ENTERED BY LYNCHER

New York Times
Tennesseean Who Shot Negro Says Victim Picked Up Rock
11-15-35

ASHLAND CITY, Tenn., Nov. 15 (AP).—Luther Dotson, one of five white men accused of lynching a Negro, testified today that he shot the Negro in self-defense.

The Negro, Baxter Bell, was killed November 4 after a quintet seized him from officers at White Bluff, where he was under arrest charged with having insulted and slapped Mrs. Luther Dotson.

Dotson said that the five had no intention of killing Bell, but intended merely to whip him. He said he told Bell, "We are going to whip you," and Bell answered, "You ain't going to whip me."

The Negro, testified the defendant, stooped to pick up a rock and Dotson shot him because he feared for his life.

Five on Trial in Lynching.

ASHLAND CITY, Tenn., Nov. 14 (AP).—Five white men were placed on trial in Circuit Court today on murder charges in connection with the lynching ten days ago of a Negro railroad laborer, Baxter Bell. The five are Luther, Jimmy, Clyde and Jesse Dotson, brothers, and Allie Brown, their cousin. A jury of twelve farmers was chosen in an hour.

Bell was killed Nov. 4 by a single shot through the chest. Deputy Sheriffs reported that Bell was accused of having insulted and struck Luther Dotson's wife.

As the trial started, Sheriff J. W. Keith said that sentiment among the crowd gathered at the court house was not favorable to the defendants.

Five Acquitted In Slaying Of Negro

ASHLAND CITY, TENN., Nov. 18.—(AP)—Five white men were acquitted of murder charges in connection with the killing of a negro today and immediately the law manacled them with new accusations.

Hardly had the jury of farmers finished reporting when Circuit Judge Wirt Courtney issued bench warrants alleging conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment. Without a moment's freedom the five filed back to jail. They are four brothers, Luther, Jesse, Jimmy and Clyde Dotson, and a cousin, Allie Brown.

On trial they had admitted killing Baxter Bell, 45-year-old negro, and pleaded self-defense. Two weeks almost to the hour before the verdict was given Bell was seized from Dickson County officers at White Bluff by five men. Half an hour later in the edge of Cheatham County he was found dead of a bullet-punctured lung.

Luther Dotson, with the other four giving corroborative testimony, told the court the intention had been to whip Bell. The negro was accused of having insulted and slapped Mrs. Luther Dotson. However, Dotson testified, the negro grabbed for a rock when informed he would be whipped and Luther Dotson shot him because of "fear" for his own life.

New York World Telegram

NOV 18 1935

5 WHITE MEN FREED BY JURY IN LYNCHING

Judge Orders Suspects Rearrested on Charges of Conspiracy and Is "Astounded" at Verdict.

By the Associated Press.

ASHLAND CITY, Tenn., Nov. 18.—Five white men on trial on charges of murder in the lynching of a Negro accused of having slapped a woman relative of theirs were acquitted today by a jury.

Circuit Judge Wirt Courtney immediately issued warrants charging conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment against the five—Luther, Jesse, Jimmy and Clyde Dotson, brothers, and their cousin, Allie Brown.

"I am astounded at your verdict," Judge Courtney told the jurors. "By your action you will make Cheatham County the dumping ground for lawlessness in the future."

5 MEN ACQUITTED OF KILLING NEGRO

NEW YORK SUN

Tennessee Judge Assails Jury Verdict in Lynching.

NOV 18 1935

ASHLAND CITY, Tenn., Nov. 18 (A. P.).—Five white men on trial on charges of murder in connection with the killing of a Negro were acquitted today by a jury of Cheatham county farmers.

Immediately after the verdict was announced, Circuit Judge Wirt Courtney issued warrants charging conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment against the five—Luther, Jesse, Jimmy and Clyde Dotson, brothers, and their cousin, Allie Brown.

"I am astounded at your verdict," Judge Courtney told the jurors. "By your action you will make Cheatham county the dumping ground for lawlessness in the future."

The defendants were accused of shooting Baxter Bell, forty-five-year-old Negro after he was taken from peace officers at White Bluff, Tenn.

The night before the lynching on November 4 Mrs. Luther Dotson swore out a warrant for the Negro's arrest, charging him with insulting her and slapping her face.

Bronx, N.Y. Home News

NOV 17 1935

Lynch Jury Fails to Reach Verdict

The jury trying five white men for murder in connection with the killing of Baxter Bell, colored, at Ashland City, Tenn., was ordered held over until tomorrow by Circuit Judge Wirt Courtney when it reported at 7 p. m. last night that it was unable to reach a verdict. The defendants, Luther, James, Jesse and Clyde Dotson, and their cousin, Allie Brown, are charged with first degree murder for forcibly taking the colored man from officers on Nov. 4 and shooting him to death for an alleged insult to Luther Dotson's wife.

St. Petersburg, Fla., Times
November 19, 1935

Alleged Lynchers Freed; Held Again

ASHLAND CITY, Tenn., Nov. 18.—(AP)—Five white men accused of lynching a negro were acquitted of murder today but the court at once ordered their arrest on new charges and sent them back to jail.

Hardly had the jury of farmers finished reporting when Circuit Judge Wirt Courtney, sharply criticizing the verdict issued bench warrants alleging conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment.

Without a moment's freedom the five filed back to jail.

They are four brothers, Luther, Jesse, Jimmy and Clyde Dotson, and a cousin, Allie Brown. The state charged they lynched Baxter Bell, 45-year old negro, over an insult to Mrs. Luther Dotson.

On trial they had admitted the killing but pleaded self-defense.

As the jury announced its verdict today, Judge Courtney commented, "I am astounded at your verdict. By your action you will make Cheatham county the dumping ground for lawlessness in the future."

Judge Courtney said the conspiracy charge carries of a penalty of two to 10 years. The five were held without bond to await grand jury action in February. Sheriff J. W. Keith planned to take them to Nashville because of excitement here.

Clarksville, Tenn., Chronicle
November 19, 1935

EDITORIAL

Lynching Encouraged

The acquittal by a Cheatham County jury of five white men charged with the lynching of a Negro man appears to us to have been a miscarriage of justice. The quintet, or at least one of their number, admitted killing the Negro, but claimed self-defense.

We are not upholding the Negro in the offense with which he had been charged. To insult and then slap a white woman is a foolhardy thing to do. But for a group of men to take him out and shoot him is an act that can hardly be described by any other word than murder.

Judge Wirt Courtney was justified in expressing amazement at the verdict. "By your action," the court said, "you will make Cheatham County the dumping ground for lawlessness in the future." Without casting reflections upon the good people of our neighboring county, we cannot challenge the sweeping statement by the court. The lynching was a disgrace to Cheatham County and to the State of Tennessee and the verdict of acquittal showed to the world that all of Cheatham County resented mob rule. No doubt the verdict met with popular disapproval by the majority of Cheatham County residents. It was a triumph of violence over law and order.

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment of Lynchers.

Texas.

4969

WACO, TEX.
TIMES HERALD
NOV 18 1935

LAW BLAMED FOR MOBBING

COLUMBUS, Nov. 18.—(AP)—Directors of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, in a scathing denunciation of certain Texas criminal laws, today laid the blame for the mob lynchings of two negroes here last week, squarely upon the Texas legislature.

Cause of the Lynching

A statement signed by Herman Braden, president, and H. L. B. Skinner, secretary, said responsibility for the lynching of the negro youths, who had confessed to officers they criminally attacked and drowned Miss Geraldine Kollmann, Columbus high school honor graduate, "lies primarily with the thirty-fifth legislature of the state of Texas, which enacted the juvenile law of the state in its present form."

The statement also blamed "all subsequent legislatures who have failed to recognize and remedy the most serious defects of the law."

"It is unquestionably the consensus of informed public opinion in this state that the juvenile age limit of 17 years should have no application to serious and brutal felonies such as premeditated murder and rape," read the statement.

Excuses Lynching

"It is too much to expect of the sober elements in any Texas community to always succeed in preventing the administration of adequate punishment for such crimes without the sanction of law, and we here now call upon the governor and legislature of Texas for the correction of the laws of the state so that such adequate punishment may be administered by due course of law."

The two negro youths, who gave ages of 15 and 16 years, were seized from Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer by a mob of 700, including women, and hanged to a live oak tree."

Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames of Atlanta, Ga., speaking before the Texas Federation of Women's Clubs at Austin last week, urged Gov. James V. Allred to probe the lynchings.

The statement issued said, "The people of Columbus have read, with natural resentment . . . of a speech before a convention of women's clubs at Austin; also of the lady's having called upon the governor of Texas in great indignation demanding some action on his part.

Distress and Sorrow

"The people of this old community have been in a state of distress and sorrow over the outrage and murder of one of its fine young girls, only recently graduated with honor from Columbus high school. Our people have heard of no outbursts of righteous indignation from any uplift society or any society for the prevention of this or that by reason of that brutal outrage, or of the fact that the laws of the state of Texas would not permit the adequate punishment of the brutes who committed the offense, because the law of the state, as written, classified them as infants although in stature and understanding they had as fully attained manhood's estate as nature would ever permit them to attain it.

"The people of this community are not advocates of mob violence. Repeatedly in the past concerted efforts of the best elements of the community have brought about the handling of dangerous situations that aroused public indignation to a point calculated to result in such occurrence, in such manner as to avoid a lynching outbreak."

The statement asserted the double lynching was a culmination of a series of happenings over a period of years which "have aroused public feeling to an extent that makes the explosion of last Tuesday night understandable."

CORSICANA, TEX.
SUN
NOV 18 1935

Legislature Is Blamed Lynching Of Two Negroes

COLUMBUS, Nov. 18.—(AP)—Directors of the Columbus chamber of commerce, in a scathing denunciation of certain Texas criminal laws, today laid the blame for the mob lynchings of two negroes here last week, squarely upon the Texas legislature.

A statement signed by Herman Braden, president, and H. L. B. Skinner, secretary, said responsibility for the lynching of the negro youths, who had confessed to officers they criminally attacked and drowned Miss Geraldine Kollmann, Columbus high school honor graduate, "lies primarily with the thirty-fifth legislature of the state of Texas, which enacted the juvenile law of the state in its present form."

Thes statement also blamed "all subsequent legislature who have failed to recognize and remedy the most series defects of the law."

"It is unquestionably the consensus of informed public opinion in this state that the juvenile age limit of 17 years should have no application to serious and brutal felonies such as premeditated murder and rape," read the statement.

"It is too much to expect of the sober elements in any Texas community to always succed in preventing the administration of adequate punishment for such crimes without thet sanction of law, and we here now call upon the governor and legislature of Texas for the correction of the laws of the state so that such adequate punishment may be administered by due course of law."

The two negro youths, who gave ages of 15 and 16 years, were seized from Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer by a mob of 700, including women, and hanged to a live oak tree.

Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames of Atlanta, Ga., speaking before the Texas Federation of Womens clubs at Austin last week, urged Governor James V. Allred to probe the lynchings.

Refer to Women's Talk.

The statement issued said "the people of Columbus have read, with natural resentment, x x x of a speech before a convention of women's clubs in Austin; also of the lady's having called upon the Governor of Texas in great indignation demanding some action on his part.

"The people of this old community have been in a state of distress and sorrow over the outrage and murder of one of its fine young girls, only recently graduated with honor from Columbus High school. Our people have heard of no outbursts of righteous indignation from any uplift society or any society for the prevention of this or that by reason of that brutal outrage, or of the fact that the laws of the State of Texas would not permit the adequate punishment of the brutes who committed the offense because the law of the state, as written, classified them as infants although in stature and understand ng they had as fully attained manhood's estate as nature would ever permit them to attain it.

PARIS, TEX.
PARIS MORNING NEWS
NOV 18 1935

Lynch Blame Is Placed On Legislature

Columbus, Texas, C. of C. Hits Juvenile Age Limit Law

DEMAND FOR CHANGE SENT TO GOVERNOR

Limit Should Not Apply to Brutal, Serious Crimes, Declared

COLUMBUS, Texas, (AP)—Directors of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, in a scathing denunciation of certain Texas criminal laws, Monday laid the blame for the mob lynchings of two negroes here last week, squarely upon the Texas legislature.

A statement signed by Herman Braden, president, and H. L. B. Skinner, secretary, said responsibility for the lynching of the negro youths, who had conftssed to officers they criminally attacked and drowned Miss Geraldine Kollmann, Columbus high school honor graduate, "lies primarily with the thirty-fifth legisl ure of the state of Texas, which enacted the juvenil elaw of the state in its present form."

The statement also blamed "all subsequent legislatures who have failed to recognize and remedy the most serious defects of the law."

"It is unquestionably the consensus of informed public opinion in this state that the juvenile age limit of 17 years should have no application to serious and brutal felonies such as premediated murder and rape," read the statement.

"It is too much to expect of the sober elements in any Texas community to always succeed in preventing the administration of adequate punishment for such crimes without the sanction of law, and we here now call upon the governor and legislature of Texas for the correction of the laws of the state so that such adequate punishment may be administered by due course of law."

The two negro youths, who gave ages of 15 and 16 years, were seized from Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer by a mob of 700, including women, and hanged to a live oak tree.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment of Lynchers.

Texas.

4970

4970

HARLINGEN, TEX.
VALLEY MORNING STAR

NOV 16 1935

LYNCH PROBE TO BE MADE

Allred Orders Quick Investigation

AUSTIN, Tex.—(AP) — Governor James V. Allred Friday requested the safety department, of which the Texas Rangers are a division to investigate the recent lynching of two negro youths near Columbus.

"Acting upon the request of the sheriff of Colorado county, I have requested L. G. Phares, director of the public safety commission, to make an investigation into the lynchings at Columbus," Governor Allred said.

"Chief Phares has ordered Ranger E. M. Davenport to proceed to Columbus at once and assist in this investigation."

The negroes were taken from the custody of officers returning them from Houston to Columbus for trial in connection with the slaying of a white girl and hanged to trees.

CUERO, TEX.
RECORD

NOV 14 1935

Probe of Lynching Will Be Delayed

COLUMBUS, Tex., Nov. 14.—(INS)—Grand jury action if any, into the lynching of two negro youths will not come before February at the regular meeting of that body, it was indicated today.

The negroes, Benny Mitchell and Ernest Collins, both under 17, were hanged to a live oak tree near here in connection with the brutal slaying of Geraldine Kollmann several weeks ago.

Sheriff Frank Hoegenmeyer, from whom the negroes were taken while being escorted here from Houston, said a court of inquiry into the lynching will be held in a few days

PALESTINE, TEX.
HERALD

NOV 14 1935

JUSTICE OF PEACE PLANS PROBE INTO NEGRO LYNCHINGS

Columbus Justice Says He Will Hold Inquiry Into Lynchings of Two In Day or Two.

Columbus, Texas, Nov. 14. (AP)—Justice of the Peace E. C. Thrower said today he expected to hold a court of inquiry "within two or three days" into the mob lynchings of two negro youths near here Tuesday night.

Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer, who with Deputy Berry Townsend was waylaid on a country road by the mob and relieved of the custody of the negroes, said he will have several witnesses before the court.

He declined to amplify his statement.

The negroes, Benny Mitchell and Ernest Collins, were hanged to a live oak tree by a mob of 700 persons, including women. They were to stand trial in juvenile court for the criminal attack and subsequent drowning of Miss Geraldine Kollmann, valedictorian of the Columbus High school 1934 graduating class.

County Attorney O. P. Moore yesterday said he would prosecute any lynching charge but asserted the hangings were "an expression of the will of the people."

AUSTIN, TEX.
STATESMAN

NOV 14 1935

LYNCH INQUIRY URGED UPON ALLRED

In view of County Atty. O. P. Moore's interpretation of mob violence as the "will of the people," Gov. James V. Allred owes it to the rest of the state to order speedy investigation of conditions surrounding the lynching of two negro youths at Columbus, Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, executive director of the Association of Southern Women for Prevention of Lynching, declared today.

Mrs. Ames prefaced her statement by remarking that she is "a Texas woman and therefore privileged to speak about this." She is in Austin to address the Texas Federation of Women's clubs Thursday.

"We shall soon see whether the county attorney at Columbus has spoken the will of the people of his county. If he's re-elected, he has.

◆ ◆ ◆

Wants Action

"I think the governor ought to order speedy investigation, the county attorney's attitude being what it is. Surely this was a lynching which could have been averted. The negroes had previously been taken to Houston for safekeeping because mob violence was feared. When they were returned to Columbus, officials must have known feeling was running high and that a lynching was imminent. I understand no precautions were taken against such action."

Mrs. Ames pointed out that the Columbus incident is a sharp setback to Texas' efforts to come out of the dark ages of mob violence.

"Such lynchings not only make the South, and Texas, ridiculous to other states but appear lacking in civilization."

Failure to follow the Columbus lynching with decisive action makes it appear that "we're helpless or don't care," she added.

◆ ◆ ◆

Conditions Had Improved

"Conditions had been improved to the point where it was embarrassing to Southern senators to filibuster against the anti-lynching bill in congress. Last spring the filibuster against the Costigan-Wagner bill brought on editorial and public comment verging on condemnation."

Mrs. Ames, whose headquarters are at Atlanta, Ga., claims Georgetown as her residence. She was born in Palestine, Texas.

◆ ◆ ◆

Heavy Program Friday

The club women face their heaviest schedule Friday morning, the important business session preceding adjournment close to noon.

Their program calls for a series of reports on fine arts, including art, literature and music, the award-of-merit session, and a convention nignight, the address by Mrs. Roberta Campbell Lawson of Tulsa, Okla., president of the General Federation, in whom Texas clubwomen hold especially affectionate interest in view of the support they threw to her recent election to the national office. Mrs. Lawson is to speak on the subject "We Belong to the Ages."

Immediately thereafter the convention will plunge into disposal of a lengthy list of resolutions and closing business.

Mrs. T. S. Reed of Beaumont fine arts department chairman, will preside over her program, calling for reports from Mrs. Greenleaf Fisk of Abilene, Mrs. Morgan Jones of Abilene and Mrs. Ira Carson of Ozona.

◆ ◆ ◆

Post-Convention Trip

A post-convention trip to San Antonio, where historic spots will be toured, and on to Monterrey has been arranged for convention visitors wishing to make the additional pilgrimage. Buses for this trip are to leave federation headquarters Friday at 12:30 p. m.

Concluding social feature of the convention will be the pioneer dinner Thursday at 6:30 p. m. at the Austin hotel with Mrs. C. W. Connery of Fort Worth presiding and with presidents of San Antonio's federated clubs as hostesses. Oscar J. Fox of San Antonio, noted Texas composer, and Betty Longaker Wilson, soprano, will give the musical program, and Jeston Dickey and Bessie Lee Dickey Roselle, both of San Antonio, will present a pageant they have written, "Pioneer Women of Texas," for which James R. Burton is local chairman.

The dinner will be followed by a session at 8:30 p. m. also at the hotel with former Gov. Pat Neff, now president of Baylor university, and Lyndon B. Johnson, federal youth administrator, as principal speakers.

The convention turned attention Wednesday afternoon to problems of education, hearing addresses by L. A. Woods, state superintendent of public instruction and Dr. J. E. Franklin, of East Texas State Teachers college. Mr. Woods stressed the importance of music in the new educational program, and Dr. Franklin appealed to club women to be mapping educational needs, necessarily curtailed during the depression, which will see new development under influence of better times. "Surely not all the battles of education have been fought," he reminded his audience.

Mrs. Taylor's address at Wednesday evening's president's dinner was followed by a fine arts program at Hogg Memorial auditorium with Mrs. Q. C. Taylor, chairman of American and Texas music, assisting Mrs. T. S. Reed of Beaumont, chairman of fine arts.

Views expressed in this interview were given federation women later in the morning together with a vivid description of women's parts in mob violence which approached "And Sudden Death" in frank delineation. Obviously affected, clubwomen gave close attention as Mrs. Ames declared, "at Honey Grove and Sherman in 1930 women took little children into the mob with them, saying 'I've never seen a negro lynched and this may be my only chance.'"

◆ ◆ ◆

Speaker Interrupted

She asserted that although she did not know Gov. Allred's stand on a state anti-lynching measure, at a meeting of governors last June he expressed himself "in no uncertain terms" against federal intervention in curbing such violence.

Much of the effect of her final appeal for club women to "make more than a gesture in using influence to find out who those men are in Colorado county and obtain just one conviction, the first ever given a lyncher in Texas," was counteracted by a dramatic interruption from the floor. Rising at conclusion of Mrs. Ames' address, white-haired and elderly Mrs. J. R. White of Coleman cried, "Nothing in the world will save Southern women from those brutes (negroes) except lynching!" Although she had no recognition from the chair, Mrs. White continued her defense of lynching until sternly silenced by Mrs. Volney Taylor, federation president.

Clubwomen had before them Thursday morning seven resolutions pertaining to club and legislative affairs on which they will act Friday.

◆ ◆ ◆

More Pay to Governor

Reported out of the committee by Miss Kate Friend of Waco, the resolution called for increasing the governor's salary $12,000 yearly, establishment of fine arts school at the University of Texas, prison rehabilitation along humane lines, and greater effectiveness of the mothers' aid law in Texas. The mothers' aid law, it was pointed out, is now in only eight counties in the state. Other resolutions pertained to club organization.

The convention also heard Mrs. Roberta Campbell Lawson of Tulsa, president of the General Federation of Women's clubs, and Mrs. James V. Allred. Mrs. Lawson called for increased vocational training, recreation and greater employment of guards "of the highest type." She asked club women to use their influence in seeking an adequate legislative appropriation to make this program possible.

The convention also heard Mrs. Roberta Campbell Lawson of Tulsa, president of the General Federation of Women's clubs, and Mrs. James V. Allred. Mrs. Lawson called for increased vocational training, recreation and greater employment of guards "of the highest type." She asked club women to use their influence in seeking an adequate legislative appropriation to make this program possible.

program.

Mrs. Allred, describing the work of the Texas commission for the blind, made a plea for greater service and less pity for the blind. "Independence is their divine right," she declared in telling of the "Lighthouses for the Blind," centers for vocational training and placement. One of the five such centers in Texas is operated in Austin. "Talking books" for the blind, music scholarships and comprehensive surveys for positions were stressed as real work to be accomplished by clubwomen in behalf of the sightless.

BROWNSVILLE, TEX.
HERALD

NOV 18 1935

LAWS BLAMED FOR LYNCHING

Columbus Resolution In Recent Mob Act Says Solons At Fault

COLUMBUS, Nov. 18. (AP)—Directors of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, in a scathing denunciation of certain Texas criminal laws, Monday laid the blame for the mob lynchings of two negroes here last week, squarely upon the Texas legislature.

A statement signed by Herman Braden, president, and H. L. B. Skinner, secretary, said responsibility for the lynching of the negro youths, who had confessed to officers they criminally attacked and drowned Miss Geraldine Kollman Columbus high school honor graduate, "lies primarily with the thirty-fifth legislature of the state of Texas, which enacted the juvenile law of the state in its present form."

The statement also blamed "all subsequent legislatures who have failed to recognize and remedy the most serious defects of the law."

"It is unquestionably the consensus of informed public opinion in this state that the juvenile age limit of 17 years should have no application to serious and brutal felonies such as premeditated murder and rape," read the statement.

"It is too much to expect of the sober elements in any Texas community to always succeed in preventing the administration of adequate punishment for such crimes without the sanction of law, and we here now call upon the governor and legislature of Texas for the correction of the laws of the state so that such adequate punishment may be administered by due course of law."

The two negro youths, who gave ages of 15 and 16 years, were seized from Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer by a mob of 700, including women, and hanged to a live oak tree."

BEAUMONT, TEX.
ENTERPRISE

NOV 16 1935

LYNCHING PROBE BY STATE SAFETY BUREAU ORDERED

Rangers Sent to Columbus On Demand of Governor To Inquire into Killing of Two Negroes

AUSTIN, Texas, Nov. 15.—Gov James V. Allred today requested the safety department, of which the Texas rangers are a division to investigate the recent lynching of two negro youths near Columbus.

"Acting upon the request of the sheriff of Colorado county, I have requested L. G. Phares, director of the public safety commission, to make an investigation into the lynchings at Columbus," Governor Allred said.

"Chief Phares has ordered Ranger E. M. Daveport to proceed to Columbus at once and assist in the investigation."

The negroes were taken from the custody of officers returning them from Houston to Columbus for trial in connection with the slaying of a white girl and hanged to trees.

A statement of a county official that he believed the lynching to be an "expression of the will of the people" was challenged from many sources.

A speaker before the Texas state federation of women's clubs in Austin urged Governor Allred to take vigorous action against the lynchers.

GREENVILLE, TEX.
EVENING BANNER

NOV 18 1935

Solons Blamed For 2 Lynchings

COLUMBUS, (AP).—Directors of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, in a scathing denunciation of certain Texas criminal laws, today laid the blame for the mob lynchings of two negroes here last week, squarely upon the Texas legislature.

A statement signed by Herman Braden, president, and H. L. B. Skinner, secretary, said responsibility for the lynching of the negro youths, who had confessed to officers they criminally attacked and drowned Miss Geraldine Kollmann, Columbus high school honor graduate, "lies primarily with the 35th legislature of the state of Texas, which enacted the juvenile law of the state in its present form."

The statement also blamed "all subsequent legislatures who have failed to recognize and remedy the most serious defects of the law."

DENTON, TEX.
RECORD CHRONICLE

NOV 19 1935

Columbus C. of C. Blames Lynchings on Faulty Laws

COLUMBUS, Nov. 19.—(AP)—Directors of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, in a scathing denunciation of certain Texas criminal laws Monday laid the blame for the mob lynchings of two negroes here last week, squarely upon the Texas Legislature.

A statement signed by Herman Braden, president, and H. L. B. Skinner, secretary, said responsibility for the lynching of the negro youths, who had confessed to officers they criminally attacked and drowned Miss Geraldine Kollmann, Columbus High School honor graduate, "Lies primarily with the Thirty-Fifth Legislature of the State of Texas, which enacted the juvenile law of the State in its present form."

The statement also blamed "all subsequent Legislatures who have failed to recognize and remedy the most serious defects of the law."

"It is unquestionably the consensus of informed public opinion in this state that the juvenile age limit of 17 years should have no application to serious and brutal felonies such as premeditated murder and rape," read the statement.

BEAUMONT, TEX.
JOURNAL

NOV 16 1935

Ranger Aids In Lynching Probe

AUSTIN, Texas, Nov. 16.—(INS)—Ranger E. M. Davenport was in Columbus today to aid the sheriff there investigate the lynching of two negroes near the town. A court of inquiry into the lynching was planned.

That Davenport had been sent to Columbus was announced late yesterday by Gov. James V. Allred and Chief L. G. Phares of the safety commission.

The ranger was requested by the sheriff of Colorado county, it was stated, and Chief Phares said he had no plans to send other rangers into the county "unless Davenport hollers for help." He hadn't "hollered" yet.

A mob took the negroes away from officers who were returning them to Columbus to stand trial for the murder of a white girl. They had been in jail in Houston for safekeeping.

Wide comment was evoked by the statement of a county official that he considered the lynching "an expression of the will of the people."

AMARILLO, TEX.
DAILY GLOBE

NOV 18 1935

CITY BLAMES LEGISLATURE FOR LYNCHING

COLUMBUS, Texas, Nov. 18 (AP)—Directors of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, in a scathing denunciation of certain Texas criminal laws, tolay laid the blame for the mob lynchings of two Negroes here last week, squarely upon the Texas Legislature.

A statement signed by Herman Braden, president, and H. L. B. Skinner, secretary, said responsibility for the lynching of the Negro youths, who had confessed to officers they criminally attacked and drowned Miss Geraldine Kollman, Columbus High School honor graduate "lies primarily with the Thirty-fifth Legislature of the state of Texas, which enacted the juvenile law of the state in its present form."

Lynchings—1935
& Legal Punishment of Lynchers.

Texas.

4971

Texas to Investigate Lynching

AUSTIN, Texas, Nov. 14. (AP)—Governor James V. Allred requested the state safety department tonight to investigate the recent lynching near Columbus of two Negroes who were accused of criminally assaulting a white girl, then drowning her.

Demands for the investigation came after a Colorado county, Texas official said the lynchings were an "expression of the will of the people."

Probe Of Texas Lynching Starts

AUSTIN, TEXAS, Nov. 15.—(AP)—Gov James V. Allred today requested the safety department, of which the Texas Rangers are a division, to investigate the recent lynching of two negro youths near Columbus.

"Acting upon the request of the sheriff of Colorado County I have requested L. Phares, director of the public safety commission, to make an investigation into the lynchings at Columbus," Governor Allred said.

"Chief Phares has ordered Ranger E. D. Davenport to proceed to Columbus at once and assist in this investigation."

The negroes were taken from the custody of officers returning them from Houston to Columbus for trial in connection with the slaying of a white girl and hanged from trees.

A statement of a county official that he believed the lynching to be an "expression of the will of the people" was challenged from many sources.

A speaker before the Texas State Federation of Women's Clubs in Austin urged Governor Allred to take vigorous action against the lynchers.

OFFICIALS CONDONE LYNCHING IN TEXAS

Expression Of Will Of People, Says County Attorney; Victims Juveniles

COLUMBUS, TEXAS, Nov. 13.—(AP)—Official action lagged tonight against the howling, cursing mob which lynched two young negroes near here last night.

County Atty. P. P. Moore termed the lynching "an expression of the will of the people." Sheriff Frank Hegemeyer asked that a court of inquiry be withheld pending investigation.

The town was quiet, but from many parts of the state—including the capital—sounded bitter denunciation of the mob's action.

Snatched from officers at a river crossing, Ernest Collins, 15, and Benny Mitchell, 16, were hanged to a live oak tree near the farm home of Miss Geraldine Kollmann, valedictorian of Columbus High School, whom they confessed they criminally attacked and drowned.

The county attorney said he would "vigorously prosecute" any of the 700 persons, including women, who participated, but added:

"I do not call the citizens who executed the negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

The mob dispersed quickly.

Also absent today was the Rev. C. D. Marmion, 33-year-old Episcopal rector, who climbed atop an automobile and attempted to halt the mob at the scene of the hanging. He abandoned his plea when someone shouted "get another rope" and jeers drowned out his words.

Gov. James V. Allred was among first to take his stand against mob law. He said "lynching is deplorable at any time."

Another side was given by County Judge H. P. Hahn, who said:

"I am strongly opposed to mob violence and favor orderly process of the law. The fact that the negroes who so brutally murdered Miss Kollmann could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages, prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murders last night."

The maximum sentence the negroes could have received was reformatory confinement until 21.

RIPLEY, W. VA., Nov. 13.—(AP)—State police abandoned a murder theory tonight and described as suicide the death of J. Fulton Gunnoe, 55-year-old CCC camp foreman found hanging from a tree his clothing in flames.

Lieut. James H. Fillinger of the State police investigation division, said Panumbra Casto, filling station attendant, reported Gunnoe purchased gasoline in a container found beneath his body.

Fillinger said he could not understand how Gunnoe could have set himself afire and hanged himself, but added he was satisfied it was suicide.

He pinned his hopes for a motive on a registered letter mailed by Gunnoe to his wife yesterday—a few hours before he disappeared into the woods. Mrs. Naomi Gunnoe, who lives at Sundall, 100 miles away, said that the letter gave no indication that her husband planned to end his life. She added:

"He wrote me about a visit we paid to the camp recently and told me he was coming home next weekend."

Earlier the officer worked on the murder theory despite the opinion of Coroner C. R. Kessel that Gunnoe, a former deputy sheriff in Raleigh County, and once a wealthy man, killed himself.

Kessel said an inquest will be unnecessary.

NEW YORK SUN

NOV 13 1935

SHERIFF COULD NOT RECOGNIZE BOYS' LYNCHERS

Will Make No Arrests, but February Grand Jury May Investigate.

ADMITTED KILLING A GIRL

Mob Acted Because Juvenile Law Was Only Punishment for 16-Year-Old Negroes.

COLUMBUS, Tex., Nov. 13 (U. P.).—Sheriff Frank Hoegmeyer announced today that he would make no arrests in connection with the lynching of two Negro boys.

"The men were masked," he said. "Their automobiles had licenses from other counties. I didn't recognize any of them. The Grand Jury will meet in February and may investigate the lynching then."

The boys, both 16 years old, were seized by a masked mob last night, accused of slaying a white girl. They had been sent to Houston several weeks ago to frustrate a mob, and were being returned for arraignment in Juvenile Court, guarded by only two deputies.

Mayor O. A. Sumwalt issued the following statement:

"Feeling has been high here ever since the Negroes confessed they killed Miss Kollman.

"Under the law the Negroes could only be tried in Juvenile Court and the only punishment possible was confinement until they became of age. The citizens didn't think that was punishment enough, and some of them apparently decided to take matters into their own hands."

Another May Follow.

The boys, Benny Mitchell and Ernest Collins, were hanged from the limb of an oak tree. The mob was reported to have extracted a confession involving another Negro youth in the slaying and there were reports that he would be lynched if found.

Miss Geraldine Kollman, 19, a farm girl, was assaulted and killed while patrolling the family pecan orchard on horseback. Mitchell and Collins were arrested and were said to have confessed. They were being returned here for arraignment today.

As Hoegmeyer and his deputy, Berry Townsend, drove onto the Colorado River bridge near Altair several automobiles blocked their path. Men leaped on the car and seized the Negroes, snatching the ignition key to block pursuit.

The lynching party sped to Columbus and beyond to the tree, apparently selected in advance, a mile from the home of Miss Kollmon.

Hoegmeyer found them and cut them down an hour later. Coroner E. C. Thrower held an inquest and issued a verdict that the Negroes died at the hands of persons unknown.

Reports varied concerning the size of the mob. The Sheriff said ten or fifteen men were in the party that stopped his car. Other reports said 700 men were in the mob.

Hanged and Burned.

RIPLEY, W. Va., Nov. 13 (A. P.)—A placid evening's walk terminated in a flaming death from a tree limb last night for J. Fulton Gunnoe, fifty-five-year-old war veteran and CCC camp foreman.

A frightened farmer, James Elliott, saw flames lighting his window. In his night clothing he ran out to a low ridge about 150 yards from the main Charleston-Parkersburg highway and found Guncoe's blazing body hanging from a tree.

He hurried four miles to Ripley to tell the State police a Negro had been hanged. Troopers discovered later, however, a tag identifying Gunnoe as a white man and foreman of the Jackson CCC camp, some miles from Ripley.

Roy Bradley, superintendent of the camp, confirmed the identity shortly afterward.

State police said a heavy wire was wrapped six times around the dead man's neck. His body had been burned from head to foot after gasoline was poured over it.

Gunnoe's hat, flashlight and empty pocketbook were found a few yards from the tree. It was not known whether he had any money with him.

"The flames were up around the neck when I got there," said Elliott in describing the scene. "The body was so badly burned it couldn't be recognized. Either oil or gasoline had been poured over the clothing and set afire.

Bradley said Gunnoe left the CCC camp about 6 o'clock last evening, but did not say where he was going.

Gunnoe came to the camp September 9 from his home at Edwight, a mining village in Raleigh county. He had been a Raleigh county deputy sheriff until about four months ago, when he resigned to work for a friend in the lumber contracting business and then took the camp foremanship. He is survived by his widow.

NEW YORK TIMES

NOV 14 1935

TEXAS PROSECUTOR CONDONES LYNCHING

Calls Hanging of Two Negroes at Columbus 'Expression of People's Will.'

JUDGE SEES JUSTICE DONE

No Action Taken by the County Authorities—Victims, 15 and 16, Taken From Sheriff.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COLUMBUS, Texas, Nov. 13.—The lynching of two Negroes here last night after they had been taken from the custody of the Sheriff by a mob was condoned today by the County Attorney, O. P. Moore and by County Judge H. P. Hahn.

"I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob," said Mr. Moore. "I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

County Judge Hahn said:

"I am strongly opposed to mob violence and favor orderly process of the law. The fact that the Negroes who so brutally murdered Miss Kollmann could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers last night."

No investigation of the lynchings had been started today although Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer announced that a special court inquiry might be called within the next few days and E. C. Thrower, Justice of the Peace, said he would conduct a court of inquiry some time during the day.

The victims of the mob were Benny Mitchell, aged 16, and Ernest Collins, 15, confessed slayers and attackers of Geraldine Kollmann, 19, a high school graduate and valedictorian of her class.

The Negroes, because of their ages, would have been sent to a reformatory until they were 21 years of age if they had been convicted in court. They had been confined for safekeeping in the Harris County jail since their arrest. Tuesday evening Sheriff Hoegemeyer and Deputy B. L. Townsend left Houston with them for Columbus where they were to stand trial in juvenile court today.

The Negroes, chained neck to neck, sat in the back of the sheriff's automobile and the two officers sat in the front seat.

Apparently well informed of the sheriff's route the mob waylaid him between Altair and Columbus.

"I stopped and a group of ten or fifteen men approached," said the sheriff today. "They had handkerchiefs over their faces and I saw two or three shotguns and some rifles and pistols.

"Men climbed on both running boards of my car and opened the doors. They took .45 pistols off of me and Townsend. They took the keys out of my car. While they were doing that some other men jerked the Negroes out of the back seat and hustled them over to another car.

"Of course I couldn't recognize any members of the mob because they all had on masks. I didn't hear any voices that I might recognize again. All the license plates on the cars were covered up with cloth or pieces of paper tied around them."

The two Negroes, still chained together, were hanged on a tree on the outskirts of Columbus, near Miss Kollmann's home. A plea from a young minister, the Rev. C. G. Marmion, an Episcopal pastor at Columbus and Eagle Lake, to "let the law take its course," was greeted with boos, jeers and cries of "suppose it had been some of your women folks?"

With the rope around his neck, Mitchell was reported to have repeated a confession he was alleged to have made and to have implicated a third Negro, one who had been arrested by Sheriff Hoegemeyer but later released.

When the Sheriff finally reached Columbus he was informed where the bodies of the Negroes would be found. On his arrival at the spot he found a crowd of several hundred persons gathered 'round the tree.

National Guard for Negro's Trial.

By The Associated Press.

ATLANTA, Nov. 13.—Two National Guard companies were ordered to Moultrie tonight to attend the trial of John Henry Sloan, a Negro, for slaying a white man in a case which already has cost the life of another Negro.

In an appeal to Governor Talmadge, Judge W. E. Thomas of the Southern Circuit Superior Court said the threat of mob violence was "serious and alarming."

One Negro was killed by a posse of citizens which was searching for Sloan, who was captured recently at Havana, Fla.

Under command of Adjt. Gen. Camp the guardsmen will assemble at a jail "somewhere in Georgia," where Sloan is being held.

New York American

NOV 14 1935

CONDONE LYNCHING OF 2 BOYS

WILL OF PEOPLE,' SAYS COUNTY ATTORNEY

OFFICIAL ACTION LAGS

COLUMBUS, Tex., Nov. 13 (AP).—Official action lagged tonight against the howling, cursing mob which lynched two young Negroes near here last night.

County Attorney O. P. Moore termed the lynching "an expression of the will of the people." Sheriff Frank Hegemeyer asked that a court of inquiry be withheld pending investigation.

The town was quiet, but from many parts of the State including the Capital—sounded bitter denunciation of the mob's action.

HANGED TO OAK TREE

Snatched from officers at a river crossing, Ernest Collins, 15, and Benny Mitchell, 16, were hanged to a live oak tree near the farm home of Miss Geraldine Kollmann, valedictorian of Columbus High School, whom they confessed they criminally attacked and drowned.

The county attorney said he would "vigorously prosecute" any of the 700 persons, including women, who participated, but added:

"I do not call the citizens who executed the negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

Also absent today was the Rev. C. D. Marmion, 33-year-old Episcopal rector, who climbed atop an automobile and attempted to halt the mob at the scene of the hanging. He abandoned his plea when someone shouted "get another rope" and jeers drowned out his words.

'NO ADEQUATE PUNISHMENT'

Gov. James V. Allred was among the first to take his stand against mob law. He said "lynching is deplorable at any time."

Another side was given by County Judge H. P. Hahn.

"I am strongly opposed to mob violence and favor orderly process of the law. The fact that the Negroes who so brutally murdered Miss Kollmann could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages, prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers last night."

The maximum sentence the Negroes could have received was reformatory confinement until 21.

New York Herald-Tribune

NOV 14 1935

Texas Is Slow To Start Inquiry Into Lynching

Slaying of Two Negro Boys by Mob Expressed 'Will of People,' Official Says

Judge Defends Its Action

Grand Jury May Take Up Incident in February

By The Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Tex., Nov. 13.—Official action against members of the mob that lynched two young Negroes near here last night lagged today as two of the county authorities withheld condemnation of the mob and another voiced doubt that there would be an immediate investigation.

County Attorney O. P. Moore said the lynching was "an expression of the will of the people." County Judge A. P. Hahn said that he could not condemn the members of the mob because the youth of the Negroes would have prevented them from being "adequately punished."

Sheriff Frank Hegemeyer, from whom the prisoners were taken, said that he had not recognized any of the lynchers and had no clews. "I guess the grand jury will make an investigation," he said. "It meets in February."

The victims of the mob, Ernest Collins, fifteen years old, and Benny Mitchell, sixteen, were said to have confessed that they had assaulted and drowned Miss Geraldine Kollmar after she had accused them of stealing pecans from her father's farm. The girl's body was found in a creek.

The Negro youths were seized by a mob of 700 last night at River Crossing while the Sheriff was bringing them from Houston for trial here in the juvenile court. They faced a maximum punishment of confinement in a reformatory until they were twenty-one years old.

The County Attorney said he would "vigorously prosecute" any of the persons, including women, who participated, but added: "I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

Absent today was the Rev. C. D. Marmion, thirty-three-year-old Episcopal rector, who climbed atop an automobile and attempted to halt the mob at the scene of the hanging. He abandoned his plea when some one shouted "get another rope" and jeers drowned out his words.

Governor James V. Allred was among the first to take his stand against mob law.

Judge Hahn said:

"I am strongly opposed to mob violence and favor orderly process of the law. The fact that the Negroes who so brutally murdered Miss Kollmann could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers last night."

Lynchings—1935.
Legislation Relating to.

5057

THAT MOST USEFUL SENATOR, Edward P. Costigan, of Colorado, has again introduced an anti-lynching bill in the Senate in conjunction with Senator Wagner of New York, who cooperated with him on a similar bill which was favorably reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee at the last session of Congress. Though there has been a decrease in the number of lynchings, the necessity for this measure is greater than ever because of the failure of the Department of Justice to move in the case of Claude Neal, who was lynched on October 26 last at Marianna, Florida. The circumstances of this crime were revolting beyond words. The lynching was planned and advertised in advance and was accompanied by every form of torture and mutilation that a brutal and sadistic mob could invent, including the searing of the man from head to toe with red-hot irons. When he was finally killed—after hours of torture—his remains were hung up and viewed by a crowd variously estimated at between 3,000 and 7,000 people. Now it happened that this Negro was seized in Georgia and carried into Florida, but the Attorney General of the United States has not acted—for reasons which doubtless seem sufficient to him. It is clear that we need a law which will compel the government of the United States to move in every lynching case; if it did so with the enthusiasm with which it is going after gangsters and bank robbers, it would speedily reduce lynchings to a minimum. Such fiendish atrocities as those at Marianna do the good name of the country vastly more harm than a Dillinger or a Floyd.

A. MITCHELL INTRODUCES ANTI-LYNCH MEASURE

Proof that Person is Injured by Mob is Prima Facie Evidence

An anti-lynching bill "with teeth" was introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman Arthur W. Mitchell (Democrat) of Illinois, Tuesday.

This was the first measure introduced by the new member and is said to have met favor by many leaders of the House and Senate.

One of the outstanding features of the bill is that when "proof that any person being in the custody of any such officer, agent or employee was unlawfully injured or put to death or unlawfully taken from such custody and injured or put to death shall be prima facie evidence that such officer, agent or employee suffered or permitted such person to be taken from his custody or injured or put to death therein."

The bill has been referred to the Committee on Judiciary. The complete text follows:

To assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching.

(a) Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That if any officer, agent or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof shall have any person in his custody by virtue of his power of authority as such officer, agent or employee and shall, without lawful justification or excuse, suffer or permit such person to be taken from his custody and injured or put to death or to be unlawfully injured or put to death while in his custody, the said State shall be deemed to have denied to the said person the equal protection of its laws.

(b) Proof that any person being in the custody of any such officer, agent or employee was unlawfully injured or put to death or unlawfully taken from such custody and injured or put to death shall be prima facie evidence that such officer, agent or employee suffered or permitted such person to be so taken from his custody or injured or put to death therein.

Section 2. (a) Any officer, agent or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof who shall have any person in his custody by virtue of his power or authority as such officer, agent or employee, and who shall, without lawful jurisdiction or excuse, suffer or permit such person to be taken from his custody and injured or put to death or to be unlawfully injured or put to death while in his custody, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

(b) Proof that any person being in the custody of any such officer, agent or employee, was unlawfully injured or put to death or unlawfully taken from such custody and injured or put to death shall be prima facie evidence that such officer, agent or employee suffered or permitted such person to be so taken from his custody or injured or put to death therein.

Section 3. Any officer, agent or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof, acting as such officer, agent or employee under authority of law, having in his custody or control a prisoner, who shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person to injure or put such prisoner to death, or who shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person to suffer or permit any person to take such prisoner from his custody or control, to be injured or put to death, shall be guilty of a felony, and those who so conspire, combine or confederate with any officer, agent or employee shall likewise be guilty of a felony. On conviction the parties participating therein shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than two years and not more than ten years.

Section 4. If any person shall be taken from the custody of any officer, agent or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof and unlawfully injured or put to death, or shall be unlawfully injured or put to death while in the custody of any such officer, agent or employee, the said State and the said governmental subdivision of the said State shall be deemed to have denied to such person the equal protection of its laws, and the said governmental subdivision of said State shall be liable to the injured person or, in the event of death, to the legal representative of the deceased for a sum of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000, which sum may be recovered in a civil action against such county or other governmental subdivision of a State in the United States District Court of the Judicial District wherein such person is injured or put to death. Provided, that when any such person shall have been taken from the custody of any such officer, agent or employee of any State who is not an officer, agent or employee of any governmental subdivision thereof, the county or other governmental subdivision of said State wherein the said person shall have been so injured or put to death shall be liable to the injured person, or in event of death, to the legal representatives of the deceased as aforesaid. When any person shall have been injured as aforesaid, the cause of action for such injury shall not abate with the death of the person.

Section 5. If any provision, sentence, or clause of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of this Act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

for lynching and mob violence. It has also gone on record once before as favoring the Costigan-Wagner Anti-lynching Bill which died in the last Congress."

"I am positive that the Senators and Congressmen from New Jersey will stand four-square behind the mandate of the elected representatives of the people, and that we may count on their votes at the crucial moment. In the rush for the passage of social legislation, I cannot see how Congress can logically attempt another sidetracking of a measure for the protection of human life and liberty, as well as of public property. Immediate legislative pressure from a large number of states should be exerted to whip the few lagging reactionaries into line."

Burrell Introduces Anti-Lynch Resolution In N. J. Assembly

NEWARK, N. J.—A resolution requesting Congress to pass an "Anti-Lynching Law" was introduced in the New Jersey Legislature last Monday by Assemblyman J. Mercer Burrell, New Jersey's only colored representative.

The Burrell resolution denounces the disregard of lynching as one of the great contributing factors to the growing National wave of violent crimes. The resolution also stated that lynching and crimes of mob violence can only be effectively checked by Federal enactment backed up by the vigorous impartial type of enforcement that is now being used to wipe out gangsters.

Assemblyman Burrell's anti-lynching resolution was referred to the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Assembly, of which the colored member is chairman. The resolution will be favorably reported out of committee at the next session, and will be given second reading.

In comment on the resolution, the young Legislator said, "I have no doubt that New Jersey desires to be again put on record as speedily as possible, against lynching and mob violence. More than 14 years ago this State adopted drastic penalties

Assemblyman A. F. Hawkins Scores

Assemblyman Augustus F. Hawkins of the 62nd district of Los Angeles induced the California Assembly to pass joint Resolution 21 which memorializes Congress to pass an anti-lynching bill.

Mr. Hawkins, speaking in defense of his resolution, said as follows:

"Lynching is a national disgrace, the evil of which has been pointed out by both ex-President Hoover and the now President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"Statistics will disprove the contentions of those who uphold this most un-American practice. Lynchings have occurred in over 40 different states and have involved no one race, color or creed. In 52 years almost 5000 instances of mob violence are on record.

"This resolution is designed to place the state of California behind support of adequate anti-lynching legislation and to encourage Congress of the United States of America to take necessary steps to stamp out this travesty upon human rights. It has been definitely proved that this evil can be suppressed.

"I feel that this resolution is demanded by our best ideals and principles, as well as by our concept of social pustice. The principle of this resolution is its own defense and I ask your support of it entirely upon that basis."

When Hawkins had finished his speech, the resolution was adopted by both houses without a dissenting vote. One member of the Legislature then moved that Hawkins' speech be printed in the Journal of the Legislature. This motion was also adopted.

The Hawkins resolution provided that a copy be sent to the President of the United States of America, a copy to the vice-presiednt and copies to each member of the 74th Congress in Washington.

Mr. Hawkins is the only Race member in the California legislature and has the distincion of being the youngest member of that body.

Mitchell's Anti-Lynch Bill Places Burden on States

Phrase "Mob or Riotous Assemblage" Is Missing from Measure.

PENALTY OF $5,000 OR 5 YEARS PROVIDED

County Where Lynching Occurs Is Liable.

WASHINGTON.—Differing materially from the provisions of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, the measure introduced in the House by Representative Arthur W. Mitchell, Democrat, of Illinois, is directed solely against non-action by State officials in discharging the duty of affording to persons in their ustody the equal protection of the laws.

The phrase "mob or riotous assemblage," used frequently in the Costigan-Wagner bill, is nowhere to be found in the Mitchell bill.

Blame on Officials

By the terms of the Mitchell bill a state is deemed to have denied to a person the equal protection of its laws if any officer of the state, county, or other local governmental subdivision, without lawful justification or excuse, shall suffer or permit a prisoner to be taken from his custody and injured or permit a prisoner to be unlawfully injured or put to death while in his custody.

Any officer, having any person in his custody by virtue of his power or authority, who shall, without lawful justification or excuse, suffer or permit such person to be taken from his custody and injured or put to death, or to be unlawfully injured or put to death while in his custody, shall be guilty of a felony, punishable by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both.

Proof that any person being in the custody of an officer was unlawfully injured or put to death or unlawfully taken from such custody and injured or put to death is made prima facie evidence that the officer suffered or permitted the prisoner to be taken from his custody or injured or put to death.

Subject to Imprisonment

Officers conspiring or confederating with other persons to injure or put a prisoner to death or to suffer or permit any person to take a prisoner from their custody to be injured or put to death, and those who consipre with the officers are guilty of a felony under the terms of the bill, and subject to imprisonment for not less than two years and not more than ten years.

The county or other governmental sub-division of the state where a prisoner is taken from the custody of an officer and injured or put to death, or injured or put to death while in the custody of an officer, is made liable to the injured person or his legal representatives for a sum of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000.

Penalty in Civil Action

The penalty is to be recovered in a civil action against the county or other governmental subdivisions of a state in the United States district court of the judicial district where the person is injured or put to death.

Only the county or other governmental sub-division of the state where the person is injured or put to death shall be liable in damages. The provisions of the Costigan-Wagner bill make the county in which a prisoner is seized and the county in which he is injured or put to death jointly liable for liquidated damages in the event the person injured or put to death is transported by a mob from one county to another county during the time intervening between his seizure and injury or putting to death.

MUNCIE, IND.
EVE. PRESS
JAN 28 1935

A FEDERAL LAW TO STOP LYNCHINGS

There is just one more law that should be added to the multiplicity of laws which now confuse us all, even the lawyers, and that is a federal statute making financially responsible—and heavily so—any community in which lynching takes place.

Supposing any town or county that was inclined to permit a lynching knew this would cost the taxpayers say, $50,000, and there was no way of getting out from under the penalty, how many lynchings do you suppose would take place in the United States in a given year?

Such a law would stiffen the backbone of sheriffs and police officers and cause a great rallying to their side of citizens who would have to pay the big bill if an unlawful killing were to take place.

WHITE PLAINS
REPORTER
JAN 28 1935

Anti-Lynching Bill Supported by V. F. W.

Among the subjects taken under consideration by the members of Foreign Wars, at their recent Amex Post No. 542, Veterans of meeting in the Post Rooms at 1 North Lexington Avenue was the Wagner-Costigan Anti-Lynching Bill. The Patriotic Instructor of the Post asked Albert Kleine to introduce a resolution to the effect that the Post send letters to Senators Copeland, and to several members Aobert E. Wagner and Royal S. of the Congress whose patronage is among post members, requesting their whole hearted support of this Anti-Lynching Law. The resolution was approved.

No Fine in Missouri Anti-Lynch Measure

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — A state anti-lynching bill, introduced in the Missouri house of representatives by Messrs. Bourk, Asotsky, Haskell and Lafferty, on January 17, provides life imprisonment as the penalty for lynching.

Any person who takes part in or with a mob shall be guilty of lynching if the victim dies, or attempted lynching. The penalty for attempted lynching shall be not less than two years nor more than twenty-one years.

Brooklyn, N. Y. Eagle
FEB 16 1935

Congress and Lynching.

One of the most important pieces of social legislation before Congres is the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill. Although a similar measure died in the closing days of the last Congress after being reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee, public indignation over the evils of mob murder has become so much more widespread during the past year that it is felt there is a good chance for passage of such a law in the present session.

The need for such legislation has been conclusively established. The familiar arguments were repeated at the recent hearing before the Senate Judiciary subcommittee. H. L. Mencken declared that no civilized government could "condone such atrocities." Senator Costigan described lynching as "open anarchy." Senator Wagner said that lynchings constituted "almost every type of infamy that blots the record of civilization." We agree with all these views.

Local politics and psychology make it extremely difficult for this problem to be handled adequately by State authorities, and this fact constitutes one of the strongest reasons for putting the situation in the hands of the National Government. The Wagner-Costigan measure prescribes severe penalties for lynchers, peace officers who conspire with mobs or fail to protect prisoners and counties where such lawlessness occurs. Those accused of violation of this law would be tried in the Federal courts.

It will be recalled that at the recent National Crime Conference President Roosevelt listed lynching along with banditry, kidnaping and wholesale drug peddling as the type of crime against which the force of outraged public opinion must be built up. A potent factor in blocking the anti-lynching bill last year was Attorney General Cummings. His opposition was based on the theory that lynching is a purely local problem. We hope that he has undergone a change of heart during the past few months. In view of the failure of States to prevent the continuance of lynching it seems to us a definite responsibility of the Federal Government to try to end such acts of barbarism.

Lynchings-1935
Legislation Relating to.

5058

Southerners Are Twice Defeated by Just One Vote

Filibusterers Talk to the Empty Benches; 5 Roll Calls Needed Monday.

5-4-35

COSTIGAN IS URGED TO RESIST PRESSURE

New Figure Shows 188 Innocent Persons Lynched.

(Whole Page of Reports on Anti-Lynching Bill Filibuster on Page 7)

WASHINGTON — (Special)— The Senate filibuster entered its seventh day Wednesday.

Each day since last Thursday, Southern Democrats, aided by two and sometimes three Republicans, sought vainly to pass a motion to adjourn the Senate and thereby kill the motion of Senator Costigan (Dem., Col.) to bring the bill up for consideration.

On two days the motion to adjourn was lost by one vote.

From many cities came telegrams to Senator Costigan not to yield to Southern pressure.

Bill Not Before Senate

Southern Senators declined Senator Costigan's appeal to permit the Senate to take the bill up on its merits so that it might be amended and perfected.

While the President's Social Security and other "must" legislations and the bonus bill waited on the calendar, filibustering Southerners continued their tactics of holding the floor and preventing a vote.

Hits Dixie Colored People

Senator Bankhead (Dem., Ala.) occupied the floor a part of Tuesday. He said Southern colored people have no interest in the anti-lynching bill.

All Republican Senators save one walked out while he talked. Six roll calls followed. Senators came in to answer to their names, then walked out on the filibusterers.

McCarren Rebukes South

Senator McCarren (Dem., Nev.) entered into debate by Senator Smith (Dem., S.C.), said Southern Senators are making too much of the anti-lynching bill and they ought to pass it.

"I am not going to fight the Civil War over again," he said.

Debate had been good-natured, but both Senators Bankhead and Smith seemed bitter and scored the empty benches, Tuesday.

Senators favoring the bill could not get the floor to make a motion to consider the bill.

Black Talks 3 Hours

Senator Byrnes (S. C.) talked [illegible] hours and a half Monday, [illegible] three hours.

The Southern minority conceding that the Senate has the votes to pass the bill swore that it must never come to a vote.

President Fails to Shake Senate

President Roosevelt had some of the Senators over to the White House for an NRA conference Tuesday and expressed dissatisfaction with the legislative progress of the Senate.

He said the upper house was a slow-moving body and the country was beginning to talk about it.

This prodding of the President, however, failed to shake the Senate loose from its anti-lynching filibuster which went on all day Tuesday.

The President put in a good word for the House of Representatives and see it was well up in its work.

Compromise Rejected

Senators Costigan and Wagner were willing Friday to have the bonus bill considered if they can just have a vote on bringing up the measure for debate. The filibustering rank and file refused this compromise even though their leaders were for it. They proposed they said, to talk 10 days.

5-4-35

Filibuster Started Wednesday

Senator Costigan filed his motion to bring up Senate Bill 24 (the anti-lynching bill) near the close of session Wednesday of last week.

The filibuster, which is accomplished by one objector after another holding the floor and yielding only to those he knows are opposed to the bill, is designed to prevent the Senate from voting to take the bill up.

Lindbergh Bill Mentioned

Senator Tom Connally (Texas) used several hours Thursday discussing the constitution and states rights.

Senator Costigan asked him if he were opposed to the Lindbergh kidnaping bill. Senator Connally said he didn't remember how he voted then.

During the afternoon there were four roll calls to obtain a quorum.

Five Roll Calls

There were five roll calls Monday, while Southern Senators, Black, Ala.; Bankhead, Ala.; Borah, Idaho; McKill, Kans.; Trammell, Fla.; Gore, Okla.; Bailey, N.C.; Connally, Texas, Norris, Repub., Neb., Fletcher, Fla. and Byrnes, S.C., filibustered against the anti-lynching bill.

When the filibuster started Senators walked out of the chamber and Senator Bankhead suggested the absence of a quorum.

Senator Black objected to a roll call because they were present a few moments before and the walk was deliberate.

LYNCHBURG, VA.
NEWS
MAY 1 1935

FILIBUSTER

All but the most confirmed pacifists—and they sometimes may backslide—believe that occasions arise in the life time of men and of states when it is necessary to fight. "War never settles anything" is a saying that comes pat to the lips, but nearly everybody knows better. It may solve no abstruse problem and usually creates other problems, but it has saved a people from death and starvation. It has at times kept a peoples' country safe for its own peoples. So, as much as sane persons hate war they are forced to admit that so long there is injustice in the world fighting can not be wholly dispensed with.

Nothing, it has been said, or ought to have been said, justifies revolution but success. A rebel is a traitor if he loses; a patriot only if he wins. Sane persons are opposed to violent revolutions, but there have been revolutions that have accomplished, so far as human foresight and human hindsight can judge, great good and the failure of which would have been disastrous for great masses of people and, perhaps, for the whole world. So, while revolution, in the sense the word once was used before everything from a legislative hand out to a radical change in all political, social and economic thinking came to be called that, is hated in the abstract, the right of revolution is preserved by all free peoples who determine to remain free

Mob violence is hated of all law-abiding and all humane people. To say that it is ever justifiable is to make a bold statement, and whoever does so must be prepared with overwhelming proof or be subject to the charge of recklessness of talk and recklessness of consequences. Yet the Boston tea party was a lynching party, with property rather than persons as the object of attack by the mob—and any person who had interfered would have had scant regard for his life.

In a democracy, parliamentary processes are established. The principle of democracy is the rule of the majority, and of representative democracy the finality of the considered vote of the parliamentary body. A democracy such as ours can not function nor long endure otherwise. It has been the fault of the newer democracies of the world that the machinery for ascertaining and establishing the will of the people, or of the representatives of the people has been kicked into the scrap heap when a sufficient number of the people with sufficient force to make their objects stand were dissatisfied with the result. The inability of parliamentary bodies to function has led to the destruction of the parliamentary system and to dictatorships. Yet ginning, that there are certain things a parliament can not be allowed to do and certain limitations to the power of the majority, however large. Hence constitutional provisions and restrictions.

Constitutions are not always invulnerable. They can be and have been cracked and even swept away on a tide of popular sentiment. Even in this country the document once so reverenced and which was prepared for the purpose of defending inherent and inalienable rights of the minority and of the individual has been badly battered at times. It will hardly be denied that a parliamentary act which does that, or which by roundabout method evades the purpose of the constitution, threatens the whole system of government. When such occasions arise it is time to fight—to fight with every legitimate weapon at hand. It is idle to speak of preserving the parliamentary amenities, the parliamentary procedure, parliamentary rights, when the object of the fight is to preserve the system that created the parliament, or to preserve the very principles of the constitution that brought it into being, or to preserve inherent rights of individuals or of communities.

One of the times to fight has come and the weapons to be employed against the viciously political anti-lynching bill now pending in congress is the filibuster. Like war, like revolutions, it is not a thing to be undertaken lightly. It is not a thing the thoughtful like. But this bill is something that should be and must be defeated. If it can not be defeated by garnering enough votes in the senate and in the house by argument, then it must be defeated by tactics that will prevent it from coming to a vote. The growth of the Negro vote in Harlem, eyed watchfully by Tammany, and in the middle west, eyed watchfully by machine bosses and timid politicians in that section, can not be allowed to bring about the passage of a bill which violates the whole principle of federal government. Oh, everybody knows that the states rights theory was shot to pieces on battlefields and its remnants have been the football of politicians for the generations since, and that like liberty, many crimes have been committed in the name of the thing held sacred in the early days of the republic, yet there is such a thing as the principle left. Furthermore there is such a thing as rights of communities. And there is such a thing as union of spirit and of thought among the sections and such a thing as goodwill among the races. All are imperilled by this bill. Its passage would complete the rout of the defenders of ancient rights, it would split the sections apart anew, it would interrupt the work of racial harmony. And it would not prevent a single, solitary lynching in this whole broad land of ours. Fanaticism, lick-spittle politics, Tammany ambition, sectional hatred have become so strong that in a congress nominally democratic, and, therefore, supposedly opposed to everything the bill represents, passage of this bill is probable if it ever comes to a vote. That President Roosevelt will sign it there can be little doubt.

The remedy? Prevent it from coming to a vote. The weapon? The filibuster.

BOSTON, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

MAY 2 1935

Lynching Fight Widens Split of Democrats

Accentuates Southern Hostility to Many Features of New Deal Program

By Oliver McKee, Jr.

Special to the Transcript:

Washington, May 2—The opposition of Southern Democrats to the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill, on opposition that has driven a wedge through the ranks of Senate Democrats, is a development of real political significance. For it emphasizes and accentuates the cleavage in the Democratic party between the Old Guard of the South, and the newer element that hold the commanding place of power in the councils of the Roosevelt party.

Senators from the Solid South, as ever, stood virtually as a unit against the lynching bill, and they are particularly resentful over the fact that a New York city Democrat, Robert Wagner, is the man who has been the principal leader in a fight which they regard as against States' rights—traditionally in pre-New Deal days, a fundamental of Democratic political philosophy. Further, Southern Democrats have never had an excess of love for Tammany Hall.

Close students of under current trends in Congress are practically a unit in agreeing that during the past couple of months Southern Democrats have grown restive under the policies of the National Administration. The flareup over the lynching bill has brought this opposition to the surface. Two of the best known New Deal senators, both close to the White House—Wagner and Costigan—were the leaders in the fight for the anti-lynching bill. An inevitable effect of the controversy over this measure will be a widening of the cleavage between Southern Democrats and New Deal Democrats from the North and West.

While the anti-lynching bill has now been laid aside, the sub-surface hostility of Southern Democrats to many other items on the legislative program extends over a wide front. This opposition, more perhaps than any other factor, explains why it is that Congress may not be able to complete the Roosevelt reform program until mid-summer, if then. There is strong Southern opposition to at least half a dozen of the major pieces of legislation on the congressional calendar. These include the A A A amendments, extension of the N R A, the Guffey coal bill, which has been sharply opposed by Southern industrialists, the utility control bill, social security and the banking bill. A good deal of Southern opposition is also expected to the Wagner labor relations bill on the ground that it will promote industrial war rather than peace, its ostensible objective.

Some of the smartest attacks yet made against the New Deal in the Chamber of Commerce convention have come from Southern industrialists. In the House of Representatives, many Southern members are resentful still against the National Administration on account of patronage, and in both Houses there are many Southerners who privately are out of sympathy with the Roosevelt policies because they so sharply run counter to the principles of old-fashioned democracy.

Administration control over Congress, therefore, now seems to depend on its ability to hold in check the opposition of many representatives from the so-called Solid South. In both House and Senate, Southerners provide most of the majority leaders. Lip service to the New Deal is still the rule, but this merely conceals much latent antagonism to Administration policies.

NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN PILOT

APR 30 1935

The Fight On the Anti-Lynching

The fact the filibuster against the Federal anti-lynching bill is being conducted exclusively by a group of Southern Senators is its own cold commentary on the eloquence that is being expended in the denunciation of this measure as an invasion of States' rights. The bill seeks to make punishable by the Federal courts murders perpetrated by "mob or riotous assemblage." That means, the act goes on to say, "an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority of law, for the purpose of killing or injuring any person in the custody of any peace officer or suspected of, charged with, or convicted of the commission of any crime."

That definition is broad enough to include killings committed by racketeering gangs in the West or by strikers or strike-breakers in the East. Yet not a single Senator from these sections has become disturbed about the threatened invasion of any State's police power. Only the Southern Senators are exercised. They were not similarly exercised thirteen years ago when the Federal Government planned and enacted prohibition legislation which gave the Federal courts concurrent jurisdiction with the State courts in the punishment of dry law offenses; nor were they exercised more recently when the Department of Justice took over the business of hunting down the bank robbers and kidnapers in respect to whom the State police power had demonstrated its impotence.

In view of the cheerful surrender of States' rights when it served purposes of which the Southern Senators approved, the States' rights eloquence that has been mobilized against the anti-lynching bill seems out of all proportion to the thing that is feared. The worst that could happen under the bill would be the prosecution in the Federal courts of a gang of lynchers which the State had failed to prosecute, or the prosecution in the Federal courts of a few sheriffs or jailers whose conduct in the events preceding a lynching were culpable enough to impress a grand jury composed of citizens of the neighborhood. This is the alarming prospect that has caused Senator Bailey, of North Carolina, to identify the anti-lynching law as a destroyer of States' rights and of individual freedom.

It is possible that the anti-lynching law is unconstitutional. That question may be left to the courts—as was done with the TVA bill and the gold clause. The important question of the moment is that of the bill's merits. One can not be sure that the enactment of this law would help to eradicate the lynching infamy. For many years we feared that it would do more harm than good. We are less sure of that now. The time has come, we think, to invoke the Federal police resources (as we invoked it to deal with kidnapers) even if the procedure is attended by some doubts. What are a few doubts compared with the abject failure of lynching prosecutions conducted as the exclusive prerogative of the States?

RALEIGH, N. C.
TIMES

APR 18 1935

FEDERAL ANTI-LYNCH BILL HELPED ON BY COTTON ED

Fomenting in Congress is a new drive for the enactment of the so-called "Anti-Lynching Bill" sponsored by Wagner and Costigan. We say "so-called" because the measure is just another of numerous attempts to substitute the Federal for the State police power in matters it was understood for years were reserved to the States to handle for themselves.

Prohibition as a nationa. power was attained only by aid of a change in the Constitution afterwards repealed when the vice of the policy had been ascertained by the painful method of trial and error.

The same mistaken policy was attempted to be carried out by statute in order to give Federal control of "Child Labor," so-called, on the pretext of a statute based on the theory that it came within the power of the Federal Government's right to regulate interstate commerce. It failed in the courts and there s now pending, though so far repudiated, an effort to change the Constitution to permit this new invasion.

At the same time, the reserved rights of the States o attend to their own affairs have been absorbed into he Federal authority in several important particulars nder the blanket of the "Commerce Clause."

There is the Mann Act which makes an ordinary reach of the peace in the shape of personal immorlity a Federal offense if the individual parties happen o carry their intrigue beyond State lines. In this ideous act, duly endorsed by the Supreme Court, nly the man may be punished, on the theory that he woman is his "baggage!"

There is the extension of the phrase "interstate commerce" to cover rulings laid down by the Interstate Commerce Commission as to the conduct of traffic within State lines, and there pends a ' ll to extend this control to motor travel and traffic on the highways, as well as to current generated by public utility companies.

There is the Harrison Act having to do with the commerce in drugs, worthy enough in motive but destructive of State authority and integrity in that it sends out a great company of Federal agents to deal with crimes and offenses committed within State borders, regardless of their lack of interstate incidents.

The Anti-Lynching bill goes further than any of these increments to centralized government in that it would make of the natural crime of murder, punishable under the laws and in the courts of every State a Federal instead of a State offense. Some years ago t might have been said that the Supreme Court of the United States would attend to such a law, if passed; but not now, seeing the condition of the Constitution after having been run through the Supreme Court's new style wringer.

We are glad to note that Senators Bailey and Reynolds are preparing to resist this innovation to the point of staging a filibuster if necessary. They will be aided by Senator Smith of South Carolina who will, unfortunately, be a liability instead of an asset. For in recent remarks in the Senate "Cotton Ed" not only opposed the national "Anti-Lynching Bill idea, but did so on the ground that lynching itself was justifiable and virtuous! If anything could justify the proposed legislation, it would be just that attitude on the part of the States as reflected by their representatives.

Lynchings–1935
Legislation Relating to.

5059

Nashville, Tenn. Banner
August 5, 1935

GOVERNOR COMMENDED ON LYNCHING STAND

Members of the National Negro Bar Association, meeting in Nashville last week, presented Gov. Hill McAlister Saturday with a copy of a resolution passed by the association commending him for his courage in acting to save from lynching E. K. Harris, Shelbyville Negro, during his trial for assault last December. From left to right, members of the group are: Charles H. Calloway, Kansas City; C. S. Waldon, Atlanta; Joseph McLemore, St. Louis; Frances Taylor, Chicago; Euclid Louis Taylor, Chicago; Chester K. Gillespie of Cleveland who introduced the resolution; Mrs. Georgia Jones Ellis, Chicago; Fleming Jones, Welch, W. Va.; Governor McAlister; Perry W. Howard, Washington, D. C.; E. Washington Rhodes, Philadelphia; and Josiah H. Henry, Baltimore.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
LEADER
JUL 18 1935

NOW LET'S HAVE AN ANTI-LYNCHING LAW

Mississippi disgraces itself again by lynching two Negroes.

Lynching is among the worst of crimes, and it deserves the severest punishment. But, as in the case of other crimes, the perpetrators are more in need of re-education. Emotionally they are brutes, not human beings.

For the immediate future the best deterrent would be a stiff federal anti-lynching law. It should be a law which would punish the counties in which lynchings occur, with heavy fines, so that every taxpayer will feel it in his pocket nerve. And, of course, the murderers should be properly dealt with.

This is a necessity for the immediate future because the re-education of the lynching brutes will take time, and something must be done to forestall these outbursts of savagery in the meanwhile.

Anti-Lynch Bill O.K.d By Jewish Vets

11-2-35

NEW YORK, N.Y., Nov. 1—A resolution asking that Congress pass an effective federal anti-lynching law was adopted at the recent National Convention of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States, held in Saratoga Springs, New York.

The text of the resolution:

"WHEREAS, more than forty-five hundred (4,500) persons, white and colored, have lost their lives as a result of mob violence and lynch-law in the United States during the last century;

"WHEREAS, mob violence and Lynch Law are not confined to any section of our country, but have been committed in more than three fourths of the states in utter defiance of duly constituted courts of law, and

"WHEREAS, mob violence and Lynch Law are a direct violation of the constitution of the United States which guarantees the right of all citizens to a fair trial regardless of race, creed or religion, and

"WHEREAS, mob violence and Lynch Law are not only reprehensible because they undermine the very foundation upon which our Republic was founded, but directly discredit the United States abroad and make mockery of our so-called Law and Order,

"NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, By the Jewish War Veterans of the United States in convention assembled this first day of September, 1935, in the City of Saratoga Springs, New York, that it again urges the Congress of the United States to pass an effective Anti-Lynching Bill at the earliest practicable moment."

Borah Pledged Against Anti-Lynching Measure

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23—(AP)—Senator Borah bluntly asserted today that should he receive the "unexpected and great honor" of being president, he would veto as unconstitutional such legislation as the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

His stand was given in a letter to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. It replied to one sounding his views as a presidential possibility, toward the anti-lynching bill he has opposed in the Senate.

The Idaho Republican's quick response to the challenge, and its wording of it furthered the growing belief in Washington that he would get into the presidential race. But it was unusually outspoken for a presidential possibility.

Walter White, signing the association's letter as its secretary, said he was writing "on behalf of twelve million American negroes and of many white Americans who are deeply concerned with the alarming increase in lynchings in the United States." He warned that negro votes hold the balance of power in many pivotal states.

Borah replied he had opposed the Costigan-Wagner measure because he had no doubt it violated the constitution, and added:

"That being my view then and now, I shall vote against such measures as long as I am a member of the Senate and should the unexpected and great honor come to me of being president of the United States and such a bill should reach me under my oath and in the light of my convictions, I would unhesitatingly veto it."

Henry Ford Urged For G. O. P. Nomination

DETROIT, Nov. 23—(AP)—The Detroit News quotes former Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck, of Michigan, as saying in an interview tonight that he considers Henry Ford the best possible presidential candidate the Republican party could nominate next year.

"If the Republicans are to win in 1936," Groesbeck said, "they must have a candidate whose name is as well known as President Roosevelt's—a man whose name alone would pull great numbers of votes.

"I am of the opinion Ford would make an excellent president."

The Republican former state executive said he believed that Senator William E. Borah (R), Idaho, is the only other possibility whose vote-pulling power would approach that of the automobile manufacturer.

Al Smith May Seek New York Mayoralty

NEW YORK, Nov. 23—(AP)—The Daily News says former Gov. Alfred E. Smith will run for mayor in 1937 if he finds it necessary to "entrench the anti-new deal dynasty set up for him with the revamping of the board of estimate through Aldermanic President Bernard S. Deutsch's death."

He may decide to remain "the power behind the throne," The News says, and back Surrogate James A. Foley but "one way or the other, his advisers say, he will build his political fences into a great wall around Manhattan against the hated Roosevelt-Farley new deal.

Borah Would Kill Anti-Lynch Bill If He Occupied the White House

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.—(AP)—Senator Borah bluntly asserted today that should he receive the "unexpected and great honor" of being president, he would veto as unconstitutional such legislation as the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

His stand was given in a letter to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. It replied to one sounding his views, as a presidential possibility, toward the anti-lynching bill he has opposed in the senate.

The Idaho republican's quick response to the challenge, and his wording of it, furthered the growing belief in Washington that he will get into the presidential race. But it was unusually outspoken for a presidential possibility.

Constitution Cited.

Walter White, signing the association's letter as its secretary, said he was writing "on behalf of 12,000,000 American negroes and of many white Americans who are deeply concerned with the alarming increase in lynchings in the United States." He warned that negro votes hold the balance of power in many pivotal states.

Borah replied he had opposed the Costigan-Wagner measure because he had no doubt it violated the constitution, and added:

"That being my view then and now, I shall vote against such measures as long as I am a member of the senate, and should the unexpected and great honor come to me of being president of the United States and such a bill should reach me, under my oath and in the light of my convictions, I would unhesitatingly veto it. . . .

"I do not enter a discussion of what in my judgment is the utter futility of these measures aside from the constitutional question. Neither do I take time to again express, as I have often expressed it by word and act, my horror of lynching, further than to say that if the federal government is to deal with the subject, it can only do so by an amendment to the constitution of the United States."

Borah Accepts Assumption.

Borah did not suggest that he would not be a candidate. In fact he said he would let the association's assumption "that I am a candidate for the presidency" stand "for the purpose of this letter."

Earlier the Borah movement received further impetus when Representative Lemke, republican, North Dakota, who supported President Roosevelt in 1932, said the Idaho senator was "the only candidate so far prominently mentioned who could get the support of the farmers of the west for the republican nomination."

Lemke's statement, capping an hour's conference with Borah, was regarded significantly. So was an announcement that the senator would open a drive for liberalizing the republican party in a nation-wide radio broadcast December 7.

This will be the first of a series of speeches by Borah in the eastern and middle-western states before the opening of congress in January. His friends expect him to challenge the established leadership of the party in these addresses.

The Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in its letter to Borah, said he held "the somewhat dubious honor of having been the executioner of two distinctly hopeful opportunities" for stamping out lynching.

NAACP Position.

Citing a number of lynchings within recent months, the letter asked:

"Do you feel proud of your handywork, Senator Borah?"

Then citing the power of negro votes in some of the border and northern states, the letter added:

"There are many Americans, Senator Borah, who no longer believe in the sincerity of members of the senate who forget states' rights when such issues as prohibition are being discussed but who wrap about themselves the mantle of 'constitutionality' when the lives of human beings are taken by lawless mobs."

Borah made public the association's letter together with his reply in which he said he confined himself "to a simple answer to what I consider a corrupt and shameless question."

Expressing his views on the unconstitutionality of such measures as the Costigan-Warner bill, Borah said:

"Whatever may happen in the future politics of this country, so far as my position on the question presented by these measures is concerned it will not be changed or even modified."

Dieterich Is Sore over Rebuke for Lynching Vote

ALL LIES, HE SAYS

Senator Says Nobody's Life Is Worth $10,000.

(AFRO Bureau)

WASHINGTON — Senator William H. Dieterich, (Dem. Ill.) extending his hand gingerly in response to the reporter's greeting, in his office in the Senate Office Building here Monday, remarked bitterly, "I didn't think a colored person would shake hands with me!"

"Why not, Senator?" asked the reporter.

"Because I'm being attacked for voting according to my conscience!

"Why did you vote for adjournment?"

"I'd have done that with any bill. This bill is not urgent. It can wait. Important legislation was being held up. Those fellows would have kept us there till next year!

Can't Scare Him

"If I can't discuss a bill without being attacked for it, what am I here for? You can't scare me. You can't boss me—your group nor any other group!"

"Who's trying to 'boss' you, Senator?" the legislator was asked.

"Why, you people here," fumed Dieterich, and fumbling nervously among the papers on his desk, drew forth a two-page pronouncement [illegible] Conference of N.A.A.C.P. Branches, dated May 17, and signed by Irvin C. Mollinson.

"You're not going to put your people up superior to my people," he stormed.

"Who wants to? That is a new idea. The proposition is that no people shall be superior—yours or mine—equality is what we call it," the reporter explained.

Wants Decent Anti-Lynch Bill

"Well, if you want an anti-lynching bill you'd better get somebody who knows how to draw up a bill to draw up a decent one!" thundered the Illinois Senator.

Clenching the arms of his chair, the infuriated solon, staring angrily at the letter from the Illinois Conference, blurted out indiscriminate charges that "dirty Republican politics," and "a lot of Communism," were behind it.

He was told that the N.A.A.C.P. was not controlled by politics of any color.

Lies, All Lies!

"This is lies—all lies! Every statement in here is a lie. I never opposed the bill in committee, and everyone knows what went on on the floor," he raged.

"What does the letter say?" he was asked.

'Say? It says plenty! Why listen here," and the Senator read the statement from the Illinois Conference, charging him with consistent opposition to the anti-lynching bill, and calling on the voters of Illinois to defeat him should he present himself as a candidate for re-election.

"Isn't this what you're here for?" he demanded, glaring at the reporter.

Told that the AFRO was unaware that he had received such a letter, Senator Dieterich snapped:

Shall Pay No Attention

"Well, I have received it, and it's not going to influence me at all! I shall pay no attention to it!

"All your people aren't good any more than all mine are, and all mine aren't good. Yours are good as long as they behave themselves—and so are mine.

"This would be a funny government if every group that demanded more than belonged to it could come up here and tell Congress how to run the country!"

"Perhaps it's a funny country that has to have a special method of treating the minority groups that are a part of its population," the reporter suggested. "Also the right of protection can hardly be considered as 'more than belongs' to any group."

"We certainly have a right to protection," he was reminded, "and you know it to be a fact that in very many instances it is not a case of prisoners being taken from officials, but of men and women being done to death by mobs when no arrest has been made."

Reporter Quizzed

"Well, what are you going to do about that?" demanded Mr. Dieterich.

"Punish the community when it fails to restrain its members — the thing you don't want," he was told.

"Restrain members, eh? I tell you, when citizens get indignant over these hatchet murders and such things—colored people don't do them all—sometimes I wouldn't care if they did lose restraint!"

"Well, Senator, you know what the usual excuse is in the South, and in spite of your Chicago gang killings, you also know that the great majority of lynch victims are not white. You should bear in mind that there is a long list of women who have been lynched—and women don't commit rape."

Doesn't Know About the South

"You're talking about what happens below the Mason and Dixon line. I don't know anything about that!"

EDITOR'S NOTE: Senator Dieterich was present at the hearing on the Costigan-Wagner bill, last February, before the Senate sub-committee on judiciary, of which he is a member.)

The Senator was reminded of the Mary Turner outrage, in which an expectant mother was lynched for threatening to expose the lynchers of her husband.

Ratty Letter

"I don't know anything about those things," evaded the Senator. "But this letter here—this dirty, ratty letter —! Suppose I don't come back here! Worse things could happen to me! And I'm not going to make any statement!"

Lynchings—1935
Legislation Relating

5060

U.S. ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

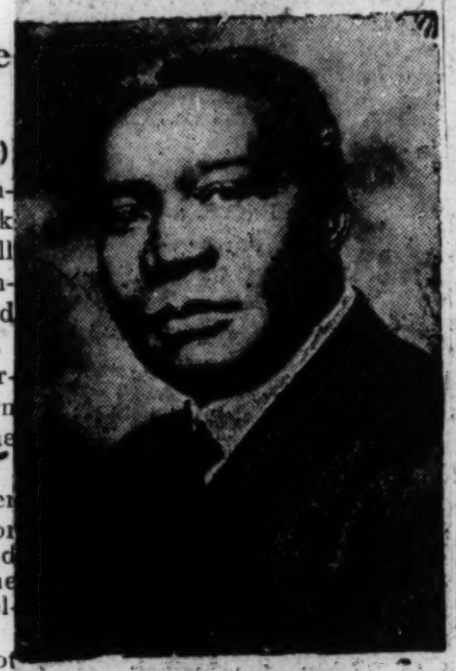
Southern Obstruction in the Senate

5-3-35

(From our New York Correspondent.)

The United States Senate has accomplished nothing during the past week because of the disquiet over the bill proposing a Federal law against lynching. The deadlock still continues, and no one can say when it will be broken.

What is being witnessed is filibustering by senators from the Southern States, who are bitterly opposed to the proposal.



Under the Senate rules, any member or group of members can hold the floor indefinitely, discussing anything and everything, and this is done in extreme cases to obstruct the passage of unwelcome legislation.

In many cases—usually, though not always, in the Southern States—it has been demonstrated that police officers have handed over prisoners to mobs for lynching after making little resistance. In other cases officers have even conspired with the mobs and have usually gone unpunished because cor munity sentiment was with them.

The bill now under consideration would take such cases out of the jurisdiction of the local authorities and give the Federal Government power to impose penalties up to many years' imprisonment. The majority of Southerners bitterly resent this suggestion. They say it seeks an infringement of the rights of States and reflects upon that part of the country, which has been marked by a rise in the number of lynchings during the past few years after a long period during which they steadily declined.

Experts who have studied the subject believe that the lynchings are primarily economic in character and arise from competition between poor whites and poor negroes, or from the desire of wealthy whites to keep poor negroes properly subservient. Only a small proportion of recent lynchings are attributable to the alleged sex crimes which are commonly supposed to be the cause of nearly all of them.

Shuns "Soft Soap"

DR. R. R. MOTON

President Emeritus of Tuskegee

Alabama senators used his name as proof that two leading Southern Negroes were against the anti-lynching bill.

5-10-35

Dr. Moton wired as follows:

Tuskegee, Ala.,
May 1, 1935.

Senator Epward P. Costigan,
United States Senate Chamber:

In absence of adequate measures by State action to protect prisoners threatened with mob violence, to put an end to lynching, and to identify, to arrest, to indict, and to convict the leaders and participants in lynching parties, I am heartily in favor of such legislation as will register the Nation's disapproval of this crime against humanity and insure the prompt investigation of every lynching and the conviction of those who thus take the law in their own hands, and the impeachment penalizing of officers of the law who fail in their duty to protect prisoners committed to their charge. When State officers and State courts persistently and repeatedly fail in their duty to guarantee the security of every citizen by the certain functioning of the orderly processes of the law, we are justified in looking to the Federal Government for the protection which the Constitution declares must be given to every citizen. It must be remembered that lynchings are not confined to those charged with crimes against women, as the records will show, but are resorted to on indiscriminate provocation, and as yet there is no guarantee anywhere by mandate of the law against their occurrence. And when the Governor of one of our great States goes so far as to publicly announce the pardon of lynchers in advance of their conviction, it is high time that something be done by higher authority to put an end to this evil. If Governors, Senators, Congressmen, and State legislators will pledge themselves publicly to see that the necessary legislation against lynching is enacted in each State, the occasion for national legislation will be removed. Till that is done we must look to the Federal Government for that protection which the States still fail to give and the Federal Constitution guarantees. And I would be disloyal to my own people, who have suffered most from the neglect, and to the best white people of the South, in whom I have the utmost confidence, if I did not add my voice in support of this Federal enactment. All matters now stand every section and every race is exposed to this danger and the application of this law will bear as heavily on one State as another. I am satisfied that outside the field of politics the sober conscience of all classes in the South will support this view. Federal legislation will strengthen those elements in the South who want to see this blot removed from our country.

R. R. MOTON,
President Tuskegee Institute

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

MAY 2 1935

LYNCH BILL DROPPED, SENATE TALKS BONUS

Washington, D. C., May 1 (AP).—The Senate today voted to take up the soldiers' bonus bill after a seven-day Southern filbuster had succeeded in blocking consideration of anti-lynching legislation.

Adjournment, moved by Majority Leader Robinson, was taken for less than half an hour. Senator

Senator Borah — Senator Robinson

Lynch bill foe and bonus bill friend.

Robinson wished to make the bonus bill the pending business before the Senate quit for the day.

Every previous efforts to scuttle the anti-lynching bill by the adjournment route had failed.

Borah Turns Tide.

A stirring speech by Senator Borah (Rep., Idaho), assailing the constitutionality of the anti-lynching bill, was a big factor in switching a majority for adjournment instead of a recess.

The vote to adjourn carried 48 to 32.

Rallying to the Southern, cause, Borah declared that enactment of the anti-lynching bill would "deal a blow to our principle of government the importance of which could not be overstated."

His statement brought smiles of delight to the faces of Southern Senators who had conceded there was enough support to pass the bill if it should be brought to a vote.

Colored Lawyers Aided.

"To my mind," Borah said, "if this type of bill con be sustained by the Supreme Court, we have utterly broken down all state sovereignty."

Earlier, Southern Democrats rew from Senator Costigan (Dem Col.) a statement that many prominent colored lawyers were consulted in drafting the legislation.

Costigan, co-author with Senator Wagner (Dem., N. Y.) of the bill, said he had consulted, among others with Walter White, secretary of the Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Jacksonville, Ala., Record
May 31, 1935

LYNCHING

The south has cause to rejoice that their senators were successful in filibustering the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching out of consideration for this session at least.

All right-thinking individuals oppose mob violence in any form. Lynching is murder. It violates the law of God and man.

We agree with Senator Byrnes who declared on the senate floor that he believed the enactment of the anti-lynching bill would increase rather than decrease lynchings.

Lynchings have declined from 231 in 1892 to a total of only 15 in 1934, while that is 15 lynchings too many, yet the trend is definitely away from them and officers of the law are doing more effective work than ever in preventing mob action. This means that the viewpoint of the people on lynchings is changing and that the day will come when lynching will be as dead as dueling, which at one time had such a hold upon the people.

The passage of an anti-lynching bill would undoubtedly delay the fine progress being made toward wiping out entirely the evil of lynching.— Vicksburg Post-Herald

Brooklyn, N. Y. Eagle
MAY 2 1935

Cotton Ed Holds Fort—Anti-Lynch Bill Dies

Rather Be Right Than Senator, His War Cry as He Leads South to Victory—Borah Helps

Eagle Bureau,
National Press Building.

By CLINTON L. MOSHER

Washington, May 2—The Senate of the United States today proceeded to debate the major issues confronting the Roosevelt administration after spending six and a half days refighting the Civil War and shedding oratorical blood only to see history reversed—the South emerging triumphant after it had been reinforced by troops enlisted from the ranks of the defenders of the Constitution.

The Senate, to all practical purposes, has buried the Wagner-Costigan bill, which would give the Federal Government jurisdiction over lynching cases after it appeared that local agencies in the South had failed to show proper energy in prosecuting the offenders in neck-tie parties.

The triumph of the boys in gray is really a victory for "Cotton Ed" Smith, the senior Senator from South Carolina, so called because he always talks about the cotton industry. The notion had been abroad among critics of "Cotton Ed" that his knowledge of things was pretty much confined to cotton, but that, events have proven, is all wrong.

Opposition Spokesman

The Honorable Ed has a first-class working knowledge of lynching, States' rights and the glorious history of the States below the Mason and Dixon line. He was the chief spokesman of the opposition to the Costigan-Wagner bill.

"Cotton Ed" has a slight impediment in his speech. He has an extremely busy mustache and when he inhales the fringe is sucked into his oral cavity. As he exhales to utter speech the words become tangled in the aforementioned shrubbery and the effect is much as if "Cotton Ed," getting up late of a morning, had left his store teeth on the mantelpiece.

Smith trembled all over at the very thought of the Federal Government, at the instigation of the Northerners—Wagner of New York and Costigan of Colorado—interfering with the administration of justice in the South when a Negro had committed a crime which the citizenry regarded could be best punished by a length of rope and the limb of a tree.

With Senator John Bankhead of Alabama, uncle of Broadway's Tallulah, and some other lawmakers from the deep South, "Cotton Ed" held the fort against the "Boys in Blue," the Northern Senators.

Illegal, Borah Says

After six days, it looked like a stand-off, but into the breach stepped Idaho's William Edgar Borah with his law books. He remembered the last time the Senate argued anti-lynch law and he told his associates late yesterday that the bill was unconstitutional. There was a motion to adjourn for a few minutes. The motion was carried 48 to 32 and the bill, by the creation of the interim and under the strange rules of the Senate, was slaughtered.

The adjournment lasted from a few minutes after 3 p.m. until 3:30. The Senators then played it was morning and started in again. This necessitated, under the rules, a word of prayer by the chaplain, the Rev. C. Barney Phillips. There was considerable difficulty finding the gentleman of the cloth and pulling him away from his ordinary ecclesiastical duties, but once he was informed that the second fighting of the Civil War had ended he rushed to the Capitol, prayed from the rostrum and business was resumed after a 13-minute delay.

Charges Vote-Seeking

This war like all wars had its high points and the highest occurred when "Cotton Ed" hoisted his bulky figure out of his chair and went to it. The Senator made it clear he believed Messrs. Wagner and Costigan had introduced the bill to get the Negro vote.

"God help us to get back to where men would rather do right than to be Senators!" shouted "Cotton Ed."

Working himself into a fine frenzy and prancing up and down the aisle, the Senator went on:

"I want to say to the Senator from Nevada that the thing which did more to precipitate the Civil War than anything else was just such unwarranted interference with our affairs as is now proposed."

The Senator from Nevada is Pat McCarran, a robust gray-haired orator who had been giving a lift to Senators Wagner and Costigan. Replied McCarran: "I am not going to fight the Civil War all over again. There is no use talking about that."

And shouted "Cotton Ed" in reply:

"The Senator may have to do so if he and his colleagues keep on with such a measure as this!

'Made Darn Good Speech'

"I think I have made a darn good speech," concluded "Cotton Ed," working his way toward the Senate cloakroom and a bit of rest.

But it remained for Senator Borah to fire the parting shot. He was chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee when a similar bill was up for debate.

"The opinion of the committee," he said, "was that the bill was unconstitutional."

The muskets are cooling, but if anyone is interested in knowing what has become of the best known of the once Sons of the Wild Jackass, he won the Civil War all over again, this time for the South.

Hastings, Fla., Herald
May 24, 1935

DEFEATING OF THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

The United States senate recently killed the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill and now possibly the states which have anti-lynching laws will have the right to enforce them according to the needs and circumstances of their individual cases. There was much division of opinion regarding this bill, but while some southern editors and organizations favored it, the majority opposed it because of the radical clauses in the bill which would have penalized every county in any state where a lynching occurred in the sum of $10,000 to be paid to the family of the party lynched. This was penalizing every law abiding citizens in these states, who hated lynching and never would have been a party to the atrocity, just as much as it penalized the men who committed the crime, and even more so when one considers that the mobs perpetrating the lynching usually are ignorant, non-property owning persons while the property owner and taxpayer who has to pay bills is innocent of the crime. An Alabama editor summed up the situation when he said: "It is a partisan measure reminiscent of Carpet Bag days. Every state has its anti-lynching laws and there is no need for the federal government to interfere with states' rights.—Winter Haven Chief.

NASHVILLE, TENN
BANNER
JUL 31 1935

Over the South

HAS NOT BEEN DENIED

(Charleston News and Courier)

Pearson and Allen, Washington correspondents, in their syndicated letter published by a considerable number of newspapers throughout the country, made the statement that the real author of the Costigan-Wagner bill was Walter White, a leader of the Negroes, of New York, that he came to Washington, that he convinced the wife of the President of the wisdom and righteousness of the bill, that she brought President Roosevelt to favor it.

It was defeated by means of a filibuster carried on by Southern Senators. Most of the Northern Democrats voted for the bill. Senator Costigan is a Denver man, a member of the Democratic Party considered by many as a near Socialist. Senator Wagner is a Tammany Democrat.

All sincere Socialists believe in the wiping out of the color line in politics and industry if not in all spheres of life.

The Costigan-Wagner bill is in substance the bill introduced some years ago by Mr. Dyer, long the Republican representative of the Negro district of St. Louis.

The bill provides for the transfer of cases of alleged lynching to the Federal Courts and under its terms a killing by as few as three persons is defined as a lynching. It provides also that Sheriffs and deputies charged with conniving with lynchers or allowing prisoners to be taken from their custody may be tried in Federal Courts and punished. And it provides for the imposition of large fines upon counties in which alleged lynchings occur.

The President, so far as we are informed, has said not a word against the bill—or for it.

The statement of Pearson and Allen has not been denied.

Lynchings-1935.
Legislation Relating to.

5061

BOSTON, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

MAY 2 1935

The Anti-Lynching Bill Lynched

It is easy to condemn the Southern senators for their opposition to the Costigan bill and, because lynching is so vicious a crime, to feel sentimental regrets that their filibuster was finally crowned with success. Yet when the matter is considered from the strictly constitutional standpoint, there must be substantial doubt in the average mind whether lynching may properly be regarded as a Federal crime and subject to Federal penalties.

Many Northerners, as hostile as anyone can be to the habit of certain communities of the South to take the law into their own hands, are firmly convinced that the Costigan measure represented an unwarranted invasion of States' rights. Unlike kidnaping, lynching is practically never an interstate offense. In the one case the criminals are almost certain to cross State boundaries, either to secure their victim or in the course of their flight from justice. Successful prosecution depends largely on freedom from the restrictions which boundary lines impose. On the other hand, lynching is invariably a local matter. The crime is committed by persons in the neighborhood and they remain in the neighborhood when their work is done. To find and punish the criminals is distinctly the job of the city, town or State authorities.

This, of course, is not to condone lynching. The practice continues to be one of the worst indictments of our civilization. Nor is it to screen the motives of the Southern senators who fought the Costigan bill. They may have made their winning battle on the issue of States' rights but their fervor was doubtless born of a fear of what their constituencies would do to men who permitted Congress to interfere with an old Southern custom.

BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN

APR 27 1935

NARROW SQUEAK

The preoccupations of statesmen are a never-failing source of delight to the cognoscenti, and the performance in the Senate on Thursday, when the bonus bill was rushed into action to prevent a vote being taken on the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill, was a useful exhibit of political diversion in the midst of a crisis. It is doubtful whether Federal intervention is the wisest approach in preventing lynching, but in spite of its limitations it seems remarkable that enough chivalric emotion could be aroused against even a debate on the bill as to make the bonus bill seem heaven-sent relief.

Surprise, however, ought not to be the predominant emotion over the fact that an American legislative assembly, in the year of grace 1935, prefers to discuss the merits of a bill calling for the spending of a few extra billions than to debate a bill designed to prevent lynching. Senator Bailey said the fight against the Costigan bill was "a cause worth dying for," and the presumption must be that a cause worth the life of a single Senator ought to be worth an immediate vote on the soldiers' bonus. Billions for defense against any debate that might kill a single Senator is our motto. Perhaps, though, it is just as well all around.

A debate on the anti-lynching bill would unquestionably precipitate a terrific burst of splendid Confederate oratory having to do with State's rights, and, as hinted in the passage at arms between Senators Wagner and Bailey, such speeches would sound very comic now, with most of the States feeding unconcernedly at the Federal trough. Senatorial oratory is full enough of lacunæ as things are. We ought to pay several billions to keep it from getting worse.

NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH

APR 30 1935

Vicious Anti-Lynching Bill

Of course Senator Glass was angry yesterday when the Senate was debating the Federal anti-lynching bill. He knew and knows that political considerations and nothing else could move the able lawyers in the Senate who are supporting the bill to vote for it. He knew and knows that the pious Senators who are lifting their eyes to Heaven and noisily praying for the passage of the bill are not one whit more opposed to lynching than are the Senators who are opposing its passage both because they know the bill is not worth the paper on which it is written and because they know that if it were valid it would constitute still another move in the effort to convert the states into mere provinces of the United States.

The Ledger-Dispatch condemns lynching as strongly and earnestly as any United States Senator who is now trying, for political purposes, to bring about the passage of this vicious bill. It would punish lynch-mobsters in the South as quickly and severely as it would punish lynch-mobsters in Ohio and California. It would gladly see, as it has frequently advocated, the enactment of legislation removing from office any sheriff, deputy or constable, from whose custody any prisoner was taken by a gang of lynch-mobsters. It firmly believes, if it does not know, that a mob is so completely a coward as well as completely a fool that almost any mob can be thwarted, intimidated, by any officer who dares defy it. Not once in a hundred times has any mob taken a prisoner from an officer who, that mob knew, would shoot in protecting his prisoner.

But it also knows that an attempt to vest the Federal government with power to interfere in a matter so wholly within the province of the several states—whether in the North, South, East or West—is an attempt to throw out of adjustment what used to be called "the nice balance" between the power of the individual states and the power of the United States.

It knows, too, that if this bill becomes law—until it can be thrown out by the Supreme Court—and an attempt is made to enforce it, the result will be to arouse such resentment as to make the condition it is ostensibly designed to correct far worse than it is now.

TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

MAY 2 1935

Filibustering Southern Senators.

Southern filibustering against the federal anti-lynching bill threatens to prolong the session of Congress thru July, contrary to the optimistic prediction a week ago by speaker Byrnes that its work will be done by the end of June. The trouble with these filibusters is that they provoke antagonisms which sometimes involve the fate of an entire legislative program.

It is a bit comic to note Southern Democratic leaders rising on the floor to protest against anti-lynching bills on the ground that they are "a menace", as Senator Black of Alabama put it, "to organized labor." Other Southern Senators who are loaded against the bill are Bailey of North Carolina, Byrnes of South Carolina, Connally of Texas and Russell of Georgia, all alarmed for the interests of labor. Yet if it was not for Southern sweatshop labor NRA probably would have been permitted to die when the present term of the law is out, June 16. One accomplishment claimed for it that is hardly disputed is that it balks the sweatshop and child labor, notably in Southern states.

Senator Black in attacking the bill denounced it as calculated to increase lynching. "It is a bill", he declared, "to suppress labor unions, a bill to punish and prosecute peace officers who fail to perform properly services demanded by owners and operators in case of a strike." The Alabama Senator is so radical a friend of labor that he opposes not only the anti-lynching bill but the Costigan-Wagner bill. Southern Senators have talked uninterruptedly for a week to prevent a vote or even consideration of the anti-lynching bill.

The anti-lynching bill is what its title implies, so what has it to do in reality with the problem of labor or collective bargaining? State control is not effectual. Within the year the world has witnessed the scandal of a Governor of California congratulating a lynching party for stringing up criminals already on their way to the gallows by due process of law. But Senators of Southern states volunteering as champions of the rights of labor, ostensibly friends of labor, but actually defending mob law, constitute a strange if not weird spectacle of the consistencies of politics. If there is any demand in the platform of organized labor that Southern Democrats support it is not in the record. They have prevented ratification of the child labor amendment, supported by every Democrat as well as Republican President in 25 years, and now, in the name of labor, filibuster to keep the anti-lynching bill from reaching a vote.

Greenwood, S. C. Index-Journal
April 30, 1935

SAME MIND

On the day after The News and Courier inquired of The Index-Journal whether it was prepared to guarantee that county court houses would be needed in the next ten years, or so long as that, Senator J. W. Bailey, of the State of North Carolina, speaking in opposition to the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, said:

"The Federal court can take the county court house and walk off with it; and I think they might as well, for if this bill should pass what use would we have for county (State) court houses? We might turn them over to the welfare department."

Regardless of the prospect, it appears, that a number of people in this country do not mind the prospect of that sort of thing but desire it.

Senator Bailey went on to show what would happen in the event of a suit in Federal court against a county, any county in any State in the United States, to recover the allowed penalty for a lynching, using his own county of Wake as an illustration:

An order will be sent down to Wake County, N. C., some of these days to pay somebody some money; the order will come from the Federal court, and if the mandamus is exhausted, then there is an "appropriate process." I understand what that means. The proponents of the bill do not there use the word, but that means the machine gun in the hands of the United States soldier. That is the "appropriate process." What else could it mean? They will exhaust the powers of the judiciary; they will exhaust the means provided by mandamus; and if the county refuses, then there is to be invoked the "appropriate process." The "appropriate process," under the circumstances and the spirit of this bill, cannot be anything short of a regiment of soldiers. The Federal government is going to compel payment.

Not only will it compel payment but it will do some other things.

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

APR 29 1935

SENATOR BAILEY ON LYNCHING.

The Daily News, as it has vouchsafed on many occasions and hereby repeats, has great admiration for the intellectual honesty of the senior senator from North Carolina.

Hence, it notes with commensurate interest what Mr. Bailey, who incidentally, paid his respects to Coughlin, minus the Father, has had to say anent the Costigan-Wagner bill which would bring lynching under the federal ban if its sponsors can make their way over the dead bodies of southern statesmen and the ghost of state rights which has been disinterred after a dormancy which, quite mysteriously, obtained while Congress was enacting anti-kidnaping legislation. And right here there is brief pause for any one so moved to explain how lynching is not an extension of kidnaping which substitutes officers of the law for home or family and a doing-unto-death for confinement.

Senator Bailey has made the assertion that the question is neither racial nor sectional. Perhaps the senator's assertion is true. There have been lynchings to north and to west of us, as, recollect, the double entry which California made in 1933. There have likewise been white persons who received the brunt of attention at the rope and faggot parties. But, from 1885 through 1933, of the 4,174 persons lynched in these United States, only 989 were white while 3,185 were black. Without checking over the geography of the entire list, 1933's division by sections will serve as a representative example; of the 28 lynchings which marred the year, 24 were in the south proper, two others were in the border states of Maryland and Missouri, and the final two constituted California's bloody contribution. Of the 24 reported from the south, one occurred in our own and Senator Bailey's North Carolina, that Pender county affair which got no farther than an expression of gubernatorial regret and a superficial investigation by the solicitor. A year or so previous Edgecombe county put Tarheelia in the lynching group, and if retributive action there ever got beyond the we're-investigating stage it has remained a deep, dark secret in a state which has at least fairly enterprising newspapermen working within its confines.

A sentient citizen will doubtless be pardoned if he opines that these filibustering days must be powerfully trying on some of Senator Bailey's prime traits and characteristics.

Brooklyn, N. Y. Eagle

MAY 5 1935

Anti-Lynching Bill Urged by Woman Author

Miss Witherspoon Makes Strong Plea for Negro in Letter to Copeland

Hope that the shelving of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill in the Senate will not permanently kill the measure in this session was expressed yesterday by Miss Cora Witherspoon, Southern author, in a letter to Senator Royal S. Copeland.

Though born in Mississippi, Miss Witherspoon is bitterly opposed to lynching and she writes to the New York Senator as a voting resident who has lived here all her adult life, since graduating from Bryn Mawr. She is the author of "The Legend of St. Mathhew's Toll," written in collaboration with Miss Tracy Mygatt, a Brooklynite, who was a classmate at college.

The letter asks Senator Copeland to support the anti-lynching bill and adds:

Plea for the Negro

"It is really as a Southern woman that I wish you to consider me more particularly at this moment. For it is as a Southerner who all her life has suffered from a shared guilt toward the Negro race (though she has tried to keep her own hands clean of injustice) that I would make an appeal from my very heart.

"It will take millions of money, millions to be spent on education, on housing schemes, on agriculture and industrial projects; it will take decades, not to say centuries of patient effort, of an applied wisdom such as we have not yet begun to acquire; it will take social courage of a high order to make up—if it can be made up—to this long-suffering and infinitely injured race what they have suffered at the hands of us their white fellow Americans.

Demands Federal Law

"The Southern States have had 70 years to eradicate this fearful evil of lynching and they haven't made much headway. The whole country must take a hand. The Federal Government must handle the lynching problem as a national issue. We want and intend to have a Federal anti-lynching law.

"To ask the South to cure itself of lynching at this stage is to tell a patient in an advanced stage of cancer to apply the knife to himself, No, an outsider, a surgeon, must cut out the cancerous growth. The patient desires it removed. I believe the best Southern element does truly desire to be rid of lynching but has not the nerve, the unswerving will to perform the operation.

"The writer was born in Meridian Miss., which as you know is not far from the Black Belt. It is the part of the country where a good deal of patriarchial kindness for the black prevails and always prevailed but where the concepts of justice and legal equality are unknown. I have never had first hand experience of a lynching but I know the white mind that makes such an outrage possible. I grew up, so to speak, under the shadow of lynchings.

"My father was the late S. A. Witherspoon, member of the 62d, 63d and 64th Congresses. Were he living I do not know how he would vote on the Costigan-Wagner bill but I am sure he would have rejoiced to see the section he loved freed forever of the curse of lynching."

Tallahassee, Fla. Democrat
May 1, 1935

Johns Urges Protest On Anti-Lynching Bill

(By The Associated Press)

A resolution calling upon the Florida legislature to request members of congress to oppose the pending Costigan anti-lynching bill was introduced in the house today by Johns of Bradford. It was referred to the resolutions committee without discussion.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

AUG 4 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL FAILURE DEPLORED

Senator Costigan Laments Failure of Congress to Pass Legislation.

Senator Costigan, Democrat of Colorado, issued a statement last night, deploring failure of the present session of Congress to act on the anti-lynching bill, sponsored jointly by Costigan and Senator Wagner, Democrat of New York.

"The recent epidemic of lynchings, which has included victims South and North, again demonstrates what Senator Wagner and I have been condemning in the present session of Congress," the Colorado Senator said. "It is not being controlled by States and demands national legislation, as was the case with kidnaping.

"All reasonable men and women are shocked beyond measure by the danger of mob law. The lawless hands that assert mob power over life and death, without an opportunity to the accused to be heard under fair conditions in his own defense, can easily be persuaded to place the lighted torch and commit other unspeakable crimes against the home of any citizen, rich or poor, high or low. The best proposal for stopping lynchings now under consideration is to be found in the anti-lynching measure before Congress, which would impose a definite Federal responsibility for law enforcement on local peace officers and on communities that tolerate the unspeakable practice.

"It is deplorable that Congress has permitted a small group of filibusterers to halt such necessary legislation, but public opinion in the end on this moral issue of law and order must and will prevail."

Lynchings- 1935

Legislation Relating to.

5062

Roanoke, Va., World News
May 4, 1935

THE FARCE HAS ENDED

The Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, debated in the United States Senate, has been "laid aside" for a more politically nourishing debate on the bonus. Nearly every member of the Senate knew that the lynching bill would not pass. And nearly every member knew that it was plainly unconstitutional and would be ineffective if passed. But senators from the Deep South had a fine time getting speeches into the record, while Senator Wagner had an equally fine opportunity to make himself solid with his Harlem constituency. It was as much of a farce as was the pre-arranged debate between Senators Lodge and Underwood in 1922, when it had been agreed in advance that the bill would be thrown out of the window after both had made political capital of it.

The bill defined as lynching a murder committed by "an assemblage of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority of law for the purpose of killing or injuring any person in the custody of a peace officer, or suspected of or charged with, or convicted of the commission of any crime." As pointed out by the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, the definition is broad enough to cover killings committed by racketeering gangs in the west, or by strikers or strike breakers in any labor disturbance.

Senator Borah seems to have made the only convincing argument not tainted by the fear of votes at home. He held the bill to be unconstitutional, an unwarranted and indefensible, attempt to interfere with the rights and duties of the States. And his argument might be applied with the same force to the NRA, the AAA, and many another of the present-day efforts of the Federal government to dictate to the States and to individuals within the States.

As for the Costigan-Wagner bill, it is hoped that the last has been heard of what Senator Glass describes as "this wretched thing." Most of the country would like to hear the last of some other wretched things that under the guise of reform are now invading the rights of the States and of individuals.

There is just one more word to be said. If, as Senator Borah and others argue, there should be no Federal invasion of the police powers of the States, there is all the more reason that the States should exercise those powers to the utmost to protect helpless prisoners and prevent mob violence.

LINCOLN, NEB.
MORNING STATE JOURNAL
APR 2 0 1935

THE SOUTH RESENTS.

Gentlemen from the south have taken the anti-lynching bill as a direct insult to themselves and their constituents. Perhaps it is. If they resent the implications they might see to it that the lynching situation is cleaned up in their districts.

In the first place federal anti-lynching legislation is not exactly a necessity. In a sense it is a duplication of laws. Every state has laws which, if properly enforced, would curb lynching. Every state has the power to end, or at least keep at a minimum, all forms of mob violence.

But laws are not enforced. Public officials do not do their duty. State officials do not see that local authorities are punished for failure to perform duties or negligence in such performance. Moreover the people in southern states especially do not want the laws dealing with mob violence enforced and do not care whether or not officials who are negligent in the performance of their duties in such cases are punished. As a result a wholly undesirable situation has developed.

The attempt to put an anti-lynching bill on the federal statute books is being made in order that federal authorities may have power to preserve order in these lawless communities. It was hoped that if such a bill were enacted, federal officials could put a stop to lynching in southern states, for they are the worst offenders.

The people of the south do not want such federal interference and their representatives in congress are making a determined fight against the bill. They should be able to defeat it. The south is represented in congress by a large group of congressmen who stand side by side on this proposition. Not only that but the south is the ruling section. The southern bloc dominates the majority party in congress.

The southern bloc in congress resents the implications of the federal anti-lynching bill. They are going to see to it that the south has its lynchings unmolested. The first really determined filibuster of the session has been staged by southern leaders in the fight on this bill.

Clarkesville, Tenn., Chronicle
May 2, 1935

The Filibuster Broken

News that the filibuster against the anti-lynching bill by Southern Senators has been broken, with the senate moving on to the compromise bonus issue, comes as a welcome relief. It was a victory for the Southern Senators who fought the Costigan-Wagner measure on constitutionality grounds.

Lynching is deplorable and represents the triumph of the mob, but under our Constitution our Union is composed of sovereign states. To give the Federal government authority in lynching cases is to further extend the powers of Washington into the states. Every state should deal sternly with mobs and lynchers, but the responsibility should be on the states and not on the Federal government.

It was foolish on the part of advocates of the bill to persist on its passage when Congress had such important matters before it. Seven valuable days of the senate were consumed in arguing the legislation which, in the final analysis, must have been held unconstitutional.

COLUMBUS, O.
CITIZEN
APR 3 0 1935

NOT DIXIE'S VOICE

A SMALL group of Southern senators threatens to filibuster the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill to death, just as a similar group killed the Dyer bill 12 years ago.

They may succeed. But if they do the country should know that their specious pleas in behalf of states' rights or chivalry do not echo the sentiments of the whole South.

Organizations representing some 42,000,000 Americans urge passage of this bill. That much of this support comes from south of the Mason-Dixon line may be judged from its approval by many of Dixie's leading papers.

"Its (the Costigan-Wagner bill's) invasion of states' rights should cause no Southern heartburning," says The Norfolk (Va.) Pilot. "There is no such thing, morally speaking, as a reserved right to deal in our own way with a form of collective murder which our own way has uniformly failed to punish."

"It may be," says The Newport News (Va.) Press, "that the anti-lynching bill will not be adopted by the Congress now in session. But if it is not, and lynchings do not stop, it will be adopted by some other Congress; in fact, must be adopted if the machinery of justice is to function."

"Apparently," says The Macon (Ga.) Telegraph, "the mere threat of the federal anti-lynching bill has a wholesome effect, and the time has come when even the South would vote for such a bill."

Southern women, too, have been quick to resent Senator Smith's quaint argument that "lynchings are necessary for womanhood's protection." Scores of letters, telegrams and resolutions from southern women's religious, welfare and club organizations have repudiated the preposterous claim that the South's law is helpless to protect the South's women.

Proponents of this measure claim 50 Senate votes from all over the country and a big majority in the House. Only 20 senators are called irreconcilables. It is neither just nor gallant of them to filibuster against this popular national movement.

Valdosta, Ga. Tribune
May 10. 1935

ANTI-LYNCH LAW

There has been a great deal of shouting about the Costigan Anti-Lynching Bill. All the usual flamboyant effects of political pyrotechnique were turned loose in connection with the measure. It leaves one with the strange wonder of what the shouting was all about.

There was, perhaps, a day when such a measure was needed, and at that time the measure couldn't become law because it would have been a dangerous weapon in the hands of irresponsible haters of the South. Now that a lynching is a rarity, and likely to occur almost anywhere, the measure pops up again.

It is just as well that it was beaten. It would have been an unpopular measure, fraught with menace to many localities, but not especially adverse to southern interests.

Lynching is on the wane. A better adjustment of racial differences in the South is only partly responsible. Basically the reason it has declined is because of the progress of education. It can be ended almost altogether by more education, but not by legislation.

ST. PAUL, MINN
PIONEER PRESS
MAY 3 1935

LYNCH LAW STANDS.

Just as they did in the case of the very similar Dyer bill fifteen years ago, the Southern senators by means of filibustering have forced abandonment of the Wagner-Costigan act against lynching.

Incidentally the success of the obstructive tactics used against the bill shows that abolition of the lame-duck session of Congress has not, as promised, eliminated the filibuster. It was argued that when the arbitrary date of adjournment was lifted, senators then could be allowed to talk until they dropped in their tracks. But in this case the desire of the administration to be getting on with its "must" list of bills led to surrender before the winds of Southern oratory, proving that there are still circumstances under which a filibuster will succeed.

The Wagner-Costigan bill would have imposed severe penalties on local peace officers who fail to protect their prisoners from mobs and provides for damages to the relatives of victims of mobs, to be paid by the city or county where a lynching takes place. Although the law would have applied equally in all states, about 97 per cent of the lynchings in America take place in fourteen Southern states, and 90 per cent of the victims in the South are Negroes. The Southern members therefore put on the shoe that fits so well, and for nearly a week spoke sentimental nonsense about the insult to the glorious South. The truth is, of course, that it is not the bill that insults the South; it is the existence of the horrible crime of lynching that reflects on the South.

The usual argument was also heard that lynching is excusable as a means of preventing crimes against white women. Very complete statistics exist on lynching covering the last 40 years, and it is significant that the accusation of that crime accounts for only a small proportion of the total number of lynchings in that period. And, to add a grim touch, the Southern Commission, composed of a dozen prominent Southerners, reported that "investigations after the lynchings often proved these accusations to have been unfounded." How senators could bring themselves to speak and act in defense of lynch law in the face of that horror is beyond understanding.

Somewhat better grounds for opposing the Wagner-Costigan act is the fact that lynching has been on the decline. Comprehensive statistics run back to 1889 on this crime. Since the high mark of 255 in 1892, the number of lynchings has fallen to as low as 8 in 1932. It rose to 28 in 1933, but last year it had declined again to 15, which is close to the average for the past ten years.

The only sure cure for the lynching evil is the cultivation of so powerful a public opinion against it that the crime dies out of existence. It can be urged with a certain amount of force that the Federal government should not extend its jurisdiction over what is a purely local crime, with the consequence both of arousing fierce sectional resentment and creating a precedent for further extensions of Federal intrusion, at a time when local action is making fairly consistent progress for eradication of the evil.

At any rate, now that the bill is apparently killed for this session, it may be felt that Southerners, and especially senators, owe a duty of redoubling their efforts and their education to stamp out lynching completely. They have contended that there should be no interference. It follows that the South must show that none is needed.

Columbia, S. C. Record
May 7, 1935

Demonstration

There is another thing that ought to be noted about the successful Southern filibuster against the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

It was a demonstration of the fact that the Southern senators if they want to prevent a bill's enactment can do something about it.

If they do not so band themselves together to prevent the enactment of some other bill by threatening to talk until the bill is withdrawn it does not mean that they could not carry out such a threat but that they do not care to oppose the bill.

THE COSTIGAN-WAGNER BILL

WITH the relegating of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill into the temporary ashcan by the senate, it is high time for the race to take an intelligent view of the entire situation with a view of ascertaining exactly how the Negro is effected.

It is our opinion that the passage of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill would be of little, if any, real benefit to the Negro. It would actually be no more than another step toward the summit of a mountain. Naturally, it would be to the race's advantage to have such legislation on the statute books, just as it is nice to have, the 14th and 15th amendments present. It might eventually lead to something of genuine value later on, even as these same amendments may mean something to the voteless Negroes of the sunny South who are railroaded day in and day out to prison and whose hard earned dollars go into the pockets of white politicians who deny them the ballot and vie for the opportunity of insulting this race over the radio, in print and from the public platform.

The nation has had enough experience with unenforceable laws like the Volstead act to realize that a law will be scoffed at if it does not meet with the approval of a section of citizens. The only places where the 18th amendment or the 14th and 15th amendments or the Costigan-Wagner bill could be respected and observed are those places where public sentiment is already overwhelmingly favorable—and in such places that kind of legislation isn't really needed once in the proverbial blue moon.

The Negroes who looked to this proposed bill as a way to end lynching may as well get it into their misguided heads that as long as Dixie wishes to lynch, Dixie will lynch. The remedies will not come from the statute books. There are two possible cures: a growing public consciousness of the very horror and beastliness of the act coming through the works of such organizations as the Commission of Interracial Co-operation, the churches, the schools and the colleges; and the forceful objection of the victims. If Negroes are going to run and hide in terror when the mob forms, what is to prevent the lynchers from carrying out their plans? But if Negroes of a community have let it be understood that fire will be fought with fire, none but the most foolish of would-be mobbists will rush headlong into an cat which may claim their own lives, for after all the lyncher is cowardly and tries to do en masse without danger to himself what he would not dare to do alone.

We do not say that the fight in behalf of an anti-lynching bill should be halted, but rather that we do not look upon the enactment of such a statute as a panacea for the lynching evil. Obviously the passage of the Costigan-Wagner measure would represent an advance in the right direction, and for that reason we would like to see it pass, but as to whether it would actually curb or even deter lynching we have our doubts—and it is not difficult to visualize some sections of the South practicing the crime with greater freedom than ever merely to thumb their noses at the government as did many a drinker in prohibition days.

On the other hand, there are few if any lynchings which could not be punished by the federal government under the recently enacted kidnapping laws, but has Washington yet consented to exercise this power?

WICHITA FALLS, TEX.
TIMES
MAY 1 1935

THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

The New York Herald-Tribune, a paper which can hardly be charged with having undue sympathy for the South or with harboring racial prejudice, raises a point in connection with the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill that comes closer to the heart of the question involved than most of the arguments, hysterical and otherwise, that some southern senators have offered. The Herald-Tribune says:

A lynching is almost invariably a purely local crime. In this respect it differs radically from kidnaping, bank burglary, highway robbery and the like, with their attendant murders, whose perpetrators skip from jurisdiction to jusisdiction. There is not the same excuse to include it in the fast-growing list of offenses to be dealt with by federal authorities.

In the second place, it is an evil that is on the wane. In 1892 there were 255 lynchings; last year there were 15. The curve, though it may waver a bit from year to year, has shown a marked downward tendency for nearly half a century, indicating very clearly the growing popular revulsion against the crime as well as the effectiveness of local statutes.

Given the enormous diversity of customs and conditions in this country, one may always doubt the wisdom of calling on the federal government to solve a local problem. Lynching is a local problem, however widespread may be its practice, and unless the figures lie, it is being solved locally. The process may take longer than the short cut of federal interference, but in the end it is bound to be the more wholesome and effective.

The notion is too widely prevalent that because an objective to be gained is a worthy one, as the stamping out of lynching undoubtedly is, federal legislation is the most desirable means of attaining it. The Costigan-Wagner bill provides an opportunity to combat that notion.

MANHATTAN, KANS.
CHRONICLE
MAY 1 1935

When the Civil War Is Ove

Laudable as the purpose of the anti-lynching bill before the national senate is, sponsors of the measure would better cease their efforts to obtain enactment at this time so that the senate might turn to more important business.

A filibuster, in which the senators from the black belt of America are engaging, prevents either enactment or rejection of the measure and is holding up action on bills of far greater importance.

Anyhow, passage of the bill at this time would stir up bitter sectional hatred in the south which would offset the good that the law might do.

After all, it is the right of the states to make the kind of criminal code they want. If the people of the south are determined to uphold this form of murder let them bear the shame that is theirs.

Later, perhaps, after the Civil war is over, this crime may be abolished.

NEWTON, KANS.
THE KANSAN-REPUBLICAN
MAY 3 1935

One of the objections in the South to the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill was that it provided for damages against a city or county payable to the family of a man lynched by a mob. It also provided that officers of the law were to be held accountable for the safeguarding of prisoners charged with "lynching" crimes. Those are somewhat dangerous provisions where mob law is frequent. Kansas, along with many other states, has its own state anti-mob law, providing for redress and damages in cases where a crowd inflicts injury upon an individual. In some cases the number designated as a mob is pretty low, too. A "mob" in Kansas is five or more, under the revised statutes.

Lynchings-1935
Legislation Relating to.

5063

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
MAY 2 1935

SO THIS IS DEMOCRACY

A LARGE majority in Congress wants to enact a Federal anti-lynching law. A large majority of the citizens of the country favor such a law. This has been so for many years. Then why isn't there a law? Since this is a democracy in which Congress is elected by popular majorities and in which Congress itself acts by majority rule, how could the Senate yesterday throw out the anti-lynching bill and prevent majority rule?

Well, it seems that ours is a democracy in text books and Fourth of July orations but not in the Senate. There, periodically, it is possible to rule by minority dictatorship. The method is not the one of stuffing the ballot box, or of kidnaping or terrorizing the majority, so that the minority can palm itself off as the majority. The method is much simpler. The minority merely decrees that there shall be no vote at all. This is achieved under the rule of unlimited debate by which the minority talks a measure to death. It forces the majority to turn to other emergency legislation acceptable to the minority dictators.

While congratulating the southern senators on the effectiveness of their dictatorship, we venture to raise this question for their consideration: Is it wise, from their point of view, to kick democracy in the face quite so publicly at this particular time?

Granting that they have got away with it for many years, hasn't there been a recent change in the public temper which makes this sort of thing somewhat dangerous? Wouldn't it have been wiser from their point of view, for instance, to give the Negro lynch victim the nominal protection of Federal law and then nullified the law as they nullify the Negro's constitutional right to vote?

We are interested in this question because we understand that these southern senators are very fearful of the spread of radicalism, especially among Negroes. The radicals are said to be telling the Negroes and the poor white share-croppers and mill hands of the South that democracy is a fake, that there is no such thing as representative government in this country, that democracy is only camouflage for dictatorship by their enemies. Aren't those radical agitators just mean enough to prove this point in the minds of ignorant Negroes and whites by citing the dictatorship of those few southern senators thwarting the mass democratic will of the American people and of the majority of Congress?

Admitting, from the point of view of these southern senators, that Negroes must continue to be robbed of constitutional rights, couldn't they find a safer method? After all, the Negroes are one-tenth of the national population and in many places they are a majority. With all this talk of radicalism and some of the oppressed actually demanding their rights, perhaps it would be safer for the country to hold out enough hope of democracy to them to discourage more violent weapons.

Anyway, it may be a matter worth thinking about while these southern senators are patting themselves on the back, secure in their dictatorship—secure for the moment.

SEATTLE, WASH
TIMES
MAY 2 1935

NO FRIENDS OF LYNCHING

STANDING shoulder to shoulder on this, as they have on no other issue, senators from the southern states seem to have put the anti-lynching bill out of the running. This they have done by employing the ancient and generally vexatious device of filibustering. The anti-lynching bill hasn't been finally defeated, but the solid phalanx from the Solid South has proved itself strong enough to prevent further consideration at the present session.

It is scarcely to be doubted that the bill would pass if brought to a vote. Few senators, if any, not even those of the South, would care to risk the inference of being in favor of lynch law. But it would be hasty and unjust to ascribe southern resistance to preference for shameful rowdyism and the privilege of taking the law into their own hands. Southern senators are right to this extent—that the bill as it stands proposes federal invasion of the right of the state to enact and administer its own laws with respect to certain crimes.

The filibuster, at least temporarily successful, has been predicated upon the principle of states' rights, nowhere so jealously cherished as in the South. It happens to be a matter of record that lynchings are less numerous each year; and it is not too much to expect that an increasing respect for law and for the proper processes of law presently may do away with the idea, born of honest desire to end practices altogether evil, that federal intervention affords the only cure.

Asheville, N. C., Times
May 2, 1935

It Is Fair Warning

THE anti-lynching bill, which would have lynched the last anemic survival of state rights, is defeated. Senator Borah's strong argument on the unconstitutionality of this proposed assault on state police power was a big factor in the decision, but nevertheless the Senators opposing have spent some uncomfortable days.

Lynching is a most reprehensible crime. But so is murder, so is house-breaking. Shall we finally surrender to the Central Government all jurisdiction of the criminal law?

If there had been no progress in the struggle against mob violence, there would be more excuse for this recurring attempt to extend the federal authority into the states.

Nevertheless, the Southern states, still the scene of most of these crimes, will prove themselves dumb if they do not see in yesterday's vote the certainty that sooner or later such a law will be written, if there is not still greater progress in preventing lynching and in punishing the perpetrators of the crime.

Athens, Ga., Banner-Herald
May 13, 1935

THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

The anti-lynching bill which was defeated by the senators from the south—that is, the failure of its supporters to get a vote on the measure will remain in status quo, at least, during the present session of congress.

An interesting occurrence, credited to Congressman Mitchell, the only negro member of the lower House of Congress, was his remarks in connection with its passage in which he said: "I was not disturbed about the passage of the anti-lynching bill. Lynchings are declining rapidly and will probably continue to do so, ad so I see no necessity for the measure".

The negro congressman is a native of Alabama. He was born and reared in that state and understands conditions in this section of the country and knew that the bill was directed at the southern states. His views are sound and sane, and, if followed by his colleagues, racial conditions will be improved in this section as well as in other sections of the nation.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
HERALD
MAY 2 1935

Lynching Bill Roll Call

Adjournment Vote 48 to 32, Kills Measure

The Senate roll call yesterday on a motion to adjourn for 20 minutes, which was a parliamentary move to sidetrack the antilynching bill, follows:

For Adjourning, 48

DEMOCRATS, 43

Adams	Hayden
Ashurst	King
Bachman	Lewis
Bailey	Logan
Bankhead	McGill
Barkley	McKellar
Bilbo	Murray
Black	O'Mahoney
Brown	Overton
Bulow	Pittman
Byrd	Pope
Byrnes	Radcliffe
Caraway	Robinson
Clark	Russell
Connally	Sheppard
Dieterich	Smith
Duffy	Thomas (Okla.)
Fletcher	Thomas (Utah)
Glass	Trammell
Gore	Truman
Harrison	Wheeler
Hatch

REPUBLICANS, 4

Borah	Frazier
Cousens	Norris

FARMER-LABOR

Shipstead

Against Adjourning 32

DEMOCRATS, 14

Bulkley	Minton
Burke	Neely
Copeland	Schwellenbach
Costigan	Tydings
Donahey	Van Nuys
Guffey	Wagner
McCarran	Walsh

REPUBLICANS, 17

Austin	Keyes
Barbour	McNary
Capper	Nye
Carey	Schall
Dickinson	Steiwer
Gibson	Townsend
Hale	Vandenberg
Hastings	White
Johnson

PROGRESSIVE, 1

La Follette

GREENSBORO, N. C
NEWS
MAY 2 1935

SURE, THAT'S DIFFERENT.

The bloc of southern senators who have battled so impassionately for how-many days now to prevent a vote on the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill are also amongst the countryside's most avowed believers in and champions of democracy, with either a capital or a lower case d. And the essence of democracy, as deponent has attempted to analyze it from a non-political corner, is majority rule.

Yet, it is this very tenet of democracy which the anti-lynching bill's opponents are violating. They fear that a vote on the measure will bring its passage, that the majority of their colleagues in the senate are against them. Hence their endless dissertations, their Bible readings and their palaver are directed at preventing a vote. They are essaying to talk the bill to death, to thwart the processes of democracy by a filibuster.

Aside from the principle involved here, there is the matter of holding back other highly important measures, measures which the administration, the filibustering senators a vital and proudly proclaiming part of it, has labeled "must" and assured that its own success and the welfare of the nation depend upon their passage. Mr. Roosevelt himself has urged speed; but the interminable talk, actually costing one wonders just how much, goes on and on while the legislative jam behind it becomes more and more acute.

When such senatorial incorrigibles as Huey Pierce Long resorted to similar tactics, holding up the relief bill and measures which had accumulated behind it, they and their dilatory methods were excoriated by some of the self-same statesmen who are now talking their tongues out. But, of course, when one has a pet or political peeve oprograms. Yet, holding company his own, that is a matter which control, social security, banking

GREENSBORO, N. C
NEWS
MAY 6 1935

NOTE ON ORGANIZATION.

Senatorial consideration of the bonus measure is significant not only of itself but because of the legislation which this proposal displaced and is continuing to displace.

After arguing over the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill for a week, the majority finally gave way and capitulated, however temporarily, to the reading of Deuteronomy and other filibuster edification. When this agreement to go on with consideration of other matters was reached, what prompted it? Nothing other than a pre-election urge to do the right thing by the boys. Whether or not lynchings might be thwarted, a few luckless lives saved or local authorities prodded into assumption of their responsibility by Uncle Sam mattered not when contrasted with payment of the bonus. There was an issue which truly can and could break a jam.

But, in breaking the anti-lynching impasse, this rescue measure merely set up another barrier all its own. The galleries and the opportunity will hardly be overlooked by candidates coming up for re-election in 1936. The Patman measure, the Vinson measure and the Harrison measure all have their supporters. Such an opportunity for talk the senate rarely receives. How long it will go on, if a veto occurs, as anticipated, nobody ventures to say. In the meantime those highly important administration measures which Mr. Roosevelt recently grouped under a White House "must" have been as tightly jammed behind the bonus agitation as they were behind the lynching filibuster. And the bonus issue, mind you, was not mentioned at all by the President except in an expression of disapproval and a prediction that it would jeopardize other plans and falls into an entirely different category. Democratic processes or no democratic processes, the end these southern statesmen are assuring by their continued loquaciousness, justifies the means.

NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN PILOT
MAY 3 1935

Slain by Inconsistency

The grim irony which permeated the arguments against the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill continued to the moment of its death. Senator Borah delivered the lethal blow. The filibuster of the Southern Senators might have been successful in the long run—they were still defending the trenches of State rights at the end—but that is at best a guess. About the mortal wound delivered by Senator Borah there is no doubt whatsoever. When he went to war the jig was up. Every argument the Southerners delivered on the high ground of constitutionality and reserved powers and the extension of Federal authority was, in the minds of others, suspect. But when Senator Borah used the same arguments, the situation was radically different.

Yet the irony remains. For this same Senator Borah who took up the cause of the Southern Senators with a denunciation of the spread of the Federal government and defense of the doctrine that the States alone have the authority to handle their lynchers, is the same Senator Borah who only a few years ago was stumping the South in behalf of a greater extension of Federal authority through the prohibition amendment than the anti-lynching bill contemplated.

Then Senator Borah could argue technically from the basis of the Constitution. The amendment was in the National Charter. Strictly speaking, therefore, he stood on that document. But that is a mere technical distinction. Actually, the theoretical objection to attaching the amendment to the Constitution still existed. If it did not belong there, it could not be defended in theory because it was there.

Practically, the objections were even more serious. The Federal invasion of state and individual rights which the prohibition amendment brought in its train were unmistakable. Along with the remainder of the country the South was then feeling the effects of violations of rights regarded prior thereto as sacred. Yet neither Senator Borah nor the Southern Senators—including some of those stirred by the threat of the anti-lynching bill—were then disturbed. They all managed to swallow the prohibition amendment, the unconstitutional searches and seizures, and double jeopardy. Here and there men objected that this program was not contemplated by the Constitution, but they were a scattered few. The great mass accepted the entire philosophy of prohibition, and forgot all about State rights.

The anti-lynching bill is dead, slain by the sword of inconsistency. The States' Righters can breathe more easily, and so, it must be added, can those Senators whose opposition rested in reality on no such ground. Perhaps even in death it has accomplished some good. Those parts of the South which are peculiarly the breeding ground of lynching know now that they have escaped by a close shave. They may understand a little better that if they do not condemn lynching as a foul and despicable crime and do not back up sheriffs who try to carry out their oaths of office, the Costigans and the Wagners may not find a Borah in their path next time. Anti-lynching legislation will revive in Congress as surely as lynching remains a curse of Southern life. The best way to beat it is not to rely on a State rights standard in Washington which everybody knows is commonly used or discarded as circumstances dictate, but to get at the evil of lynching itself. There will be no anti-lynching bills if there are no lynchings.

Lake City, Fla., Reporter
May 3, 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

The Florida House passed three joint resolutions requesting Congress not to pass the Costagan-Wagner bill to outlaw lynching in the United States. Senator Costigan (Colorado) and Senator Wagner (New York) have thus far been blockaded by Southern senators determined to talk the bill to death before it is allowed to pass

Lynchings—1935
Legislation Relating to.

5064

MARSHALL, TEX.
MESSENGER

MAY 2 1935

The Anti-Lynching Debate

As is usually the case when an anti-lynching bill is discussed in Congress, the Senate debate on the Wagner-Costigan bill has been characterized more by heat than by light. Members from the South seem unable to discuss the question dispassionately, as was pointed out recently by the Greensboro (N. C.) Daily News, in an editorial reprinted on this page of The Daily News said:

Honestly, we, who have never lived or moved and had being anywhere else save right down here in the midst of those who believe in the high hand as the savior of womanhood, have never met more than half a dozen Southern gentlemen to whom we would delegate the right to lynch.

None of these, we might add, was, had been or expected to be right soon a member of Congress.

What are the facts about lynching? Briefly, they are: Since 1882, there have been 5071 lynchings in the United States, and these by no means have been confined to the Southern states. In the past 35 years, the records show fewer than 1 per cent of these crimes have been followed by prosecution. In only 12 instances have convictions resulted. These figures bear out what everyone knows—that it is next to impossible for local government to deal with lynching.

In 1922, when the Dyer anti-lynching bill was before Congress, it was defeated by a filibuster of Southern Senators who contended that lynching is a matter for local government alone. Since then, 280 lynchings have occurred, with a prosecution record of approximately zero. It is interesting to observe that while the Dyer bill was pending lynchings decreased; that when the agitation for Federal action weakened after the defeat of the bill, lynchings rose in number. The same phenomena occurred in connection with the Berger bill of 1928. If the mere threat of Federal action has a salutary effect upon lynching, passage of a law permitting Federal intervention under certain circumstances might well make lynching one of the rarest of offenses.

The Wagner-Costigan bill has its constitutional basis in the right of all persons to equal protection under our laws. Willful failure on the part of peace officers to protect prisoners from mobs or to arrest persons who had taken part in a lynching would be made a felony. If prosecutions were not commenced by the State within 30 days after commissions of the offense, the bill would empower the Federal Government to act.

Under a further provision, which is regarded by many as the most powerful feature of the bill, a county in which a lynching occurred would be held liable to the injured person or to his heirs or legal representatives in event of his death. The recoverable damage would be not less than $2,000 or more than $10,000. It is believed that to place financial responsibility on counties would have the effect of cooling off the ardor of would-be lynchers who are also taxpayers.

Is this measure constitution? Senator Connally of Texas says no and quotes numerous authorities to prove it. Senators Costigan and Wagner, who have given much thought and labor to the proposed legislation, say yes. They also cite numerous authorities. Certainly, the constitutional question will never be settled in Congress. It is one that must await the decision of the courts.

The question for Congress is whether or not an attempt is to be made to deal with an evil by which more than 5,000 persons since 1882 have been deprived of their legal rights; an evil which has reached heights in the United States duplicated nowhere else in the civilized or uncivilized world; an evil which has resulted in the death of many innocent persons; an evil which menaces respect for our courts and our processes of justice.

We believe it to be the duty of Congress to act.—Post

Palmetto Fla News
May 2, 1935

The anti-lynching bill in Congress is one of the most unfair propositions that anybody ever tried to perpetrate upon a free people. The idea of penalizing law-abiding people because they do not risk their lives in trying to save the hide of a criminal who deserves death in most instances is absurd. It's bad enough for officers of the law to risk their lives in trying to protect criminals from irresponsible mobs, but it's ridiculous and not right to penalize the property owner also in the effort to make him risk his life in such a cause. If Congress would make it possible for criminals to pay the penalty for their crimes instead of being set free on technicalities, then there would not be so much lawlessness and lynching.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
OBSERVER

MAY 2 1935

THE SENATOR VEHEMENT.

"This bill is not going to pass: we will fight it out if it takes all summer."

Thus SENATOR BAILEY pulls the famed GRANT epigram to state his attitude to the measure proposed by two Democratic Senators that the Federal Government take the administration of lynching laws out of the hands of the States.

SENATOR BAILEY'S objection is vehement. That of other Southern Senators is, more or less, of the same virility.

It is not, of course, that these men condone mob murder. They look upon it as being a foulness as detestable in their eyes as it is in the eyes of all decent people in the South.

But they accept this attempt to foist a Federal measure upon the Southern States as no more than a play and they resent the effort as a gesture to discredit the integrity of law enforcement on the part of local units of Government in the South, by saddling a Federal statute upon us.

There is sanity in that position. And to be added to that soundness of view is the argument, in addition, that if the States ineffectually enforce the anti-lynching laws they now have on their books, the Federal Government would no more effectually enforce them.

Juries in Federal courts are either the same or duplicates in temperament and attitude and civic conceptions as those who serve on juries in State courts.

And if the South, with its State courts and juries composed of men who are lax in the enforcement of State laws, are inefficient by that token may one judge that the same type of men serving in Federal courts would be any more rigid and diligent in enforcement of Federal laws relating to the same crime?

BEAUMONT, TEX.
ENTERPRISE
APR 24 1935

THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

The discovery said to have been made b southern democrats that Senators Costigan an Wagner are determined to force action on thei federal anti-lynching bill is expected merely t stiffen the resistance of the south's representa tives in congress to this measure.

There may be some politics mixed up in the anti-lynching bill. Senator Wagner would bene fit politically by enactment of a measure spon sored by him and supported more or less vio lently by the negro organizations of the coun try, including those which have some politica power in New York. Harlem is in Senator Wag ner's bailiwick, and Harlem is a race-conscious place. Senator Costigan, however, hails fron a state where advocacy of an anti-lynchin bill could not help him politically.

The southern press, along with the southern members of congress, have long opposed a fed eral law against lynching, for the reason tha the south still believes in state rights. Th south does not condone lynching. No reputabl southern newspaper has ever advocated lynch ing, and none ever will. The southern news papers have denounced lynching for years, an so have southern men and women in all walk of life.

But delegating police powers to the federa government is not the way to stop lynching. A further invasion of state rights by the fed eral government is opposed by the southern people. They believe, and rightly, no doubt, tha this is a matter the states must handle, with out federal interference. Running to the federal government for a solution of every questior that arises is getting to be an obsession and a national habit. Centralization of authority in Washington has been carried to such an ex treme the "unscrambling" of federal bureau cracy is even now a hopeless task.

Lynching, which is not a sectional crime, can and will be stopped by the states—when the American people become more law-abiding This condition of affairs is much to be desired but will not be hastened by enacting federal laws that impair the sovereignty of the states

LYNCHBURG, VA.
NEWS
MAY 3 1935

BRAZEN HYPOCRISY

The anti-lynching bill now before congress defines as lynching a mur der perpetrated by "an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority of law for the purpose of killing or injuring any person in the custody of a peace officer, or suspected of, or charged with, or convicted of the commission of any crime." Commenting, the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot says:

That definition is broad enough to include killings committed by racketeering gangs in the west or by strikers or strike breakers in the east. Yet not a single senator from these sections has become disturbed about the threatened invasion of any state's police power.

If the definition is as broad as that then the definition does not accurately, or approximately describe lynching. If no eastern or western senator has become disturbed by the threat to the police power of the states it might be said that the explanation is that western and eastern senators are not notoriously interested in the federal system of government. They are descendants of soldiers who tried to and virtually succeeded in shooting states rights, powers of states, to pieces. And one need not be a cynic to point out that Negroes there have votes. A simpler explanation, however, is available. It is that senators from western and eastern states know that no such broad definitions will ever be made by the federal courts in those sections. When three or more gangsters murder rival gang members, or three or more strikers or strike-breakers murder a scab or a unionist, they will be tried for murder in the state courts—if they are tried at all. If three or more whites in a southern or, mayhap, a border state, murder a man, especially if the man be a Negro, they will be tried in the federal courts as lynchers. A lynching is a murder committed by more than one person south of the Mason and Dixon line. Were it otherwise the senators now so complacent would be alarmed. They wouldn't want this bill and they wouldn't have it. But they know it to be the truth that the broad definition given by the bill is a joke. They know that it was the truth that one of the sponsors outside of congress told when he blurted out that the bill was intended to protect those victimized on account of race, creed or color. That is the intention and that is the way it would work out in practice. Victims of any other than the Negro race in any other than the southern section would have to be content with the protection of the state courts.

All that was brought out clearly in the senate debate on the bill, during the senate filibuster if that term is demanded. It was brought out, too, that, according to the Wickersham report thousands of prisoners are beaten, tortured and maimed by police in the administration of the "third degree" in many cities and that in the home city of one of the authors of the bill hundreds were so mistreated and the threat was made that an amendment would be offered to protect this segment of the "poor and the humble" for which so much solicitude is expressed by advocates of the bill. If there were any chance of such amendment being adopted we would hear something, probably, even about local self-government, from the eastern and western senators, and if it were adopted we would find them falling over themselves to defeat the bill. Neither this amendment nor any other designed to make real the pretended definition or to extend protection to any other class than that with a lot of votes could pass, of course. That isn't the idea at all of the sponsors and advocates of the measure.

Even so there is no mourning among many of the bill's supporters because the filibuster conducted against it has proved temporarily successful and that the measure has been side-tracked. What little jar there was to their complacency was that in spite of the determined opposition of a group of senators the measure might be enacted into law. They did not really want it; all they wanted was the votes they hoped to get for supporting it. If the filibuster had failed and the bill had been passed their hope was not, as in former cases, such as that of the bonus bill, that the president would veto it, or agree to one of his famous compromises, but that the supreme court would throw the abortion out of the window. It is not likely that the measure will come up again at this session. Credit for sponsoring it has been achieved; there would be no sense in running renewed risk that the thing might be passed and signed by the president. It will better serve as a vote catcher another time.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
MAY 3 1935

Defeat of Antilynching Bill

The defeat of the antilynching bill in the Senate is said by some nearby observers to mean the revival of states' rights; it is equally fair to say that it means the revival of states' barbarism.

The Republican national platform of 1928 declared in favor of "a federal antilynching law so that the full influence of the federal government may be wielded to exterminate this hideous crime." No Democratic national platform has ever advanced so far; and even the Republicans in 1932 sidestepped the lynching issue for a feeble substitute reaffirming the party's traditional friendship for the Negro.

With neither party now committed by its latest declaration of principles to a federal antilynching law, it may be cause for surprise, first, that the bill now beaten in the Senate was sponsored by two Democrats, Wagner of New York and Costigan of Colorado; second, that the bill got so far as to occasion such a rumpus. For several days the Senate was virtually tied on the question of sidetracking it. The determination of a group of southern senators to filibuster against it, if necessary, disclosed their fear that, if squarely put to a vote on its merits, the bill would pass.

The constitutional basis for the bill is much sounder than that of much other legislation that has reached the federal statute book and survived a review by the courts. The 14th amendment declares that all persons born or naturalized in the United States are citizens of the United States as well as of the states wherein they reside; and further: "Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

When a state fails or neglects to prevent a lynching within its borders, it fails or neglects to comply with the requirements imposed upon it by the 14th amendment. The theory of the Wagner-Costigan bill is that the federal government has power to protect persons so unfortunate as to fall into the clutches of lynching mobs, or to penalize local authorities who surrender to mob action.

Senator Borah in this week's debate finally announced his opposition to the bill on the constitutional ground that it would have "annihilated all state sovereignty" and "have broken down state lines completely." We prefer the constitutional law of Senators Costigan and Wagner. And curious it is that such a contrast should be worked out between two northern Democrats and an eminent northern Republican.

Charleston, S. C. News & Courier
April 29, 1935

The Consistent Senators

No one can justly impute inconsistency or party disloyalty to Senators Bachman and Logan, Southern Democrats in the senate, of Tennessee and Kentucky, in voting for the Costigan-Wagner "anti-lynching," or anti-Southern, bill. If this bill is not openly an "administration measure" it is introduced by Democrats and supported by Democrats of the West and North. If the president is not favorably disposed toward it, he gives no sign to the contrary.

The bill is in perfect harmonw with the centralization policies of the national Democratic party, to which the supreme court of the United States is stoutly adhering.

While we have no way of knowing how Messrs. Ickes, Tugwell, Hopkins, Walker, Frankfurter and Miss Perkins feel about it (they have not spoken), we are pretty sure that they are enthusiastic for it. James Farley is the one truly great New Dealer probably scratching his head. He need not worry; the South is all right, it won't secede from Five Billion Dollars.

Whatever Democratic inconsistency appeared in the vote on this bill was exhibited by the Southern senators supporting the New Deal.

The consistent Southern senators were Byrd, Glass, and Bailey. They are not New Dealers.

Bachman and Logan cannot be accused of turning their backs on the national Democratic party, party of Costigan of Denver and Wagner of New York city.

The Costigan-Wagner bill was born Republican, it was the Dyer bill. Mr. Dyer represented the Republican negro district of St. Louis.

Lynchings-1935
Legislation Relating to

5065

SPRINGFIELD, MO.
NEWS
MAY 3 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL EXHIBITS STRENGTH OF SOUTHERN BLOC

Southern solidarity in the senate on any moot question means a virtual veto on that particular legislation. There are enough southern votes, even leaving out so-called border states such as Maryland, to block action utterly. Even the modest senate cloture rule, adopted with so much hesitation, could not be invoked against so substantial a minority.

That being true, exactly what Senators Costigan and Wagner as authors of the anti-lynching bill thought to profit by endeavoring to force consideration of the measure in the senate is not easy to puzzle out. They were on notice by a large and seasoned group of senate long-distance talkers that the bill not only could not pass but would not be permitted to reach a parliamentary roll call vote. Yet Costigan forced the issue. Why?

Frankly, the Capital does not know. There is nothing about the public records of either sponsor of the bill to disclose motives. Immediate personal campaign exigencies hardly can be involved. Wagner is not up for election again until '38. Being foreign-born, the senate or a governorship is the constitutional limit of his political ambitions.

Costigan is up next year; but why should anti-lynching legislation have a special appeal in Colorado? Lynch law has not ruled in that state much, unless it was back in frontier days. If Senator Costigan dreams of party promotion, antagonizing the democracy of the solid south would not seem a reasonable way of trying to make those dreams come true.

And, if some of their southern colleagues are right about what sort of a door the Costigan-Wagner bill would open to federal direct intervention in the police affairs of the states, the two authors of the measure were taking special risks. They are acclaimed as the leading senate friends of organized labor, of labor generally. They share that with Black of Alabama, father of the 30-hour week bill. And Black told them:

"The bill as it is written would be the greatest weapon to opponents of organized labor extended to them since the beginning of this government. In the hands of their enemies it could strike them (labor organizations) to death. I cannot understand why the great labor organizations have failed to see what this bill would do to them."

The answer to Black's mystification is easy. If organized labor's legislative watchdogs in Washington had the least notion that so drastic a measure of federal intervention in state police activities could pass, they would have rallied to see to it beyond question that it had no anti-strike or anti-picketing flavor.

They would not have been content for a moment to rest on the constitutional argument against it if it, as Black contended, would more than undo all that has been accomplished in the way of anti-injunction legislation to curb federal court activities in labor strikes. Organized labor's seeming indifference to any such bill can be viewed only as due to a certainty that it could not be enacted anyhow—so why bother with it?

TIMES
Kingsport
MAY 5 1935

AN UN-AMERICAN BILL

The despicable Costigan-Wagner anti lynching bill was definitely side-tracked in the senate last week after Senator Borah of Idaho had assailed it as embodying a principle that would "utterly break down all state sovereignty." When the senate voted to adjourn Thursday the hated bill lost its preferred position in the order of business and it is unlikely that it will again loom as a threat during the present session.

We deplore the senate rules which make possible a filibuster, enabling a few senators to hold up the order of business of the United States senate indefinitely. However, if ever a filibuster were justifiable then it was to be forgiven and even commended in the case of this anti-lynching bill.

This bill, introduced by two of the senate's most unpopular extremists, Senator Costigan of Colorado and Senator Wagner of New York, was a direct and open insult directed at the southern states. We have no doubt but that it was purposed as such.

Briefly the measure would provide federal penalties for officers who failed to protect prisoners, and worse still would make counties liable for damages if a lynching should occur within their confines.

The bill is obviously undemocratic and un-American. It is a direct challenge to states' rights. If enacted it would, as the veteran Senator Borah points out, utterly break down all state sovereignty. Moreover it would be patently unfair in its application. We deplore lynchings, of course. We regret that they have ever occurred to blacken the escutcheon of our country—just as we regret all crime. But suppose a county were to be fined for a lynching occurring within it. That would mean that the taxpayers of the county would be fined, for financially speaking the taxpayers are the county. In short, honest citizens and taxpayers, who had no part in the lynching and doubtless deplored it, would be fined as a result of it. Could any proposition be more utterly despicable?

We say that the measure is an insult to the south because of the fact that the majority of the lynchings occur in southern states. But it is equally true that most of the gang murders, kidnapings and other atrocities occur in the northern cities. It would be just as fair to fine a county in which a kidnaping, a murder, or any other crime of gang origin should occur. Most of the racketeering takes place in the east and middle west. Would Senator Wagner favor a federal bill which would impose "damages" upon any county in which an organized racket was carried on? We do not think so. Many of the bank robberies and highway robberies are perpetrated in the western states. Would Senator Costigan support a measure which would fine counties when robberies occurred in their confines? Certainly he would not. Then why are these two gentlemen so eager to enact federal legislation which would be objectionable to the southern states?

Senator Wagner of New York is and always has been a bitter enemy of the south. His activity in regard to this anti-lynching bill is unwarranted and unjustified, and should be resented by every southern man and woman. Moreover, it should be resented by the American people generally who have the rights of states and the rights of taxpayers at heart, and who believe in fair play.

EL DORADO, KANS.
TIMES
APR 30 1935

THE LYNCHING PROBLEM

New York Herald-Tribune:

Of all the forms of lawlessness that have disgraced America in the eyes of the civilized world that of lynching is undoubtedly the most abominable. It is so for the simple reason that other comparable crimes are either the work of demented or depraved individuals or of gangs without the pale of organized society, while your lynching mob usually includes a fair proportion of citizens of the kind normally regarded as respectable. It is their betrayal of the state and of their own decency that gives the final hideous touch to the atrocious business.

Little wonder, therefore, that from time to time Congress has had to face the proposal to put an end to the evil through Federal action. Just now the Senate is in the throes of a passionate debate over the Costigan-Wagner bill. This measure would make it a Federal offense, heavily punishable, for local peace officers to refuse or fail to protect prisoners in their custody from mob violence. It would also provide for financial damages to the relatives of victims against the counties or cities, or both, in which lynchings are perpetrated, the damages to be collected in a Federal court. In the main it follows the lines of the Dyer anti-lynching bill, which had Congress in a similar ferment thirteen years ago.

Its opponents have called it unconstitutional, but mistakenly, we believe. Since the Fourteenth Amendment forbids any state to deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, excellent authority has held that Congress has the right to pass legislation penalizing failure to give such protection. Neither with the bill's objective nor with its constitutionality can there be serious quarrel. Nor need we join our Southern statesmen in shedding bitter tears over its implied insult to the South. As Senator Costigan has observed: "Lynching has been practiced in every part of the nation. The evil is in no sense to be regarded as sectional."

However, the bill does raise a fundamental question of governmental policy. In the first place, a lynching is almost invariably a purely local crime. In this respect it differs radically from kidnaping, bank burglary, highway robbery and the like, with their attendant murders, whose perpetrators skip from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. There is not the same excuse to include it in the fast-growing list of offenses to be dealt with by the Federal authorities. In the second place, it is an evil that is on the wane. In 1892 there were 255 lynchings; last year there were 15. The curve, though it may waver a bit from year to year, has shown a marked downward tendency for nearly half a century, indicating very clearly the growing popular revulsion against the crime as well as the effectiveness of local statutes.

Given the enormous diversity of customs and conditions in this country, one may always doubt the wisdom of calling upon the Federal government to solve a local problem. Lynching is a local problem, however widespread may be its practice, and, unless the figures lie, it is being solved locally. The process may take longer than the short cut of Federal interference, but in the end it is bound to be the more wholesome and effective.

Columbia, Tenn., Daily Herald
May 8 1935

THE BONUS AGAIN.

Now that the anti-lynching bill is out of the way, the Senate bids fair to get down to business and catch up with the House in acting on measures now on the calendar, to the end that adjournment may be taken in early summer.

The first major measures to be considered is the bonus, a controversial question for more than ten years, and more and more of a political football each year.

The Herald has long been opposed to cash payment of the bonus, as unwarranted class legislation, and as a financial burden that the nation should not have to bear, if paid in cash, and a dangerous expedient if paid through inflation methods.

But the bonus has dragged along now to the point that it must be disposed of, one way or another, to clear the air for important matters, and to rid the nation of the inflation menace which will keep on as long as this measure is pending.

There are three chief plans offered. The Patman bill, passed by the House, provides for inflation. The Vinson bill, supported by the American Legion, leaves the matter of payment up to the Congress. Either will be vetoed by the President, it is claimed.

The Harrison compromise provides for part cash and part bonds. According to its sponsor, it will not be vetoed. To rid the nation of a question too long agitated, it would be well for both branches to pass this bill, at the same time providing the additional taxes it will take to pay its additional cost.

We say this realizing that passage of the bonus will simply speed the time when pensions, and costly ones will be enacted in favor of the war veterans.

We say it, however, in view of the fact that the American nation, under the leadership of President Roosevelt and in the passage by Congress of the worlds relief bill, is set on a course of spending its way back to prosperity. We have very grave doubts that this government can spend the nation back into prosperity by simply going into debt for projects both useful and useless, in an effort to make work. But we are on that program. For it to succeed, even its most ardent advocates admit, it must be given a reasonable trial.

The basis of the program is to distribute cash throughout the nation. The bonus will be a controversy until it is paid, and unless it is paid now in a reasonably safe and sane way, will probably be paid later by a much wilder and more dangerous method. Therefore, let it be paid now, with taxes levied to care for the additional cost, so that this agitation can end and this money be put into circulation now.

The holders of the certificates, who cash them, rather than keep them as insurance, will probably be worse off than they are now, in the long run, but they are grown men ,and should be allowed to do as they see fit with their own, so if they want to cash in their insurance instead of keeping it for the proverbial rainy day, that is their business, and no argument that they will waste their money is sound. The government itself is wasting plenty of money these days.

Therefore, let us have an end to the bonus agitation by passage of the Harrison bill, prompt action by Congress one way or another on other matters and the adjournment so much sought and so much needed for the good of the nation.

Leavenworth, Kans.
TIMES
MAY 3 1935

SENATE FILIBUSTER OVER.

The long filibuster against the anti-lynching bill is over at last, and the United States Senate can move onward to the consideration of other measures of pressing importance, which have been held back while the bitter discussion waged on and on about this bill which the southern senators are opposing stubbornly.

That the anti-lynching bill has been up against such unyielding opposition is no indication that the senators blocking its passage favor communities taking the law into their own hands to avenge crimes. As framed, the bill consitutes one of the most sweeping break-downs of the barriers which prevent the federal government encoaching on the rights of the states to enforce the laws within their own borders.

Under the anti-lynch bill, if a state has not within thirty days apprehended those guilty of participation in a lynching, the government can take it as evidence that the state officials are not diligent in their duty in the matter, and can come in, make arrests and try the suspects under state laws. And whenever the federal government begins coming in to the various states and trying men under, not federal laws but state laws, it constitutes an infringement of states' rights that is unthinkable. It would be only a step from lynching cases to interference in cases of all other types until gradually. law enforcement of all kind might be usurped by Washington and state courts become but puppets to be set aside at will by government officials.

PORTLAND, ORE
OREGONIAN
MAY 3 1935

Failure of Anti-Lynching Law

Mr. Mallon, in his article on this page today, describes the method being followed by the senate in the strangulation of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, which came before that body with the president's approval. The administration leaders secretly conspire toward the filibuster, and the bill cannot reach a vote.

However, no one need fret over the loss of the bill. It is true that America has given lynch law to the world, and that the world points the finger of shame at us for it. It is true that state officers are slow to go after mob leaders, that jurors too often sympathize with the mobsters and that the guilty too frequently escape.

But a law permitting the federal courts to take jurisdiction where the state courts fail would be of doubtful effectiveness. It would be next to impossible to decide when such failure had taken place. There would be growing irritation between the states and the nation, with the nation constantly assuming to itself greater and greater legal power. The present tendency to centralization would be carried forward apace. And even when the federal courts did interfere, they would conduct trials in the same districts where the crimes occurred, and the juries would be from the same group of citizens as the juries for the state courts.

Besides, the number of lynchings has been tending downward for years past—an evidence that the law-abiding spirit has been growing among the people. It is doubtful if morality can be imposed from above, and interference by the federal government at this late date might do far more harm than good. The fact that mobs deserve all the penalties prescribed in the Wagner-Costigan bill, and the lax states deserve the loss of jurisdiction, is not the whole of the matter. There remains the danger of too great a concentration of power in federal hands, and the danger of bringing about a period of lawlessness through the invasion of state affairs and the seizure of groups of citizens.

Lynchings-1935
Legislation Relating to.

5066

Columbia, S. C. State
May 6, 1935

The South and the Anti-Lynching Bill.

During that protraded session of the senate, in which Southern senators rallied so courageously around the old Constitution's flag in fighting the bill to give the federal government authority to operate against lynchers, it was moving to hear them proclaim their unfaltoring belief in the rights of the states to manage their own affairs; their changeless adherence to that constitution which recognizes those rights—and so on and so forth.

Impartial and judicious observers whose opinions we have read, assert that the fight against the anti-lynching bill had not degenerated into a filibuster before it was won by the entry of Senator Borah on the side of its opponents. He declared the proposal to be unconstitutional, and therefore the proponents of the measure abandoned the field. Said impartial observers declare also that for the first time in many moons there was a real debate in the senate and that the Southern senators were impressive in their defense of the constitution. Then entered the senatorial heavy artillery from Idaho, and the tide of battle turned in favor of the Southern forces.

But there is wonder whether the victory is so complete as it seems. There are some who surmise that Borah, the constitutionatist, having got the Southerns to declare themselves so pronouncedly for the constitution and its works and implications, will in future times use this record to put them on the spot when other constitutional issues come before the senate, and Southern statesmen are not so keen to have lines drawn by the constitution.

It is also surmised that when the supporters of the anti-lynching bill surrendered at discretion they were smiling. And why? Because they had made their desired point. They had, by the record, assured the Negro voters of North, East and West, where their votes count, that they were fighting for their cause, and had equally demonstrated that the Democratic party, as represented by Southern senators, had fought them to a finish. So far as political effect is concerned, as much was accomplished as if their bill had passed. And when they go upon the hustings next summer in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois and elsewhere they will produce the record of votes in congress as evidence that in many other matters when it seemed expedient that neither state rights nor the constitution be emphasized by Southern representatives, they were not emphasized. Indeed, it has long been recognized as a different thing to eat one's cake and still possess the cake.

It was asserted that this anti-lynching bill was "aimed at the South." And the more truth in that assertion the more disgrace to the South. It should be the effort of every civilizing influence in the South to so work for the effectiveness of the laws and the courts, made and established under our state constitutions, and made and administered by the whites of the South, that no future anti-lynching bill truthfully can be declared to be "aimed at the South."

Public opinion in the South can be aroused to effect the change. And the call for that change is the call of civilization.

Edgefield, S. C. Advertiser
May 8, 1935

Records Indicate Lynching Is Waning in United States

Washington, April 26.—Lynching is on its way out of the United States: to that all disputants over the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill in the senate as well as the figures offered by both parties, agree.

Whether mob violence should and could be given its quietus by a new federal enactment or whether the growth of public opinion should be permitted to deal with the matter as it has been doing, is the essential issue that has kept the senate in a turmoil for three days, and stopped all other business.

Figures on lynchings for five-year intervals, compiled from a table furnished the senate by Senator Josiah M. Bailey (D.) of North Carolina and prepared by the Tuskegee Institute of Alabama (Negro), show the gradual disappearance of a practice equally abhorred by leaders of all sections. The table follows:

Year	Lynching.
1882	113
1887	120
1892	231
1897	158
1902	92
1907	60
1912	63
1917	39
1922	57
1927	16
1932	8

In 1934 the number of lynchings was 15, Senator Bailey said, and since 1927 the average has been under 20. In emphatic language he argued against federal interference in a matter in which the growth of state sentiment was proving effective.

Senator Robert F. Wagner (D) of New York, on the other hand, argued the bill would encourage this very sense of local responsibility which its southern opponents endorsed. It would make a county in which a lynching occurred liable to payment of compensation of between $2,000 and $10,000; besides imposing penalties on local officials who condoned or permitted the offense.

As typical of the views of southern leaders, Senator Bailey said that he was confident "we have been making progress toward the abolition of lynching. As the years go by as a rule, though there may be some exceptions, the number of lynchings is becoming smaller and smaller. Why is that true? It is because the people are becoming educated to abhor lynching. It is because local officers are having a higher sense of their responsibilities."

Thomasville, Ga., Times-Enterprise
April 26, 1935

THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

There is a bitter debate going on in the United States senate against the lynching bill that is now up for consideration. This bill would put a ban on lynching by the federal officials the power to penalize counties and their officers in the event that a lynching does occur, provided the officer has made no effort to prevent it, the type and sort of effort that might involve mass lynching and bloodshed.

There are several southern senators who are fighting the bill on the ground that it is a sectional matter and one that is intended to place a rope around the neck of the southern counties rather than to confine its purposes solely to the idea of preventing lynching or at least to invoke all of the powers of government in behalf of the accused persons.

This lynching bill is a matter of no serious import comparable to other matters that are being discussed. It is a flare up that has no place in the present situation and although designed ostensibly to do away with a very pernicious condition, particularly in the south, the bill has carried the federal authority too far and taken away the sovereign rights of the people of the states to work out their own destiny.

ORLANDO, FLA.
SENTINEL
MAY 4 1935

The Lynching Bill

THE NORTH IS likely to misunderstand the south's opposition to the anti-lynching bill.

In the first place, there was no need for re-opening this question and scrubbing the south's dirty linen out in the public; in the second place, there is quite more lynching and mob killing in the north than there is in the south.

Most southerners do not, whether the north is inclined to believe it or not, sanction lynchings.

They opposed the proposed law simply because it would give to the federal government snooping powers which likely would bring back the days of carpet-bagging; when corrupt agents and officials of the federal government used their offices to desecrate the south, pollute its offices with nadir forms of humanity and lower the dignity of government.

The south has a problem in the negro. But it has never admitted, nor do we now admit, that we are unable to cope with this problem. As we have always viewed it, and being from Mississippi we have always been pretty close to it, it is mostly a problem of relief for the negro rather than one of lynching or attempting to bulldoze him.

Once in a great while, particularly in the farming sections of what some of our northern critics prefer to allude to as the deep south, a negro is lynched. We believe lynching is unnecessary. But we do not wish to see an espionage system set up to deal with the matter, any more than we would want to see an organization of spies created in the north to hunt out lynchers up there. Let the courts continue to handle these matters. Why stir up sectional hatreds?

NASHVILLE, TENN.
EVENING TENNESSEAN
MAY 6 1935

Lynching Declines.

The South gets credit for defeat of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, but it is worth noting that the filibuster was broken and the measure side-tracked through an eleventh hour attack by that famous liberal from Idaho, Senator Borah.

Like most sane people, Mr. Borah is opposed to lynching as brutal and uncivilized, but at the same time he is a stickler for state sovereignty in handling local crime. It was on the constitutional phase of the legislation that he based his attack, and, once his onslaught had been completed, there were enough Democrats and Republicans to put the bill to sleep.

The constitutional phases of the Costigan-Wagner bill are certainly open to consideration, and though the authors believe it will stand the test, they are opposed by equally eminent authorities who say it goes too far in violating the rights of states.

However, the Wagner-Costigan fight, under way for many months, has had certain definite and admirable results, the chief of which is that it has served to bring to the minds of all, and particularly the South, the evils of lynching, and has unquestionably led to a diminution of such practices. Faced by the possibility of federal intervention, communities have been slower to mob violence, and state officials have been strengthened in their desire to give protection to those endangered.

The South, where the mob most frequently wreaks its vengeance, was aligned against the anti-lynching bill; but in view of the fact that lynching is no longer a sectional problem, it is not surprising that this section was supported by other spokesmen.

Lynching is not always aimed against the black man guilty of a certain crime. It springs up in every section, and for various reasons. We have seen the farmers of the Middle West forming mobs for economic reasons, and we have seen the negroes of the Harlem running rampant because of alleged economic discrimination. In the west also there has been a virtual application of lynch law to Japanese farmers because of combined racial and economic feeling.

Under given conditions, the tendency of the mass mind is to become inflamed to a point where reason and judgment are abandoned. But there are signs of improvement in this respect, and it is to be hoped they will continue. Constant education is having its effect, and the greatest factor in that education is the determination of law enforcement officers and agencies to live up to pledges they assume upon accepting their responsibilities. The oaths to respect and enforce the law are required by the people in their saner moments; they should never be abrogated because a small and violent group suddenly decides they are no longer applicable.

SPRINGFIELD, MO.
NEWS
MAY 7 1935

THE POWER OF BORAH

There is no question that Senator Borah speaks with great authority in the senate on constitutional questions. His views influence those of some of his colleagues. Yet it would be a far stretch of fancy to imagine that it was merely Borah's challenge of the Wagner anti-lynching bill which ended victoriously the prolonged southern filibuster against taking up the measure.

It looked that way, admittedly. One moment the senate was still locked as fast in the long-distance talking campaign of the southerners as it had been for days. It still was in the legislative day of April 15 when the break came on May 1. Two solid weeks of time had been all but lost legislatively in discussion of a measure that had little prospect of coming to a vote.

Then Borah, prodded by Costigan, had his say. The next minute the senate voted 48 to 32 to do what it had repeatedly refused by a single vote margin to do in the preceding two weeks. It ditched the anti-lynching bill.

Was it Borah's forcefully stated view that the bill was unconstitutional that switched half a dozen non-southern—and one southern—democratic votes? It was not. It was his statement that he would not continue to vote "indefinitely" for the parliamentary procedure that kept the bill before the senate. That was the crackup for which democratic leadership had been waiting.

Borah contributed even more to the cause against a federal anti-lynching law when Costigan drew him into a first hand narration of what happened to the very similar Dyer bill passed by the house in 1922 only to be smothered also in a southern senate filibuster. The Idaho senator was a member of the senate judiciary committee then. He headed, most reluctantly, because his mind was foreclosed on the constitutionality question, a sub-committee that found it unconstitutional

It was his recollection that the full committee "practically unanimously" joined in that view, but subsequently six committeemen "changed their position" for the stated purpose of obtaining a full discussion on the senate floor, although still confident the bill was unconstitutional.

Selma, Ala. Times
May 10, 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL DEBATE

The Costigan-Wagner antil-lynching bill, sidetracked by a filibuster in the United States Senate, was supported by 70 per cent of the newspapers commenting. The measure was opposed by 30 per cent of the commenting papers.

All but a small proportion of the opposition was from newspapers of the South.

The anti-lynching measure is viewed by most commentators as a proposed enchoachment on state rights, but the arguments in favor of the bill are based on the wide differences of opinion that exist in some states as to the justification for lynching as a practical means of contending with crime.

Favoring the measure, the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot argues that "ther is no such thing, morally speaking, as a reserved right to deal in our own way with a form of collective murder which our own way has failed to punish."

The Houston Post contends that, "had the state made a practice of 'cracking down' on mob murders after each lynching, there would have been no occasion for action at Washington."

"Apparently the mere threat of the Federal anti-lynching bill," in the judgment of the Macon Telegraph, "has a wholesome effect."

The Birmingham Age-Herald warns that "the continuance of lynching makes Federal legislation quite inevitable."

The Miami News feels sure that "a Federal measure ending virtual immunity would put a powerful check on the mob spirit."

The Kansas City Star suggests that "the vital consideration is that mob violence shall be condemned."

The St. Joseph (Mo.) News Press argues: "It is well within the power of the states, as states, to prevent these outcroppings of barbarism. Their failure to act adequately explains the repeated efforts to put through a Federal anti-lynching law.

Eufaula, Ala. Tribune
May 8, 1935

WASHINGTON
BY HERBERT PLUMER

The man who plunged the senate into one of the most stubborn filibusters of the present session by his insistence that a federal anti-lynching law he helped draft be considered, is far removed from the type one usually associates with such maneuvers.

Edward Prentiss Costigan of Colorado, co-author with Senator Wagner of New York of the bill which bears their names, is anything but the shouting, hardboiled type.

He is slight of stature and speaks in a low but clear voice. His brow furrows as he speaks solemnly of the social questions which claim a large share of his time. He is fond of drawing verbal pictures in a sonorous tone which is convincing and commanding.

He dresses conservatively, usually in blue or gray, the colors blending with his eyes and hair.

There has been considerable speculation as to why Senator Costigan was so determined that the senate take up his anti-lynching bill at a time when the administration was pushing for speed on its legislative program.

Assurances had been given by southern senators that they were prepared to resist to the bitter end.

One must know Costigan, however, to appreciate the motive back of his action. He'll tell you himself that his political credo is:

"Government exists to serve the general welfare; there is no more serviceable field for human beings than the continuous endeavor to make government promote human betterment."

As far as he is concerned the anti-lynching bill is just another link in the chain of a life spent mostly fighting for "under-dogs."

There's a more personal reason however, for his determination in trying to force the senate to take up his bill

As an eight-year-old lad he saw the Colorado community in which he lived stirred to lynching a man and woman who had mistreated their little daughter. The experience has remained a vivid one for him ever since and although he says the lynching in California two years ago of two kidnapers and the subsequent sanctioning of the mob's action by the late Governor Rolph primarily was responsible for his sponsoring his anti-lynching bill, that earlier experience played its part.

Lynchings-1935
Legislation Relating to.

5067

U. S. NEWS
Washington, D.C.
MAY 6 1935

A CENTURY OF FILIBUSTERS

How the Anti-lynching Bill Was Halted; Some Historic Minority Blockades Of Action in Congress

A BLAST of 145,000 words of oratory can produce quite a stubborn headwind. In the teeth of such a gale, huffed and puffed by a determined sectional minority, Senate legislative progress was held stationary for six and a half days last week.

Then majority mariners agreed to pitch overboard the Jonah causing all the squall—the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill. The biggest filibuster since 1922 deflated itself, and legislative progress resumed the tenor of its way. It was rather a hoarse tenor, however, for some Senators who had tenaciously talked their way to another demonstration of minority power to block the majority under Senate rules.

Though the longest filibuster in 13 years, this one was of minor proportions compared with some of the historical parliamentary blockades of the last hundred years. For legislative filibusters go back a century in our history—back to the time when the term "filibuster", that originally denoted pirates and freebooters, first came commonly into the American vocabulary, applied to William Walker and other daring spirits who levied adventurous private war against Nicaragua, Cuba and other Caribbean countries, hoping to add them to the United States.

EARLY FILIBUSTERS

As early as 1841 the Senate filibustered more than a week on a proposal to oust Senate contract printers from their jobs. The same year a bank bill filibuster lasted several weeks. Henry Clay, the "great compromiser", sought to get Senate rules changed to break it up.

Six years later, with war clouds darkening over the Northwest boundary question, it took two months to bring a Senate minority around to agree on a day for voting on the Oregon bill.

In 1856 dilatory minority tactics in the 34th Congress evoked complaint and rebuke from the Democratic majority. Seven years later, when the political party situation had been reversed, it was Republicans' turn to complain of minority "fractious opposition" filibustering against suspension of the writ of habeas corpus as a war measure.

In 1879 on a bill to repeal the election laws, written into an army appropriation bill, minority Senators avowed their right to prevent action by all the dilatory motions in their power. They succeeded in prolonging debate 12 days. Two years later, over a change in Senate officers, the minority started a filibuster that lasted almost without interruption from March 24 to May 4 and was renewed May 6-10.

A 26-DAY DEBATE

In the 56th Congress a filibuster of 26 days broke out against the Blair education bill, for establishment of common schools. The famous "force bill" of 1890 to amend the election laws, like the anti-lynching bill this year, stirred violent sectional opposition. It led to one of the most hotly contested parliamentary battles in Senate history, a debate lasting 29 days.

In 1908, the elder Senator La Follette, a master in the filibustering arts, who is credited with making the longest Senate speech on record, was assisted by several members in a filibuster against a national banking bill conference report. Every technicality was used to consume time. The question of "no quorum" was raised 36 times within a few hours, necessitating roll calls at brief intervals.

In 1914 the Senate because of filibustering had to spend 32 days considering a rivers and harbors bill, and later in the same year, 31 days on a bill to repeal Panama canal tolls on coastwise shipping. Also that year dilatory opposition to creating the Federal Trade Commission was kept up for 30 days, and to an anti-trust bill, 21 days. Twenty-three days of filibustering developed on a ship purchase bill in 1915.

ONE-MAN BLOCKADES

With fair frequency in recent times one-man filibusters have been staged near the end of a Congressional sesion. A single Senator, by getting the floor and holding it, could create havoc in the congested final hours by talking right through to the time of sine die adjournment, while important bills died in flocks around him for lack of opportunity to bring them to a vote.

Last week's affair was true to the traditions of historic past filibusters. And with injection of the racial question, States' rights, and threats by some members to secede from the Democratic party if their party persisted in a course deemed inimical to the South, the discussion suggested the atmosphere of antebellum and reconstruction days when the momentous issues that produced the War Between the States were debated with fiery fervor.

Constitutional contentions as to the nature of the Union and the right of States to be free from Federal "invasion" and "coercion" were warmly urged with arguments suggestive of the great Calhoun's logic in crystallizing the political philosophy of his section a century ago.

A CATARACT OF WORDS

In the seven-day cataract of talk however, there was much flotsam of time-killing irrelevancy. Old tomes were piled high on desks as arsenals to keep up the endless firing against nearly invisible foemen—for most of the bill's supporters ducked out into the cloakrooms and let its opponents talk on and on.

Musty speeches by departed statesmen were fished out of the ash-can of oblivion to be droned through again by reading clerks. There were threats to read whole books of the Bible and to keep Congress in session all Summer if necessary to thwart any authorization of Federal action in cases of States and counties failing to protect their citizens from mob violence.

Senator Connally (Dem.), of Texas, and Bailey (Dem.), of North Carolina, led the filibuster, with Senators Smith (Dem.), and Byrnes (Dem.), of South Carolina; Glass (Dem.), of Virginia; Borah (Rep.), of Idaho, and others joining them in their opposition.

All through the debate the Senate "recessed" from day to day instead of adjourning. Adjournment would have automatically displaced the motion to consider the bill.

Finally the majority caved in. By a vote of 48 to 32 the Senate at 3:18 p. m., Wednesday, May 1, adjourned till 3:30 p. m. Hastily the Chaplain, the Rev. Ze Barney T. Phillips, was summoned. Importuning the Almighty to "visit * * * the Members of the Senate" and "enlighten their minds more and more with the light of the everlasting Gospel," he ushered in a new "legislative day" a quarter hour after the ending of the old "legislative day" which had been running ever since April 15.

Thus the anti-lynching bill was headed off, probably for the rest of this session of Congress, though it is still on the calendar, subject to being called up.

Piedmont, Ala., Journal
May 31, 1935

LYNCHING

The south has cause to rejoice that their senators were successful in filibustering the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching out of consideration for this session at least.

All right-thinking individuals oppose mob violence in any form. Lynching is murder. It violates the law of God and man.

We agree with Senator Byrnes who declared on the senate floor that he believed the enactment of the anti-lynching bill would increase rather than decrease lynchings.

Lynchings have declined from 231 in 1892 to a total of only 15 in 1934, while that is 15 lynchings too many, yet the trend is definitely away from them and officers of the law are doing more effective work than ever in preventing mob action. This means that the viewpoint of the people on lynchings is changing and that the day will come when lynching will be as dead as dueling, which at one time had such a hold upon the people.

The passage of an anti-lynching bill would undoubtedly delay the fine progress being made toward wiping out entirely the evil of lynching.— Vicksburg Post-Herald.

Nashville, Tenn. Tennessean—M'ng
May 6, 1935

Lynching Declines.

The South gets credit for defeat of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, but it is worth noting that the filibuster was broken and the measure sidetracked through an eleventh hour attack by that famous liberal from Idaho, Senator Borah.

Like most sane people, Mr. Borah is opposed to lynching as brutal and uncivilized, but at the same time he is a stickler for state sovereignty in handling local crime. It was on the constitutional phase of the legislation that he based his attack, and, once his onslaught had been completed, there were enough Democrats and Republicans to put the bill to sleep.

The constitutional phases of the Costigan-Wagner bill are certainly open to consideration, and though the authors believe it will stand the test, they are opposed by equally eminent authorities who say it goes too far in violating the rights of states.

However, the Wagner-Costigan fight, under way for many months, has had certain definite and admirable results, the chief of which is that it has served to bring to the minds of all, and particularly the South, the evils of lynching, and has unquestionably led to a diminution of such practices. Faced by the possibility of federal intervention, communities have been slower to mob violence, and state officials have been strengthened in their desire to give protection to those endangered.

The South, where the mob most frequently wreaks its vengeance, was aligned against the anti-lynching bill; but in view of the fact that lynching is no longer a sectional problem, it is not surprising that this section was supported by other spokesmen.

Lynching is not always aimed against the black man guilty of a certain crime. It springs up in every section, and for various reasons. We have seen the farmers of the Middle West forming mobs for economic reasons, and we have seen the negroes of the Harlem running rampant because of alleged economic discrimination. In the west also there has been a virtual application of lynch law to Japanese farmers because of combined racial and economic feeling.

Under given conditions, the tendency of the mass mind is to become inflamed to a point where reason and judgment are abandoned. But there are signs of improvement in this respect, and it is to be hoped they will continue. Constant education is having its effect, and the greatest factor in that education is the determination of law enforcement officers and agencies to live up to pledges they assume upon accepting their responsibilities. The oaths to respect and enforce the law are required by the people in their saner moments; they should never be abrogated because a small and violent group suddenly decides they are no longer applicable.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
NEWS
MAY 6 1935

WANTS LYNCHING

SOUTHERN senators have now talked to death the Wagner-Costigan lynching bill. Their filibuster has been successful in postponing action on this badly needed legal reform because of the greater demand for action on other legislation sought by the administration.

Their action is further evidence of the backward state of so-called southern culture. There has never been any good reason why the bill should not be passed. Statistics themselves disprove the favorite contention which shorn of its poetic language boils down to the argument that lynching is necessary to protect white southern womanhood. Most of the lynchings which have taken place have not been for rape and in a large number of cases innocent persons have paid the brutal penalty.

Yet these southern senators were not above playing for votes by upholding mob murder. They pandered to the lowest emotions of "poor whites" by opposing the most promising attempt yet made to outlaw the lynching horror.

Why is it that so many of our hill billy "statesmen" and four-flush congressmen come from the south?

UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
MAY 8 1935

What Caused It

It is now stated that the fillibuster, which had been kept up in the Senate for seven days against the anti-lynching bill, came to an end because of a statement of Senator Borah in which he insisted that the federal government had no power, under the Constitution to invade a state and do things that the anti-lynching bill proposed to do. He assailed lynching as a cruel crime and one that should be punished, but he declared that if such a bill as the one proposed was ever sustained by the Supreme Court, "we will have utterly broken down all state sovereignty."

The Senate hesitated. Too many unconstitutional measures have gone through the legislative mill and are now being repudiated by the high court of the land. Perhaps it is well to wait and give the subject further study.

In this connection, one Washington observer writes:

"Sentiment is growing for the appointment of joint committees to study further some of the controversial bills and to report at the January session."

Perhaps it is being realized in Congress that the country can have but one opinion of a body that will continue to pass in succession a number of acts which cannot be sustained in the courts as permissable under the Constitution. Is it heedlessness and inattention or a lack of knowledge of the basic law of the land to which must be charged the inefficiency of the legislative branch?

TORONTO, ONT.
MAIL & EMPIRE
MAY 3 1935

PROSPECT OF MAKING LYNCHING A FEDERAL CRIME.

It seems probable that the Costigan-Wagner bill to make lynching a Federal offence in the United States will become law. The judiciary committee of the Senate voted unanimously in support of it, and this is taken to mean that the legal experts are satisfied that it is constitutional, and does not impinge upon state's rights. Such legislation has been resisted in the past chiefly by those states in which lynchings take place, with occasional support from non-lynching states which yet opposed the extension of Federal authority into matters heretofore deemed the especial business of the states. It has become plain enough that the states are not to be trusted with the duty of stamping out lynching. The fact that since 1922 there have been 280 of these mob murders is evidence enough. We do not recall any one having been punished for his part in a lynching.

The new law places heavy penalties on local officers who through cowardice or inefficiency connive at lynchings, and makes it possible for relatives of a lynched person to collect heavy damages from the municipality in which the lynching takes place. The prosecutions would be undertaken by Federal officers not susceptible to local prejudice as the state officials are almost bound to be. This would virtually make the jobs of sheriffs and jailers dependent upon the stoutness with which they resisted lynching mobs, and would give taxpayers a financial interest in saving victims.

Many lynchings in the past, perhaps most of them, have taken place because the lynchers knew that the legal custodians of the victims were in sympathy with meting out summary justice and would not seriously resist. Similarly they could depend upon local detectives not being particularly zealous in collecting evidence to convict anyone after the act. In a word lynching in the past has been safe. The present bill was inspired by the lynching of a couple of kidnappers in San Jose, California, which was given the official approval of the governor of the state. The nation-wide wave of protest that this created grew into a demand for the Federal law.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
EVENING JOURNAL
MAY 7 1935

NO ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

Proponents of the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill, facing the possibility of a continuous filibuster which would materially interfere with other Congressional legislation and prolong the session of Congress, have given up hope of passage of the measure at this session. There will be no federal interference with this southern practice.

It is perhaps just as well. The bill, we are informed, was of doubtful constitutionality and its enactment into law would have prevented the development of the public sentiment against lynching which is essential to curbing mob violence. As a matter of fact most of the southern states have anti-lynching laws which so far as laws go are adequate. The difficulty is in the enforcement of such laws. It would probably be equally difficult to enforce any federal law which the courts would hold unconstitutional.

The agitation in Congress will perhaps have a temporary beneficial effect in the south. At least that has been the result in past years when anti-lynching bills were before Congress. For a time thereafter the southerners curbed their passions and let the law take its course.

Lynchings-1935
Legislation Relating to.

5168

MARSHALL, TEX.
MESSENGER

FEB 25 1934

The Anti-Lynching Bill

The Senate Judiciary Committee has opened hearings on the Costigan-Warner anti-lynching bill to provide federal punishment for lynchers. There seems a likelihood that the bill will pass, probably with the elimination of those sections which would make a county in which mob violence occurs liable to damages to be assessed for the benefit of the family of the victim and holding liable to fine or imprisonment a state employe who fails to do his duty of protecting an individual against mob violence or prosecuting persons guilty of such negligence. These sections add nothing to the effectiveness of the bill; on the other hand, they carry the threat of increased bloodshed in mob violence.

Anti-lynching legislation is supported by President Roosevelt, who declared in his annual message to Congress last year that "crime of organized banditry, cold-blooded shooting, lynching and kidnaping have threatened our security." Bills similar to the Costigan-Warner bill have been introduced in every session of Congress since 1920. In 1922 the Dyer anti-lynching bill passed the House of Representatives by almost a 2 to 1 vote, but was killed in the Senate by the opposition of Southern Senators who considered the provision for fining counties unjust. In this connection, it may be predicted that if the Costigan-Wagner bill passes containing the provision for fining counties, there will be a far greater number of such fines assessed against counties in Northern and Eastern States than in Southern States. Our friends in those parts think of lynching as something that happens only in the South; yet many gang murders in New York and Chicago are instances of lynching so definitely that it would be virtually impossible to define the crime to exclude these and at the same time include the usual Southern variety. The man "taken for a ride" is lynched as surely as any cowering victim of a Southern mob. In the North and East also the term "lynching" is usually taken to signify only a negro victim.—Star-Telegram.

New York Herald-Tribune

MAR 12 1935

Lynching Ban Approved

Senate Committee to Report Costigan-Wagner Measure

WASHINGTON, March 11 (AP).—The Senate Judiciary Committee today approved the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill and authorized Senator Frederick Van Nuys, Democrat, of Indiana, to draw up the report.

The measure, which faces a doubtful road in Congress, lays down severe penalties for lynchers, officers who fail to exercise due diligence in protecting persons from them, and counties where mobs take the law into their own hands.

SANFORD, FLA.
HERALD

FEB 27 1934

An Absurd Lynching Law

Among the numerous measures which have been introduced in this session of Congress and over which the various members are now wrangling as they seek to remake the world is the so-called Costigan-Wagner bill which is supposed to put a stop once and for all to what is known as the lynching evil. This bill which provides federal punishment for lynchers is now in the Senate judiciary committee and is one of the things which is preventing any constructive action on the part of Congress toward relieving the economic condition of the nation.

Among other provisions of this bill which delegates to the federal courts the right to try any member of a lynching mob and to mete out punishment not only to such persons but also to any local law enforcement officers who may be found derelict in their duties, makes liable to a fine of from $2,000 to $10,000 any county in which a lynching occurs. This provision which requires the taxpayers of such a county to pay to the dependents or heirs of the victim of a mob this sum of money is the most stupid part of the whole unreasonable bill.

The taxpayers of a county often are no more responsible for mob violence in their own county that they would be for similar acts in Singapore. Most frequently the members of a lynching mob are not taxpayers in any substantial sense of the word. And very frequently many taxpayers do not condone lynching any more than the most high-minded congressman, but, though they are unable to prevent lynchings, they would have to pay the bill for them.

Furthermore, should some discriminating taxpayer with an eye to future costs chance to be a member of a lynching mob, undoubtedly he could persuade his followers to carry their victim across the county line into some neighboring county before stringing him up. In such a case the taxpayers of the county from which the lynching might be handled by the states in which they occur and which occurred would escape the fine, but the county in which it occurred would certainly and unjustifiably have to bear the cost.

These are matters which can much better know infinitely more about them.

This is one state function which the federal government had better not try to usurp.

BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN

MAR 3 1935

The Anti-Lynching Bill Nears Issue In Senate

Costigan-Wagner Measure Provides Only Procedure Government Can Take Against Crime—Opposition Expected To Show In Vote

By HARRY HALLER

The St. Petersburg Independent takes the view that the Costigan-Wagner bill would not serve as a deterrent to lynching in any respect. "Would the threat of a fine against a community have stopped the would-be lynchers at Shelbyville?", asks the Independent. "They destroyed their own courthouse in their frenzy. And what luck would federal officers have had in trying to do something about the earlier Marianna lynching, when almost all West Florida was so aroused that the lynching ceremony was actually announced in advance? In California and Maryland the same conditions held."

One does not have to believe in lynching to see the utter absurdity of this bill seeking to prevent it. There is some doubt as to the constitutional power of the federal government to legislate on lynching unless the mob crosses state lines, but there is considerably more doubt as to the practical fulfillment of any such legislation which Congress

PENDING before the United States

Senate at the moment is a bill introduced last year by Senators Edward P. Costigan, of Colorado, and Robert F. Wagner, of New York, which provides for Federal prosecution of State officials who fail to make efforts to detect and punish lynchers and of alleged lynchers themselves. The bill covers the only ground on which Federal jurisdiction can be invoked—that is, failure by the States to maintain constitutional guarantees for equal protection of the laws. Lynching cannot be made a Federal crime as simply as kidnapping because it rarely has an interstate aspect.

Four provisions of the bill are salient. First, it calls for punishment of any State officer or employe who fails to protect a prisoner from a mob, or who fails to be diligent in apprehending and prosecuting lynchers. Fines not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both, are provided. Second, State officers convicted of conspiring to put to death a prisoner in custody, or to permit a prisoner to be taken from them, are to be punished. Third, Federal prosecution is to be exerted in the case of lynchers after it has been shown that State officials have failed to act for at least a period of thirty days after a lynching. Fourth, a penalty on the county in which a lynching takes place of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 to be paid to the family of the victim. If the victim is seized in one county and lynched in another, both counties shall be jointly liable for the penalty under the bill.

FORTY-FIVE HEARD

Forty-five citizens of both races were heard before a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate when punishment for the crime of lynching was considered last February and March and the procedure was broadcast over the radio. Among the national organizations represented were the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, National Student Council, Young Women's Christian Association, American Civil Liberties Union, Race Relations Committee, Society of Friends, National Urban League, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, Writers' League Against Lynching, Church League for Industrial Democracy, League for Industrial Democracy, American Federation of Teachers, and the Congregational and Christian Churches.

A year has elapsed and the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill is still before the Judiciary Committee, with indications of its going on the floor of the Senate within the next few weeks.

Men and women of note have given their testimony. During the year that has elapsed one of the worst lynchings in the history of American civilization occurred at Marianna, Fla. On October 26, 1934, Claude Neal, charged with attack and murder, was the five thousand and sixty-eighth person lynched in the United States since 1882—the forty-fifth mob victim since President Franklin D. Roosevelt entered the White House. Word had been passed all over northeastern Florida and southeastern Alabama that there was to be a "lynching party to which all white people are invited" and the information was broadcast from the radio station at Dothan, Alabama. After an incredible display of sheer sadism was exercised in doing the Negro to death, a group estimated at approximately 7,000 men and women over a distance of some 230 miles joined in the celebration of dragging Neal's body about the dusty roads. Little children came out into the night and stuck knives in the body.

"PECULIAR TO U. S."

One of the standard books on lynching, J. E. Cutler's "Lynch Law," speaks of it as "a criminal practice which is peculiar to the United States"—a definition which is as true now as it was when Mr. Cutler's book was published thirty years ago. Though the origin of the term is doubtful, the questionable honor of establishing this sort of crime on this side of the Atlantic has been ascribed to various persons named Lynch in Revolutionary times, when the absence of courts of justice in country districts and the turmoil of American political upheaval caused men to band together for the maintenance of order, or for purposes of vengeance. Where society is still in the frontier stage, the settlement of disputes is left to individuals or groups of individuals.

But the early term "lynching" did not apply, as it now does, exclusively to the infliction of death upon the victim. A severe flogging and a warning to leave the community, followed by more severe punishment were the warning not heeded, was the usual penalty inflicted by the self-constituted courts. Lynching developed swiftly with the race problem, and the abolitionists themselves met with mob action.

In his testimony before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate last year, Walter White, author of such distinguished novels as "The Fire in the Flint" and "Escape" and secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, brought out several misconceptions entertained by the American public in connection with the crime of lynching. At that time there had been 5,053 lynchings in the history of the United States, 1,438 victims being white and 3,513 colored. There were ninety-four women among the victims, seventeen of whom were white and seventy-seven colored. "The first of these misconceptions," Mr. White said, "which is still believed by otherwise well-informed and fair-minded persons, is that there is some connections between lynching and sex offenses by Negroes on white women."

FIGURES ON ATTACK

In a statistical study of the crime, "Thirty Years of Lynching in the United States—1889-1918," of 3,224 lynchings only 523 of the victims were even accused by the mobs themselves of criminal attack. Of the 2,522 Negroes lynched during that period only 477 were charged with attacking women. Thus less than one-fifth of the colored men done to death by lynching mobs were even accused of the "usual crime." "It should be remembered," Mr. White added, "that a mob's accusation is by no means equivalent to conviction or even to an indictment by a regularly constituted jury."

Professor Chadbourn gives an even lower percentage of lynching for attacks on women when he states that "alleged rape is given as the offense in only one-sixth of the cases." Dr. Arthur Raper, of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, with headquarters at Atlanta, in "The Tragedy of Lynching" also affirms that "less than one-sixth of whom (Negroes lynched from 1889 through 1930) were accused of rape."

A second misconception discussed by Mr. White is that mob victims are usually guilty. In a study made under the auspices of the Southern Commission for the Study of Lynching, of which George Fort Milton, editor of the Chattanooga News, is chairman, of the twenty-one lynchings perpetrated in 1930 Dr. Raper asserts that "two of the 1930 mob victims were innocent of crime (they were not even accused), and there is grave doubt of the guilt of eleven others. In six of these eleven cases there is considerable doubt as to just what crimes, if any, were committed, and in the other five in which there is no question as to the crimes committed, there is considerable doubt as to whether the mobs got the guilty man."

OPPOSITION EXPECTED

No open opposition to the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill has appeared in the Senate. A single Texas Congressman appeared before the subcommittee on March of last year registering his opposition. But when the bill leaves the Judiciary Committee within the next few weeks many Southern Senators are expected to voice disapproval. Senator Huey Long, of Louisiana, is reported unofficially as saying he would filibuster all spring against the bill.

The most vehement newspaper opposition in the South is voiced by the Memphis Commercial Appeal, and other small papers throughout the South also oppose. Probably the most definite condemnation is advanced by the Communist party and its affiliated Negro organizations on the grounds that the bill does not arbitrarily fix a death penalty for lynchers, that it does not go to the root of the race problem; that it is merely "soothing syrup to still the rising anger of the black and white masses." The Communists propose, rather, a "bill of rights" covering a whole range of inequalities.

One of the most active backers of the anti-lynching legislation is the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, whose officers, in addition to Mr. White, include J. E. Spingarn, Senator Arthur Capper, Bishop John A. Gregg, the Rev. John Haynes Holmes, James Weldon Johnson, Arthur B. Spingarn, Oswald Garrison Villard, Roy Wilkins and Mary White Ovington. The association was organized under its present name in 1910 and its specific objectives have been the ending of lynching, the obliteration of peonage and debt slavery in Southern agricultural life, the ending of disfranchisement, the abolition of injustices in legal procedure based upon color or race, equitable distribution of funds for public education, abolition of segregation and discrimination, and equality of opportunity to work in all fields with equal pay for equal work.

BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN

FEB 28 1935

Would Make Public Liable In Lynchings

Blum Sponsors Bill Providing Court Redress For Estate Of Mob Victims

Annapolis, Feb. 27 (AP)—An anti-lynching measure imposing a liability upon any political unit in which a lynching occurs was introduced today in the House of Delegates.

The bill, sponsored by Delegate Jacob Blum (Dem., Fourth Baltimore), provides that Baltimore city or any county in which a lynching occurs shall be liable to any lynched person's estate for not less than $2,000 and not more than $10,000, to be recovered in civil action.

Courts are to direct a verdict in favor of the plaintiff "if the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the evidence is that death or injury resulted from mob violence." Otherwise the case would go to a jury.

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

FEB 26 1935

Urging The State Legislature To Enact An Anti-Lynch Law

To the Editor of The Evening Sun—Sir: Let me suggest to the law-abiding Maryland citizenry who are opposed to the atrocious crime of lynching that, as the Maryland Legislature is in session, now is the time to sponsor anti-lynch laws to be passed by the General Assembly. The first and most important duty of any State Legislature is to establish and maintain by law respect for the sovereignty of the State and obedience to its constituted authorities. The lack of proper anti-lynch laws has repeatedly caused Maryland to suffer humiliation and embarrassment before the other States that have proper laws to deter this crime. The legal officers of Maryland should feel a particular urge to use their influence to secure this legislation.

Baltimore, Feb. 22, John Hasenpfeffer.

Obstruction

Southern Democrats in Congress, playing what they thought was smart politics, last year blocked a vote on the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill by delaying consideration until late in the session and then threatening a filibuster. Fortunately, this session that measure is before the Senate, with the unanimous favor of the judiciary committee, in plenty of time. Any similar tactics this year will be leveled for what it is—obstruction of the most irresponsible variety.

This mild measure to hold counties responsible financially for mob murder has widespread popular support both in the North and South. Organizations representing 42,000,000 Americans have urged its passage. A giant petition containing the names of nine governors, 27 mayors, 60 clergymen and more than 200 national organizations, asks the President to support it. The Administration is not unfriendly.

Only the false sentiment of local pride and a misconception of state rights have prevented passage of a Federal anti-lynching law for years.

The very threat of this measure's passage last year seemed to check lynch horrors. While the bill was pending between Jan. 30 and June 8 not one lynching occurred. When it appeared certain the bill would be pigeon-holed, lynchings began and continued at the rate of one a week. Senators Costigan, Van Nuys and Wagner think that at least a half-score of mob murders were prevented by the sobering effect of the bill's threat. Last year there were 16 lynchings, compared with 28 in 1933.

Obstructionist tactics by Southern senators killed the Dyer anti-lynching bill 12 years ago after it had passed the House overwhelmingly. If this measure is killed again the people will know who did it and why. It is not an issue with which to play politics.

Lynchings - 1935
Legislation Relating to.

5069

COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD
MAY [redacted] 1935

THE TEMPORARY TRIUMPH.

The Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill isn't dead but the immediate threat of its enactment is no more. A minority, resorting to filibuster, could not kill it, but it could force the postponement of attempts to secure action upon it, duplicating the achievement of the senate minority in 1922, when the Dyer anti-lynching bill met a similar fate.

On January 26, 1922, the house with a membership of 300 Republicans and 132 Democrats, passed the Dyer bill by a vote of 231 to 119. For a long time the senate judiciary committee, composed of ten Republicans and six Democrats, refused to report the bill, but finally on July 28, Senator Shortridge, of California, submitted a favorable report on it for the committee, with minor amendments. Senator Shortridge got the bill before the senate only one day before sine die adjournment and no vote was taken upon it. At the ensuing special session, which met on November 30, 1922, to enact merchant marine legislation, the measure came up. Southern senators, led by Harrison and Underwood, had resort to the filibuster. Unanimous consent was refused for dispensing with the reading of the journal of the previous day, attempts were made to correct the journal, constant motions to adjourn were made, points of order raised and appeals taken from the decisions of the chair, extraneous matters were discussed at length and long quotations read to the senate. Faced with the prospect of being unable to transact any business during the session and the ensuing short session to follow, the Republican caucus capitulated and consented to the withdrawal of the bill. The filibuster, it appeared, had not been outlawed by the 1917 amendment of the senate rules to permit the limiting of debate.

This year's filibuster lasted only six days. But the six days were sufficient to turn loose upon the senate ranting enough to exhaust its patience. But it also got a dose of common sense and sound logic. Take, for example, the state rights and constitutional argument put forward by Senator Borah, of Idaho whose support finally turned the tide in the filibusters' favor.

"To my mind," Senator Borah said, "if this kind of a bill can be passed and sustained by the supreme court, we have utterly annihilated all state sovereignty. We have broken down state lines completely. I can see no escape from that conclusion."

There are, however, he conceded, precedents for the bill's enactment in the NRA and the AAA attempts to regulate intrastate business.

"If you can go into the state of Idaho and take charge of a local business and direct the business man as to how it shall be run," he said, "and take the man by the nape of the neck who does not run it according to the rule passed by the federal government and put him in jail, you can go into Alabama and take by the shirt collar the sheriff and make him abide by the rules which a federal congress has also laid down.

"I have been opposed to those propositions consistently because I know they strike at the very foundation of state sovereignty, and I believe we can only have a great federal union by having great individual sovereign states, and that when the latter are destroyed we may have a republic in name but we will never have a republic in fact.

"It is my belief that this type of bill would not prevent lynching. Lynching and that class of crimes can only be prevented by the education of the people, by building up public opinion against it and by bringing the people to the point where they will realize that it is to their detriment to have such crimes committed in their community.

"Without the moral support and the intellectual backing of the respective communities in which such occurences happen, the power of the federal government will be perfectly futile in undertaking to eradicate this kind of a crime."

Senator Costigan and Senator Wagner do not, of course, think in terms of state rights and they will be renewing their endeavor to bring the anti-lynching bill to a vote. Unless the Southern senators, recognizing that state rights do not begin with anti-lynching measures although the enactment of such as the Costigan-Wagner bill might very well put an end to them, may win over others to the state right doctrine the bill may be passed and become law. There are limits to the filibuster method. It can be defeated by cloture, if the senate so desires. And to make the United States one big state in other things is to make some such bill's enactment inevitable.

[redacted]
NEWS TRIBUNE
MAY 6 - 1935

LYNCHING CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS

THE defeat of the so-called anti-lynching bill in the Senate should put an end to the Republican practice of making a deeply deplorable tragedy a partisan political football.

Advocates of such measures as the anti-lynching bill must know that it embodies principles clearly at variance with the constitution, and that it serves merely to stir up racial and sectional feeling, and in the light of this knowledge the conclusion is inevitable that the purpose is to capitalize bad situation to the advantage of party.

These Republican advocates of an unconstitutional and dangerous course of procedure, see in their activity an appeal to the colored voters in doubtful states and are willing to sacrifice the Constitution to political expediency, and the course is a mistaken one.

In this connection, it is stimulating to observe that it was a Republican who, realizing the verities of the situation, broke the deadlock and defeated the proposal. Senator Borah was candid enough to declare the proposal unconstitutional and to throw his influence against it.

Senator Borah assailed lynching as brutal and inexcusable, as all thoughtful persons will agree, but he declared the pending bill would have "dealt a blow to our principle of government, the importance of which could not be overstated."

The bill, in effect, pretends to correct the lynching evil but actually is a lynch bill in itself, proposing to kill by illegal means certain fundamental rights that still belong to the states. It should be buried for all time. There should be no more proposals to lynch constitutional rights.

Labor Herald and Citizen
Dorchester [illegible]
MAY 4 1935

THE FACTS ABOUT LYNCHING

Southern Senators are threatening a filibuster to keep the anti-lynching bill from coming to a vote.

This measure, introduced by Senator Costigan of Colorado, with the cooperation of Senator Wagner of New York, is a thoughtful, carefully drawn bill designed to end one of the greatest disgraces of this Republic. It provides for the collection of civil penalties from the communities where lynchings occur and for criminal responsibility of local officials who do not combat such outrages. It gives Federal courts jurisdiction in such matters.

Yet Senator George of Georgia vows that such a law would be "unconstitutional," and Senator Smith of South Carolina indulges in a tirade, rather than an argument, against it. Georgia has had 459 lynchings since the year 1889. Seven of the mob victims were women and three were white men. Georgia holds the world's black medal for mob murder; and it is no accident that in the same state, a striker has no rights that the governor feels bound to respect. South Carolina has not climbed so high on that bad eminence; she has lynched "only" 140 people in the period named, of whom three were women and three white men. But South Caroline saw the murder of five unarmed workers last fall by armed guards at Honea Path, during the textile strike.

The usual excuse given for lynching is that it is necessary to prevent the crime of rape. That is utterly, grotesquely false. Of the 3,226 persons lynched in 13 southern states since 1889, only 552 were even charged with rape — 16 per cent, one out of six. Of the other victims, 1,253 were charged with murder, 810 with other felonies, while 641 — 119 more than were charged with rape — were lynched for petty offenses, including "jumping a labor contract," and "disputing a white man's word."

Nor is lynching entirely a race matter, though in the South Negroes suffer most. But in the period covered, 372 white persons, 12 of them women, were lynched. Florida lynched 242 persons in the period named, 19 of them white. Arkansas had the same number of lynchings, but 34 of the Arkansas victims were white; while of the 205 Tennessee victims, 41 were white.

No complete list can be made of the number of innocent persons who have been lynched; but it must be large. In several cases men who were released by a court or whom the grand jury refused to indict were murdered by a mob.

Lynching is a reversion to savagery, and a pretty low order of savagery. It is a menace that can not be kept within bounds. Negroes are the commonest sufferers, but white workers who are not submissive to the boss probably come next. The Costigan-Wagner bill is a measure of common safety which should be passed.

New Hope Is Seen for Consideration of Lynching Bill

Costigan May Have Until July 15 to Maneuver for New Action.

F.D.'s MUST PROGRAM ONLY THING IN WAY

Re-election Campaigns Would Check Filibuster.

WASHINGTON—Senators Edward P. Costigan, of Colorado, and Robert F. Wagner, of New York, Democrats, probably have until the middle of July to maneuver to get the Senate to take up their anti-lynching bill, on which a vote to consider was recently blocked by a seven-day filibuster.

At a conference of Senate Democrats on Friday morning, a canvas of the legislative situation was taken. It indicated that the present session of Congress probably would continue to between July 1 and July 15.

New Deal Bills Still Pending

Some of the most controversial measures in the New Deal's reform program are yet to be dealt with. The Democratic leadership of the Senate hopes to take up the subject of extending the National Industry Recovery Act this week.

Senate Democrats have determined to support the resolution of Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Dem., Mo.), extending the act until April 1, 1936. The President wants the act extended for a full two-year period, as recommended by his chief recovery aide, Donald R. Richberg.

New Motion May Follow

Even if the NRA matter can be cleared up as quickly as expected, the "must" measures demanded by the President which remain to be acted upon will still include such controversial matters as the banking bill and legislation to abolish holding companies.

With the "must" legislation out of the way, Senator Costigan may again move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Costigan-Wagner bill, and supporters of that measure may settle down to an endurance test with Southern Senators in the event of another filibuster.

Terms of 32 Expire

If the motion to take up the bill is made at the end of the session, the filibuster is not likely to last very long.

The terms of one-third of the Senators wil lexpire in 1937. They must face elections in 1936 and it will be necessary for them to spend as much time as possible back in their states reparing for the 1936 elections.

Of the 32 Senators who face elections next year, 19 are Democrats and 13 are Republicans. They are as follows:

Democrats

Nathan L. Bachman, Tennessee; Josiah W. Bailey, North Carolina; John H. Bankhead, Alabama; William J. Bulow, South Dakota; James F. Byrnes, South Carolina; Marcus A. Coolidge, Massachusetts; Edward P. Costigan, Colorado; Carter Glass, Virginia; Thomas P. Gore, Oklahoma; Pat Harrison, Mississippi; Carl A. Hatch, New Mexico; J. Hamilton Lewis, Illinois; M. M. Logan, Kentucky; Huey P. Long, Louisiana; James E. Murray, Montana; Matthew M. Neely, West Virginia; Joseph T. Robinson, Arkansas; Richard B. Russell, Georgia; Morris Sheppard, Texas.

Republicans

W. Warren Barbour, New Jersey; William E. Borah, Idaho; Arthur Capper, Kansas; Robert D. Carey, Wyoming; James Couzens, Michigan; L. J. Dickinson, Iowa; Daniel O. Hastings, Delaware; Henry W. Keyes, New Hampshire; Charles L. McNary, Oregon; Jesse H. Metcalf, Rhode Island; George W. Norris, Nebraska; Thomas D. Schall, Minnesota; Wallace H. White, Jr., Maine.

LEWIS-MITCHELL ANTI-LYNCH BILL IS INTRODUCED

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16—By request, Senator J. Hamilton Lewis, Democrat, of Illinois, introduced in the Senate last Friday the same antilynching bill introduced by Representative Arthur W. Mitchell, Democrat, of Illinois.

Unlike the Costigan-Wagner bill, the Lewis-Mitchell bill fails to define a mob. It presumes a denial of equal protection of the laws if any officer of a State or sub-division having a person in custody, without lawful justification or excuse, permits him to be taken away and injured or put to death or to be unlawfully injured or put to death while in his custody.

Proof that a person in custody of an officer was unlawfully injured or put to death, or unlawfully taken from custody and injured or put to death, is made prima facie evidence that the officer suffered or permitted the act.

Any officer who permits a person in his custody to be injured or put to death, or unlawfully taken from his custody and injured or put to death, under the terms of the Lewis-Mitchell bill, would be guilty of a felony and subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

The Lewis-Mitchell bill would also make it a felony for any officer having a prisoner in his custody to conspire or confederate with any person to injure or put the prisoner to death or to permit the prisoner to be taken from his custody and injured or put to death. The penalty would be imprisonment for not less than two years or more than 10 years. The persons conspiring with the officer would also be guilty of a felony and subject to a like penalty.

The bill would make the county in which a person is taken from the custody of an officer and unlawfully injured or put to death liable to the injured person or his legal representatives in a sum of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000, which would be recoverable in civil action against the county in the United States district court for the district in which the victim is injured or put to death.

The Lewis-Mitchell bill was referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee.

GREENSBORO, N. C.
RECORD
MAY 6 1935

Anti-Lynching Proposal.

The proposed federal anti-lynching law (the defeated Wagner-Costigan bill) would have invaded the jurisdiction of state courts. It would have provided trial in federal courts for any state or local officers charged with blame in connection with mob violence. There are, of course, state laws to cover all such cases.

Perhaps, instead of busying themselves with such measures as the federal anti-lynching laws, the national legislators might better spend their time and effort in getting at the root of some of the evils of miscarriages of justice.

Why not go after with sharp sticks some of the crooked lawyers who connive with criminals in questionable cases? Why not seek elimination of the vicious interference of politics in the courts? Why not undertake to do something that will cut out useless red tape in courts and thus speed up the trial of cases? Anti-lynching laws might not be necessary if justice were quick and certain, in fact.

Miami, Fla., News
May 10, 1935

Southern senators filibustered the anti-lynching bill to death. The bill died. With or without the law, lynching is on its own death bed. From the year 1885 until 1901 there was only one year when the number of lynchings in the United States fell below 100. In 1892 the lynchings numbered 231.

Since 1901 the number of lynchings has not once reached above 100. Since 1923 the number has not once reached above 30. In 1932 it fell to the all-time low of eight. Lynching is passing out. America is getting tired of its most disgraceful institution. The Southern senators rallied to block the anti-lynching bill. The South will take more pains to keep its lynchings down in fear of future anti-lynching bills.

If the states are to be left any functions at all, the putting down of lynching might be one of these. States without the enlightened public opinion to put down lynching because they don't like lynching themselves can be caused to prevent lynching by the disgrace which lynching brings upon them in the eyes of the rest of the world.

Until the North is totally free of lynching it is estopped from pointing too scornful a finger at the South. The South produces most of the lynchings, but the most disgraceful lynching in recent years occurred in California, with the blessing of a California governor behind it.

NEW ORLEANS, LA
ITEM
MAY 7 1935

Regional Alignments

SOUTHERN opposition to the anti-lynching bill and some administration measures interpreted in the South as threatening the sovereignty of the States revives Northern talk of a new political alignment that would put the radical West on one side, and the more conservative South and East on the other. One observer remarks that many parts of the Deep South have always been more "Republican," on economic principles, than Democratic, and but for the Negro problem might have divided on party lines long ago.

The alignment suggested would be more logical than some that have been proposed recently, for example Father Coughlin's scheme for uniting farmers, labor, and the small-salaried class. The most populous and wealth parts of the South have been much concerned in high tariffs. The protection of Louisiana sugar and other Southern products has often forced Southern senators into alliances largely foreign to their traditional party principles. Because of other factors, the South has not been able to adopt wagescales as high as those prevailing in other parts.

We don't believe an East-South alignment against the West is anything for party leaders to worry about this season. Too many third-party-makers with other schemes in their heads have taken the field. These will confuse issues too much

Southern voters to ... why they should not do it at all ... Republicans. And ... mentioned for do... very good rea... average voter. Though tradition be un-go along with Eastern Republi... reasonable, that doesn't lessen its force. Aside from the reasons mentio... generation of education would be required ... it there are several very

Lynchings - 1935
Legislation Relating to.

5078

Anti-Lynch Law Favored by Body

ATLANTA, April 26 (AP)—For the first time in its 17-year history, the inter-racial commission today was on record as favoring a federal anti-lynch law.

The commission took its stand yesterday as Southern senators in Washington put on a filibuster against the proposed statute. Made up of 50 members from 11 states, the commission said it was "disappointed" in the record of state and local officials in lynching case.

In a resolution adopted unanimously the commission said it favored federal legislation "in the hope that federal agents and courts would be in better position to act fearlessly and effectively in the prosecution of participants in the crime of lynching."

Columbia, S. C. Record
April 26, 1935

Inviting Federal Interference

The weakness of the South's position on the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill is to be traced back to its state rights surrender on other matters and issues.

"We in our sovereign capacity," Senator Ellison D. Smith, of South Carolina, tells the senate, "can battle with this problem. We do not invite interference of those who have not had the bitterness of the trials we have endured."

But it is not an exact statement of the facts as revealed by history. The South when it voted for federal prohibition invited interference by the federal government; it supplied the Costigans and Wagners with a precedent.

And prohibition does not offer the only example. South Carolina, for instance, invites federal interference in the business of growing cotton; it invites federal interference in its schools; it invites indeed all the federal interference in the form of cash that it can get its hands upon.

Greenville, S. C Piedmont
April 24, 1935

Boomerang

LYNCHINGS, in our opinion, would be increased by passage of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

This newspaper opposes the bill. It opposes lynchings.

Greenville, S. C. Piedmont
April 24, 1935

Poor Favor

WHEN United States Senator E. D. Smith inferentially condoned lynching in opposing the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill on the Senate floor he did his state and the South a poor favor and probably increased the chances for the bill to pass.

Lynchings are unnecessary.

Greenville County for years has demonstrated that orderly, legal justice can be meted out promptly in offenses of the kind that some times provoke lynchings.

There is no reason for passage of the Costigan-Wagner bill—it would be another dead letter law and it would stir unwholesome resentment in many quarters and thus defeat its own purpose—but defending lynchings is no way to oppose it.

Anderson, S. C., Record
April 26, 1935

THE ANTI-LYNCHING LAW.

One is inclined to agree with the views of Senator Ellison D. Smith of South Carolina, in his fight against the Costigan anti-lynching law, which would impose upon peace officers a severe penalty for their failure to perform their duty.

Senator Smith observes that the South is doing everything in its power to curb mob violence and declared that "we have laws sufficient to punish anyone deserving it."

While abhorring lynch-law and deploring the record of some Southern states, including South Carolina, in connection with mob violence in the past, many Southerners will find themselves in complete sympathy with the attitude of Senator Smith. Mob violence is something that a handful of officers of the law cannot control. This has been demonstrated time and time again, and it is obvious that the proviisons of the Costigan measure are such that they would impose severe penalties upon innocent persons.

Wilmington, N. C. Morning Star
April 25, 1935

PROPOSED LYNCHING BILL

SENATOR SMITH, of South Carolina, that urbane gentleman who for years has fought for the cotton planters of the south, turns for the moment from his batles for the dirt farmer to register his opposition to the WAGNER-COSTIGAN bill, making lynching a federal offense.

Offhand, we are inclined to agree with the gentleman from Lynchburg that the proposed measure is hardly worth passage. Noble as may be the theory behind it, or righteous as may be the motives of the senators sponsoring the bill, it must be conceded that it is a sectional affair and constitutes a direct slap at the south.

This newspaper holds no brief for the mobster. It long ago took the stand that the lyncher should be exterminated and it applauds when one of the ilk is caught on the horns of justice and impaled. At the same time it cannot see where the proposed law will seriously effect the situation. Lynching in the eyes of the northerner occurs only when a negro meets violent and illegal death at the hands of a southern white. It fails to recognize that gang killings, hold-up murders and other such crimes must also be classified as lynchings under the implied meaning of the term.

We concede that law enforcement officers are handicapped in obtaining information which will link the average mobster with a crime of the kind concerned, but will a change from state to federal offense change the situation? We doubt it.

Macon, Ga., Telegraph
April 26, 1935

Dodging Anti-Lynching Bill

It might as well be made clear once for all that those senators and representatives from the South who are opposing the federal anti-lynching bill do not by any means voice the unanimous sentiment of the South and that a filibuster to prevent the enactment of this bill will be resented.

The changed attitude on this matter is shown by the organization of Southern women in Florida who have lined up solidly behind the bill and have pointed to the number of lynchings which have taken place in the South in recent years with practically no one brought to justice.

Perhaps there was a time when the Federal Government should have been told to keep its hands off the enforcement of the law in the states, but since that time it has been clearly shown that the states will not enforce the law when it comes to lynching.

Statistics show that only a small per cent of the lynchings which have taken place in the course of the past few years were for attacks upon women. The flimsiest pretexts have been used to mob Negroes when racial prejudices became inflamed. The cruelty and deliberation with which the latest of the more sensational lynchings have been pulled off, that near Marianna, Fla., beggars all description. Invitations to the gruesome affair were sent out over several counties. The tragedy was postponed until a vast crowd could assemble and the crime, deliberately committed, was accompanied by mutilation and horror which made the blood run cold.

In the course of consideration of the bill Wednesday on the floor of the House, Representative Black made the statement that it would give peace officers a "wonderful excuse" to molest strikers on the ground that such officers would be subject to penalties for not enforcing the law.

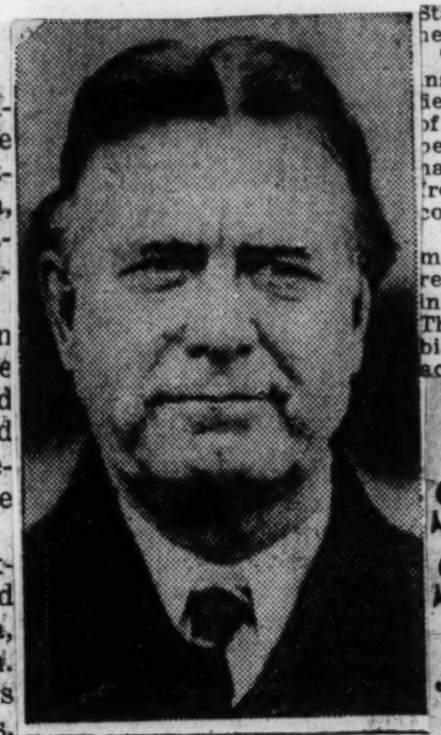
Where a strike is not accompanied by violence peace officers would not have the slightest excuse for interfering in the matter, while on the other hand if the mob spirit was about to get out of hand it would be the imperative duty of the sheriff to act, whether the mob had assembled to lynch a Negro or to lynch an industry. The fears expressed by Representative Black should not be allowed to influence a full and fair consideration of this bill.

While we have referred definitely to the organization of women in Florida which has taken a strong hand in favor of the federal anti-lynching bill—introduced by a good Democrat, incidentally—we have no doubt that the good women of other sections of the South feel very much the same way about it. They do not want to see their state disturbed by a breach of law and order, whether in Florida or any other state.

The old excuses for doing nothing about this thing of mob violence will not hold good any longer. The mob spirit is entirely too prevalent, and if this law will keep it in check, whether the occasion be a lynching such as we understand it or in any other case, it will serve a good purpose and should be passed.

Sanford, Fla. Herald
April 24, 1935

The Anti-Lynching Bill



Stormy oposition is in sight for the Costigan anti-lynching bill, says the United States News. "Already the prelude to the battle has occurred. So furious was the attack launched by Senator Smith, (Dem.), of South Carolina, when the bill was brought up in the Senate for consideration that a postponement was deemed advisable by Administration leaders."

The Southern senator described the bill as "an open reflection upon the South, where we are faced with the humiliating necessity of going outside the law to safeguard our fireside and the sanctity of our womanhood. He said the bill implied that the South was 'barbarous,' and described his attitude as 'only a prelude to what will take place when this infamous bill comes before us.'

In reply, Senator Costigan, (Dem.), of Colorado, explained, according to the News, that the bill was drafted after the lynching of two white men at San Jose, California, in 1933, and was not intended as an attack upon the South. It would inflict heavy penalties on State or local officers who fail or refuse to protect prisoners from riotous mobs, making local communities subject to damages.

However, Senator George, (Dem.), of Georgia, declared "this whole scheme is unconstitutional and is not justified or authorized by anything in the Constitution. It would break every semblance of State sovereignty."

Whether curbing the scope of the bill will reduce the opposition to the measure when it comes up for consideration in the Senate at a later date is not known. The bill has already received the support of many high officials, the News says.

Associated Press Photo
SENATOR BORAH

states Senate as the Costigan-Wagner bill is debated.

The present antilynching bill was inspired by the mob's dance of death in one of the fairest cities of California. If Hauptmann had been acquitted would New Jersey have been able to protect him from mob vengeance? No one could be sure.

The power of the federal government ought to be mobilized to reinforce the power of the states in stamping out this national evil. The federal government under this bill would never be called upon to act if the states did their duty.

Anti-Ly[illegible]elved; Bonus Pl[illegible] in Senate

Successful Seven-day Filibuste by Southerners Ends as Borah Switches

WASHINGTON, May 1 (AP)—Smarting from a semi-serious presidential criticism of senatorial lethargy, Democratic leaders, aided by Republicans, today flung off the senate's anti-lynching bill filibuster in favor of the controversial bonus issue.

A move to adjourn which had failed on three previous occasions, finally carried 48 to 42 after several Republicans and Democrats had rallied to the southern cause and Senator Borah, Idaho Republican independent, had assailed from the floor the constitutionality of the Costigan-Wagner measure to give the federal government power in lynching cases.

Many senators credited Borah with breaking the deadlock.

This parliamentary tactic ended a seven-day successful southern filibuster against the motion of Senator Costigan (D., Col.), to take up the bill he and Senator Wagner (D. N. Y.), have been pressing.

It automatically displaced from its calendar position Costigan's motion and shortly afterward Vice President Garner recognized Senator Harrison (D., Miss.), who proposed that the bonus be taken up.

Bonus Discussion Put Off

The motion carried without a record vote. The bonus debate, however, was put off until tomorrow because Senator Robinson, Democratic leader, who had moved the temporary adjournment, decided to hack away at an accumulated list of secondary bills.

The adjournment motion was supported by 43 Democrats, 4 Republicans and the Farmer-Laborite, Shipstead. Fourteen Democrats, all from the North and West, 17 Republicans, and the Progressive, La Follette, answered "no."

Those switching from previous roll calls to the side of Robinson for adjournment included Senators Bachman, Clark, Murray and Truman, Democrats, and Borah, Couzens and Frazier, Republicans.

Borah assailed lynching as a "brutal" crime, but said the pending bill would have "dealt a blow to our principle of government, the importance of which could not be overstated."

"To my mind," Borah asserted, bringing smiles to the faces of the determined southern opposition group, "if this type of bill can be sustained by the supreme court, we have utterly broken down all state sovereignty. I can see no escape from that conclusion."

The fiery Idahoan, has long hair at times falling over his brow, also ripped into the AAA and NRA on constitutional grounds and in this he was assisted by the Virginia conservative Democrat, Carter Glass.

"If you can go to Iado and take a man by the nap of the neck and make him abide by the rules of the federal governments to his business" he said, "you can go to Alabama and seize the sheriff by the scruff of his shirt and compel him to abide by federal regulations governing lynching."

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
MAY 1 1935

THE ANTILYNCHING BILL

(Springfield Republican)

Whenever a lynching occurs the nation, not merely a state, bears the odium of it. It is, as Sen. Costigan, says, a national disgrace. Throughout the world American civilization is measured by the American lynching record. Morally speaking, this is an effective answer to the cry of state's rights now raised again in the United

New York Evening Post
MAY 2 1935

Senate Just a Cave of Winds, Says Moore After Filibuster

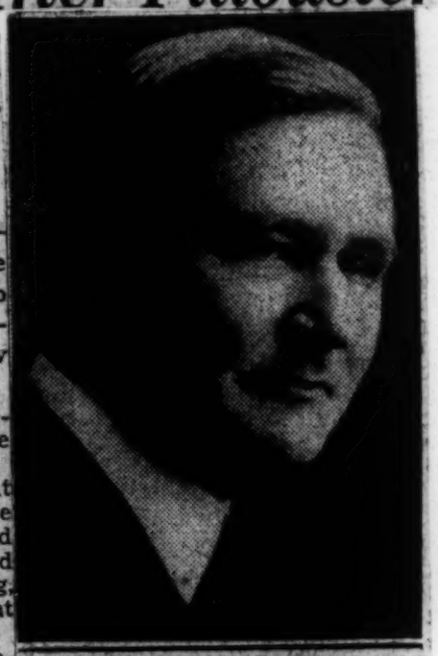
Junior N. J. Member Pines for Oratory of Clay and Calhoun

WASHINGTON, May 2 (AP).—Seven days of filibustering on the anti-lynching bill have been too much for A. Harry Moore, Democrat, the junior Senator from New Jersey.

"I am disillusioned," he said, pacing the President's room of the Senate.

"As a boy I used to think about Daniel Webster swaying the Senate with his imagery of speech. I used to think, too, of Henry Clay and John C. Calhoun making stirring, emotion - tingling addresses that meant something.

"But what do I find? When a Senator makes a speech now everybody walks out. The place is just a cave of the winds. I am disillusioned.



"Why, we could do what we've got to do within two weeks if we worked night and day.

"Of course, I may be wrong. I have been told this is a great place. Maybe having a chamber in which men can give full vent to their feelings without fear of punishment or anything else is good for the country.

"Perhaps it serves the same function as Hyde Park in London, or Columbus Circle in New York, by letting men get off steam.

"But this talk about men coming here with a mission or anything like that is just a lot of bunk; you know that.

"This filibuster on the anti-lynching bill carried speechmaking to what you might call the point of ad nauseam."

SENATOR MOORE

MINNESOTA BACKS ANTI-LYNCH BILL

ST. PAUL, Minn., Mar. 21.—Governor Floyd B. Olson signed a concurrent resolution Wednesday which passed the Minnesota State Legislature memorializing Congress to enact a Federal anti-lynching law.

Lynchings-1935.
Legislation Relating to

5071

COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD

MAY 7 1935

Demonstration

There is another thing that ought to be note about the successful Southern filibuster against th Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

It was a demonstration of the fact that the South ern senators if they want to prevent a bill's enact ment can do something about it.

If they do not so band themselves together to prevent the enactment of some other bill by threatening to talk until the bill is withdrawn it does not mean that they could not carry out such a threat but that they do not care to oppose the bill.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

MAY 4 1935

Lynching and States' Rights.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

At its meeting on April 30, the nterracial committee of the District of Columbia adopted the following minutes:

"That we view with astonishment and profound regret the attitude taken by The Washington Post toward the pending legislation against lynching.

"The argument of The Post that this crime should be left to the States to deal with is self-refuted. Only because it has been left so far to the States and the States have failed to suppress it have men and women sensible of this deep disgrace felt forced to appeal to the Federal power.

"We can not conceive of the editor of The Post as unaware that by his course he is strengthening the hands of the singular beings that in the fourth decade of the twentieth century do not hesitate publicly to assert mob murder as a right, sacred and unassailable. We remind him that 75 years ago the intellectual forerunners of these persons did not hesitate to assert similarly as sacred and unassailable a right of man to own his fellow man. We can not think the editor of The Post has failed to note this strange and sinister analogy.

"Knowledge of the unspeakable horrors of recent lynchings in this country has spread around the world, until mankind marvels that American civilization should lag so far behind the civilization of the Ashantees and the wild Papuans. We are weary of the intolerable stigma of this disgrace. That efforts to remove the foul blot in the only way whereby it can be removed do not seem to appeal to The Post is puzzling but not disheartening. We believe that elsewhere all good citizenship feels as we feel about it."

I was instructed by the meeting to lay this memorandum before you.

CHARLES EDWARD RUSSELL,
Chairman, Interracial Committee, District of Columbia.
Washington, May 1.

SANFORD, FLA.
HERALD

MAY 1 1935

The Lynching Problem

Not all Northerners take the same view of the anti-lynching bill which Senators Costigan and Wagner have shown in drafting it and in their remarks on it in the Senate. Many others, probably as seriously concerned over the lynching problem as the senators themselves, believe nevertheless that this form of lawlessness is purely a local problem and can be handled best by the local units of government. The New York Herald Tribune takes this broad-minded view of the attempt to federalize the punishment for lynching:

"Just now the Senate is in the throes of a passionate debate over the Costigan-Wagner bill. This measure would make it a federal-offense, heavily punishable, for local peace officers to refuse or fail to protect prisoners in their custody from mob violence. It would also provide for financial damages to the relatives of victims against the counties or cities, or both, in which lynchings are perpetrated, the damages to be collected in a federal court. In the main it follows the lines of the Dyer anti-lynching bill, which had Congress in a similar ferment thirteen years ago.

"Its opponents have called it unconstitutional, but mistakenly, we believe. Since the Fourteenth Amendment forbids any state to deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, excellent authority has held that Congress has the right to pass legislation penalizing failure to give such protection. Neither with the bill's objective nor with its constitutionality can there be serious quarrel. Nor need we join our Southern statesmen in shedding bitter tears over its implied insult to the South. As Senator Costigan has observed: 'Lynching has been practiced in every part of the nation. The evil is in no sense to be regarded as sectional.'

"However, the bill does raise a fundamental question of governmental policy. In the first place, a lynching is almost invariably a purely local crime. In this respect it differs radically from kidnaping, bank burglary, highway robbery and the like, with their attendant murders, whose perpetrators skip from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. There is not the same excuse to include it in the fast-growing list of offenses to be dealt with by the Federal authorities. In the second place, it is an evil that is on the wane. In 1892 there were 255 lynchings; last year there were 15. The curve, though it may waver a bit from year to year, has shown a marked downward tendency for nearly half a century, indicating very clearly the growing popular revision against the crime as well as the effectiveness of local statutes.

"Given the enormous diversity of customs and conditions in this country, one may always doubt the wisdom of calling upon the federal government to solve a local problem. Lynching is a local problem, however widespread may be its practice, and, unless the figures lie, it is being solved locally. The process may take longe than the short cut of federal interference, but in the end it is found to be the more wholesome and effective."

St. George, S. C., Eagle
May 2, 1935

THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

Senator Smith should receive the whole-hearted support of all the people of his state in his fight against the anti-lynching bill now before the senate. This bill is aimed directly at the south.

When a negro is killed in a Southern state it is called a lynching, but if it happens above the Mason and Dixon line he was killed in a riot. If the bill becomes a law every county in the Southern states in which a negro meets a violent death will be forced to pay a heavy penalty, while Northern counties will escape this penalty by labeling the cause of death by a different name.

While Senator Smith has been leading the fight against this bill, which threatens what little remains of states rights, the junior Senator from South Carolina, so far as we have been able to learn has remained strangely silent.

Another peculiar thing about the bill is that it is sponsored by a Democratic senate. This could be more easily understood if a Republican senate should try to force such a measure on the South.

We congratulate Senators Smith and Gla upon the fight they are making.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

MAY 4 1935

Letters To The Editor

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters are subject to condensation, and in no case should they exceed 250 words.

"The Lynching Business."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The most important bill before Congress now is the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill. I say it is the most important because the present continued injustice to our colored population breeds class hatreds that might endanger our national existence in time of war.

The normal relationship between the whites and colored should at least be friendly for the interests of both. Southern planters profit by Negro labor to the extent of millions of dollars. In the North, the Negro has proved himself to be a man of honor and ability. He is able to respond fully to the opportunities and responsibilities put upon him. To deny him his right and a chance to advance his economic position is to make a criminal of him and endanger the peace of the whole Nation to say nothing of the glaring injustice.

Abe Lincoln said: "We can not endure as a Nation one-half free and one-half slave." Let me add that we can not endure and prosper as a Nation when one-half of the States nullify the Constitution for a large part of their peaceful citizens.

The worst part about the whole lynching business is that it creates a disrespect for all law and order. If mobs of people can disregard with impunity one article of the Constitution, why not any one? Lynching is a damning admission of a whole State and its citizens that they regard the law as a joke or of no importance.

Law is something built up through the ages and is built upon justice. The ideas of justice are a slow growth, an accretion of centuries and presupposes a theory of progress. If we discard the theory of progress and gradual improvement of the relations of mankind, we might just as well shut up shop and haul down the American flag. If the Stars and Stripes do not stand for equal and real justice for all citizens, rich and poor, black, white, red or any other color, it does not mean anything at all.

FAIR DEALER.

Washington, April 27.

Lack of Money Hampered Fight for Anti-Lynching Bill

NEW YORK—Lack of sufficient financial support from those who would profit most from the passage of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill was chiefly responsible for the temporary shelving of the controversial measure, according to a statement issued from the office of the NAACP.

According to this statement, many Northern Senators would have spoken in favor of the Costigan-Wagner bill had they been supplied with adequate detailed information and arguments, legal and otherwise, on lynching.

Speaking for the association, which is actively backing the bill, Walter White, its secretary, declared:

"Memoranda were prepared exposing the fallacy of the arguments about rape; on the states have in their laws provisions for financial damages against counties which permit lynching; detailed analyses of the lynchings in thirteen Southern states showing the triviality of the causes of many lynchings.

No Money for Research

"But not enough of these analyses were done," he continued, "nor sufficiently distributed in the Senate and among newspaper men, because the preparation of such memoranda requires much research by experts in the gathering, correlation, digesting and presenting of this material.

Stenographic services, printing, postage, mimeographing, multigraphing, traveling expenses and personal interviews with Senators to supply them with facts to answer the wild statements of the Ellison Smiths and other filibusterers, all these cost money. The association had no money for this work.

INSUFFICIENT FUNDS BLAMED FOR SHELVING ANTI-LYNCHING BILL BY N. A. A. C. P. SECRETARY

"NEWSPAPERS GAVE HEARTY SUPPORT," SAYS WALTER WHITE

Research And Other Work Lacking

NEW YORK, May 16.—Lack of sufficient financial support from those who would profit most from the passage of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill was chiefly responsible for the temporary shelving of the controversial measure, according to a statement issued today from the office of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

According to this statement, many northern senators would have spoken in favor of the Costigan-Wagner bill had they been supplied with adequate detailed information and arguments, legal and otherwise, on lynching.

Speaking for the Association, which is actively backing the bill, Walter White, its secretary, declared: "Memoranda were prepared exposing the fallacy of the arguments about rape; on the states which have in their laws provisions for financial damages against counties which permit lynchings; detailed analyses of the lynchings in thirteen southern states showing the triviality of the causes of many lynchings; memoranda on how lynching is used as a means of terrorization through which economic, educational and other discrimination is perpetuated and increased."

No Money For Adequate Research Work

"But not enough of these analyses were done," he continued, "nor sufficiently distributed in the Senate and among newspaper men because the preparation of such memoranda requires much research by experts in the gathering, correlation, digesting and presenting of this material. Stenographic services, printing, postage, mimeographing, multigraphing, traveling expenses and personal interviews with senators to supply them with facts to answer the wild statements of the Ellison Smiths and other filibusterers, all these cost money. The Association had no money for this work.

"After each day's vote stenographic service should have been available immediately to send telegrams to key persons in states from which came senators who had been absent from the floor or who had voted for adjournment. It is only in this fashion that the political threat of revolt by Negro voters against senators who did not persistently and faithfully fight the filibuster to the limit could be properly exerted. Just as lobbies for selfish purposes are used effectively in Washington so must lobbies be used for humanitarian purposes, as in the fight against lynching.

Praises Support of Newspapers

"Of great importance," he continued, "and indicative of the growth of consciousness, has been the unparalleled support of the bill of the Negro press without exception. Our newspapers have devoted many columns of space and have uniformly taken an intelligent, broad gauge view of the significance of the fight."

Mr. White deplored the fact that most of the volunteer lobbying for the anti-lynching bill was done by white people, only a few colored people, even in Washington, being interested enough to help. "This is said not in criticism," he averred, "but as one of the weaknesses which must be corrected. A few Negroes rendered active, devoted and valuable service, without which the fight for the bill would have been more greatly handicapped than it was. But there should have been scores of volunteers."

"The Association," he said, "desired to establish an adequately-staffed office in Washington with sufficient budget to carry on an effective fight for the passage of the bill, but could only do so when colored people themselves supplied sufficient funds."

Lynchings—1935
Legislation Relating to

5072

NEWS
U. S.
Washington, D.C.
MAY 6 1935

The Anti-lynching Bill: Oratorical Fireworks in Senate

REMINISCENT was the Senate scene the past week of the "Fiery Epoch," when Calhoun, Toombs, Rhett and Davis made sparks fly clashing with Webster, Clay, Sumner and Seward on "State rights" and the "irrepressible conflict."

Stirring old arguments heard in ante-bellum and reconstruction days were heard again, amid much mere wind-milling against time, as a determined Southern bloc filibustered six and a half days and thwarted consideration of the Wagner-Costigan Federal anti-lynching bill.

SENATOR WAGNER (Dem.), of New York: The crime of lynching, which punishes without trial and without conviction, is * * * the most fundamental of all attacks upon our Government and our ideals of life. * * * Of the 28 victims of lynchings during 1933, 15 were charged with only minor offenses. Of the 16 names upon the roll of infamy last year only 10 were even accused, much less proven guilty, of major crimes. Five were tortured for such trivial departure from good taste as writing an insulting note, using opprobrious language, fist fighting, talking disrespectfully, and stealing.

The plea has been made that lynching can be ended by State action alone; but the plea crumbles under the weight of the fact that it must carry. There have been 5,071 lynchings in the United States since 1882, and 280 since 1922. Since the turn of the century only eight-tenths of 1 per cent of these crimes have been followed by prosecution, and in only 12 instances have convictions resulted.

This bill does not invade State rights. It interferes only with mob rule.

SENATOR CONNALLY (Dem.), of Texas: The bill * * * constitutes a wholly new departure from all our preconceived conceptions as to the responsibility of the States within their own proper sphere, and of the Federal Government. * * * Now and then it is a good thing for Senators to go back to the Constitution, read it, meditate upon it, and contemplate the possibilities and the limitations and the restrictions.

SENATOR LOGAN (Dem.), of Kentucky: It appears to me that when a Senator is for a bill he can always find something in the Constitution which will justify its enactment, and therefore he concludes it is constitutional. But if he is against the bill, he can always find something in the Constitution which he believes renders it unconstitutional, and therefore he is against the bill.

SENATOR CONNALLY: The Senator from Kentucky makes a very sweeping charge. * * * I am opposed to the whole bill. I am opposed to taking it up.

SENATOR GLASS (Dem.), of Virginia: I know my State has a very severe statute against lynching.

SENATOR CONNALLY: And a number of other states have.

SENATOR BARBOUR (Rep.), of New Jersey: Lynching * * * is an anarchistic assault on sovereignty and represents a temporary overthrow of the State government. President Wilson characterized lynching as vitally affecting the "honor of the Nation and the very character and integrity of our institutions." Under these circumstances, I believe the Federal government has a right, indeed, a duty to assure that the rights guaranteed under the Constitution shall be preserved.

I cannot bring myself to feel any sympathy in this instance for those who rest their opposition to the anti-lynching bill on the question of State rights. I believe that it is demonstrable that those States in which this issue is more frequently raised are the same States which are leaning most heavily on the Federal Government for financial assistance in meeting the ravages of the depression in their cases.

It seems to me that if these States are willing that the Federal Government should assume by far the greatest responsibility in taking care of their unfortunate, they should not be too insistent on denying the constitutional rights of court trial and ordered justice to their own citizens.

SENATOR BAILEY (Dem.), of North Carolina: The pending bill gives notification to the United States that there are those who intend to destroy the States and destroy local self-government. * * * Coercion is the most dangerous thing in all the life of the country. * * * Is it possible that we have reached the hour in America when it is proposed to ride us with whip and spur?

SENATOR CAPPER (Rep.), of Kansas: Everyone knows that this blot on our civilization, lynch law, is far too prevalent in the North as well as in the South, and neither its victims nor its executioners are confined to any one race. * * *

It is a shame and a humiliation and a disgrace to the name of America among the nations of the world; it holds us up to scorn, it sets at naught our protestations about democracy, justice, equality before the law. It cannot be tolerated for long if our Republic is to endure.

SENATOR BANKHEAD (Dem.), of Alabama: I know I am a better friend of the colored man than are * * * Senators who are insistent upon projecting this bill upon the statute books, thereby stirring up ill will, strife, and hatred among the races.

SENATOR McCARRAN (Dem.), of Nevada: The only time I have heard the question of race raised has been when it was raised by the learned Senators from the South.

SENATOR SMITH (Dem.), of South Carolina: The Senator has reached the point where he is willing to burn down the house to get rid of a rat. * * * We, as sovereign States, will settle our social questions for ourselves. * * * When shall you and I again * * * dare to raise our voices in behalf of the national Democratic party when it has betrayed us in the midst of an overwhelming so-called "Democratic Administration?" * * *

I, for one, here today declare that if this proposal, involving the destruction of State rights and the usurpation of local self-government, becomes a part and parcel of Democratic doctrine, I shall pay no further allegiance to such a party. * * *

I want to state to the Senator from Nevada that the thing which did more to precipitate the Civil War than anything else was just such unwarranted interference with our affairs as is now proposed.

SENATOR McCARRAN: I am not going to fight the Civil War all over again.

SENATOR SMITH: The Senator may have to do so, if he and his colleagues keep on with such measures as this.

SENATOR BORAH (Rep.), of Idaho: It is my belief that this type of bill would not prevent lynching. The class of crimes to which lynching belongs can only be prevented by the education of the people, by building up public opinion against it.

SENATOR NEELY (Dem.), of West Virginia: During the last eight days everything in the universe excepting the United States Senate has been in constant and persistent progression. * * * During these last eight days, how far has the United States Senate traveled, what service has it rendered the nation, what blessings has it bestowed upon the American people?

Let no one lay on his soul the flattering unction that the country has approved of his action in filibustering against the anti-lynching bill. The press of the East and the West, the North and the South, has almost unanimously condemned the Senate filibuster. * * *

In terrifying this body into silence on this subject with your specious argumentation you have, in defiance of Woodrow Wilson—one of the greatest men who has walked this earth since the morning stars sang together—made the Constitution of the United States a skeleton of fear.

HERALD
Raleigh, N.C.
MAY 2 1935

Lynching a Menace That Can't Be Kept Within Bounds

Southern senators strenuously opposed the anti-lynching bill and threatened a filibuster to keep it from coming to a vote.

This measure, introduced by Senator Costigan of Colorado, with the coöperation of Senator Wagner of New York, is a thoughtful, carefully drawn bill designed to end one of the greatest disgraces of this Republic. It provides for the collection of civil penalties from the communities where lynchings occur, and for criminal responsibility of local officials who do not combat such outrages. It gives Federal courts jurisdiction in such matters.

Yet Senator George of Georgia vows that such a law would be "unconstitutional," and Senator Smith of South Carolina indulges in a tirade, rather than an argument, against it. Georgia has had 459 lynchings since the year 1889. Seven of the mob victims were women and three were white men. Georgia holds the world's black medal for mob murder; and it is no accident that in the same State a striker has no rights that the governor feels bound to respect. South Carolina has not climbed so high on that bad eminence; she has lynched "only" 140 people in the peri named, of whom three were women a three white men. But South Carolina sa the murder of five unarmed workers la fall by armed guards at Honea Path, during the textile strike.

The usual excuse given for lynching is that it is necessary to prevent the crime of rape. That is to a great extent untrue. Of the 3,226 persons lynched in 13 Southern States since 1889, only 522 were charged with rape—16 per cent, one out of six. Of the other victims, 1,253 were charged with murder, 810 with other felonies, while 841 — 119 more than were charged with rape—were lynched for other offenses, including "jumping a labor contract" and "disputing a white man's word."

Nor is lynching entirely a race matter, though in the South Negroes suffer most. In the period covered 372 white persons, 12 of them women, were lynched. Florida lynched 242 persons in the period named, 19 of them white; Arkansas had the same number of lynchings, but 34 of the Arkansas victims were white; while of the 205 Tennessee victims, 41 were white.

No complete list can be made of the number of innocent persons who have been lynched; but it must be large. In several cases men who were released by a court or whom a grand jury refused to indict were murdered by mobs.

Lynching is a reversion to savagery, and a pretty low order of savagery. It is a menace that cannot be kept within bounds. Negroes are the commonest sufferers, but white workers who are not submissive to the boss probably come next. The Costigan-Wagner bill is a measure of common safety.

Lexington, Ky., Herald
May 14 1935.

The Anti-Lynching Bill

The Costigan-Wagner bill, now pending in congress, is a measure which was developed in the hope of ending lynching, which has been the South's shame since the War Between the States. The American Federation of Labor recently went on record as favoring this anti-lynching bill. The inter-racial committee of the Episcopal Church of Florida, state councils of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, the southern division of the National Student Council of the Young Women's Christian Association, many southern newspapers and organizations as well as individuals, principally women, have gone on record as in favor of this measure. Senators Edward P. Costigan and Robert F. Wagner drafted the measure.

The subject of lynching has been before congress for the past fifteen years in one form or another. The Dyer anti-lynching bill passed the house of representatives in 1922 but did not come to a vote. Usually the senate has managed to kill anti-lynching bills. It is to be hoped that Senators Barkley and Logan will use their best efforts in behalf of this one.

The South long has realized the fact that local authorities could not cope with the problem of lynching but there has remained the old objection to federal encroachments upon the states. However, congress has passed the Lindbergh act, which makes kidnaping a federal offense if either the kidnaped person is carried across a state line or ransom negotiations are carried out from one state to another. Eventually federal laws must be enacted to reinforce the efforts of the state toward upholding the law in the very nature of the advancement that is taking place in communication, transportation and along all other lines.

The present measure provides that federal courts shall have jurisdiction to try any member of a lynching mob, but only if states are lax in prosecution or if jurors obtainable for service in a state court are manifestly opposed to punishment for the lynching. If within thirty days after a mob offense no effort has been made to apprehend, indict or prosecute guilty parties, such prerequisites are automatically considered to exist.

There is no question that lynching can be stopped if the peace officers, the courts and the citizens of a community are opposed to it. Lynching is contrary to the law and to the whole spirit of American government. Courts are set up in order to give protection, so that it will be unnecessary for citizens to take the law into their own hands.

The Costigan-Wagner bill gives an opportunity to write "the end" to the 5,068 lynchings that have been committed in the United States since 1882. Even the threat of the passage of such a measure served as a factor in the reduction of the number of lynchings from 28 in 1933 to 16 in 1934.

Read This, Clip It, Save It and Remember It When You Vote for Your Senator

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 17.—Among senators who voted either for adjournment during the seven-day filibuster of the Southern senators against the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill last week so as to block its consideration or against adjournment so as to break the filibuster, who must face the voters next year in border and northern states where the colored vote counts are the following:

Senator Nathan L. Bachman, Democrat, of Tennessee, filling the unexpired term of Secretary of State Cordell Hull. An analysis of the four ballots taken on motions to adjourn shows that he voted against adjournment on the roll-calls of April 26 and 27, did not vote on April 29, but voted for adjournment on the rall-call of May 1 when the motion was adopted by a vote of 48 to 32.

Senator W. Warren Barbour, Republican, of New Jersey, who voted consistently against motions to adjourn except on the roll-call of April 27 when he did not vote. Senator Barbour spoke in behalf of the bill on April 25 and inserted into the Congressional Record figures show that the states whose representatives were most vigorously opposing the anti-lynching bill were receiving the largest proportion of Federal funds for emergency relief.

Senator Arthur Capper, Republican, of Kansas, voted against adjournment on all four motions. He also spoke in behalf of the bill.

Non-Committal

Senator Marcus A. Coolidge, Democrat, of Massachusetts, did not vote on any of the four motions. He was reported as unavoidably detained from the senate.

Senator Edward P. Costigan, Democrat, of Colorado, co-author of the bill with Senator Robert F. Wagner, Democrat, of New York, voted against adjournment on all four motions. He motioned that the senate proceed to the consideration of the bill on April 24, was the first speaker in behalf of the bill and participated in the debate until his motion was sidetracked.

Senator James Couzens, Republican, of Michigan, voted for adjournment on the roll-calls of April 26 and 27, but switched and voted against adjournment on the roll-call of April 29. He switched back and voted for adjournment on May 1.

Senator Thomas P. Gore, Democrat, of Oklahoma, voted for adjournment on all four roll-calls.

Senator Daniel O. Hastings, Republican, of Delaware, was not present when the vote was taken on April 26, but on the next three roll-calls voted against adjournment.

Senator [illegible] Hamilton Lewis, Democrat, of Illinois, voted against adjournment on the first two roll-calls. He did not vote on the roll-call of April 29. He voted for adjournment on the roll-call of May 1.

Opposition

Senator M. M. Logan, Democrat of Kentucky, voted against adjournment on the first two roll-calls. He did not vote on the roll-call of April 29. He announced on the roll-call of May 1 that he had a general pair with Senator James J. Davis, Republican, of Pennsylvania, but that if he were permitted to vote, he would vote "yes."

Senator Charles L. McNary, Republican of Oregon, voted against adjournment on all four motions.

Senator Jesse H. Metcalf, Republican, of Rhode Island, voted against adjournment on the first two roll-calls, but was absent and did not vote on the last two roll-calls.

Senator Matthew M. Neely, Democrat, of West Virginia, voted against adjournment on all four roll-calls.

Senator George W. Norris, Republican, of Nebraska, voted for adjournment on each roll-call except April 27 when he did not vote.

Senator Thomas D. Schall, Republican of Minnesota, voted against adjournment on all four roll-calls.

Lynchings - 1935.
Legislation Relating to.

5073

RENO, NEV.
GAZETTE

APR 26 1935

SOUTH IS AROUSED

WILLINGLY AS some of the Southern States have swallowed the New Deal measures which trespass upon their police powers they are falling back upon their old state's rights doctrine in their violent opposition to the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill, which is being advocated in congress by Senator Wagner of New York and Senator Costigan of Colorado, both of whom, by the way, are Democrats. In angry language they have served notice that they will never allow the bill to pass, and there is every indication that they will defeat it even at the cost of a senate filibuster which will carry down with it every pending administration measure—if such a step should become necessary.

Drawn after the lines of the Dyer bill which passed the house some years ago the Wagner-Costigan bill would make lynching a federal offense and would also inflict heavy penalties upon counties and local officials permitting it. Wagner, according to reports, is particularly interested in the bill because of the large Negro voting population in New York state. Costigan, on the other hand, is a radical who has added lynching to his numerous legislative complexes.

In the opinion of the Southern senators the bill is aimed directly at the South and proposes an intolerable invasion of the states' police powers by the federal government. Both lynching and the offense for which it is inflicted, they maintain, are matters with which the states, alone, should deal, and one senator, Smith of South Carolina, frankly told the senate a few days ago that as the offense for which lynching is inflicted is "beyond the law" his state intends to punish it by a penalty equally beyond the law. In effect he advised the senate that South Carolina has adopted lynching as a part of its social and political code and does not propose to abandon it, regardless of any legislation that congress might enact.

The bill should be defeated, of course. The proper business of congress is to legislate upon national not upon state affairs. and ynching, deplorable as it may be, is a matter properly to be dealt with by the states.

WATERLOO, IA.
COURIER

APR 28 1935

THE ATTITUDE OF THE SOUTH ON ANTI-LYNCHING LAWS.

Certain southern members of the United States senate are determined to prevent passage of a federal anti-lynching law.

One member of the senate even went so far recently as to defend lynching as a means of preserving the "sanctity of the fireside."

It is bigotry such as this that provides the best argument for a federal anti-lynching measure. States—notably the southern states—have not lived up to their responsibilities in curbing this form of crime.

The manner in which the governor of Alabama acquiesced in the decision of the United States supreme court that Negroes may not be systematically excluded from serving as jurors would indicate that there is some courageous leadership in the south. Unfortunately, the Alabama governor is an exception.

It is said that the federal government could not provide adequate protection against lynching. The states, however, have fallen down on the job and give no indication of administering justice more impartially in the future. The federal government certainly could not fail more miserably than the states have.

Athens, Ga. Times
May [illegible]

HONOR IN THE SENATE!

Jumping to his feet in the midst of a comparatively quiet session of the United States Senate Ellison Durant Smith, Senator from our neighboring state of South Carolina for the past 26 years brought his colleagues to the edge of their chairs with old-school eloquence when he proclaimed that lynching is necessary to "protect the sanctity of our womanhood."

This started an eight man filibuster to prevent consideration of the Costigan Anti-Lynching law.

Out of a roll-call of 5,071 lynch victims, fewer than one-sixth died for crimes involving women. Nearly 1,400 were white, 94 were women; 186 proved innocent of the charges against them after the lynchings. It was brought out that mobs have lynched men accused of drunkenness, disorderly conduct, gambling, fighting, and stealing livestock.

A mob, lead well, can do more damage to civilization than all the petty thieves in the United States.

An unruly mob, without good leadership, can run amuck at the slightest provocation and cause more damage than any number of racketeers. Mob violence is a powerful, obstinate thing, dangerous at all times and never desirable. A smooth glib-tongued orator can stir up a mob of people to the fighting point and then convince them that the most innocent bystander is fit only for hanging. When the dust and excitement has died there are many shocked and repentant members of the mob who see too late the terrible thing they have done . . . but it is too late . . . the damage is done . . . an innocent person is dead . . . the murderer is the smooth tongued leader . . . the weapon . . . the susceptibility of a mob to oratory of an inflamatory nature.

The Costigan Anti-Lynching bill would penalize sheriffs who fail to protect their prisoners from mobs. It would allow families of lynch victims to recover $2,000 to $10,000 from county governments. In the opinion of the Times this latter provision should be contingent upon the guilt or innocence of the victim. In case guilt is established, a more severe penalty would be in order.

Eight Senators fell in behind "Cotton Ed" in this filibuster and would give no ground. We wonder whether the fact that such a stand would be unusually popular in certain communities located in the states represented by these Senators might have had anything to do with the adamant attitude they took against such legislation. Certainly a majority of the Senate must have been favorable, or a filibuster to prevent debate and consideration of the bill would not have been in line.

Statistics based on fact would not budge the eight solons . . . plading would not prevail upon their sense of duty to the constituency to end the congressional session as soon as possible . . . to move on to recovery legislation . . . for five days these Senators debated on why the anti-lynching bill should not be considered by the Senate. It is safe to bet that the constituencies in these states represented by the "immovable eight" will hear much around election time of the stand against this "infringement on states rights" against which they so eloquently pleaded for five days. And some folks wonder why the House always finishes work before the Senate around adjournament time.

Some Results of the Big Seven-Day Filibuster

Senators Costigan and Wagner put up a valian fight for the anti-lynching bill in the Senate, last week.

They lost because a majority of the Senators, wh had voted with them for seven days, could not withstand the bitter personal abuse of the irreconcilable Southern minority from the rebel states.

Some there were also who felt that the President had bent the Constitution far enough and no measure further limiting states' rights should be passed.

Result of the seven-day filibuster has been to mark certain Senators in the North and West for defeat at the next election. The N.A.A.C.P., which sponsored the anti-lynching bill, must take up the campaign against these renegade Senators like Dieterich, of Illinois; Radcliffe, of Maryland, and several others. 5-11-35

Another result has been to disclose to Northern Democrats that the distance between themselves and the Confederate South is as great as it was in 1860.

Some of the Northern gentry are politicians first and gentlemen afterwards, but those seven days' filibuster convinced them that moral and political principles in the South have not gotten past the slave stage, and that in seventy years the South has forgotten who surrendered at Richmond, and who won the war.

On the other hand, Northern Democrats realized that there is not so much difference between themselves and the Northern Republicans.

For ourselves, this was another plain evidence of the force and effectiveness of the ballot. All of the loud-talking filibusterers came from disfranchisement states. Senators from no state where we have the ballot voted consistently against the bill.

TROY, N. Y.
EVENING RECORD
MAY 1 1935

THE ANTI-LYNCHING FILIBUSTER.

The filibuster Southern Senators are conducting against the anti-lynching bill is revealing. We have always been told that decent people below Mason and Dixon's Line were as out of patience with mob rule as the people in the North. We have been assured by Southern legislators that they wish something could be done to restrain angry lynchers.

But when an actual measure is proposed which would accomplish this very thing and would make Southern murderers responsible for their crimes, whether they work alone or in groups, Southern Senators unite in using the ancient rules of the Senate to prevent a vote.

The truth is that these legislators are against lynching only with their tongues. Their hearts approve. Or else they feel that their supporters favor mob murder and they themselves lack the courage to oppose it. In other words, they like their jobs better than a modern moral code. It is a pitiable exhibition.

Southern Women Here Support Lynching Bill

Katherine Anthony and Other Writers Urge Passage of Costigan-Wagner Legislation

While their sisters in the South were hedging on the Federal anti-lynching legislation, according to Julian Harris, Atlanta correspondent of The New York Times, three prominent Southern-born white women here yesterday announced their support of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill now pending in the Senate.

While their sisters in the South were hedging on the Federal anti-lynching legislation, according to Julian Harris, Atlanta correspondent of the New York Times, three prominent southern-born white women here yesterday announced their support of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill now pending in the Senate. 5-4-35

The women, all of them writers, were Miss Katherine Susan Anthony or Arkansas, author of "Catherine the Great," "Queen Elizabeth" and co-author of "Civilization in the United States"; Mrs. Sheila Craik Hibben, widow of Paxton Hibben, the biographer of Henry Ward Beecher and William Jennings Bryan, author, "The National Cook Book," and Mrs. Edwina Behre.

"I look upon the Costigan-Wagner bill as the most effective measure for suppressing the lynching evil," Miss Anthony told The Amsterdam News. "I shall be glad to urge its passage by the Senate."

The bill, Mrs. Hibben said, has "my entire approval and I have wired Senator Bankhead of my native state, Alabama, urging him to support the bill. There is absolutely no justification for lynching."

Such legislation, Mrs. Behre said, "is terribly needed." Mrs. Behre is from New Orleans.

Mr. Harris in a dispatch to The Times last Sunday quoted Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, executive director of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, as opposed to the proposed legislation while favoring a suppression of the evil through education. "I am opposed to the Costigan-Wagner bill," she is quoted as having said.

Lynchings - 1935
Legislation Relating to.

5074

KNOXVILLE, TENN
JOURNAL

MAY 2 1935

The Costigan-Wagner Bill

The outworn and illogical attitude of some of the Southern Senators in regard to the anti-lynching bill now under disturbing consideration, has made the question, to a certain extent, a confused issue in the public mind.

The act is not opposed solely by those who considered it an insult to the South, as certain bombastic speeches have declared, nor the remedy of the trouble something that concerns a gentleman's honour as independent of outside interference.

It is opposed by people who think the South bears a big proportion of responsibility for the more or less countrywide act of barbarity that we call lynching, and who feel very deeply that this section has never fully met the measure of its responsibility.

Thus many of such people, no less strongly than the hot heads, oppose Federal action as unwise and impractical in the matter of a crime so intimate and local.

Editorial discussion of this position by the New York Times offers a very clear example of the reasoning which ends in opposition to the Costigan-Wagner bill in spite of unqualified horror of the offense against which it is directed, and of unqualified amazement at the type of people who sometimes abet and sometimes condone it.

"Of all forms of lawlessness that have disgraced America in the eyes of the civilized world," says the Times, "that of lynching is undoubtedly the most abominable.

"It is so for the simple reason that other comparable crimes are either the work of demented or depraved individuals or of gangs without the pale of organized society, while your lynching mob usually includes a fair proportion of citizens of the kind normally regarded as respectable.

"It is their betrayal of the state and of their own decency that gives the final hideous touch to the atrocious business."

Yet this paper realizes that the bill now under consideration does raise a question of fundamental government policy.

"In the first place," it reasons "a lynching is almost invariably a purely local crime.

"In this it differs radically from kidnaping, bank burglary highway robbery and the like with their attendant murders whose perpetrators skip from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. There is not the same excuse to include it in the fast-growing list of offenses to be dealt with by the federal authorities."

And so the argument goes.

Those opposed to the bill are by no means necessarily insensible to the crime it would seek to eradicate.

Their opposition comes from doubt of its full agreement with the fundamentals of our government.

For a second reason given for opposing so serious a thing as Federal authority in the matter, there is the reminder that the evil of lynching is on the wane and apparently not in need of the drastic handling proposed.

In 1892, according to the figures quoted, there were 255 lynchings.

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

MAY 1 1935

ONE MIGHT BE FOOLED.

Reading the report of Senator Bailey's talk in the senate about the dreadful possibilities of the anti-lynching bill one might get the idea that by authority of Congress, or report made by somebody who will be set to watch the conduct of the citizenry of the sovereign states, it would be arbitrarily determined whether a lynching had occurred in a locality and assessment for damages by way of compensation to the relatives of the deceased would arbitrarily run. It would not be supposed, if one took it in as the senator talks it, that there would be any court action, any procedure to determine in the courts of the United States and to prove to the satisfaction of a jury citizens of the accused, selected from the locale, that a killing such as specified in the act of Congress had occurred and that the injured persons were entitled to damages, as in such cases made and provided. One gets the impression from the senator's much speaking that all these matters would be arbitrarily fixed if the anti-lynching statute is enacted.

A smart lawyer like Senator Bailey, and he is one of the smartest in the state, is well versed in making the worse appear the better reason, black seem white or vice versa, for the confusion of juries. He was not talking to a jury that he expected to fool. There may be some senators who don't post themselves and accept whatever a leading senator with whose views they are in sympathy may say about it. But Senator Bailey was engaged in a filibuster and talking to take up time without reference to careful statement. His purpose was to stave off a vote that might be favorable to the bill he opposed. The senator wouldn't seriously pretend to persons who knew better that his talk meant what it seemed to mean. But if some of the citizenry down home should be misled by it that would be all to the good.

If the mere enactment of a statute providing ways and means to secure compensation for persons injured by a killing without the law and for the punishment of those who had not exerted themselves to prevent the killing would make unnecessary court procedure to determine the justice of the cause in a lawful action, the same might be done in a criminal prosecution of the members of the mob. But the senator didn't go that far. That would have been too raw, seeing that almost anybody knows that a grand jury, a trial court and trial jury are necessary to weigh such matters according to the evidence.

But lawyers justify themselves in attempting to confuse juries, seeing it is their job to win the case. Senators of the United States feel the same way about using imagination and exaggeration to confuse if they can help their side that way, and senators who are able lawyers can do the job better through long practice.

Charleston, S. C. News & Courier
April 25, 1935

The New "Reconstructionists"

In South Carolina are probably few persons who take seriously the articles of The News and Courier about the Costigan-Wagner bill. Were the purpose of the bill no more than to suppress lynching, it would cause no great concern to The News and Courier. Its larger aim is to break down the control by the Southern states of cases involving negroes by transferring them to United States courts.

It is a part of a general campaign, on various lines, to accomplish what the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments to the federal constitution failed to do. In the last two or three years the negro associations in the North, largely financed by a few wealthy white men and women, have assumed the aggressive and pressed forward to obtain "rights" for the Southern negroes. The campaign has somewhat suddenly become general, the attack on the white South is on a number of sectors. This paragraph is from an editorial in the Baltimore Evening Sun last Monday:

"The Negro who has brought suit to force his way into the law school of the University of Maryland may cost the State a lot of money before the thing is over. A similar suit brought in North Carolina resulted in the State's having to pay the tuition of the plaintiff at a Northern school."

The University of Missouri, we believe, has had experiences similar to that of North Carolina.

The Scottsboro cases have been used as a wedge to drive into the South. The new trials granted by the supreme court, with decisions commanding the Southern states to reform their jury practices, have been a victory of first magnitude for the Northern negro propagandists.

The decision against the negro seeking admission to the Democratic primary in Texas was a reverse, but not without encouragement implied to the negro's political allies. The Democratic parties in states are virtually told that they cannot give to their primaries regulation or recognition by law, that the parties must be no more than "gentlemen's agreements" if negroes are to be kept out of them.

If and as the federal government takes over, in part, support of Southern schools, it will assert the right of administration of them. We have no objection to giving the negroes just share of the school funds, we want them to have good schools, but federal administration, in time, would mean the breaking down of racial barriers within them. If the federal government shall uphold and perhaps insist upon mixed racial schools in Chicago, will it consent to separate schools, which would involve extra cost, in Columbia and Montgomery?

We say to you South Carolinians, you Southerners, that your Washington, your "Democratic", administration is without unlerstanding of "Southern questions." Secretary Perkins, who has talked about the "shoeless South," is an excellent woman, whose life has been devoted to "social problems" in a mighty city. Secretary Ickes, of Chicago, is of the same cloth. So are Dr. Tugwell, Mr. Frankfurter, Mr. Richberg, Mr. Hopkins, Mr. Moley, and they are running this country.

For the present James Farley, a practical politician, is a protection to the South, he is corralling the delegates for next year. We face no instanct and revolutionary change in the Southern handling of the race question in politics, but included in the "planning" is the complete reconstruction of the republic and in that is another "Reconstruction" of the South.

The men and women in control in Washington are proceeding, in a shrewder, wiser, gentler, far more unselfish and by no means dishonorable way, with substantially the same objective in mind that Thad Stevens, Oliver P. Morton, Ben Wade had. The Stevens gang failed because they insulted all decency. The new Reconstructionists are profiting by their blunder, but if they succeed the result to the South will be what it would have been had Stevens succeeded. The safety for the South is lodged in their state rights, and that is what your federal government now, openly, is destroying.

It may be that these people have the right on their side. The News and Courier has no heavenly revelation. We think they are wrong, and we do not want to live in the kind of "South" that they would fabricate and assimilate to their "culture."

They are advancing, and they are capturing sectors.

The longer the white South shall shut its eyes to the facts, the harder will be its next struggle for freedom.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
NEWS SENTINEL

APR 28 1935

Not Dixie's Voice

A SMALL group of Southern senators threaten to filibuster the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill just as a similar group killed the Dyer bill 12 years ago.

They may succeed. But if they do the country should know that their specious pleas in behalf of states' rights or chivalry do not echo the sentiments of the whole South.

Organizations representing some 42,000,000 Americans urge passage of this bill. How much of this support comes from south of the Mason-Dixon line may be judged from its approval by many of Dixie's leading papers.

"Its (the Costigan-Wagner bill's) invasion of states' rights should cause no Southern heartburning," says The Norfolk (Va.) Pilot. "There is no such thing morally speaking, as a reserved right to deal in our own way with a form of collective murder which our own way has uniformly failed to punish."

"It may be," says The Newport News (Va.) Press, "that the anti-lynching bill will not be adopted by the Congress now in session. But if it is not, and lynchings do not stop, it will be adopted by some other Congress; in fact, must be adopted if the machinery of justice is to function."

"Apparently," says The Macon (Ga.) Telegraph, "the mere threat of the Federal anti-lynching bill has a wholesome effect, and the time has come when even the South would vote for such a bill."

Southern women, too, have been quick to resent Senator Smith's quaint argument that "lynchings are necessary for womanhood's protection." Scores of letters, telegrams and resolutions from Southern women's religious, welfare and club organizations have repudiated the preposterous claim that the South's law is helpless to protect the South's women.

Proponents of this measure claim 59 Senate votes from all over the country and a big majority in the House. Only 20 senators are called irreconcilables. It is neither just nor gallant of them to filibuster against this popular national movement.

Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser
May 5, 1935

LYNCHING

Newspaper accounts of the Senate's action on the Wagner-Costigan bill termed by its proponents as a law to wipe out lynching, were misleading.

In the first place Southern Senators did not conduct a filibuster, at least not in the sense that filibusters are normally conducted. Senator Bailey, of South Carolina, did not carry out his threat to read "the whole Book of Deuteronomy," nor did any other Senators resort to reading extraneous matter at length.

What the Senators intent on halting a further invasion of State's sovereignty did, as a reading of the Congressional Record will show, was to attempt to defeat the bill on its merits.

Senators Bankhead and Black, of Alabama, played a conspicuous part in the debate of the Wagner-Costigan bill, the former holding the floor for several days. Senator Bankhead, furthermore, yielded the floor temporarily, when requested, to permit the backers of the bill to present their side whenever they chose. Both held their ground gallantly.

Credit for breaking the deadlock has been given to Senator Borah who in his forceful manner assailed the bill on constitutional grounds. However, the opposition to the bill had previously stated that it was unconstitutional a number of times. Due to Senator Borah's standing as a liberal and his reputation on constitutional questions his attitude was probably responsible for breaking down the Wagner-Costigan forces.

Did anyone ever hear the final outcome of the "is she, ain't she" controversy over Mae West?

It is unfortunate that the strength of a majority of those who abhor lynching was wasted on the Wagner-Costigan bill. It could have been used to greater advantage along other lines.

The theory that an evil can be eradicated by simply passing a Federal law against it is one that plays too important a part in American thought today. This was amply demonstrated by the failure of the Eighteenth Amendment which was the result of the concerted efforts of the prohibitionists over a period of years. With the ratification of the amendment the prohibitionists for 14 years forgot completely to teach temperance, and the break-down of their temple followed. The passage of a Federal law aimed at lynching might have met with the same results.

The decline in lynching in the past generation should serve to demonstrate that a Federal law was not necessary. Lynching has declined to a point where in the last two-year period there were only 22 murders of this kind.

At present lynching is looked upon by all thinking people as one of the most infamous crimes of civilization. Yet our Puritan ancestors once burned witches far more frequently than suspected criminals are lynched today.

No Federal law was necessary to stop witch-burning. There was a change in public opinion, a change in the hearts and minds of men.

Apart from the fact that the Wagner-Costigan bill would have been a rank invasion of State's rights, it would have had no influence in curbing lynching. The occurrence in Shelbyville, Tenn., in which the county courthouse was destroyed by mob violence, should be adequate proof that mob spirit halts at no cost in its reckless spirit of vengeance. The destruction of the courthouse cost the citizens of the county many times more than a Federal fine of $10,000 as provided by the Wagner-Costigan bill would have.

Two plausible methods of eradicating lynching have been advanced. One, advanced by H. L. Mencken, to provide brass bands for all communities in which lynchings were liable to occur; the other, for the people to elect sheriffs willing to shoot to protect prisoners.

All the time and energy wasted in behalf of the Wagner-Costigan bill would have been ample to provide the first. The second is the responsibility of citizens. Neither can ever be brought about by Federal law.

Charleston, S. C. News & Courier
May 2, 1935

Anti-Southern, Anti-Rural

The Costigan-Wagner bill is not only an anti-Southern but anti-rural measure. It is the product of the city mind ignorant of and unsympathetic with rural problems.

In New York, Senator Wagner's home, and in Denver, where Senator Costigan lives, a lynching would be next to impossible—though in New York attempts to lynch negroes are not uncommon.

The cities are elaborately policed. If a disturbance starts or a crowd gathers, 100 or 1,000 policemen can be brought to the spot in five or twenty minutes. The intended victim of the mob invariably is snatched from it and hurried to a jail that is a fortress. The same conditions are to be found in Denver, Mr. Costigan's home town. Of its 280,000 people 273,000 are white. It also has a numerous police force and fortress-like jails.

There is no excuse for lynchings anywhere or at any time, but they do not occur in cities because they are stopped by the police. Not in the City of Charleston has been a lynching in more than a century if ever and we have never heard of one in Columbia. A white man was taken from jail in Spartanburg and hanged by a mob about fifty-five years ago and a desperate effort was made to lynch a negro in that town about twenty-five years ago. The jail was new and strong and Sheriff White successfully defended it. Attempts to take prisoners from the Greenville jail, as we recall, always have failed.

In rural districts the feeble policing is provocative of lynching and makes it comparatively easy. There is a sense of loneliness and defenselessness unknown to the city dweller. If the people of South Carolina were not generally opposed to this kind of lawlessness it would be ten times more frequent than it is. The truth is that the public opinion of our people has all but suppressed it.

Since 1919 have been only three or four lynchings in South Carolina, and of our population 46 per cent are negroes. Senator Costigan dwells in a city (excellently policed). Less than 3 per cent of the people in Denver are of non-white races. What does he know of conditions in Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina?

Yet he, a Democrat, would have a federal law whereby a country sheriff and his deputies could be dragged into a federal court and punished. Have we come to the point that a sheriff elected by the people of Marion or Pickens shall be responsible to federal judges and juries for the performance of their duties?

It seems so. Senators Wagner and Costigan are Democrats. The president is a Democrat. Many of his fellow Democrats from the Northern and Western states are voting for the anti-Southern bill. He has not said that he would veto it if it were passed.

Has the South a dependable friend in the White House when a Southern question arises?

The Costigan-Wagner bill is a persecution bill.

City sheriffs would never be affected by it.

ROCKFORD, ILL.
REGISTER REPUBLIC

MAY 6 1935

AN UNPROMISING PROPOSAL.

It is highly questionable whether the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching measure provides the solution for the difficult situation which it is intended to correct. There are indications in the face of the stubborn filibuster which has been launched against it that about the only effect the measure will have is the obstruction of the work of congress.

The measure is a punitive one. It becomes cooperative only after a lynching and does not set up any protection to prevent mob violence. We doubt whether even knowledge of the severe penalties involved would provide any potent deterrent to mob violence in the old south.

The bill does give relatives of a lynching victim the right to a civil trial for damages in federal court from officials, against whom, however, dereliction of duty must be proved. It is difficult to understand just how the threat of property loss would strengthen the hands of local officials in dealing with an overwhelming mob. It would also be extremely difficult to secure a jury award of damages in communities where lynch law is condoned.

Southern senators have been frank in their discussion of the measure. They resent interference of the north and west in their problem. Those who have not lived in the south know little of the bitterness of the trials that section has gone through in dealing with this particular problem.

It is a situation which must be left to the south to work out itself. It is even now being attacked with vigor in many of the states below the imaginary Mason and Dixon line. Southern newspapers and southern p[illegible]ors are crystalizing sentiment against lynch law in the sections where it is most often employed. Repeated successful efforts of the best type of southern officials make their work harder by passing a law which courageously resisting infuriated mobs are objectwould only have the effect of making them lessons even more potent than laws, preach-lable to suits for failures which they are trying nents from the pulpits, or scathing editorials. their level best to avoid.

The passage of a federal law would not have the effect of stiffening the south's sense of responsibility. This responsibility is on the whole keenly felt by local officials in the southern

Lynchings-1935
Legislation Relating to.

5075

Ingratitude

The vote of George McGill on the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill is directly contrary to the expressed will of the people who elected him to the U. S. senate. Kansas has an anti-mob law. It is of long standing. Call

The senior Kansas senator, Arthur W. Capper, has been outspoken for the bill. He expresses both his own personal opinion and the people's preference, and loses nothing by his position. Senator McGill did not have to oppose an anti-lynching measure. 5-10-35

Senator McGill shows that he has no intention of repaying Negroes for the support they gave him, which enabled him to win over Henry J. Allen. This anti-lynching bill is Negroes' one pet measure, yet he joins with southern members of Congress in making the filibuster against it successful. As senator, Henry J. Allen's only offense against Negroes was that he led President Hoover's fight to put J. J. Parker on the supreme bench. At most Parker was only a potential threat. Negroes are being lynched steadily, 5,000 of them in recent years. The mob is a daily threat to them, yet McGill has not the gratitude to help them save their lives though they helped him to office. Kansas City

McGill has no excuse. Both Senators Costigan and Wagner, co-sponsors of the anti-lynching bill, are Democrats. Many Democratic senators supported the bill. There is no party caucus demanding that he oppose it.

The claim advanced by opponents that a federal law against mobs is an invasion of state rights is preposterous in the light of the many ways in which the federal government is now working within states. George McGill, senator from Kansas, free Kansas which has always been a land of stalwarts, became one of the gang that defeated the Costigan-Wagner bill, not by exposing its demerits, but by parliamentary tactics which were as cowardly as the mobs it was designed to prevent. This anti-lynching bill has done one thing, it has proven what men in public office really believe the law should be supreme.

Maybe McGill thinks he knows more than the people who elected him. But however wise he thinks himself, he is a poor politician. The next time the people of Kansas elect a senator, they are likely to chose someone who wants to represent them.

THE SOUTH AND MOB LAW.

Commenting on the apparent defeat of the Costigan-Wagner Anti-lynching Bill at this session of Congress, a reader of The New York Age writes: Age

By conducting a filibuster against the anti-lynching measure Senators from the South have doomed once again Federal legislation to stamp out mob violence which is a national disgrace and makes Americans appear as barbarians before the civilized world. My sincere belief is that there is but one effective method of putting fear into the heart of the mobster, and that is to give him a dose of his own medicine. A lyncher is a coward at heart. He burns down the homes of the defenseless, attacks innocent men, women and children. He feels a sense of a security by comitting these dastardly outrages in a crowd heavily armed. Years ago in New Orleans a Negro by the name of Charles distinguished himself by sending to their graves a number of lynchers before he met death. If half a dozen or more heroic figures as Charles would materialize today and go to their death by taking others, it would mark the end of the reign of mob law. 5-11-35

The sentiment in the foregoing is typical of what is being thought and expressed by many Negroes throughout the United States. They are in an ugly frame of mind over the obstructive tactics of Southern Senators who are extremely sensitive on the subject of the invasion of State's rights when a Federal anti-lynching bill is proposed, but openly seek and favor Federal cooperation and supervision when their fancy and personal considerations so will. The general public is fully aware that the lament and shedding of crocodile tears against the Costigan-Wagner Bill on "constitutional grounds" is sheer hypocrisy. If these same Senators are so sincerely concerned about the Constitution why do they thumb their noses at the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments?

It long had been the opinion of The New York Age that the most powerful antidote for lynching was by educating public sentiment to observe law and order under any and all circumstances. Perhaps, after all, this was too idealistic a view to take. It is in the blood of many white men in the South that a Negro has no rights that they are bound to respect. So far as they are concerned, the Dred Scott decision is as effectual to day as when rendered. The records show that the number of Negroes lynched merely "charged" with rape is negligible. Any self-respecting Negro living in the North and unused to Southern customs would be a potential victim of mob law were he to visit some sections of Dixie. All necessary for him to get into serious trouble would be to take offense at some real insult. Then he would be characterized a "fresh nigger who does not know his place" and eligible either for a hanging or a good beating.

Since emancipation, the poor white has been educated by professional politicians in the South to hate the Negro and to regard him as his enemey politically, socially and economically. Having for over half a century instilled in the whites of "Tobacco Road" species the false idea about race supremacy and the mob spirit, it is now solemnly proposed that the lyncher be cured of bestiaity by "education." How long will it take?

Opponents of the Costigan-Wagner Bill make much about the invasion of the police powers of the State by the Federal Government. But what about communities where the law has broken down and the authorities, both State and local, are powerless to protect the lives and property of individuals as guaranteed by the Constitution? Why is it that if a foreigner is lynched in the United States his relatives can secure redress through the American Government, and yet if a citizen of this country meets a similar fate, official Washington can take no action?

As long as mobsters are responsible for the election of judges, sheriffs and other officials little is to be expected of educational processes putting the lyncher to flight. In nine cases out of ten either the sheriff actively takes part in the lynching bee or give acquiesence to the removal of the prisoner from jail and his lynching or burning at stake. How many of the Senators who conducted the filibuster have spoken out against mob law and criticized sheriffs for failure to do their sworn duty?

Arguments were made in the United States Senate that a Federal anti-lynching bill will not suppress mob law. Maybe not. However the fact that not one lynching occurred during the debate of the measure is highly significant, indicating that the mobster respects and fears Uncle Sam when he does not respect or fear the peace officers of his State, county or town.

It is the wish of the South that it be permitted to prove it can put down the lyncher. Give it another chance. Maybe it will be more successful in the future than in the past. If it fails in the attempt the Negro has no other alternative than to do what any other human being would do—protect at all hazards his life, that of his family and his home, which is his castle. Perhaps too long the mobster has been allowed to be on the offensive.

States Rights

UPON the specious argument of states rights a small group in the Senate prevented the COSTIGAN-WAGNER anti-lynching bill from coming to a vote. This group admitted that if the motion had been permitted to come to a vote it would have passed.

The states that are represented by the group that temporarily set-back federal anti-lynching legislation are zealous about state rights when it comes to:

Preventing the enactment of child labor laws.

Preventing the adoption of laws providing federal aid to education.

Preventing the unionization of labor, black with white, and black and white.

Preventing the enactment of legislation intended to relieve the tenant and sharecropper, white and black. (Witness the opposition to the pending Bankhead bill.)

Preserving the right to substitute peonage for legalized slavery.

Preserving the right to pass sumptuary laws regulating the habits and appetities of human beings.

Preserving the right to restrict wages to the point that reduces the wage earner, white and black, to economic serfdom.

Preserving the right to maintain a scandalous subterfuge for an educational system that should provide equal opportunity for all to obtain at least an elementary education.

Preserving the right to deny to a class of citizens equal rights before the law.

Preserving the right to lynch with impunity. The right to employ extra-legal forms of punishment and reprisal as a means of intimidation.

Preserving the right to perpetuate a political oligarchy, the spearheads of which are demagogues.

After the above listed reservations have been made secure, the average representative in Congress of the states in question—we say average, because there are some, a substantial number, who rate a higher classification—the average of the group, and the planters, politicians, bankers, industrialists and chiselers they represent do not give a damn about the doctrine of states rights, and moreover, know nothing about it.

ROME, GA.
NEWS TRIBUNE
APR 26 1935

VICIOUS BILL AIMED AT SOUTH

DEPLORABLE as the truth may appear the lynch spirit is not entirely absent among those ardent persons who recently have been attempting to have enacted an anti-lynch bill in the Congress.

One may admire and laud the purpose which these gentlemen seek to accomplish but no thoughtful person, in calmer and more deliberate moments, possibly can subscribe to the theory that an entire community should be lynched because of an outburst of mob violence. Yet this, in substance, is what these gentlemen seek to accomplish.

They make the same mistake that is made by the mob, reashing the erroneous conclusion that one wrong may be cured by another.

The bill would make any community in which a lynching occurred submit to a fine of from $2,000 to $10,000 enforcable by federal authority, which is equivalent to passing a law making all members of a family equally guilty should one member be guilty of transgessing the law. It also would cause an unwarranted and unconstitutional intrusion of independent states by the general government.

The bill also would give to the general government authority to prosecute cases that probably are within the jurisdiction of the states, and otherwise would do violence to all the theories of state rights that are assumed to be protected under the federal Constitution.

The bill is aimed at the South, though lynchings have become common enough in other quarters, and its spirit is neither legalistic or wise or free from the spirit of animus. It represents a flare-back to the vicious carpet-bag era and should not be permitted to dominate.

The South is conscious of the mob evil, just as New York should be following recent outbreaks of unrestrained lawlessness in Harlem, and as numerous other communities in the North, East and West should be with their long records of violence, and here earnest efforts are being made to correct the evil.

These efforts ultimately will achieve results far more gratifying than may possibly be expected of Congressional acts prompted by the lynch spirit, and the wise thing is to let the South handle its problems—with the North, East and West doing the same thing and showing greater diligence than they have in the past.

SAVANNAH, GA.
PRESS
APR 23 1935

SHEAR OPINION

THE CHARLESTON NEWS AND COURIER voices a Southern sentiment:

Mark, you Southern Democrats, the Costigan-Wagner "anti-lynching bill" (so they are pleased to call it however its passage would incite to lynching) is not a Republican measure. It is not introduced by a Republican like Dyer who represented a negro district of St. Louis. Two Democratic senators, Costigan of Colorado and Wagner of New York, sponsor it. "The Democrats" have overwhelming majorities in the Senate and in the House. The President is a Democrat. The office holders in Washington (they are probably twice as many as they were ten years ago) are "Democrats." Yet with this bill aimed straight at the white South, in this Democratic administration, we hear the suggestion that a Southern senator, George, of Georgia, to defeat it may as a last resort "filibuster" against it! * * * Has it come to this, that Southern senators may have to filibuster to stop the passage of an anti-Southern bill introduced and pressed by Democrats in a Congress controlled by Democrats? Why does not Franklin Roosevelt, President, speak out against this measure menacing to the South even if it is not the offspring of an indifference to the convictions of Southern white men that is equivalent to malice? Why does he not denounce it? Why has he so long neglected to say that he will veto it if it be passed? * * * Wade Hampton and B. R. Tillman, opposites as they were, both would have "deserted" a "Democratic" party that failed to kill the Costigan-Wagner bill.

Madison, Fla., Recorder
May 3, 1935

The anti-lynching bill is clearly an invasion of states' rights, if there are any states' rights left, and we seriously question whether it could be construed as constitutional. While many think it is directed at lynchings occurring in the South, we believe it would apply equally to the numerous racket slayings in Northern cities. We question the fairness in punishing the innocent along with the guilty in counties where a lynching might occur, as stipulated in the bill. We do not think it would be a bad thing for the Senate just to drop the bill.

At the same time, we do not approve of lynchings. We have our laws and our courts. If they do not function properly, we are at fault in not making them so function. If we had been careful in seeing that they functioned properly, there would not now be the effort to enact a federal anti-lynching law that there is.

Lynchings—1935
Legislation Relating to.

5076

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

MAY 5 1935

Defeat Of Lynching Bill

Pastor Declares Negroes Are Being Driven Into Ranks Of Communist Groups By Politicians.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The hearts of 12,000,000 Negroes sank within them yesterday when it became known that the Costigan-Wagner antilynch bill had been sidetracked and perhaps sent to oblivion. Millions of others who are interested in social justice were sorely disappointed to see a Congress at such a time as this take a backward step.

Those who are interested in a bright and better day and are fighting with courage and faith to build on the wreck and ruin caused by the mistakes and blunders of unscrupulous and self-centered leaders have been disappointed to say the least, in not getting help and encouragement from those sources from which we expected most.

The moral justification of the Costigan-Wagner bill is too obvious for debate. Its opponents fell back on the traditional argument of State rights, which may be a constitutional technicality. But if it does violate the letter of the Constitution, protecting citizens of the United States, it does not violate its spirit. The hundreds of citizens who have died at the hands of mob violence without legal sanction within the last 25 years, justifies a strong hand on the part of the Federal Government.

Many of us last Sunday night listened with bated breath as the President gave his fireside talk to the Nation. With increasing eagerness we listened as he pleaded for the passage of his social security program. But alas, not one word was uttered, either directly or indirectly, in the interest of the Costigan-Wagner bill, which at that very moment hung in the balance. The supreme opportunity presented itself. The high moment had come. But millions sent away disappointed, knowing that the spirit had not triumphed, but that partisan politics was still in the saddle.

Again, we have watched and listened, as the battle has waged on the Senate floor for and against this bill the story was finally told when the Senate voted 48 to 32 on an adjournment motion, which set aside this bill perhaps never to be brought up again at this Congress. Our great disappointment came, however, not so much on the defeat of the bill, as in the socratic irony and inconsistency of Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho. For years Senator Borah has been the champion of human rights and social justice. He is an avowed enemy of war. He has fought tenaciously against the League of Nations and the World Court, because he feared the treacherous alliance of foreign politics. When Judge John J. Parker came up for the Supreme Bench in 1930, Senator Borah's voice was heard eloquently defending labor, and Judge Parker was defeated. In 1932, when prohibition became one of the main issues of the national campaign, and public sentiment was overwhelmingly in favor of the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, Senator Borah remained true to his conviction that prohibition was best for the Nation.

For millions today, Senator Borah is no longer the champion of human rights. He has become in their estimation, not an international statesman, but a provincial politician not the crusader of this generation for social justice, but an exchanger of political principle for present expedients. If he had defended the bill as ably as he denounced it, it still might have been lost, but the faith of millions would have been conserved.

One-tenth of the population of this Nation has little to look to or expect from the politicians of this generation. The Negro is being deliberately driven into the folds of the International Labor Defense, Communist groups, and such un-American organizations, which offer temporary relief and permanent freedom from the tryanny of injustice and oppression. The interests of all submerged peoples are identical. Inevitably they will find common ground. If America fails, who is to blame?

REV. R. W. BROOKS.
Pastor, Lincoln Congregational Temple, vice chairman, interracial committee, Washington Federation of Churches.
Washington.

New York
Journal of Commerce

MAY 2 1935

End of Filibuster

The week's filibuster of Southern members against consideration of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill ended when they succeeded in forcing it off the Senate calendar and the compromise bonus bill became the order of business. Before it was broken Senator Borah attacked the bill's constitutionality. The fiery Carter Glass also participated with an attack on the New Deal for trying to impose Federal regulations on the States. He criticized recent Supreme Court decisions upholding some parts of N. R. A. and A. A. A.

Negroes Charge Laxity Against Department of Justice

Christian Century

5522-33

THE Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill has been defeated, a victim of the filibuster conducted by certain southern senators. The Christian Century deeply regrets this defeat. At the same time, doubts persist as to whether the bill, if enacted, would have accomplished as much toward doing away with this national disgrace as its sponsors hoped. It seems reasonable to believe that federal authorities might prove more determined than local officers in dealing with lynching mobs, but until the experiment has actually been tried skepticism will linger. In the meantime, the National association for the advancement of colored people comes forward, through its secretary, Mr. Walter White, to point out that the federal authorities have shown no readiness to employ such laws as now exist for the punishment of mobs which have lynched Negroes. The amended Lindbergh act, enacted on June 22, 1934, makes a federal offense of transporting across state lines any person who is "held for ransom or reward or otherwise." In a memorandum supporting this amendment before the senate judiciary committee, Attorney General Cummins said that the reason for adding the words, "or otherwise," to the bill as originally passed was to make the law cover kidnaping "not only for ward but for any other reason." The N.A.A.C.P. has br[illegible]ht to the attention of Mr. Cummins three lynchings, one of which presumptively and the two other certainly involved the kidnaping of the Negro victim across state lines, and has asked action by the federal department of justice under the Lindbergh act. The attorney general, however, now rules that the amended law has no application to kidnapings which eventuate in lynchings. And the department of justice refuses to lift a finger. What this means is, of course, that a democratic administration has no intention of making trouble for itself in democratic states, if it can be helped. But the relation to the theory behind the Costigan-Wagner bill cannot be overlooked.

TOLEDO, O.
NEWS BEE

APR 29 1935

Not Dixie's Voice

A SMALL group of southern senators threaten to filibuster the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill just as a similar group killed the Dyer bill 12 years ago.

They may succeed. But if they do the country should know that their specious pleas in behalf of states' rights or chivalry do not echo the sentiments of the whole South.

Organizations representing some 42,000,000 Americans urge passage of this bill. How much of this support comes from south of the Mason-Dixon line may be judged from its approval by many of Dixie's leading papers.

"Its (the Costigan-Wagner bill's) invasion of stat's' rights should cause no southern heartburning," say The Norfolk (Va.) Pilot. "There is no such thing, morally speaking, as a reserved right to deal in our own way with a form of collective murder which our own way has uniformly failed to punish."

"It may be," says The Newport News (Va.) Press, "that the anti-lynching bill will not be adopted by the Congress now in session. But if it is not, and lynchings do not stop it will be adopted by some other Congress; in fact, must be adopted if the machinery of justice is to function."

"Apparently," says The Macon (Ga.) Telegraph, "the mere threat of the federal anti-lynching bill has a wholesome effect, and the time has come when the South would vote for such a bill."

Southern women, too, have been quick to resent Senator Smith's quaint argument that "lynchings are necessary for womanhood's protection."

Proponents of this measure claim 59 Senate votes from all over the country and a big majority in the House. Only 20 senators are called irreconcilables. It is neither just nor gallant of them to filibuster against this national movement.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

MAY 4 1935

Moral Courage Misplaced

Senator Borah picks strange occasions on which to exercise moral courage.

It took moral courage for an outstanding liberal and friend of human rights to stand up and speak against the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill. But it was moral courage misplaced and misused.

Senator Borah says Federal action against lynching is unconstitutional and violates States' rights. Senator Borah is a great constitutional lawyer. But Senator Borah has forgotten his Constitution.

The Fourteenth amendment says: "No State shall . . . deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

Passage of the Fourteenth amendment made a major change in the relations between the Federal Government and the States. Unfortunately its use has been made a protection of corporations — often on the flimsiest grounds — rather than of persons.

Does the colored man in the South have "the equal protection of the laws"? He does not.

Senator Borah is thinking of political abstractions hanging in the great void of theory.

We are thinking of flesh and blood hanging from trees.

N. Y. Wall St. Journal
(MORNING EDITION)

MAY 2 1935

SENATE—

Filibuster won a victory yesterday. The southern senators' holdout of a week against the anti-lynching bill was successful as the Senate, by a 48 to 32 vote, set aside this controversial measure. The bonus bill was then brought up as the unfinished business to be considered until disposed of.

The Senate adopted a conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill and the Norris resolution calling for a Federal Power Commission report on the expense to municipalities caused by delay in power development projects resulting from court litigation instituted by utility companies. The material will be used by Senator Norris in his support of the utility holding company bill.

The finance committee reported a joint resolution extending NRA to April 1, 1936, and providing for elimination of price fixing and intrastate code jurisdiction.

ATLANTIC, IA.
NEWS TELEGRAPH

MAY 2 1935

Why Pick on the South?

The federal anti-lynching bill, which recently was the bone o contention in the national congress and against which southern mem bers of the senate launched a determined filibuster several days ago of course was aimed at lynching the country over. But naturally th legislation was taken by the southern members of congress to be par ticularly aimed at them, for down below the Mason and Dixon lin their summary dealing of punishment to black men who are guilty of crimes, particularly against women, is well known. But why pic on the south? Our recollection is that as close to Atlantic as Mary ville, Mo., and Charles City, Ia., and other points not below the Maso and Dixon line they have lynched Negroes for the same offense. A San Jose, Cal., two white men were lynched for killing a young kidnap victim. The southerners have no monoploy on the lynching habit It is to be condemned from every viewpoint and is in no sense compatible with our American idea of justice and fair play, but it must be admitted there are times when human indignation gets out of bounds and when outraged citizens are not willing to let the law take its cumbersome and circumlocuted course. Really human nature is just about the same, whether it be in the south, the north, the east or the west. The southerners should not take it so seriously, either. It is not their monopoly.

THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

The Anti-Lynching Bill was defeated in Washington last week, but in the face of that defeat, a calm review of the history of the struggle for an anti-lynch law reveals that progress is being made.

During all the Republican administrations, the Anti-Lynch Bill never made the progress that the Costigan-Wagner Bill made in the present Congress. The ground work was laid permanently by Messrs. Costigan and Wagner, ably assisted by other white people who, down in their hearts, know that crime is no respecter of persons. Like smallpox, the germ of crime will move from community to community and attack any and everybody regardless of race, creed or color. The practice of lynching began with Negroes as the victims, but it now extends to white people, and the more the practice is tolerated, the more white people will be lynched. The white people of this country, North and South, expressed a desire to see the Costigan-Wagner Bill made the law of the land. A few reactionary Senators from the South stopped the program of the Bill. They have accepted full responsibility for the defeat of the Bill. They did not seem to realize it, but they were jockeyed in the position of blocking the legislation, desired by the President of the United States, and they accepted that position fully aware of their predicament. It was not so much a demand from their constituents that compelled the Southern Senators to vote against the Bill; it was their own personal conviction, due to the age in which they were born. The grandsons of these same Senators will frown upon the records of their forefathers. They will wear the scarlet letter in years to come, because future generations will point to them as the sons and daughters of grandfathers who went on record for lawlessness and for lynching.

What care these Senators now about their grandchildren? They live only for today. They think in terms of today and not tomorrow. They are making it dreadfully hard for their children and their children's children, but what care they for their offspring? Shortsighted men like these are expected to oppose progressive legislation, but we are making progress. These same men will face a constituency opposed to lawlessness and lynching. The intelligent people of the South will stop sending Senators like Bailey, Bankhead, Black, Byrnes and Smith to the Senate, because the South prefers to be classified on a par with any other section of the country, and the South will yet rise up against its reactionary Senators and retire them to the corn fields and shade trees—forgotten, forsaken and unsung.

This involves time, but what is a decade in the progress of a race or of a nation? What is a decade against rights and privileges, guaranteed for life? The fight is well worth the sacrifice, and the American people everywhere are quite satisfied that, within a few years, the obstructionists of the South will constitute forgotten men who lived for themselves and a tradition, and nothing more.

The Negro must keep his head up, keep his spirit, save his money, and be prepared for that larger life which is sure to come, even in the United States of America.

CENTERVILLE, IA.
IOWEGIAN-CITIZEN

APR 30 1935

THE ANTI-LYNCHING LAW

The congress of the United States has been in a quandary what to do with the anti-lynching law. The south is bitterly against it. The north, or the south either for that matter, if it follows the course being set by the administration to its conclusion, must make the federal government supreme rather than the states in providing protection for citizens. The south contends it has the right to regulate these things within the borders of its states. The bill before the senate provides that when a locality fails to provide the protection within its power those guilty may be prosecuted under the federal laws. It is the argument over again of state's rights. But the south is fighting a losing fight in view of all this administration has done to make the states mere puppets of the federal government. They may be able to hold off the anti-lynching law. But the theory on which it is founded has become so entrenched in legislation and administrative action that the government has plenty of precedent for contending that it can step in and tell the states what to do.

Lynchings—1935.
Legislation Relating To.

5077

MONROE, LA.
WORLD
MAY 1

THREAT OF FILIBUSTER

Southern senators generally resent the sectional reflection in the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill on the ability and willingness of their states to enforce their statutes in the face of mob terrorism. Some of these senators personally deplore lynchings even for "the unmentionable crime." Privately they might admit that official laxness is, in many instances, making lynchings possible. But against a bill that would lay heavy fiscal and prison penalties on lax officialdom in the south they are adamant.

The threat of a prolonged filibuster against this measure at a time when the senate is in a legislative jam with the bonus, the banking bill, social securities legislation and other measures yet to be acted upon is a serious thing. It rests upon a condition, not a theory. That condition is deeply imbedded sectional pride.

It is beside the question to argue with opponents of the bill that resolute law enforcement by any state will preclude the operation there of an anti-lynching law. Though most of its opponents believe the bill is unconstitutional, and if it became law would be thrown out by the highest court, they are determined that no senate vote shall be taken to discredit their section.

In such an impasse Senator Costigan will be unwise to press his bill. It would invite a filibuster that would run for weeks or months unless the bill were withdrawn. Participating in the filibuster to protect the repute of the south would be found some senators otherwise eager to go along with the administration's program. However meritorious the measure may seem to its supporters in the light of weak surrenders to the mob spirit in many sections of the south, defeat of major legislation at this time is too great a price to pay for a persistence that cannot win in any event.

DENVER, COLO.
POST
APR 30 1935

SENATOR COSTIGAN'S "antilynching" bill is the monkey wrench which has been stalling the congressional machinery for several days now. Costigan was elected to represent Colorado in the upper house of congress. He spent the early part of his term representing the Cuban sugar interests and the Wall street bankers who have large investments in Cuban sugar. Having succeeded in enslaving Colorado and other American sugar beet growers, Senator Costigan now is defending the murderers, rapists and kidnapers of the nation. He wants to empower the federal government to collect damages from the taxpayers of any county in which a suspected or confessed fiend is lynched or injured in any way by a mob.

The strangest thing about Senator Costigan's theory of discouraging lynching is that it would not be effective until a person is suspected of and arrested for a crime. A woman attacked by a degenerate fiend could not collect damages from the county for its failure to protect her. But if her assailant were injured or lynched by a mob, then Uncle Sam would have to step in and collect damages from the taxpayers of the county for failure to protect the criminal.

AUSTIN, TEX
AMERICAN
MAY 3 1935

Connally Leads Fight on Anti-Lynching Bill

Ten years ago a measure was introduced by United States senators calling for the enactment of a nationwide anti-lynching bill. This measure has been smouldering in ashes or embers ever since. Now it has the backing of Sen. Robert Wagner of New York and Sen. Costigan of Colorado as well as many republican members of the senate. It has the violent opposition of all southern senators and the senators from the southwestern states. Its critics say that "it robs the state of its police power." This is true. Sen. Connally is a lifelong advocate of the rights of the state. It is his firm belief, as well as rockrooted conviction that a state should punish its own criminals in its own courts when the aforesaid criminals are found guilty by jurors of violating the criminal statutes of a commonwealth.

Sen. Costigan of Colorado is of Virginia origin. He is a lawmaker of great ability but he does not appear to be a states rights democrat. He admits he is a devoted follower of Thomas Jefferson but Jefferson ever championed state sovereignty and the absolute right of the people of a commonwealth to make their own statutory laws and elect their own judges and other officials for the enforcement of the laws they make and the procedure guaranteed to them by the makers of the federal constitution. It is a nasty bit of politics at this time, regardless of its sponsors or its senatorial backers.

There is a negro district in the city of Chicago. A majority of its voters are of the black race. Its congressional representative is a negro democrat. He was elected by the democratic voters of this widely known black belt. He was educated in the school of Booker Washington. He was born in the South. He is a leader of his people. Two years ago they defeated a republican leader and placed a democrat of his own color at the head of the winning ticket.

There is a famous so-called black belt in the city of New York. Another in the city of Philadelphia. These two congressional districts elected members of the house of representatives on a New Deal ticket. Racial hates and creed prejudices, like the ghost of Banquo, are ever bobbing up in these days of experimentation on the part of the New Dealers who are following the flag of that messiah who was elected by a tremendous majority in the third revolution at the polls in the year 1932.

COLUMBIA, S. C
RECORD
APR 26 1935

Inviting Federal Interference

The weakness of the South's position on the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill is to be traced back to its state rights surrender on other matters and issues.

"We in our sovereign capacity," Senator Ellison D. Smith, of South Carolina, tells the senate, "can battle with this problem. We do not invite interference of those who have not had the bitterness of the trials we have endured."

But it is not an exact statement of the facts as revealed by history. The South when it voted for federal prohibition invited interference by the federal government; it supplied the Costigans and Wagners with a precedent.

And prohibition does not offer the only example. South Carolina, for instance, invites federal interference in the business of growing cotton; it invites federal interference in its schools; it invites indeed all the federal interference in the form of cash that it can get its hands upon.

BOSTON, MASS.
CHRISTIAN SCIENCE
MONITOR
MAY 2 1935

Methods of Combating Lynching

THE Senate filibuster against the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill, which has now shelved the bill, has been in one respect an exception among filibusters. The addresses of the southern Senators opposing this bill have been lengthy, but in the main they have stuck to the subject, have discussed it seriously and have contributed, along with the speeches of the advocates of the bill, to public information on the problem.

There is no question but that the object sought in the Costigan-Wagner bill is a wholly commendable one. The suppression of what President Roosevelt has called a "vile form of collective murder" and the establishment of orderly processes of criminal justice are aims in which most citizens instinctively co-operate. Yet honest opinions may differ as to the most effective methods.

No greater injustice could be done to many leaders in the South than to assume that because they oppose a federal anti-lynching bill they condone and defend lynching. Tremendous strides have been made by the South in recent years in building up a sentiment against mob lawlessness and toward reducing lynching. This has been done by dealing with the subject as a state and local question.

Senator Edward L. Costigan has done well to emphasize that his bill is not aimed at any section of the United States. The facts are that a considerable proportion of lynchings have taken place outside the South in recent years. It is also a fact that in whatever locality it occurs such a travesty on justice is a smirch on the national reputation and hence to some extent a national concern.

How properly to couple this national interest with local and state sentiment for law and order without antagonizing and vitiating that local sentiment—on which, in the last analysis, the suppression of lynching depends—is the crux of the problem.

"'I realize," said Senator Hugo L. Black of Alabama, "that it may be impossible to appeal to those who think they know more about the problem than those who live with it. People have always been anxious to impress the ideas of those who live a thousand miles away upon the local habits, manners and customs of those whom they do not know."

Eleven states of the Union have laws laying financial responsibility upon the city or county in which a lynching occurs, as it is proposed to do federally. Critics of the federal bill hold that more will be accomplished by application and extension of these state laws than by raising the bogey of federal interference.

Unmistakably the bringing up of the Costigan-Wagner bill for debate has had a useful effect in focusing the attention of the country on this problem. When and if its enactment would represent a genuine agreement of public purpose, including a substantial portion of southern sentiment and a realistic determination of northern states to deal with the same manifestations in their own borders, it may well become law. But it is of the utmost importance meanwhile to preserve that local and state sentiment which is now exerting the most effective pressure against lynching.

SAVANNAH, GA.
PRESS
MAY 2 1935

THE DEADLOCK BROKEN.

The deadlock which is engineered by Southern senators to oppose the anti-lynching bill has been broken and the bill now takes its place at the foot of the calendar, which means it will not be considered.

Southern senators have been on guard ever since the bill appeared and blocked the business of the Senate. There was too much business pending to have proceedings held up. It seems that Senator Borah of Idaho had assailed the constitutionality of the measure to give the federal government power in lynching cases. Senator Borah simply endorsed the position of the Southern senators and has the credit of breaking the seven-day Southern filibuster.

The national anti-lynching bill has always been successfully opposed. There is no use to repeat the arguments now as the national anti-lynching bill is a thing of the past.

BEAUMONT, TEX.
ENTERPRISE
APR 28 1935

A FEDERAL CURB ON LYNCHING

In a senate discussion of the Costigan anti lynching bill, Senator Hugo Black of Alabama asked if the bill's provisions would apply to labor disturbances, such as often happen in the Alabama coal fields. Senator Costigan assured the Alabama senator that organized labor need have no fear that the bill would be used to curb strikers. The Costigan statement was not convincing, however.

A lynching may take a variety of forms. The term might be conceivably applied to almost any kind of mass violence. If a body of miners should have a clash with strike-breakers or deputies, and there was loss of life, what would prevent the federal government, under the terms of the Costigan bill, from classing this disorder as a lynching? As Senator Black said, if a law is passed by which the federal government may penalize state peace officers for not doing their duty, such officials will have a pretext for molesting strikers.

A federal anti-lynching law, once put on the statute books, could be used as an excuse for harassing strikers and preventing organized labor from assembling to discuss its grievances, on the ground that such gatherings are likely to lead to mob violence.

A federal anti-lynching law is chiefly opposed by southern members of congress because such legislation would be a violation of state sovereignty. It would be still another "opening wedge" for the federal government to take over functions that should be exercised in their discretion by the states and not by any central authority in Washington that might be thousands of miles from the scene of a mob outbreak.

New York Herald-Tribune
MAY 3 1935

State Rights to the Fore

The Senate has shelved the anti-lynching bill, thanks, it is reported, to Senator Borah who finally clarified his stand on the measure by declaring it unconstitutional. One need not be an apologist for the hideous practice of mob murder to welcome the news. The bill, as Mr. Borah told its sponsors, had no chance of coming to a vote at this session. In the mean time it threatened to hold up the legislative program indefinitely and to prolong the sitting of Congress far into the summer.

More important still, it embodied another encroachment on state rights added to the long list of such encroachments enacted under the New Deal. We differ with Senator Borah and the Southern opposition on the point of its constitutionality. There is excellent authority for believing that it would have come within the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment. But that is no answer to the charge that it proposed a definite limitation on the police power of the states in the case of a crime almost always intrastate in character. The real issue raised was one of governmental policy. Lynching reached its peak in the '90s. Since then it has shown a remarkable decline. Last year there were fifteen lynchings, as compared with 255 in 1892. Outraged public opinion, reinforced by local statutes, has been having its effect. Why, then, at this late date should the solution of the evil be handed over to the Federal authorities, at the sacrifice of principles and traditions fundamental to the American system?

The vote to lay aside the Costigan-Wagner bill was in line with that on the N. R. A. renewal resolution which would restrict Federal regulation of industries to those in interstate commerce. Together they indicate a growing tendency in Congress to return the country to its classic foundation of carefully separated jurisdictions. To be sure, a wealth of inconsistency is attending the process. Who, for example, would have looked for a champion of state rights in Senator Borah, the uncompromising prohibitionist? It was his delight not so long ago to swallow with relish the egregious usurpation of state sovereignty inherent in the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead law. Senator Wagner, on the other hand, was wont to thunder against national prohibition for the same reasons that have been used so successfully against his anti-lynching bill. How typical of the political intellect!

New York Evening Post
MAY 3 1935

MORAL COURAGE MISPLACED

Senator Borah picks strange occasions on which to exercise moral courage.

It took moral courage for an outstanding liberal and friend of human rights to stand up and speak against the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill. But it was moral courage misplaced and misused.

Senator Borah says Federal action against lynching is unconstitutional and violates States' rights. Senator Borah is a great constitutional lawyer. But Senator Borah has forgotten his Constitution.

The Fourteenth Amendment says: "No State shall . . . deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

Passage of the Fourteenth Amendment made a major change in the relations between the Federal Government and the States. Unfortunately its use has been made a protection of corporations—often on the flimsiest grounds—rather than of persons.

Does the colored man in the South have "the equal protection of the laws"? He does not.

Senator Borah is thinking of political abstractions hanging in the great void of theory.

We are thinking of flesh and blood hanging from trees.

Selma, Ala. Times
May 7, 1935

LYNCHINGS DECREASE

The south has cause to rejoice that their senators were successful in filibustering the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching out of consideration for this session at least.

All right-thinking individuals oppose mob violence in any form. Lynching is murder. It violates the law of God and man.

We agree with Senator Byrnes who declared on the senate floor that he believed the enactment of the anti-lynching bill would increase rather than decrease lynchings.

Lynchings have declined from 231 in 1892 to a total of only 15 in 1934, while that is 15 lynchings too many, yet the trend is definitely away from them and officers of the law are doing more effective work than ever in preventing mob action. This means that the viewpoint of the people on lynchings is changing and that the day will come when lynching will be as dead as dueling, which at one time had such a hold upon the people.

The passage of an anti-lynching bill would undoubtedly delay the fine progress being made toward wiping out entirely the evil of lynching.—Vicksburg Post-Herald.

Lynchings—1935
Legislation Relating to.

5078

Columbus, Miss. Dispatch
May 2, 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

THE Senate has put the infamous anti-lynching bill to sleep.

It took seven days of filibustering to shelve the bill insofar as this session is concerned.

The bill was a direct slap at the South.

And yet infamous crimes and outrageous criminal upheavels in the North are far worse than lynchings in the South.

The South has ample and adequate laws against lynching, and no federal law is going to help the situation.

The South has handled the negro pretty well—far better than the North has ever treated him.

There are two kinds of people that we have contempt for—negro-lovers and negro-haters.

The people of the South will continue to live with the negro and treat him fairly and justly—though there are exceptions here and there and extremes both ways—and here in the Southland he has found and will continue to find his best friends.

If the time ever comes when the federal government begins to take a hand in racial relations, as was attempted by the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill, trouble, and serious trouble at that, is going to ensue.

Southern members of the Senate are to be commended for blocking consideration of the anti-lynching bill.

They acted in the interest and welfare of both races.

Borah Is Defiant About Vote on the Anti-Lynch Bill

Afro-American

Tells AFRO He Would Not Change Vote if Seeking Presidency.

5-11-35

Baltimore, Md.

EDUCATION ONLY SOLUTION, HE SAYS

Solon Not Worried about Colored Vote.

(AFRO Bureau)

WASHINGTON — Senator William E. Borah, advised that the desertion of the Progressive Senators led by him had certainly killed all chances of winning the colored vote in the border, near-West and Eastern states, shot back:

"If you're here to peddle votes you'd better get your credentials!"

Told that the AFRO was representing and forming opinion and not peddling votes, the veteran legislator snapped:

Would Vote the Same

"I have absolutely no Presidential aspirations, but if I had my vote would be exactly the same!"

Reminded that he had talked at length, last week, on respect for the Constitution, states' rights and the unconstitutionality of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill the Senator agreed that citizens also had a right to life, liberty and trial by jury.

Asked how he would suggest that these rights be secured, since according to his opinion, they should not be secured through Federal intervention, and it was evident that they could not be secured through the states, Mr. Borah argued:

Can't Halt Lynching

"You are assuming that a Federal anti-lynching bill will stop lynching. That is a violent assumption. You can't stop lynching any more than you can stop murder. They have murders on Federal territory just as they have on state territory.

"Besides, why should I be held responsible for a lynching when I may be ten miles away from it?"

Reminded that although he might be ten miles away at the time of a lynching, he still helped elect the officials guilty of negligence, he replied that all that was needed was a little positive leadership.

Help Free Mob Victim

"Why I helped take a man away from a mob myself, when I was younger," he exclaimed, "I and another man, after the jail had been almost torn down by the mob. But legislation can't do anything."

"What would get results in your opinion since you are sure that legislation won't?" he was asked.

The Senator's reply was that education through the schools and churches was the only solution.

It was pointed out to the Senator that mobs had been led by white preachers, on occasion, and was further told that a recent article in a Catholic periodical called attention to the fact that the bill just passed in New York State, excluding schools practicing discrimination from tax exemption, would probably open through fear of penalties, the doors of Catholic schools which had remained persistently shut in the face of appeals to Christianity.

It was suggested to the Senator that the penalty clause in the Costigan-Wagner bill might be counted on to have a like effect on lynching. Mr. Borah thought not.

Called Unconstitutional

"It is unconstitutional; it couldn't last," he protested.

"So is disfranchisement in the Southern states," he was reminded. "It's lasting."

"Oh, well, look what you people did when you controlled the legislatures in the South," he retorted.

"Who was responsible for Reconstruction conditions?" he was asked. "Weren't your white carpet-baggers the controlling force?"

"Yes, and it was the white carpet-baggers who set you free," he hung back, adding hastily, "if I thought a Federal anti-lynching bill would really stop lynching, I'd go along with you. But it won't, and I'm not going to violate my oath."

Columbus, Ga. Enquirer-Sun
May 2, 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

Business and the public generally are anxious that congress pass the measures on the president's program and get through as soon as possible. If its session is unnecessarily prolonged, business marks time and does not advance as it should because of uncertainties as to what will be done.

It is such absurdities as the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynch bill which are retarding the business of congress. The bill is nothing but sectional politics, its sponsors answering the demands of a group of meddlers who wish to advance their own interests by taking the law out of the hands of the states and placing it in the federal courts.

There are laws already on the books of all states to cover the crime of lynching—and few are the states which have not been disgraced by the crime, and deeply deplored it.

However, this bill is aimed particularly at the South with an intention of humiliating us, when a condition exists which those who are behind the bill have never encountered and cannot understand.

In no section is the act of lynching more deplored than it is in the South. The racketeer murders and kidnapings of the north are as badly in need of correction as lynchings. Up there they have laws against such disposals of human life as there are laws already in existence against lynching.

The anti-lynch law is nothing more than one of those instruments to delay the passing of those measures which will advance the administration's recovery policy. It has little chance of becoming a law but it well serves the purposes of the obstructionists.

UNION, S. C.
TIMES

APR 26 1935

IT WILL HURT, NOT HELP

The anti-lynching bill now before congress, and one of the authors of which is Senator Wagner of New York, has been denounced by Senator Bailey of North Carolina and Senator Smith of South Carolina.

Periodically that question is brought up and it is one that will always arouse the people of the South, for they feel, and justly too, that it is a direct threat at the South. It is probably true that instead of putting an end to lynch law, it would multiply lynchings. The problem is not a problem of the South alone, but of the entire nation, but it can best be met by each individual state. If the anti-lynch law is made a federal law with teeth in it, we predict a vast increase in the number of lynchings.

Governor Talmadge of Georgia, long supported by The Constitution, is now under attacks by that newspaper. Without any profession of exact knowledge in the matter, but from outside observation, we can but feel sympathy for Governor Talmadge, for he must see, as many others see, that we are drifting far afield in the matter of States Rights. Many of us believe that we have unconsciously drifted into socialism and are no longer upholding democracy.

To show that Governor Talmadge is not alone in this belief, you have but to realize what happened at The American Newspaper Publishers Association a day or two ago. The association unanimously approved a resolution of its traffic committee by adopting a resolution which expressed "unalterable" opposition to government ownership of railroads or any other form of transportation. And Bainbridge Colby warned the publishers of federal laws inimical to a free press. He sees great danger to the freedom of the press. He said before the convention:

"As to the trend of legislation affecting newspapers today, there seems to be a feeling that the press of the country constitutes, in a sense, a danger to the successful progress of half-baked theories and ill considered and somewhat hastily proposed reforms."

And this editor unequivocally takes the same view. We go further: We have come to the parting of the ways; we must choose between socialism and democracy. And we are honestly of the opinion that to choose socialism will mean the ultimate loss of about all that makes life worth living.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS

APR 26 1935

NOT DIXIE'S VOICE

A SMALL group of southern senators threaten to filibuster the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill just as a similar group killed the Dyer bill 12 years ago.

They may succeed. But if they do the country should know that their specious pleas in behalf of states' rights or chivalry do not echo the sentiments of the whole South.

Organizations representing some 42,000,000 Americans urge passage of this bill. How much of this support comes from south of the Mason-Dixon line may be judged from its approval by many of Dixie's leading papers.

"Its (the Costigan-Wagner bill's) invasion of states' rights should cause no southern heartburning," says The Norfolk (Va.) Virginian-Pilot. "There is no such thing, morally speaking, as a reserved right to deal in our own way with a form of collective murder which our own way has uniformly failed to punish."

"It may be," says The Newport News (Va.) Press, "that the anti-lynching bill will not be adopted by the Congress now in session. But if it is not, and lynchings do not stop, it will be adopted by some other Congress; in fact, must be adopted if the machinery of justice is to function."

"Apparently," says The Macon (Ga.) Telegraph, "the mere threat of the Federal anti-lynching bill has a wholesome effect, and the time has come when even the South would vote for such a bill."

Southern women, too, have been quick to resent Sen. Smith's quaint argument that "lynchings are necessary for womanhood's protection." Scores of letters, telegrams and resolutions from southern women's religious, welfare and club organizations have repudiated the preposterous claim that the South's law is helpless to protect the South's women.

Proponents of this measure claim 59 Senate votes from all over the country and a big majority in the House. Only 20 senators are called irreconcilables. It is neither just nor gallant of them to filibuster against this popular national movement.

NEW YORK TIMES

MAY 6 1935

How Members From This Area Voted in Congress Last Week

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The votes by the delegations from New York, New Jersey and Connecticut on important roll-calls in Congress last week are given in the following tabulation:

The Senate.

On the Robinson motion to adjourn, while the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill was under consideration (thereby sidetracking its consideration), adopted 48 to 32:

YEAS.

Lonergan (D.), Conn.

NAYS.

Copeland (D.), N. Y.	Barbour (R.), N. J.
Wagner (D.), N. Y.

NOT VOTING.

Moore (D.), N. J. Maloney (D.), Conn.

On the Thomas amendment (to the Vinson Bonus Bill) providing for direct appropriation of the money necessary to meet the payments under the proposed act, adopted, 57 to 23:

YEAS.

Copeland (D.), N. Y.

NAYS.

Moore (D.), N. J. Lonergan (D.), Conn.

NOT VOTING.

Wagner (D.), N. Y.	Maloney (D.), Conn.
Barbour (R.), N. J.

The House.

On the Cooper motion to table the Treadway resolution (directing the Secretary of State to furnish the House a list of the articles, both foreign and domestic, the names of which are on file in the State Department for changes in rates of tariff in reciprocal trade agreements now under negotiation), adopted, 252 to 91:

YEAS.

Beiter (D.), N. Y.	Pfeifer (D.), N. Y.
Bloom (D.), N. Y.	Rudd (D.), N. Y.
Boylan (D.), N. Y.	Sirovich (D.), N. Y.
Brunner (D.), N. Y.	Sisson (D.), N. Y.
Corning (D.), N. Y.	Sullivan (D.), N. Y.
Cullen (D.), N. Y.	Tonry (D.), N. Y.
Delaney (D.), N. Y.	Hart (D.), N. J.
Duffy (D.), N. Y.	Kenney (D.), N. J.
Evans (D.), N. Y.	Sutphin (D.), N. J.
Fitzpatrick (D.), N. Y.	Citron (D.), Conn.
Gavagan (D.), N. Y.	Kopplemann (D.), Conn.
Merritt (D.), N. Y.	Shanley (D.), Conn.
O'Connor (D.), N. Y.	Smith (D.), Conn.
O'Day (D.), N. Y.
O'Leary (D.), N. Y.

NAYS.

Andrews (R.), N. Y.	Bacharach (R.), N. J.
Bacon (R.), N. Y.	Cavicchia (R.), N. J.
Cole (R.), N. Y.	Eaton (R.), N. J.
Crowther (R.), N. Y.	Lehlbach (R.), N. J.
Goodwin (R.), N. Y.	McLean (R.), N. J.
Lord (R.), N. Y.	Powers (R.), N. J.
Reed (R.), N. Y.	Wolverton (R.), N. J.
Snell (R.), N. Y.	Merritt (R.), Conn.
Taber (R.), N. Y.

NOT VOTING.

Buckley (D.), N. Y.	Marcantonio (R.), N. Y.
Celler (D.), N. Y.
Dickstein (D.), N. Y.	Millard (R.), N. Y.
Kennedy (D.), N. Y.	Thomas (R.), N. Y.
Mead (D.), N. Y.	Wadsworth (R.), N. Y.
Peyser (D.), N. Y.	Norton (D.), N. J.
Somers (D.), N. Y.	Hartley (R.), N. J.
Sullkin (R.), N. Y.	Perkins (R.), N. J.
Fish (R.), N. Y.	Seger (R.), N. J.
Hancock (R.), N. Y.	Higgins (R.), Conn.

On the Taylor motion that the House concur in the Senate amendment (to the $60,000,000 Interior Department Annual Appropriation Bill) providing for the creation of the office of Under-Secretary of the Interior at $10,000 a year, adopted, 243 to 92:

YEAS.

Beiter (D.), N. Y.	O'Connor (D.), N. Y.
Boylan (D.), N. Y.	O'Day (D.), N. Y.
Brunner (D.), N. Y.	O'Leary (D.), N. Y.
Celler (D.), N. Y.	Sirovich (D.), N. Y.
Cullen (D.), N. Y.	Tonry (D.), N. Y.
Delaney (D.), N. Y.	Hart (D.), N. J.
Dickstein (D.), N. Y.	Kenney (D.), N. J.
Duffy (D.), N. Y.	Norton (D.), N. J.
Evans (D.), N. Y.	Sutphin (D.), N. J.
Fitzpatrick (D.), N. Y.	Wolverton (R.), N. J.
Mead (D.), N. Y.	Citron (D.), Conn.
Merritt (D.), N. Y.	Shanley (D.), Conn.
	Smith (D.), Conn.

NAYS.

Andrews (R.), N. Y.	Snell (R.), N. Y.
Bacon (R.), N. Y.	Taber (R.), N. Y.
Cole (R.), N. Y.	Bacharach (R.), N. J.
Crowther (R.), N. Y.	Cavicchia (R.), N. J.
Fish (R.), N. Y.	Eaton (R.), N. J.
Goodwin (R.), N. Y.	Lehlbach (R.), N. J.
Hancock (R.), N. Y.	McLean (R.), N. J.
Lord (R.), N. Y.	Powers (R.), N. J.
Millard (R.), N. Y.	Seger (R.), N. J.
Reed (R.), N. Y.	Merritt (R.), Conn.

NOT VOTING.

Bloom (D.), N. Y.	Culkin (R.), N. Y.
Buckley (D.), N. Y.	Marcantonio (R.), N. Y.
Corning (D.), N. Y.	Thomas (R.), N. Y.
Gavagan (D.), N. Y.	Wadsworth (R.), N. Y.
Kennedy (D.), N. Y.	Peyser (D.), N. Y.
Pfeifer (D.), N. Y.	Hartley (R.), N. J.
Rudd (D.), N. Y.	Perkins (R.), N. J.
Sisson (D.), N. Y.	Kopplemann (D.), Conn.
Somers (D.), N. Y.
Sullivan (D.), N. Y.	Higgins (R.), Conn.

The Anti-Lynching Bill

North and South combined to defeat the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill. It is the same old story. The South tells the North what it wants to have done about the rights of Negroes, and the North, after performing a few face-saving antics, usually succumbs to the South's demands. We must remember that it was Senator Borah who delivered the telling blow which sent the bill down to its defeat.

But Northern Negroes do not seem to get the point. They fail to realize that whatever happens to ten million Negroes in the South, will ultimately happen to two million in the North. There are some notable exceptions. The truth is that all American Negroes in the last analysis stand upon the same footing. Either we all go up together, or we all go down separately.

THE ANTI-LYNCH BILL

The Democratic Party has again shown its cloven foot, insofar as Negroes are concerned, by blocking a vote on the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynch bill. Following rapidly behind the Texas lily-white primary decision it is difficult to understand how some Negroes advocate support of a party which would deny Negroes every right enjoyed by other citizens under the constitution, and remain inert when their lives, liberties and property are threatened and destroyed.

While due recognition must be given to the services rendered in behalf of the measure by the co-patrons of the bill, Senators Costigan and Wagner and the other Democratic senators who supported the bill, it is an indisputable fact that the responsibility for the failure of the measure rests heavily upon the shoulders of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Democratic president of the United States. His whip hand used so effectively on the Democratic Congress in other legislation apparently became paralyzed when his Dixie Party associates, including his majority leader thwarted the will of the Senate and forced at least a temporary abandonment of the bill.

Mr. Roosevelt has been described as a man of great courage but it impresses us that it does not take much courage to become strangely dumb when confronted with a small group of wilful men.

Thousands of radios will be silent the next time he ventures to expound his "New Deal" doctrines in a fireside talk.

Lynchings- 1935
Legislation Relating to

5079

BRILLIANT PROFESSOR AT SCARRITT COLLEGE SHOWS UP INCONSISTENCY OF FAMED ZEALOT OF PROHIBITION

Nashvillian Courageously Upholds Right of States To Seek National Government Aid to Maintain Law and Order

Editor's Note: Dr. Albert E. Barnett, member of the faculty of Scarritt College, and leader of a great and growing host of Southern white men and women who are waging war on lynching, very effectively, we think championed the cause he represents against the sophistry of Bishop James Cannon in the following article which appeared in the April 18 issue of the Christian Advocate, official organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Dr. Barnett is a Christian leader, wholly without guile, who teaches both by precept and example the gospel of the Brotherhood of Man. We commend the article here published as worthy of being read and treasured:

THE COSTIGAN-WAGNER ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

By Albert E. Barnett

In the Christian Advocate of March 29, 1935, there appeared an article by Bishop James Cannon, Jr., in which the pending Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill is opposed as a piece of "inadvisable legislation." The basic argument which the article makes against the bill seems to be "that the principle of the independence of the states in the execution of their criminal laws is of too great importance to be abrogated because some officials have failed to keep their oaths of office or because it may be surmised or 'though probable that certain forms of crime cannot be adequately punished in certain localities.'" This familiar "state rights" argument against lynching legislation sounds strange from the pen of a man who has fought valiantly and suffered heroically for the cause of national prohibition. The writer has always agreed with Bishop Cannon in his fight for federal prohibition legislation, and the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment has confirmed rather than weakened his convictions in that direction. Agreement there makes disagreement in the case of the stand against federal anti-lynching legislation natural.

One might infer from the statement above quoted that the punishment of lynchers in state courts is usual. The facts indicate otherwise. In 1919 Dr. Plato Durham, a North Carolinian and a professor of Church History in Emory University, stated to a class which the writer was a member that over a period of thirty years there had been an average of a lynching a month in the state of Georgia alone without a single effective prosecution of lynchers in the state courts. For the period 1889-1932 there were, according to the most conservative records, 3,753 lynchings in the United States. Out of this number, there were only twelve instances of conviction of lynchers, or an equivalent of eight-tenths of one per cent! The sentences of those convicted were entirely nominal and were more frequently suspended than served. It is not a matter of "some officials" who have "failed to keep their oaths of office," but rather a refusal over a period of forty-odd years to take serious legal cognizance of a crime that has disgraced our nation and embarrassed the cause of Christian missions among the colored races round the world.

As to the "state rights" idea, the words that eminent constitutional lawyer, Mr. Elihu Root, would seem to apply: "It is useless for the advocates of state rights to inveigh against the supremacy of the constitutional law of the United States, or against the extension of national authority in the fields of necessary control, where the states themselves fail in the necessary performance of their duty." It is this failure of the states themselves "in the necessary performance of their duty" that causes the writer, himself an Alabamian, educated in Georgia, and for the past decade a resident of Tennessee, to advocate the passage of the Costigan-Wagner bill. It is this same consideration that has moved the editor of the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph to advocate the passage of the bill and to say in a magnificent editorial on February 15, 1935: "There will be a certain amount of opposition to this bill here in the South, but it is a fair question to ask, What else are we to do? Lynching goes on year after year, and punishment for the crime is practically unknown .....This brutality simply cannot go on. The states have had ample opportunity through the years to do something to prevent this barbaric crime. The time has come when something must be done, and the federal anti-lynching bill appears to be the answer."

Rev. M. Ashby Jones, eminent Southern Baptist clergyman, discussing the bearing of this "state rights" argument on federal anti-lynching legislation, said in the Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution of February 11, 1934: "We have talked a great deal.....about 'states' rights. We mean the right of the state to govern within certain political areas. But the right to govern carries with it the responsibility of government. The right to arraign and try a citizen accused of a crime carries with it the sacred responsibility to see that the citizen does secure a fair trial, and is punished only by 'due process of law.' It seems to me ethically clear that the failure to meet the responsibility of government forfeits the right to govern. When we are talking about the rights of a state, it will be fatal if we forget the rights of the citizen.....When we read the long, bloody record of these mob murders, usually ignored by the state authorities, and with scarcely a conviction recorded for this revolting crime, we must raise the question if the states have not forfeited their right of jurisdiction by their failure to meet their responsibility of jurisdiction."

Bishop Cannon states that without the passage of the Costigan-Wagner bill "the federal court will automatically have jurisdiction" wherever "a lynching has any interstate features." This statement is out of accord with recent rulings of the Federal Department of justice in the lynching of Claud Neal, who was taken from the jail at Brewton, Alabama, on the night of October 26, 1934, and lynched near Marianna, Fla., the following day. Nor is it borne out in the case of Ab Young, taken by a mob at Rossville, Tenn., on March 12, 1935, and lynched near Slayden, Miss. Let those who will try to get federal action under existing statutes in these two recent lynchings, both involving "interstate features," and he will wonder at the statement that in such cases "the federal court will automatically have jurisdiction."

The question of the constitutionality of the Costigan-Wagner bill is doubted. It is to be said in this connection that the bill was drawn by a professor of constitutional law in one of the leading universities of the country, and that its proponents, Hon. Edward P. Costigan and Hon. Robert F. Wagner, are both able constitutional lawyers and Democrats. The writer was present at the hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee in February, 1934, and heard the able constitutional arguments for the Costigan-Wagner bill. These arguments appealed to him as entirely convincing. The Senate Judiciary Committee itself is apparently convinced also, since it has recently given favorable recommendation to the bill. Of course the Supreme Court will finally determine the matter of constitutionality. In advance of such a decision, in view of the preponderance of legal opinion that the bill is constitutional, objection to its passage on the basis suggested in Bishop Cannon's article is hardly warranted.

Bishop Cannon describes the bill as "a violent transference of jurisdiction from the state to the federal court." That statement is misleading for persons not fully familiar with the text of the bill, and it raises questions in this writer's mind of Bishop Cannon's familiarity with the bill. Actually, instead of taking over the jurisdiction of the state, the whole purpose and effect of the bill is to bring pressure on the local political unit to perform its duty by its citizens. It does this by waiting thirty days for local officials to act and it provides that the Federal District Court is to assume jurisdiction only when it has become evident that local authorities do not intend to proceed.

Bishop Cannon objects to the financial liability imposed on the county where a lynching takes place. The bill makes it possible to recover from $2,000 to $10,000 from a county in which a lynching has occurred, by civil action against the county in the United States District Court, the amount recovered to be paid to the lynched person or his heirs. The logic of this provision is that people who have to help indemnify the victims of mob violence will be less likely to lose their memories or their powers of speech when called on to testify against lynchers in court. It is furthermore right that those who allow lynching share in its guilt. Passivity on the part of the citizenship of a democracy deserves the financial penalty represented in the liquidated damages for which this provision of the bill calls. As a taxpayer I want to help indemnify the families of the victims of mob action, and I want all other citizens to feel and actually to be thus obligated. Until people bestir themselves sufficiently to stop lynching, they should be required to pay, at least in a financial way, for their tolerance of lawlessness. It is no more of an injustice to tax people in order to indemnify a victim of mob violence than it is to tax all citizens for the purpose of maintaining a jail. It is no more of an injustice to impose this financial responsibility on a county than it is to impose on an employer of labor the obligation to carry liability insurance on those in his employment.

Already in eleven states the county where a lynching occurs is held financially liable. The effectiveness with which this financial aspect of state laws has operated caused its inclusion in the Costigan-Wagner bill. Regarding the effectiveness of this imposition of financial liability on the county as a deterrent to lynching, Professor Chadbourn, of the law faculty of the University of North Carolina, speaking of the experience with the South Carolina statute, says (Lynching and the Law, page 51): "Each county which has been fined has had no more lynchings, and the average number of lynchings per year in the state has declined sharply after the infliction of each penalty." This indicates that if we are interested primarily in preventing lynchings, one of the most effective ways of doing so is to make the county where a lynching occurs financially liable.

Doubt is expressed with reference to the superior effectiveness of federal over state courts. Of course one cannot dogmatize on this matter, since such cases have never been tried in federal courts. However, it is interesting to note that the lynchings in 1934 all occurred during the second half of the year when the Costigan-Wagner bill had been temporarily killed in committee, and that a judge in Mississippi is reported to have prevented a lynching by warning the mob that if they lynched the man it would probably result in the passage of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill. The writer's feeling in this matter is that the weakness of the state court in dealing with lynching inheres in its purely local character, and that a federal court, by its independence of local political pressure, is a better court in which to try lynchers.

Bishop Cannon mentions a group of twenty persons that were inclined to favor the Costigan-Wagner bill, but whom he deterred from taking favorable action because only four of them had read the bill. The preferable course would have been to supply these persons with the easily obtainable copies of the bill and let them act as they were inclined to do when fully informed. The writer of this article has on the desk here as he types a stack of one hundred mimeographed copies of the Costigan-Wagner bill. Anyone who desires a copy may have it by sending me a stamped and addressed envelope.

Scarritt College, Nashville, Tenn.

NEW HAVEN, CONN
REGISTER
APR 28 1935

VARIATIONS OF LYNCHING.

The stir in the Congress again this year over the proposal of a Federal anti-lynching law is not much different from the stir in previous Congresses over similar proposals. The measure is in general about the same as the subject of the famous battle of 1923. The threat of a bitter-end filibuster by southern senators is familiar. And the movement is not expected by many observers to get much farther than it ever got before. It apparently has little support from the Administration—so vocal in respect to other matters in which the humanitarian angle can be advanced. Yet the Administration can hardly be blamed for that, considering its present difficulty in keeping its lukewarm supporters from the South satisfied.

As a matter of fact, even though the proposal were completely justified, even though lynching were unquestionably a national instead of a local crime, one committed in such a way that State borders and separation of enforcement agencies prevented apprehension and quick punishment of the perpetrators as in the case of kidnaping and other crimes which have been brought under Federal jurisdiction, the time is hardly appropriate for such Federal action.

In past months there has been going on in Washington promiscuous "lynching" of character. It is hard to recall a single one of the special fishing expeditions which have been inaugurated in order to build up an emotional case for various pieces of extreme legislation in which the character and the position of defendants have not been "lynched." No established, responsible court of justice would tolerate some of the spectacles there presented. To speak in opposition to some measures proposed, oftentimes instigated or so handled as obviously to appeal to class prejudice, was to find oneself delivered into the hands of the mob.

Last year some of the leaders of the agricultural adjustment experiment sought licensing power which would give them power virtually to "lynch" processing or distributing concerns which failed to comply with regulations which the administrators, not established law, might issue. Such power was sought again this year. The leading proponents of the Federal electric power development scheme are wild because courts have stepped in with injunctions to prevent virtual "lynching" of private operating companies. There are more kinds of "lynching" than that involving the hanging of a murder suspect prevented by mere force of numbers or by transitory hysteria from defending himself. Contempt for them can be found just as strong as for that of the sort coming within the commonly accepted meaning of the term.

WATERTOWN, S. D.
PUBLIC OPINION
APR 26 1935

THE LYNCHING BILL

It looks as though the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill might be in for some rough sledding in the United States senate. A bunch of southern senators have organized it said for the most determined filibuster in years and take the position that the bill shall pass only over their dead bodies, or votes.

This isn't so surprising although it is to be feared that some rather mixed arguments will be raised before the debate is over.

The bill, of course, is primarily aimed at the south. That fact is pretty well acknowledged. Hence, it may, to that extent be regarded as a slur against the section from which the defiant senators hail and so to be opposed accordingly.

But it is equally well known that lynching in the south is a comparatively safe outdoor sport always providing that the lynchee happens to be a person of color. Experience has shown pretty clearly that to expect southern local or state authorities to inflict any severe punishment for negro lynchings is about as vain as to expect the same officials to allow the said negroes to vote.

So if lynchings are to be stopped it is going to take a federal law, enforced by federal officials to do it.

It may be maintained, of course, that under the circumstances which exist in many southern communities lynching is frequently justified, or at least morally excusable.

The same argument is raised in favor of homicide under several other conditions. But such arguments have never been approved legally and to accept such a theory would be to throw the door open to far worse evils.

If the southern senators honestly regard lynching as desirable, and very possibly some of them do, they cannot be blamed too severely for opposing the proposed bill. But if it is admitted that a stop should be put to the practice, it must be conceded that it will need the federal government to do it.

LANCASTER, PA.
NEW ERA
APR 24 1935

Anti-Lynching Law

Senator Smith, of South Carolina, who has manifested vehement opposition to the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, exhibits a strange attitude for a man who sits in such an august body as the United States Senate. The prospect of a filibuster by Southern senators against the measure illustrates a curious warp in the minds of men who should understand that lynching is murder and every member of a mob who actively participates in killing a person by such summary methods incurs guilt.

There are courts of law and police departments for the trial of all who are accused of offences against the law. We are the most lawless people in the world. We tolerate conditions which would not be endured for a moment in any other civilized nation on the globe. We are shocked occasionally by a particularly atrocious crime, but we soon forget and go our indifferent ways, heedless of the danger to government and society.

While lynching is commoner in the South, it is a national problem. A rigid statute, which will deter unthinking mobs from violence and officials from half-hearted efforts to prevent such outlawry, is needed. It is a strange mental quirk which inspires men who sit in the Senate to attempt to thwart a law designed to stop murder by mobs.

Wilmington, N. C. News
April 25, 1935

PROPOSED LYNCHING BILL

SENATOR SMITH, of South Carolina, that urbane gentleman who for years has fought for the cotton planters of the south, turns for the moment from his batles for the dirt farmer to register his opposition to the WAGNER-COSTIGAN bill, making lynching a federal offense.

Offhand, we are inclined to agree with the gentleman from Lynchburg that the proposed measure is hardly worth passage. Noble as may be the theory behind it, or righteous as may be the motives of the senators sponsoring the bill, it must be conceded that it is a sectional affair and constitutes a direct slap at the south.

This newspaper holds no brief for the mobster. It long ago took the stand that the lyncher should be exterminated and it applauds when one of the ilk is caught on the horns of justice and impaled. At the same time it cannot see where the proposed law will seriously effect the situation. Lynching in the eyes of the northerner occurs only when a negro meets violent and illegal death at the hands of a southern white. It fails to recognize that gang killings, hold-up murders and other such crimes must also be classified as lynchings under the implied meaning of the term.

We concede that law enforcement officers are handicapped in obtaining information which will link the average mobster with a crime of the kind concerned, but will a change from state to federal offense change the situation? We doubt it.

Brooklyn, N. Y. Citizen
APR 25 1935

THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

Senator Costigan's anti-lynching bill has not come to a vote yet, because of the fear of Administration leaders that Southern Senators might engage in a filibuster which would prevent adoption of many of the Administration's bills.

Senator Costigan himself is desirous of bringing the matter to a vote, and recently he submitted editorials from Southern newspapers and resolutions adopted by Southern women's clubs to show that the objections of Senators George of Georgia, Smith of South Carolina and Reynolds of North Carolina did not reflect unanimous Southern sentiment.

The burden of their objection was that lynching was necessary to protect the virtue of Southern women. The answer of the Southern women's clubs, as reported by Senator Costigan, was that Southern white women are perfectly able to protect their own virtue.

The Costigan bill gives the Federal Government the right to proceed against lynching mobs in every State in the Union. Although the Southern States have laws against lynching, they are never enforced.

Lynchings- 1935
Legislation Relating to.

5680

SHREVEPORT, LA.
JOURNAL
MAY 6 1935

No Antilynch Law This Session.

When the United States senate, by a vote of 48 to 32, displaced the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill from its preferred position on the calendar Wednesday afternoon, all prospect for passage of this iniquitous measure at the present session of congress went a-glimmering. The proceeding was rather simple, the senators simply applying a parliamentary rule and voting to "adjourn" instead of "recess" for half an hour; twice within a week efforts of a devoted little band of Southern senators to bring about this situation had failed, but on Wednesday the filibuster won a signal victory.

The measure devised by Senators Costigan of Colorado and Wagner of New York, and which has been pushed vigorously since congress met in January, is the same old bill which has been before the congress a dozen times within recent years, though appearing at this session in slightly changed garb. It sought to turn over to the federal courts prosecution of all criminal and civil actions resulting from the application of "lynch law," and to make responsible in damages the county in which a lynching might occur; although its sponsors claimed the bill was nonsectional, since it was operative in all parts of the country, there could be little doubt that primarily, it was aimed at the South.

Wherefore, a gallant band of Southern senators, dubbed the "battalion of death," have been engaged in a determined battle for weeks to prevent the bill coming to a rcord vote. They have been led by Bailey of North Carolina and Black of Alabama with occasional help from Bilbo of Mississippi, Trammell of Florida, Smith of South Calorina and Connally of Texas; the two senators from Louisiana have not taken any part in the fight, so far as we have been able to discover, but temporary victory, at least, has been won without them. And it might be remarked in passing, the men who contended so bravely against the Costigan-Wagner bill are entitled to the thanks of every dweller in Dixieland.

There was never any truth in the argument of the sponsors of this bill that it was designed to benefit the negro race; on the contrary, it was fraught with potential harm. They, Senators Costigan and Wagner, have no first-hand acquaintance with the problem they sought to solve, and it is a satisfaction to know the senate finally accepted the advice of those Southern senators who do know the solution. It is an evil, as every one will admit, but it is an evil that can not be corrected by such laws as the Costigan-Wagner bill.

Fayetteville, N. C., Observer
May 2. 1935

ANTI-LYNCH BILL HAS LITTLE TO DO WITH LYNCHING.

Just as its effect on child labor is the least objectionable thing about the proposed Child Labor Amendment, so its effect on lynching was the least objectionable feature of the Anti-Lynching bill which the Senate of the United States has finally discarded.

Both the Child Labor and the Anti-Lynching measures had for their goal the removal from the several States of the Union what little power still remained in what were at the beginning thirteen sovereign nations.

The Anti-Lynching bill made it a Federal offense for the law officer of any county to fail to prevent any mob action—and a mob was described as three or more persons engaged in an unlawful act.

It also permitted the Federal Government to levy a fine against the county in which any mob action took place, for the purpose of reimbursing the family of the victim of the mob action.

Under a strained interpretation of the Anti-Lynching bill—if it had been passed—it would have been possible for the wholesale house which was robbed here last week to start an action against Cumberland county for failing to prevent the robbery and to have the United States fine Cumberland county for the benefit of the robbed concern.

And the precedent of the interpretation of Federal laws is that they do become strained in just such a manner.

Passage of the Anti-Lynching bill would have meant the passing of just about the last shred of local autonomy.

That's why the Southern States fought it so strenuously. They were once more than mere States. They were once nations, governments unto themselves, each of them. They were not created out of bought or conquered territories but they carved their own freedom by might and main from Great Britain. They are the McCoy. The Mid-western and Western States, with the exception of Texas, never knew nationhood. They have always been just "states." They look to Washington and not to themselves for guidance.

Meantime, the Southern States see the powers as nations which they once enjoyed one by one being taken from them by the Federal Government.

This—not any desire to promote lynching—was the cause of the Southern fight on the Anti-Lynching measure.

Valdosta, Ga., Times
April 27, 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

For several years there has been spasmodic agitation in the United States looking toward the passage of legislation which would place a penalty on counties where lynchings occur. The latest bill before the senate is the Costigan-Wagner bill and recently there has been considerable discussion of this measure. Thus far opponents have prevented a vote and in many circles it is predicted that the bill will never be enacted into law.

Commenting on this bill, the Athens Banner-Herald says:

"Of interest to the people of the South is the 'anti-lynching' bill introduced by Senators Wagner of New York and Costigan of Colorado. Both senators are Democrats, but the bill in principles is about the same as the famous anti-Dyer lynching bill introduced some years ago. This bill was finally killed. Dyer, a Republican, hailed from a negro district in St. Louis. Nothing better could have been expected of him. but when Democrats resort to such methods, whether from Maine or California, such action is inexcusable and without justification.

"However, due to the opposition to the bill by Senator George, it is not believed that it will receive enough consideration to be brought to a vote. The bill, if enacted into law, would incite to lynchings rather than diminish the outrages that rarely ever occur in this section of the country. The people of the South are not of a lawless nature, nor do they condone such violations of the law, but with the passage of this proposed 'anti-lynching' law there is no telling what might be the results, not only in this section of the country, but in other sections as well.

"The bill provides, that in counties where lynchings occur, a penalty be imposed on the county for a certain sum to be paid to the immediate members of the family of the deceased. This is no time to be resurrecting sectional strife the conditions in the South do not warrant an anti-lynching' law, especially when it is being introduced for the purpose of coercion more than for the enforcement of the law, or for the betterment of society."

Columbia, S. C. Record
May 1. 1935

IT IS UP TO THE STATES.

The defeat of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill may, it seems, be taken for granted.

The doctrine of state rights, sound doctrine by the way, may be forgotten by Southern senators when other things, like federal aid or prohibition, are under consideration, but when the anti-lynching bills come up they remember everything they have heard about it and sometimes a little more. On this line, they are willing to fight and with other business demanding attention they will probably again get what they want—evasion of the issue—by simply threatening to talk long enough to prevent the enactment of anything else if the anti-lynching bill is to be taken up.

But the weakness of the Southern position is also obvious. The South hopes to win by making a vote impossible; it has little or no hope of being able to win if the bill is brought to a vote. The majority of both house and senate—a Democratic majority—is against it. It has only one argument against the bill—the state rights argument, weakened by the South's abandonment of it on other issues.

And some day, if things go on as they have been the anti-lynching bill will come to a vote and be passed—the Dyer anti-lynching bill in 1922 passed the house 231 to 119, filibusters being, of no especial effect in the house. The Southern victory if it may be termed a victory, will give the opponents of anti-lynching bills merely a respite. Those states that are concerned about it—and sometimes it would appear that few states actually are concerned about it—will, if they are wise, use the time to demonstrate that the states can take care of the lynching problem themselves, that they can enforce their own laws and will. It is the only way to avoid the otherwise inevitable enactment of a federal lynching bill, which if it will not prevent lynching—and that seems obvious enough—will at least take away from the states the responsibility for law enforcement which can be used to making lynchings dangerous and therefore unpopular.

Senator Ellison D. Smith, of South Carolina, fulminates against it and Senator Bailey, of North Carolina, delivers a studied attack upon it as contrary to the doctrine of state rights, and to the United States constitution. And Byrnes, of South Carolina, and Black, of Alabama, oppose it and so on. But they are in the minority and no minority may indefinitely expect to defeat the majority—even in the United States senate.

Some gains have of course been made in the war on lynching. In 1892 3.4 persons per million of population in the United States were lynched. In 1934 only 0.1 persons per million of population were mob victims. But not enough has been done and there is still too much condoning of lynching, as witness some of the senators' arguments, as witness the few if any convictions following lynchings. More must be done and it must be done by the states.

"And so," R. Charlton Wright, former editor of The Record, concludes an interesting discussion of the question—there is sound stuff in it—printed on this page today, "though it affords me no pleasure to say it, candor compels me to the conclusion that if the South wants to avoid the penalties and disgrace of an anti-lynching 'force bill,' the remedy is in the hands of its legislators, governors, sheriffs, judges, prosecutors and citizens in general. A few lynchers, convicted and hung 'high as Haman,' would turn the trick."

MOLINE, ILL.
DISPATCH

APR 27 1935

Law to Enforce a Law.

Southern legislators at Washington are opposing bitterly a bill to make it illegal to lynch criminals. Their opposition is not based on the idea that they favor lynching. At least all of them say they oppose such violence. They are fighting the bill because it would give the federal government a chance to go into southern states to enforce laws that already exist in those states.

States of the south already have statutes prohibiting assault and battery, kidnaping, and murder in any form. Yet lynchings occur consistently.

In some communities of the south the colored population outnumbers the whites two to one or even more. In these places many of the whites feel that the supposedly unemotional processes of law are not sufficient to afford proper security. They desire to provide object lessons based upon horror and frightfulness.

The problem is not merely a matter of lynching or not lynching. Such a bill, if enacted into law probably would complicate matters in the deep south and cure no evil. There can be no defense of lynching, and the highest class of whites in the south deplores it. Among these responsible persons, lynching is only a small part of a gigantic problem that should be attacked in its entirety, not piecemeal.

Meanwhile the hapless negro in the so-called black belt of the south is having serious troubles of his own. The depression has hit him harder than any other class or race in the United States. Those on farms have been reduced to an even lower standard than the low standard endured before. Those in cities are in even worse condition because they performed duties of a menial capacity for whites, and when hard times came, they lost their jobs to their own employers.

Communists have attempted to stir up revolution among them, but as a race they have remained true to the system under which they were brought up.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
EVENING TRIBUNE

MAY 4 1935

Nonsense From the South.

Senator Barbour of New Jersey is not much impressed by the charge that the passage of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill would result in an intolerable invasion of state rights. He is particularly unimpressed by it, apparently, because it is made by southern senators whose states are chronic moochers on the federal treasury.

Mr. Barbour observes that in nine southern states, during the first two months of this year, the federal government supplied more than 95 per cent of all the relief money expended. In two other southern states, it provided more than 90 per cent of the relief funds distributed in that period. The senator might have added that in 1934 such sturdy champions of state rights as Florida, North Carolina, Louisiana and Mississippi received respectively 99.9, 98.6, 97.9 and 98.1 per cent of all their relief moneys from Washington.

Such a record, of course, has nothing whatsoever to do with the merits or demerits of the Wagner-Costigan bill. Whether the federal government should take a hand in the prosecution of lynchers is a question entirely apart, and it is one on which honest differences of opinion are possible.

Mr. Barbour, however, seems to have pinked the southern senators in a rather tender spot. It is noteworthy, at least, that while they are howling to high heaven about the threatened invasion of state rights in the field of lynching, their states are not at all alarmed by the virtual monopoly which the federal government has established in the field of relief. The south, as a matter of fact, has been doing less for itself in the way of relief, and has been sponging more enthusiastically on the federal treasury, than any other section of the country.

From this we conclude that any invasion of state rights which is accompanied by the generous outpouring of federal funds is entirely acceptable to the south, and that any invasion of state rights which might tend to curb mob murder constitutes a gross affront to it. The right of the southern senators to oppose the Costigan-Wagner bill we cheerfully concede, but when they raise the anguished cry of state rights, while the south panhandles for federal millions, they merely make themselves ridiculous.

PEORIA, ILL.
TRANSCRIPT

APR 26 1935

THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

Northern newspapers generally have been urging passage of the Costigan-Wagner bill which would give federal police agencies control of investigations of lynching and other mob violence. Southern papers, on the other hand, have looked upon the bill as a direct insult to the south and are threatening to make it a political issue.

While the purpose of the bill is laudable, it might be better for all concerned to give it a quiet burial. The bill smacks too much of the old prohibition law which made it possible for federal agents to go into any community and start a reign of terror of their own. It is direct repudiation of state sovereignty and local self-government.

One of the worst results would be the psychological reaction of southern law enforcement officers. They probably would take the attitude which many local officials did during prohibition and sit back and let federal officers take full responsibility for all lynchings.

In recent years, many southern officials have tried to stamp out the lynching evil. County officials, often at their own peril, have protected their prisoners against angry mobs. Society women of the south have banded together to discourage lynching. The record shows that lynching is steadily declining.

The Costigan-Wagner bill probably would undo all this good work. An affronted south would sit calmly by and let mobs operate at will. Sheriffs and other police officers would feel no responsibility if lynching were a federal crime. It would be up to Uncle Sam to control the mobs.

To cope with possible mob violence, the government would need an army of agents greater than that required to enforce prohibition. Even if these units were highly mobile, they could not possibly get to the scene of trouble until too late to prevent lynchings.

Investigation of lynchings will not prevent mob violence. Southern officials are taking preventative steps and should not be hindered by unwarranted federal interference.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 29 1935

NOT DIXIE'S VOICE

A SMALL group of southern senators threaten to filibuster the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, just as a similar group killed the Dyer bill 12 years ago. They may succeed. But if they do the country should know that their specious pleas in behalf of states' rights or chivalry do not echo the sentiments of the whole South.

Organizations representing some 42,000,000 Americans urge passage of this bill. How much of this support comes from south of the Mason-Dixon line may be judged from its approval by many of Dixie's leading papers.

"Its (the Costigan-Wagner bill's) invasion of states' rights should cause no southern heartburning," says The Norfolk (Va.) Pilot. "There is no such thing, morally speaking, as a reserved right to deal in our own way with a form of collective murder which our own way has uniformly failed to punish."

"It may be," says The Newport News (Va.) Press, "that the anti-lynching bill will not be adopted by the Congress now in session. But if it is not, and lynchings do not stop, it will be adopted by some other Congress; in fact, must be adopted if the machinery of justice is to function."

"Apparently," says The Macon (Ga.) Telegraph, "the mere threat of the Federal anti-lynching bill has a wholesome effect, and the time has come when the South would vote for such a bill."

Southern women, too, have been quick to resent Senator Smith's quaint argument that "lynchings are necessary for womanhood's protection." Scores of letters, telegrams and resolutions from southern women's religious, welfare and club organizations have repudiated the preposterous claim that the South's law is helpless to protect the South's women.

Proponents of this measure claim 59 Senate votes from all over the country and a big majority in the House. Only 20 senators are called irreconcilables. It is neither just nor gallant of them to filibuster against this popular national movement.

Lynchings - 1935
Legislation Relating to.

5081

How Not to Stop Lynching

By WILLIAM SEAGLE

THE determined filibuster of a group of Southern Senators against the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill has apparently killed that measure in the present session of Congress. A federal anti-lynching bill has been a recurrent item on the Congressional agenda for the past thirteen years. Actually passed by the House in 1922 but stopped by a filibuster in the Senate, it has lingered as a standing issue. But while the original Dyer bill at least had the merit of attempting to outlaw lynching, the present bill is largely a sham, a fact which makes the filibuster all the more ironical.

The test of the honesty of any federal anti-lynching bill lies in its definition of a mob. Thus the bill introduced in the Seventy-third Congress defined a mob "as an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert without authority of law, for the purpose of depriving any person of his life, or doing him physical injury." In the course of its transit through the Committee on the Judiciary, however, the words in italics were removed from the bill and in their place were substituted "to kill or injure any person in the custody of any peace officer, with the purpose or consequence of depriving such person of due process of law or the equal protection of the laws." This change in the bill deprived it of half its effectiveness. For the federal government to be able to intervene it would have to be established that the lynched person was in the custody of a peace officer. But obviously a great many of the men who are lynched never come within the "protecting" arm of the law. The available figures show that of the 254 persons lynched from 1921 to 1929, 112, or 44.1 per cent, were never in the custody of the law. An additional 74, or 29.1 per cent, were taken from peace officers outside the jail, while the remaining 68, or 26.8 per cent, were taken from the jail.

Apparently the sponsors of the present bill recognized the extremely limited scope of an anti-lynching law which protects only persons in the custody of peace officers. At least the terms of the bill have been somewhat broadened. A mob is now defined not only as an assemblage of persons attacking another in custody of a peace officer, but as an assemblage of persons attacking one who is charged with or suspected of the commission of a crime. But this still stops short of really establishing a federal crime of lynching. Many Negroes lynched have not only not enjoyed the advantages of legal custody but have been neither charged with nor suspected of any crime. Of 3,693 mob victims between 1889 and 1929, it is stated by Roper that 66, or 1.8 per cent. were accused of "insult to white person," and that 894, or 24.2 per cent, were accused of other offenses. The list of these other offenses included such heinous acts as bringing suit against a white man, trying to act like a white man, refusing to pay a note, seeking employment in a restaurant, making boastful remarks, denouncing a sailor's part in a Chicago race riot, speaking disrespectfully against President Wilson, expressing sympathy with a lynched Negro, engaging in conjuring.

It is true that a summary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People states that in only 5.6 per cent of the lynching cases between 1889 and 1918 was there no crime charged. But the Roper figures, which cover the last decade also, indicate that this type of lynching is increasing. Nor can the present figures be considered an exact measure of the mischief which might result if the proposed formula were retained. It would be possible to deny the real reason for a lynching. Members of mobs might insist that they simply didn't like the victim's looks. They might even say that they intended to lynch somebody else. For if it turned out that the wrong man had been lynched, it could be held that the federal statute had not been violated.

The weaknesses in the lynching bill may possibly be defended on the ground that they are intended to make it constitutionally more palatable. The injection of the issues of custody and criminality may, it is true, establish more clearly the element of state action which is the basis of federal interference under the Fourteenth Amendment. But the state has a duty to protect all its citizens against violence at all times, and it is suggested in many cases that the failure to take action may also constitute a denial of due process under the Fourteenth Amendment.

At best a federal anti-lynching bill would be only a weak and uncertain weapon. The federal government may provide criminal penalties for the individual members of a mob as well as seek to assess damages against counties in which lynchings have occurred. But even a federal trial must take place in the locality in which a lynching has occurred. In other words, it must still be held before Southern juries, which will be no more ready to convict than under state anti-lynching statutes. In view of this inherent weakness of any federal anti-lynching statute, any attempt to restrict its scope must be regarded as an attempt to remove its last vestige of usefulness. The Southern gentlemen in the Senate might just as well have spared their throats.

Muckraking in Judgeship Fight Halted Anti-Lynch Measure

Dr. Thompkins Says Whites Killed Bill When Negroes Began to Attack Each Other in Battle for Seat on Municipal Bench

Charges against candidates for the Municipal Court judgeship were largely responsible for the defeat of the Costigan-Wagner Antilynching Bill, said Dr. William J. Thompkins, recorder of deeds, in an address Sunuday at a men's day program at the First Baptist Church, Georgetown.

Dr. Thompkins said every charge from rape to roiting was sent to the Department of Justice by "second rate politicians." The speaker said one charge against a candidate involved association with white women. He said that when the "white people downtown saw these charges against the candidates the Anti-lynching Bill was doomed."

Stopped Bill Passage

Dr. Thompkins characterized the campaign against the various judicial candidates as dastardly and contemptible. He said that when southern white men were told what "our men are doing to white women it stopped the passage of the bill."

The speaker reiterated his plan to establish well baby stations in various sections of the city, Sc as to instruct mothers and prospective mothers in the care of young children. He stated that 500 babies died here last year for lack of proper care.

These stations will be under the supervision o fa nurse who will visit the homes in her sections two or three times each week ana give advice to mothers on the care of babies and young children.

Worse Health Program

Dr. Thompkins said Washington has the worse health program of any city near its size in the United States. He also advocated a separate hospital for the care of colored persons. "Since we have segregation it is better to have our own plant maintained by a Negro staff than to be wired off and humiliated in white institutions, he said.

Anti-cussing Campaign

Dr. Thompkins urged a campaign to stop unnecessary and loud talking in residential districts at night. He suggested that liated in white instituted," he launched.

Phil C. Reed, presided at the meeting. Others to take part in the program included William B. Harris, the Rev. M. N. Newsome, Joseph N. Lawson. Clifton Burrell and L. S. Jefferson.

VOTE ON THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

The Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill (S. 24) was again introduced in the Senate this year. The violent filibuster of Southern Senators has forced this bill to be recommitted to the Judiciary Committee. The bill provides that if a state neglects to furnish protection for the life of a person within its jurisdiction against a mob, such state shall be deemed to have denied such person both due process of law and the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the United States Constitution. The bill further provides for the punishment by the federal government of state or county officials who either actively or passively coöperate with a lynch mob.

SAVANNAH, GA.
PRESS

MAR 6 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL.

The grand jury of the Superior Court of Butts county has expressed an opinion upon a topic about which most Georgia grand juries are keeping silent. The surprise is not that Butts county has voiced the sentiment it has but that the grand juries in other counties in Georgia and states throughout the South have had nothing to say about it.

We refer to the denunciation of the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill which is now before the United States Senate. This is a measure that has the support not alone of Republicans but of a number of Democrats in Northern states. We are not advised as to the attitude of the two Georgia senators upon the measure, which is of so much importance to this section.

The grand jury which made its presentments to the judge of the Superior Court of Butts county left no doubt as to what it thought of the plan to pass a law taking the lynching problem away from the states and turning it over to the federal government. It says in this connection:

Resolved, That while we deplore lynchings and have no disposition to condone or excuse the same, still we feel this proposed bill is a direct violation and invasion of state's rights. We point with pride to our county's record in this regard, and feel we can safely rely upon our officers to do their duty in the future as they have in the past, in protecting all prisoners and affording them a fair and legal trial in our county. We also call specific attention to the unfairness and, in our opinion, unconstitutionality, of a measure which makes a county liable for such large damages, whether the citizens of that county participated in the lynching or not; and can easily imagine the many injustices that might be engendered thereby. Further

Resolved, we call upon our senators and representatives in Congress to vote in the negative and to use their influence in every possible way to prevent the passage of this unfair bill, which we feel is an unwarranted aspersion upon our officers and courts.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

MAR 11 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL O. K.'D BY COMMITTEE

Van Nuys Will Write Report to Senate on Costigan-Wagner Measure.

A favorable report on the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill was voted today by the Senate Judiciary Committee. No opposition developed in the committee meeting, and Senator Van Nuys, Democrat of Indiana, was authorized to draw up the report.

In an effort to reduce cases of mob violence against prisoners taken into custody, the bill seeks to establish two preventive steps. First, it would make enforcement officers of any State or county subject to prosecution if they failed "to make all diligent efforts" to protect prisoners from mobs, or if they did not make diligent efforts to apprehend members of a mob. In such cases officers would be charged with a felony and, upon conviction, could be fined up to $5,000 or imprisoned up to five years or both.

Second, it would make States, counties or cities in which persons are lynched subject to suit for damages to be paid to the families of the victims.

Gulfport, Miss. Herald
May 3, 1935

ANTI-LYNCH BILL DEAD?

We hear that a tactical movement virtually or practically killed the anti-lynching bill fathered by Senator Wagner of New York, who had the advice and aid of certain persons in his city and State, and Senator Costigan of Colorado. Both are Democrats, and this gave the bill more 'presence' than if it had been, as traditionally, from the Republican side of the Senate. Senator Lodge started with one when a young Congressman fresh from a high New England College. It was called the 'force bill'. It was defeated in the Senate by Senator James Z. George and others. Senator George made a masterly speech. The bill came up again, and the Southerners, who have had a tremendous and tremendously grave and delicate problem on their hands at home—more difficult than that of any other section of the country, were forced to the firing line, using defensive tactics and the very fundamental necessities of the case. Again it was beaten. Senator Lodge, when he began to become known as a historian, which gave him great pride, abandoned his position and admitted that he had been wrong. We could cite the time, place and audience (one Southern man) to prove that, but we assume it to be unnecessary. One of his remarks was, when his auditor expressed astonishment at his change of attitude: "Well, I was a politician then; now that I am writing history, I am faced with the necessity of writing truth", —or words to that effect.

The tide turned in the Senate on the latest bill when Senator Borah, who has repute as an able constitutional lawyer in the Senate, declared that the bill was unconstitutional, just as he had declared its predecessor unconstitutional.

In the fight, however, we find Senator Ashurst of Arizona, a Democrat, favoring the bill, when he was fresh from race riots with Japanese in his State, which, at a very delicate time, might have brought the country into conflict with Japan. And we were surprised at Western Democrats, especially, who have had a serious race condition, a shadow, over them for a long time, the seriousness of which caused the passage of the Asiatic Exclusion legislation.

But here, we have the question ever with us, about us, and in front of us; and with it at home, we have to fight in the halls of congress, not only on this specific matter, but to prevent a law which would put the Federal Goernment into a State, administering a police law, which belongs only to the State.

Blue Grassers Vote for Anti-Lynch Law

CLEVELAND — Shortly before closing their two-day meeting Tuesday, the "blue grass" convention of Republicans from six states adopted a plank endorsing a Federal anti-lynching law after heated arguments over the constitutionality of such a law.

Just as the platform was up for final approval, Councilman John E. Hubbard called for the plank. Perry B. Jackson, assistant police prosecutor here, seconded the Hubbard resolution. Chester K. Gillespie, former State representative, asked the convention to "stop those devils in the South with a Federal law."

The plank was opposed by William S. McDowell, of the resolutions committee, and Thomas J. Barrett, of West Virginia, chairman of the platform committee, both white, who declared that the measure was unconstitutional. Hobson Reynolds, of Philadelphia, said that 50,000 votes lost in Philadelphia would not be regained if the plank did not pass.

MISSISSIPPI LYNCHES AGAIN

Now that the Costigan-Wagner Federal anti-lynching bill seems well out of the way, thanks to the lethargy of our race patriots, Mississippi, holder of the Lynch Pennant stages another mob murder.

Wiggins, Stone County, one of the most remote and primitive in a State noted for its primitiveness, was the scene of the crime. R. D. McGee, 25-year-old Negro, was lynched last Saturday after being "questioned" all night Friday. He was allegedly guilty of attempting to attack a little white girl. Three hundred men of the "superior" race did the job. Afterward some of the lynchers, camouflaged as a coroner's jury, declared that McGee "came to his death at the hands of unknown parties." One would like to know by whom the parties are unknown, as almost every able-bodied white man in the county seems to have been present at the lynching. They all know each other down there.

Sheriff J. A. Simpson, who possesses a grim sense of humor, reports that the mob hid the hapless Negro from him and his officers until the lynching was over. These Mississippi sheriffs are notorious for their ostrich tactics. They can't see right in the midst of a lynching mob and never recognize any of the lynchers, not even themselves.

If there were a Federal anti-lynching law (as there would have been if Negro voters had really wanted one), Stone County officials and lynchers would soon be on their way to prison and the county would have to fork over $2,500 to the relatives of R. D. McGee. But there is no law, so Mississippi and the other Lynch States go their way, terrorizing the Negro in order to rob him more effectively.

We are going to keep up the fight until something is

Lynchings-1935
Legislation Relating to.

5082

Atlanta, Ga. Journal
April 24, 1935

NEXT, AFTER the tenant-farmer bill, comes another hyphenated measure, alliteratively labeled "anti-lynching legislation," and, you can take it from me, Senator Russell has the medicine for this vicious proposal.

Although he doubts the constitutionality of the bill and condemns its object, Senator Russell believes that gang rule is as bad or worse, than mob law, and he proposes to amend the Wagner-Costigan measure by broadening its scope to include gang killings, gangster warfare, kidnapings and other forms of racketeering, for which both New York and Denver, not to mention many other cities, enjoy fame.

"If it is to be made the policy of the government to penalize the counties in which lynchings occur, why shouldn't the government go all the way and penalize the communities in which gangsters and racketeers run riot?" asks the Georgian.

"I am drawing an amendment to the bill, which I will offer at the proper time, to include unrestrained crimes of violence in all communities. Why play favorites in this matter of federal interference with the police powers of the states?

"The crimes of gangsters, racketeers, kidnapers are cold blooded, premeditated, malicious, prompted by lust, or hate, or fear, and they are on the increase, whereas lynchings are on the decline. If communities are to be made to pay indemnity to the heirs of the victims of mob law in the south, certainly they should be made to reimburse victims of gang killings and kidnapings in the north, east and west."

* * *

THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL, you know, takes such cases out of the hands of state authorities, and provides (quoting the language) "any county in which a person is seriously injured or put to death, by a mob of riotous assembly (three or more constitute such a mob) . . . shall be liable to the injured person or the legal representative of such person, or the estate of such deceased person, for a sum of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 as liquidated damages. . . ."

* * *

BUT DON'T GET ALARMED, friends, the anti-lynching bill isn't going to become a law, not at this session of congress, anyhow. . . . Nothing will come of it—nothing save its service as a buffer in the senate until a more meritorius measure is ready for consideration.

Which sounds, admittedly, a bit contemptuous toward the pet measure of Senators Wagner, of New York, and Costigan, of Colorado, laboring under the delusion that they can force their bill through the senate, what with more'n enough votes in sight.

But Senators Wagner and Costigan have a rude awakening coming to them. It is, indeed, extremely doubtful if they succeed in making their measure the unfinished business of the senate. . . . You see, motions to take up bills in the senate are debatable, and once a debate gets under way there's no stopping it, except by unanimous consent or enforced cloture. Neither of these is possible of obtainment so long as the anti-lynching bill threatens. . . . Unanimous consent requires just what the words imply, and cloture takes a two-thirds vote!

* * *

MOST OF THE BIG SHOTS of the senate, intellectually and oratorically, are opposed to the Costigan-Wagner bill—George, Bailey, Russell, Smith, Byrns, Reynolds, Connally, Sheppard, Clark, Byrd, Harrison, Bilbo, Bankhead, Black, McKellar, Gore, et al. All of them are primed and ready to go. There's no telling how long they could, and will, talk if needs be, nor is there any anticipating the parliamentary moves of which they are capable—amendments, roll-calls and straight talk, relieved occasionally by the clerks of the senate reading "germane" subjects, from newspapers, magazines, law books and novels.

I figure that after they get an earful of what's happening to them, Senators Costigan and Wagner will lose some of their hope, if not ardor for the legislation they are pressing, and welcome an opportunity to abandon their objective.

Should there be a slip, however, and the anti-lynching bill get before the senate on its merits, or demerits, you'll read of a sho-nuff filibuster that'll continue until the snow flies, if necessary, which, of course, is out of the question.

Atlanta, Ga. Journal
April 24, 1935

NEGRO THREAT

THERE has been more dexterous behind-the-scenes strategy to prevent a vote on the anti-lynching bill than on any other measure this session.

Reason is that it splits the Democratic side of the senate wide open. Also it widens the split between Roosevelt and his party leaders.

Roosevelt is opposed to lynching. So he called Joe Robinson, Democratic floor leader, to the White House, told him to put the bill on the calendar.

Joe Robinson comes from the state of Arkansas, not known for too gentle treatment of negroes. But he obeyed orders—that is, up to a point. He told Colorado's Costigan, co-author of the bill, that he could bring it up next day.

But when Costigan made this motion, he found that Robinson privately had passed out the word to Senator Wheeler to get his motor bus bill on the calendar first. The same word was passed out to Senator Bankhead concerning his bill for the tenant farmer.

So Costigan and his anti-lynch bill waited on the sidelines.

NOTE: Senator Robinson recently has had the heat turned on him by Walter White, head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Joe long has cast a longing eye upon the Supreme Court. But now White promises to do what colored influence helped do to anti-negro Judge John J. Parker when Hoover nominated him for the Supreme Court. Colored protests aided in defeating him.

Now if Joe gets his Supreme Court appointment, White is swearing vengeance.

ANTI-LYNCH BILL WINS IN SKIRMISH

Senate Defies Filibuster Threat in Refusal to Sidetrack Costigan Plan

WASHINGTON, April 27 (AP)—Endless, monotonous talk—the kind known only to filibustering senators—was the open threat hurled by Southerners today into the face of an apparent senate determination to vote on considering the Costigan anti-lynching bill.

With a Bible on his desk, Senator Bailey (D., N. C.) said he was prepared to read "the whole book of Deuteronomy" if that should become necessary to prevent a vote.

Adjournment Refused

This warning, ominous to a big administration legislative program, was given after the senate for a second time refused to sidetrack the bill. By a vote of 37 to 28 it defeated a motion to adjourn, which, had it carried, would have displaced Senator Costigan's (D., Colo.) motion to make his anti-lynching bill the business of the senate.

Then the senators voted, 50 to 10, to recess, leaving the Costigan proposal at the head of its order of business. On Monday an effort will be made, is was done today, to have the senate consider instead the Harrison bonus payment plan, with the Southerners hoping the popularity of that issue would swing enough votes to make it the chamber's unfinished business.

However, under the senate parliamentarian's interpretation of the rules, the bonus can not be substituted without a vote on Senator Costigan's pending motion to take up the anti-lynching measure. And there the situation was deadlocked by the Southern filibuster.

Senator Robinson of Kansas, the Democratic leader, said he accepted the vote of today's adjournment motion, which he offered himself, as a definite indication of sentiment for and against the anti-lynching bill and an expression in favor of an opportunity to vote upon it.

MOB BILL FIGHT CLOSE AND HOT

One-Vote Margin Gives Proponents Advantage Which Foes Say Will Be Fleeting

WASHINGTON, April 26 (AP)—Senate advocates of a federal curb on lynching today scored a one-vote victory, a victory hailed by those who met defeat as destined to be as short-lived as it was close.

By 34 to 33, Northern and Southern senators beat down a motion to adjourn, which, had it carried, would automatically have sidetracked the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill. The vote, which in the instance of some senators was influenced by plans for considering the question of paying the soldiers' bonus, capped three days of filibustering by a determined group of Southerners.

Senator Robinson of Arkansas, the Democratic leader, offered the adjournment motion.

Defeated, Robinson moved that the senate recess until tomorrow. This was done.

Bonus Bill Is in Line

The significance of all the parliamentary jockeying was, principally, that had the advocates of the lynching bill lost on the adjournment motion the bill would not necessarily have retained top place on the senate calendar.

On Monday, at the latest, the senate will be offered a choice between going on with the lynching question or on taking up the bonus bill. Heavy odds were on a decision for the latter.

Prior to the vote Robinson had threatened to keep in session all day tomorrow in an effort to break the parliamentary deadlock. The ballot when it did come, found the Southerners, with two exceptions voting solidly for adjournment. Logan of Kentucky and Bachmann of Tennessee broke away from their colleagues to vote "no."

The bill would provide severe penalties for local officers for conspiring to turn prisoners over to lynch mobs, or for failing to give their prisoners proper protection. Counties would be made liable for damages to the dependents of persons lynched.

Shortly before, Senator Costigan presented a handfull of telegrams encouraging him to continue the battle for the bill, one dated Atlanta, Ga., and sent by the members of the Commission on Inter-Racial Co-operation.

Charleston, S. C. News & Courier
April 23, 1935

South Threatened by Democrats

Mark, you Southern Democrats, the Costigan-Wagner "anti-lynching bill" (so they are pleased to call it however its passage would incite to lynching) is not a Republican measure. It is not introduced by a Republican like Dyer who represented a negro district of St. Louis.

Two Democratic senators, Costigan, of Colorado, and Wagner, of New York, sponsor it.

"The "Democrats" have overwhelming majorities in the senate and in the House.

The president is a Democrat.

The office-holders in Washington (they are probably twice as many as they were ten years ago) are "Democrats."

Yet with this bill aimed straight at the white South, in this Democratic administration, we hear the suggestion that a Southern senator, George, of Georgia, to defeat it may as a last resort "filibuster" against it!

In 1888 Democrats had to filibuster to save the South from the Lodge "force bill." They were a minority, and the South was saved by Don Cameron and a few other Republicans who came to the South's rescue.

Has it come to this, that Southern senators may have to filibuster to stop the passage of an anti-Southern bill introduced and pressed by Democrats in a congress controlled by Democrats?

Why does not Franklin Roosevelt, president, speak out against this measure menacing to the South even if it is not the offspring of an indifference to the convictions of Southern white men that is equivalent to malice?

Why does he not denounce it?

Why has he so long neglected to say that he will veto it if it be passed?

Yet the hints are beginning to be whispered that Southerners who do not tamely submit to these things, who would not send delegates to a national convention and abide by its decrees, aye though it were known in advance that it would endorse the Costigan-Wagner bill, are to be cast out of the party, branded as not "Democrats," as "Third partyites," deserters.

Wade Hampton and B. R. Tillman, opposites as they were, both would have "deserted" a "Democratic" party that failed to kill the Costigan-Wagner bill.

New York World Telegram

MAY 2 1935

SO THIS IS DEMOCRACY.

A LARGE majority in Congress wants to enact a federal anti-lynching law. A large majority of the citizens of the country favor such a law. This has been so for many years. Then why isn't there a law? Since this is a democracy, in which Congress is elected by popular majorities and in which Congress itself acts by majority rule, how could the Senate yesterday throw out the anti-lynching bill and prevent majority rule?

Well, it seems that ours is a democracy in text books and Fourth of July orations but not in the Senate. There, periodically, it is possible to rule by minority dictatorship. The method is not the one of stuffing the ballot box, or of kidnaping or terrorizing the majority, so that the minority can palm itself off as the majority. The method is much simpler. The minority merely decrees that there shall be no vote at all. This is achieved under the rule of unlimited debate by which the minority talks a measure to death. It forces the majority to turn to other emergency legislation acceptable to the minority dictators.

While congratulating the Southern Senators on the effectiveness of their dictatorship, we venture to raise this question for their consideration:—Is it wise, from their point of view, to kick democracy in the face quite so publicly at this particular time?

Granting that they have got away with it for many years, hasn't there been a recent change in the public temper which makes this sort of thing somewhat dangerous? Wouldn't it have been wiser, from their point of view, for instance, to give the Negro lynch victim the nominal protection of federal law and then nullified the law as they nullify the Negro's constitutional right to vote?

We are interested in this question because we understand that these Southern Senators are very fearful of the spread of radicalism, especially among Negroes. The radicals are said to be telling the Negroes and the poor white sharecroppers and mill hands of the South that democracy is a fake, that there is no such thing as representative government in this country, that democracy is only camouflage for dictatorship by their enemies. Aren't those radical agitators just mean enough to prove this point in the minds of ignorant Negroes and whites by citing the dictatorship of those few Southern Senators thwarting the mass democratic will of the American people and of the majority of Congress?

Admitting, from the point of these Southern Senators, that Negroes must continue to be robbed of constitutional rights, couldn't they find a safer method? After all, the Negroes are one-tenth of the national population, and in many places they are a majority. With all this talk of radicalism and some of the oppressed actually demanding their rights, perhaps it would be safer for the country to hold out enough hope of democracy to them to discourage more violent weapons.

Anyway, it may be a matter worth thinking about while these Southern Senators are patting themselves on the back, secure in their dictatorship—secure for the moment.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD

MAY 1 1935

"... UNTIL DOOMSDAY"

That august body, the Senate of the United States, has spent the greater part of six days debating the question whether or not it will agree that a certain bill shall be debated. Up to Saturday night the discussion had filled 52 of the huge pages of the Congressional Record, yet the bill itself has not technically been discussed at all.

The "real filibuster" has not begun. If by some strategem the friends of the bill should manage to carry the pending motion, then there would indeed be a filibuster. Its foes have a whole arsenal of munitions in reserve. Their desks are piled with documents and books, the Bible among them. One member declares "we'll stay here until doomsday if necessary." In trembling accents, the senator from North Carolina, Mr. Bailey, affirms that the bill "strikes directly at the heart of American civilization."

The bill is the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching measure, which would make it a federal offense, subject to heavy penalties, for local peace officers to refuse or fail to protect prisoners in their custody. The federal courts would have power to collect damages from cities or counties or both in which lynchings take place, the money to go to the relatives of the victim. Senator Costigan of Colorado holds that his measure is national in its scope; the South sees it as a sectional measure and intends not only to prevent passage but even to block consideration.

The situation is not only so disgraceful as to be disgusting, but it is very curious. The pending question is simply, "Shall the Senate proceed to the consideration" of the bill. Having conducted an indirect filibuster for several days by holding the Bankhead Farm-Tenant bill in the chamber, the southern Democrats now for six days have prevented even the consideration of a bill they think obnoxious. They will not even allow an affirmative vote under a pledge that immediately afterwards the Senate shall pass a vote to lay the bill aside. A motion to adjourn, if passed, would kill the motion, but the Costigan forces in turn prevent that action. So, the Senate recesses from day to day. On a square vote the bill would prevail. Under the Senate rules the minority are in position to prevent such a vote.

These rules apparently are the most sacred thing in Washington. The members refuse to adopt any system of effective cloture. Members who are outraged today by the tactics of a minority know that they themselves may want to invoke the same tactics on some other occasion. The most unbusinesslike body in the country is this United States Senate.

U. S. News
Washington D.C.
APR 29 1935

Punishment for Lynching; State or Federal Issue?

Bill Before Senate Opposed As Invasion Of Police Powers and Advocated As A Step In Crime Suppression

THE BOGEY of State rights and the issue of constitutionality ran through the debate in the Senate in the past week in an unsuccessful effort "to proceed to immediate consideration" of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

The discussion, including a filibuster and lively colloquies between Senators, was before crowded gallaries.

Senators Costigan (Dem.), of Colorado, and Wagner (Dem.), of New York, the bill's sponsors, led the oratorical battle to bring up the bill. Senators Connally (Dem.), of Texas, and Bailey (Dem.), of North Carolina, led the fight against consideration. Others participated.

LYNCH MOB DEFINED

The bill (S. 24) defines a mob as "a riotous assemblage of three or more persons, acting in concert without authority of law, to kill or injure any person in the custody of a peace officer, or charged with, suspected or convicted of crime."

It would make lynching a Federal offense, Federal courts taking jurisdiction, whenever State officials neglect to give prisoners the protection of due process of law guaranteed by the Constitution.

It also would prescribe penalties on officers allowing prisoners to be taken from them by mobs and would make counties where lynchings occur liable to recovery of damages.

Senator Costigan told the Senate there have been 5,071 men and women unlawfully seized and put to death since 1882. He quoted the Supreme Court of the United States and a report of the House Committee on Judiciary in substantiation of the constitutionality of the bill.

Senator Wagner, in his speech, said the 5,071 lynchings since 1882 included 280 since 1922.

"Since the turn of the century," he said, "only eight-tenths of 1 per cent of these lynchings have been followed by prosecutions and in only 12 instances have convictions followed."

Mr. Wagner declared that the bill does not invade State rights and said "there is ample precedent for Federal intervention when State officers deny constitutional rights."

OPPOSITION VIEWS

Senator Connally said lynching is murder whether committed by three persons or by one, that it is a matter for the States, and that he challenged the constitutionality of the proposal.

Senator Bailey opposed the bill as an extension of the Federal power over the State administration of criminal laws. He said his State like some other States has anti-lynching laws and suggested that Senators Wagner and Costigan, from States having no anti-lynching laws, "should sweep before their own doors before they undertake to bring a Federal mob across the threshold of the courts of justice of North Carolina."

Senator Smith (Dem.), of South Carolina, opposed the bill as "aimed at the Southern States." Senator Bailey wound up the debate by declaring the bill is "a legislative interpretation of the Constitution to make the United States the judge of the States and the counties."

And so the debate left the anti-lynching bill unacted upon, with a

Lynchings-1935
Legislation Relating to.

5083

Senate Adjourns As Anti-Lynch Bill Is Set Aside

Advertiser

Borah Wins Most Credit For Breaking Filibuster That Blocked All Action

5-2-35

Victory For South

Montgomery Ala.

Measure Called Illegal In Giving The Government Right To Invade States

WASHINGTON, May 1.—(AP)—Smarting from a semi-serious presidential criticism of senatorial lethargy, Democratic leaders aided by Republicans, today flung off the Senate's anti-lynching bill filibuster in favor of the controversial bonus issue.

A move to adjourn which had failed on three previous occasions, finally carried 48 to 32 after several Republicans and Democrats had rallied to the Southern cause and Senator Borah, Idaho Republican independent, had assailed from the floor the constitutionality of the Costigan-Wagner measure to give the Federal Government power in lynching cases.

Borah Breaks Deadlock

Many senators credited Borah with breaking the deadlock.

This parliamentary tactic ended a seven-day successful Southern filibuster against the motion of Senator Costigan (D), Colorado, to take up the bill he and Senator Wagner (D), New York, have been pressing.

It automatically displaced from its calendar position Costigan's motion and shortly afterward Vice-President Garner recognized Senator Harrison (D), Mississippi, who proposed that the bonus be taken up.

The motion carried without a record vote. The bonus debate, however, was put off until tomorrow because Senator Robinson, Democratic leader who had moved the temporary adjournment, decided to hack away at an accumulated list of secondary bills.

The adjournment motion was supported by 43 Democrats, 4 Republicans and the Farmer-Laborite, Shipstead. Fourteen Democrats, all from the north and west; 17 Republicans, and the Progressive, LaFollette, answered "no." (Both Alabama senators voted to adjourn).

Asked by Senator Costigan for his opinion of the 1922 Dyer anti-lynching bill, which also met a similar fate by the filibuster route, Senator Borah, noted for his constitutional arguments, swung into one of his famous speeches.

He assailed lynching as a "brutal" crime, but said the pending bill, as well as the Dyer proposal, would have "dealt a blow to our principle of government, the importance of wihch could not be overstated."

Defends State Sovereignty

"To my mind," Borah asserted, bringing smiles to the faces of the determined Southern opposition group, "if this type of bill can be sustained by the Supreme Court, we have utterly broken down all State sovereignty. I can see no escape from that conclusion."

The fiery Idahoan, his long hair at times falling over his brow, also ripped into the AAA and NRA on constitutional grounds and in this he was assisted by the Virginia conservative Democrat, Carter Glass.

"If you can go to Idaho and take a man by the nap of the neck and make him abide by the rules of the Federal Government as to his business," he said, "you can go to Alabama and seize the sheriff by the scruff of his shirt and compel him to abide by Federal regulations governing lynching."

Wagner, replying to Borah, said he was persuaded that the bill was "not only constitutional, but that there is a constitutional mandate to carry out the constitutional provision by appropriate legislation."

"The Federal Government," the New Yorker added, "must see that equal protection of the law is accorded to all citizens. It is our duty to enact legislation to that end and this bill is proposed on that theory."

Senator Bankhead, Alabama Democrat with a fringe of white hair, took the floor at the outset today to continue his all-day speech of yesterday, but he hardly had to speak a word. Others kept interrupting and during Borah's long constitutional reply to Costigan, the Alabamian slipped into a nearby cloakroom and partook of a hurried sandwich lunch.

A Senate order for an inquiry into relief spending capped a series of developments as President Roosevelt gathered the material to give official life to his $4,000,000,000 work creation.

Among the chief happenings:

Mr. Roosevelt issued an order giving the rural resettlement division, with Rexford Guy Tugwell as administrator, authority to go ahead with a monthly allowance of $250,000 for administrative expenses. The order empowered Tugwell to buy or condemn land for the program.

Other relief chiefs gave the President estimates of the funds they would need so that he could issue the orders necessary to give their agencies legal power to work.

Morris L. Cooke, a Philadelphia engineer, agreed to set up the rural electrification division with the understanding that he would leave within a few months to go to Europe.

Harry L. Hopkins, the relief administrator, asked the chief executive for $100,000,000 to meet the relief needs of States for May.

The Senate inquiry, ordered by the adoption of a resolution by Senator Couzens (R), Michigan, will be made by the appropriations committee. It will ask specifically about the data required of States before relief allotments are made, what cooperation and assistance is required of States, what agreements States must make, and the accounting methods used.

Relief Heads Confer

A two-hour conference of relief chieftains at the White House gave the President much of the information for the executive orders he will issue within the next day or so setting up the allotment board, the applications division and the progress division.

While the order today gave Tugwell's division authority to go ahead, about all that he can do until the other orders are issued is to complete the transfer of the land program section of the relief administration to the Agriculture Department and set up his organization.

A bi-partisan drive to reduce sharply NRA's powers and extend its life only until next April gained great impetus in the Senate, pointing to the possibility of a major legislative set-back for the President.

Congressional leaders saw in the quick rush of support for the proposal a shortening of the present session by two or more weeks. Some felt, also, that the trend constituted a major blow at the chances of the Wagner labor disputes bill.

Although President Roosevelt had requested a two-year extension of the recovery law, the Senate finance committee reported favorably by a 16 to 3 vote a proposal for an eight months' extension. Further it would eliminate from NRA its price-fixing provisions and its power to regulate intra-State commerce.

Party leaders rallied their followers behind the proposal in an effort to pass it quickly and without change. This was a blow at the Wagner bill, since its proponents had planned to offer as an amendment.

Southern Industrialists There

A delegation of the South's cotton mill owners arrived in Washington to add their words to those being gathered by a special cabinet committee studying ills of the cotton industry.

The delegation, representing the American Association of Cotton Manufacturers, went into immediate conference to complete arguments to be made when the cabinet committee resumes its conferences tomorrow.

Two New England groups—representing Maine and Rhode Island, already have been heard and others from the North will appear next week. Also to be present at tomorrow's conference are Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, Senator Byrnes, of South Carolina, and Representative Bulwinkle, of North Carolina.

The Southern committee, headed by Donald Comer, of Birmingham, Ala., chairman, and T. H. Webb, of Concord, N. C., president of the American Association, were guided in preparing their briefs tonight by the experience of the northerners who for two days presented their arguments, then in turn submitted to searching cross-examination by the cabinet members, and particularly by Secretary Wallace.

The Southern group was expected to join the New Englanders in an appeal for a substitute for the cotton processing tax and some form of protection against Japanese imports, and to object vehemently to elimination of existing section wage differentials as demanded by the North.

Assuming "full responsibility for this unfortunate incident," Chairman McSwain told President Roosevelt of his great "regret" at the House military committee's disclosure of secret army testimony which stirred international concern.

Replies To Roosevelt

Replying to the President's own stern rebuke and disavowal of alleged war plans touching friendly nations, the white-haired South Carolinian wrote the White House:

"I greatly regret the unfortunate inclusion of the executive testimony along with other testimony when it was sent to the public printer. . . . . I can assure you that no such incident will again occur because so long as I shall preside as chairman, any testimony that may be given in excutive session and that may affect our foreign or diplomatic relations will not be taken down stenographically. . . . .

"I assume full responsibility for this unfortunate incident and renew my pledge to cooperate to the fullest in the preservation of friendly relations with all nations and at the same time in maintaining a safe and sane national defense, as all nations must do."

McSwain, who celebrated his 60th birthday today, earlier had read aloud to newsmen the unusual presidential censure of the publication of confidential testimony by army officers and accepted "full blame." But he noted in his letter to Mr. Roosevelt that in its duty of providing for the national defense "Congress must have the frank and candid opinions of all who have information pertinent to the inquiry."

Although declining to comment on Senator Long, of Louisiana, who has termed him the "ignoramus of Iowa," Secretary Wallace, it was learned, has accepted an invitation to address a statewide gathering at Alexandria, La., on May 11.

Wallace at his press conference today grinned away most of the questions intended to draw him out in answer to the Louisiana Senator's caustic comments. "I don't know I'm sure," the Secretary said in reply to an inquiry as to what he had done to Long.

Attacks On New Deal Program Continue

WASHINGTON, May 1.—(AP)—Sharp new assaults on new deal policies sounded during the day before the assembled Chamber of Commerce of the United States, were featured tonight by indirect criticism of the Roosevelt economic program by a Republican leader.

Some of the business leaders gathered here were inclined to attach significance to the fact that Henry J. Allen, former Republican governor and senator from Kansas, and a friend of Herbert Hoover, was the featured speaker of the Chamber's annual dinner.

From that spotlight position on the convention program, Allen compared the English and American economic programs. By following "old-fashioned" principles, he asserted, Great Britain "now leads the world" in recovery. He did not mention the Roosevelt administration by name but bespoke more favor for England's methods.

Senate Tied Up On Lynch Bill

Advertiser

Leaders Plan Bold Effort To Break Filibuster As President Gets Impatient

5-29-35

Montgomery Ala.

By CECIL B. DICKSON

WASHINGTON, April 28.—(AP)—Democratic leaders, although admittedly defeated, determined today on a powerful effort to break the Senate's anti-lynching filibuster tomorrow and clear the way for progress on the Harrison bonus compromise and pressing administration legislation.

Reports were circulated today that President Roosevelt had signified impatience with the Senate's slow progress on administration measures despite optimistic expressions from some Democrats that Congress can complete its business and go home July 1.

Strategy devised to side-track the anti-lynching measure involved adoption first of Senator Costigan's (D), Colorado, motion to take up his bill. Then immediately Senator Harrison (D), Mississippi, would move to consider the bonus bill. If Harrison's motion carried, the anti-lynching bill would be shunted back to the calendar.

However, opponents of the anti-lynching measure headed by Senator Bailey (D), North Carolina, expressed dislike of this program, claiming the Senate should not even consider that type of legislation. They served notice on lead-

...rs of a continued fight to defeat Costigan's motion.

Nevertheless, Senator Robinson of Arkansas, the Democratic leader, planned to make a poll of the membership tomorrow to lay aside the anti-lynching bill. The leaders already have found considerable strength for the measure as evidenced by two losing attempts to side-track it.

As early as possible Harrison planned to confer with President Roosevelt on a proposal for continuing NRA unchanged pending a Supreme Court ruling on its wage and hour fundamentals.

Harrison indicated he would concentrate for the present on the bonus, behind which were clogged in his finance committee, the NRA and social security bills. Advocates of the Patman currency expansion plan and the Vinson measure leaving it to the Treasury to meet the bill, were preparing for assaults on the Harrison compromise, which the Mississippian says the President will sign.

The House tomorrow begins 15 hours of debate on the omnibus banking bill which Chairman Steagall of the banking committee concedes will concentrate additional power over the credit of the nation in the Federal Reserve Board.

Moral Victory Against Lynching

UP TO THE time that this article was written the proponents of the COSTIGAN-WAGNER anti-lynching bill were secure in moral victory. Although the measure had not been allowed to come to a vote in the United States Senate, three parliamentary tests had given assurance that the bill would pass were the Senate permitted to vote upon it.

What has blocked its passage up to this point is a desperate and determined filibuster conducted by southern senators, led by Senators SMITH (S. C.), GEORGE (Ga.), CONNALLY (Tex.), BLACK (Miss.), BAILEY (N. C.) and ROBINSON (Ark.), the latter Democratic leader in the Senate.

With the exception of Senator SMITH, of South Carolina, the fillibusterers are waging their fight upon the grounds of unconstitutionality and an invasion of states' rights. Upon these grounds they or most of them, waived their opposition on practically all National Recovery Act measures. They also waived their fidelity to states' rights when federal legislation was recently adopted covering kidnaping, bank robbing and liquor law violations. Nothing was heard from the southern senators upon the vital question of states' rights when under national prohibition federal laws reached into the states to aid in the control of liquor law violations.

Senator SMITH, of South Carolina, held up the historic traditions of TILLMAN and BLEASE, notorious predecessors of his. He bluntly defended lynching upon the grounds that it is necessary to protect "the virtue and sanctity of our southern white women." After his first outburst, his more intelligent colleagues from the South rushed to the firing line men more capable of defending lynching on less asinine, if illogical, grounds. This battery, much to the surprise of everybody, included the heretofore poised and judicious JOSIAH WILLIAM BAILEY, of North Carolina. Mr. BAILEY, descendent of a line of preachers, a devout churchman and for many years editor of The Biblical Recorder, organ of his denomination, bore the brunt of the fillibuster for two days. Heretofore we had given Mr. BAILEY credit for being intellectually honest, but after reading his two days argument in the Congressional Record we have changed our opinion of him, formed after following his career for 30 years.

It is said that if the bill gets by the Senate it is assured of passage in the House, where there is an overwhelming majority for it. But this estimate does not take into consideration the power of the southern opposition, which can stop most any kind of legislation which includes the Negro in its benevolent intentions.

The fact that in a United States Senate overwhelmingly Democratic a federal law to prevent lynching, sponsored by Democrats, is kept from passage only through a fillibuster conducted under the liberal rules of the body by a small group of wilful southern senators, is evidence that national public opinion approves such a law.

CLEVELAND, O.
PRESS
MAY 2 1935

SO THIS IS DEMOCRACY

A LARGE majority in Congress wants to enact a federal anti-lynching law. A large majority of the citizens of the country favor such a law. This has been so for many years. Then why isn't there a law? Well, it seems that ours is a democracy in text books and Fourth of July orations, but not in the Senate. There, periodically, it is possible to rule by minority dictatorship. The method is not the one of stuffing the ballot box, or of kidnaping or terrorizing the majority, so that the minority can palm itself off as the majority. The method is much simpler. The minority merely decrees that there shall be no vote at all. This is achieved under the rule of unlimited debate by which the minority talks a measure to death. It forces the majority to turn to other emergency legislation acceptable to the minority dictators.

While congratulating the southern senators on the effectiveness of their dictatorship, we venture to raise this question for their consideration: Is it wise, from their point of view, to kick democracy in the face quite so publicly at this particular time?

We are interested in this question because we understand that these southern senators are very fearful of the spread of radicalism, especially among Negroes. The radicals are said to be telling the Negroes and the poor white share-croppers and mill hands of the South that democracy is a fake, that there is no such thing as representative government in this country, that democracy is only camouflage for dictatorship by their enemies. Aren't those radical agitators just mean enough to prove this point in the minds of ignorant Negroes and whites by citing the dictatorship of those few southern senators thwarting the mass democratic will of the American people and of the majority of Congress?

ROCK ISLAND, ILL.
ARGUS
APR 29 1935

Anti-Lynching Bill.

Democratic leaders from the south are opposing the anti-lynching bill proposed by Senators Costigan and Wagner. They are opposing the measure because they think that such a bill, passed by a Democratic congress, would injure the party in Dixieland. In other words, they look upon race prejudice as a political asset. What would some southern politicians do for a campaign slogan if such a bill became law?

But ostensibly they oppose the bill because of the great veneration they have for the constitution. They will not allow the federal government to interfere with state rights. Yet these same leaders, sitting in congress, have voted for legislation in plenty whose constitutionality is very doubtful.

A plan has been formed to smother the bill. Senator Bailey of North Carolina rages at Father Coughlin, the radio priest, because he apparently—by implication—thinks the bill should be adopted. It is hard to see how the bill has a chance in view of southern opposition. Yet the issue is one which must be met sometime. The anti-lynching bill is justified by every consideration of humanity and justice.

We believe there are many southern people who are as much opposed to lynchings by mobs as any northerner can possibly be. A Democratic congress would win a great deal of credit for itself by adopting such a bill. The issue is not really a political one. Many an innocent person has been lynched by a mob. And the south has no monopoly on such lynchings. A mob is a mob in either north or south. And most certainly the framers of the constitution were not men who believed in justice administered by mobs.

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
APR 27 1935

HOW TO STOP LYNCHING.

The anti-lynching bill pending in congress touches the South on its nerve of sectional pride. The measure has Northern authorship which, as Senator Smith of South Carolina sees it, is an added indignity.

"This bill is aimed at the Southern states," he declared on the floor of the senate, "at our barbarism and our lack of civilization! The man who introduced it had a purpose. I know what it is, and so do you."

If all the Southern states would follow the example of South Carolina there might be no occasion for a federal law on the subject of lynching. In 1895 the votes of that state added to their constitution an amendment which reads:

> In all cases of lynching where death ensues, the county where such lynching takes place shall, without regard to the conduct of the officers, be liable in exemplary damages of not less than $2,000 to the legal representatives of the person lynched.

Shortly after this became a part of the organic law there was a lynching in Laurens County, S. C., and a trial court jury some months later awarded the widow of the Negro who was hanged by a mob damages to the amount of $2,000. Since then there have been few applications of lynch law in that state.

Other states, not necessarily in the South, might well follow the example of South Carolina. Indeed, they might go farther and provide that both officials who fail in their duty and persons who participate in lynchings should be held strictly accountable for their behavior. It is well within the power of the states, as states, to prevent these outcroppings of barbarism. Their failure to act adequately explains the repeated efforts to put through a federal anti-lynching law.

Lynchings-1935
Legislation Relating to.

5084

Columbia, S. C. Record
April 29, 1935

Protected by the Law

The Charleston News and Courier also sees Senator Ellison D. Smith as taking the wrong tack in his opposition to the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill by predicating his case on the theory that the South must resort to lynching to protect Southern womanhood.

"To say by implication that Southerners cannot protect womanhood by laws enacted and enforced by the several Southern states may," it declares, "be interpreted as argument for the measure which Senator Smith opposes.

"If the existing laws and criminal procedure of South Carolinians are not sufficiently severe and swift to deal adequately with any species of crime it is within the power of the state to amend them, that the state should do, but, really, we South Carolinians cannot expect to be allowed a special privilege to deal with any crime in manner unknown to law.

"The News and Courier would advocate a federal anti-lynching law rather than excuse lynching for any offense whatsoever. To do that would be to confess incapacity of the state to establish and maintain a civilization."

Indeed if the states cannot do more to prevent lynching and punish the lynchers than the federal government can—and it is the contention of those who oppose the Costigan-Wagner bill that the problem, like any other law enforcement problem, can best be handled by the states—there would be no argument against the enactment of such a measure.

You've got to hand it to that naval officer who is marrying for the 15th time. He's at least making a valiant effort to cary out the promises made at various perts.

Selma, Ala. Times
May 3, 1935

SPEED FOR SLOW-POKES

Time, the inveterate ironist, must be chuckling at the concern of Senator Robinson and Senator Harrison over the Democratic filibuster against the Wagner-Costigan Anti-Lynching Bill. In 1890 filibustering against the Force bill was a sacred Democratic duty. Application of the same method now interferes with the higher Democratic duty to dispose of the Bonus Bill and make way for the measures of the Administration. Time and the rest of us chuckle at the recurring spectacle of Senatorial innocence. The Senate clings to rules that make it easy to tie up its business when the provocation is sufficient. It will consent to no effective system of closure. It encourages interminable loquacity and irreleyance.

So precious to corporate vanity and every member of the august corporation is the privilege of "deliberative" procedure that no substantial change in it can be hoped for. Some compromise will be patched up. Some temporary escape out of the muddle will be found. The mere hours of words requires temporarily to steer around an obstacle sure to be encountered again is a source of happiness to every Senator worthy of the traditions of the chamber. It is another body than any other. Trip as often as it may on its own rules it will stick to them. Its struggles for acceleration are comic. Cold molasses is not easily transformed into greased lightning. The Senate is perfectly satisfied with itself. These little occasional impatiences and flare-ups soon subside.

Unique, unhurried, uncontrolled, the Senate saunters on its majestic way. It should not be censured. It should be admired. In a self-questioning and self-tormenting generation it is a mirror of complacency. Eager to remold about everything else it won't reform the rules of its own leisurely game.—N. Y. Times.

Knoxville, Tenn. News Sentinel
April 28, 1935

Not Dixie's Voice

A SMALL group of Southern senators threaten to filibuster the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill just as a similar group killed the Dyer bill 12 years ago.

They may succeed. But if they do the country should know that their specious pleas in behalf of states' rights or chivalry do not echo the sentiments of the whole South.

Organizations representing some 42,000,000 Americans urge passage of this bill. How much of this support comes from south of the Mason-Dixon line may be judged from its approval by many of Dixie's leading papers.

"Its (the Costigan-Wagner bill's) invasion of states' rights should cause no Southern heartburning," says The Norfolk (Va.) Pilot. "There is no such thing, morally speaking, as a reserved right to deal in our own way with a form of collective murder which our own way has uniformly failed to punish.

"It may be," says The Newport News (Va.) Press, "that the anti-lynching bill will not be adopted by the Congress now in session. But if it is not, and lynchings do not stop, it will be adopted by some other Congress; in fact, must be adopted if the machinery of justice is to function."

"Apparently," says The Macon (Ga.) Telegraph, "the mere threat of the Federal anti-lynching bill has a wholesome effect, and the time has come when even the South would vote for such a bill."

Southern women, too, have been quick to resent Senator Smith's quaint argument that "lynchings are necessary for womanhood's protection." Scores of letters, telegrams and resolutions from Southern women's religious, welfare and club organizations have repudiated the preposterous claim that the South's law is helpless to protect the South's women.

Proponents of this measure claim 59 Senate votes from all over the country and a big majority in the House. Only 20 senators are called irreconcilables. It is neither just nor gallant of them to filibuster against this popular national movement.

Greenville, S. C Piedmont
May 1, 1935

Smith's Warning

IN THE floor of the United States Senate yesterday Ellison D. Smith of South Carolina, debating against the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, said:

> "I, for one, here today declare that if this proposal becomes part and parcel of Democratic doctrine, involving the destruction of state rights and usurpation of local self government, I shall pay no further allegiance to such a party".

That's the kind of talk, Senator Smith, that the Democratic party needs to hear.

Because the South has been faithful and loyal to the party in the past, because the South for decades has been "in the bag" before a political campaign started, does not mean that the South will always continue to be faithful and loyal to a party that rewards its allegiance with a kick in the pants.

The South plays ball with the party; the party must play ball with the South.

When that warning comes from a staunch veteran in southern Democratic leadership like Senator Smith it carries weight and we believe a host of southerners, tried and true Democrats for years welcome it.

Savannah, Ga. Press
April 23, 1935

SHEAR OPINION

THE CHARLESTON NEWS AND COURIER voices a Southern sentiment:

Mark, you Southern Democrats, the Costigan-Wagner "anti-lynching bill" (so they are pleased to call it, however its passage would incite to lynching) is not a Republican measure. It is not introduced by a Republican like Dyer who represented a negro district of St. Louis. Two Democratic senators, Costigan of Colorado and Wagner of New York, sponsor it. "The Democrats" have overwhelming majorities in the Senate and in the House. The President is a Democrat. The office holders in Washington (they are probably twice as many as they were ten years ago) are "Democrats." Yet with this bill aimed straight at the white South, in this Democratic administration, we hear the suggestion that a Southern senator, George, of Georgia, to defeat it may as a last resort "filibuster" against it! * * * Has it come to this, that Southern senators may have to filibuster to stop the passage of an anti-Southern bill introduced and pressed by Democrats in a Congress controlled by Democrats? Why does not Franklin Roosevelt, President, speak out against this measure menacing to the South even if it is not the offspring of an indifference to the convictions of Southern white men that is equivalent to malice? Why does he not denounce it? Why has he so long neglected to say that he will veto it if it be passed? * * * Wade Hampton and B. R. Tillman, opposites as they were, both would have "deserted" a "Democratic" party that failed to kill the Costigan-Wagner bill.

Chester, S. C., Reporter
April 29, 1935

If President Roosevelt is not sponsoring the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, and is not actively supporting it, as has been charged a statement to that effect would sound the death-knell of the measure. Senators Costigan and Wagner are both Democrats, more or less close to the Administration, and the word has gone forth that their efforts have the active backing of the White House.

Richmond, Va., Times-Dispatch
April 30, 1935

Unedifying Spectacle

WHILE this newspaper is without enthusiasm for the COSTIGAN-WAGNER antilynching bill, it takes this opportunity of deploring the methods being used by certain Southern senators to defeat that legislation. SENATOR BAILEY of North Carolina has announced that he is prepared to read "the whole book of Deuteronomy," in a filibuster, if that is necessary to the achievement of his purpose. SENATOR SMITH of South Carolina stated sarcastically on the Senate floor that "this bill is aimed at the Southern States, at our barbarism and lack of civilization."

It is interesting to recall in this connection that there are representative Southerners who favor the bill, despite SENATOR SMITH'S insinuations to the contrary. The Interracial Commission, composed of 50 members from 11 Southern States, unanimously approved the measure at its annual meeting in Atlanta last week.

While we have no particularly strong feeling either for or against this piece of proposed legislation, we feel that such a filibuster as its opponents are organizing is a travesty on the parliamentary process. Imagine a supposed group of statesmen having to sit up for hours, days, and possibly weeks, while Southern senators read books of the Bible, lengthy documents having to do with the most approved mode of exterminating the earwig, and the latest technique for growing horse radishes.

We are aware that filibusters have been resorted to over a long period of time, and that the Senate has been reluctant to limit them, because of a feeling on its part that this might constitute a limitation on freedom of debate. At the opening of the current session, if memory serves, SENATOR GLASS introduced a resolution which would have compelled all senators to speak to the question at issue, but this paper has not been heard of since. Apparently most of the members of the upper branch of our national legislature are reluctant to adopt any such resolution, for fear that some day they may wish to filibuster some projected statute to death.

So the senators resort to such methods whenever they are sufficiently aroused over a pending bill. In the present instance, a Southern bloc appears to be highly excited over the proposed mode of combatting lynching. The red herring of State rights has been dragged forth and dusted off, intersectional animosities are being aroused, and obfuscations of various kinds are being resorted to.

Although we are inclined to wonder whether it would be wise to enact the COSTIGAN-WAGNER bill, our attitude proceeds primarily from doubts as to whether the proposed approach would be effective, and whether the bill's enactment might not serve greatly to intensify interracial animosities in the South. Certainly we are convinced that the bill ought to stand or fall on its merits, rather than on whether SENATOR BAILEY and a group of other diehards can stand the physical strain of reading chapters from the Bible until the proponents of the measure surrender.

Those proponents claim they have 52 certain votes in the Senate, with various other members in doubt. If that claim is justified, the COSTIGAN-WAGNER bill should pass the Senate. If parliamentary government means anything, if the democratic process has any validity, such a conclusion is inescapable.

Atlanta, Ga. Georgian
April 26, 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING LAW SOUGHT BY BODY HERE

The Interracial Commission made public Friday a resolution urging a law providnig for prosecution of lynchers in federal courts, but not mentioning the pending Wagner-Costigan bill, which would make counties in which lynchings occur liable for heavy damages.

The resolution said:

"Hitherto the commission has taken no position relative to federal anti-lynching legislation. We were agreed that the primary responsibility for the prevention and punishment of lynching rested upon state officials and courts and that in the final analysis public opinion was largely the determinnig factor.

"Consequently the commission from its inception has worked continuously along these lines, seeking special anti-lynching legislation in a number of states, urging vigorous preventive measures when lynchings were threatened, asking effective court action against members of mobs and at the same time seeking through all possible avenues of publicity and education to build up a public opinion that would no longer tolerate crimes of this character.

"Lynching records of the past 15 years indicate progress along the line of prevention. Officers generally are more vigilant than formerly in the protection of prisoners, thereby reducing the lynching toll. Meantime intelligent public opinion is practically unanimous in condemnation of mob violence."

It was added, however, that "with rare exceptions attempts at prosecution in lynching cases continue to be futile."

For that reason the commission held that "an appeal to the federal courts in such cases is justified and demanded by the conditons. The commission therefore favors the enactment of federal legislation to this end, in the hope that federal agents and courts would be in better position to act fearlessly and effectively in the prosecution of participants in the crime of lynching."

The annual meetaing of the commission, which brought 50 members from 11 states, was held in the library of Atlanta Universtiy. It adjourned Thursday night.

New officers are: President, Dr. E. McNeill Poteat, pastor of the Pullen Memorial Baptist Church of Raleigh, N. C.; honorary presidents, Dr. M. Ashby Jones and Dr. John Hope, of Atlanta; vice presidents, Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, of Daytona Beach, Fla.; Mrs. W. A. Newell, of Salisbury, N. C., and R. H. King, of Atlanta; executive director, Will W. Alexander, of Atlanta; secretary, Miss Emily Clay, of Atlanta; treasurer, J. Sherrard Kennedy, of Atlanta.

Greenville, S. C. Piedmont
April 29, 1935

Don't Upset It

DECLARING that "local officials almost always failed to prosecute perpetrators of mob violence," the Commission on Interracial Cooperation with headquarters in Atlanta has endorsed the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

Being in sympathy with the fundamental aims of the commission we regret this attitude on its part.

Sometimes local officials do fail, criminally and inexcusably, to prosecute mobsters but it is our observation that local officials more often go after those who stoop to mob violence and that in an increasing percentage of cases they get results.

And dead certain we are that, if local officials can't or won't get mobsters, nobody can or will.

Federal legislation aimed directly at the South could not improve law enforcement in this vital respect. It might have just the opposite effect.

Progress is being made in the fight to stamp out lynchings and it is to be hoped that nothing happens to upset this steady forward march.

Smithfield, N. C. Herald
April 30, 1935

SOUTHERN SENATORS OPPOSE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

A federal statute in regard to lynching in the good year 1935, when the percentage of lynchings is one-tenth person per million seems somewhat belated. In 1892, when lynchings in the United States reached an unprecedented total of 231, such a law might have been warranted as a deterrent. Education and a public opinion against lynching, however, has done more to wipe out this evil than any law would have done.

The Costigan-Wagner bill which claimed the attention of the Senate last week called forth a storm of protest from Southern Senators. Senator Josiah William Bailey was one of the determined foes of the bill, basing his opposition on the fact that States' rights were being invaded.

The bill provides for trial and punishment by Federal Courts of any State or local officer whose neglect of duty leads to the killing of a person by a mob. The bill specifies that three persons would constitute a mob anywhere in the United States.

The opposition resorted to filibuster to prevent a vote on the bill, and the leaders say they are prepared to talk for ten days if necessary.

NEW YORK TIMES
APR 30 1935

SPEED FOR W-POKES.

Time, the inveterate ironist, must be chuckling at the concern of Senator ROBINSON and Senator HARRISON over the Democratic filibuster against the Wagner-Costigan Anti-Lynching Bill. In 1890 filibustering against the Force bill was a sacred Democratic duty. Application of the same method now interferes with the higher Democratic duty to dispose of the Bonus Bill and make way for the measures of the Administration. Time and the rest of us chuckle at the recurring spectacle of Senatorial innocence. The Senate clings to rules that make it easy to tie up its business when the provocation is sufficient. It will consent to no effective system of closure. It encourages in required temporarily to steer around perfe terminable loquacity and irrelevance. an obstacle sure to be encountered little

So precious to corporate vanity and again is a source of happiness to every ups s every member of the august corpora Senator worthy of the traditions of the Un tion is the privilege of "deliberative" chamber. It is another body than any Senat procedure that no substantial change other. Trip as often as it may on its should in it can be hoped for. Some compro own rules it will stick to them. Its admi mise will be patched up. Some tem struggles for acceleration are comic. self-t porary escape out of the muddle will Cold molasses is not easily transformed ror o be found. The mere hours of words into greased lightning. The Senate is about the rules of its own leisurely game.

Lynchings—1935
Legislation Relating to.

5085

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

APR 24 1935

Arguments For Antilynching Bill.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The introduction of the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill in the Senate this week occasioned a blast of Southern oratory, garnished with such phrases as "the sanctity of our homes," "the honor of our wives and daughters," "the integrity of the white race," etc. Many white women of the South, as well as the North, are growing weary of the assertion that lynching is a defense of our homes and virtue.

Lynching is today what it has always been—a weapon to terrorize, degrade and exploit an underprivileged group. Those who condone lynching, whatever may be their stated reasons, are on the side of oppression and lawlessness. A Federal antilynching law would not function exclusively as a punitive measure, but would act as a deterrent to a crime which is a national disgrace.

The rapidly growing sentiment for the Costigan-Wagner bill indicates that Americans in all parts of the country are coming to a realization of the truth. They will not much longer permit sectionalism to retard our progress toward a greater civilization by obstructing Federal legislation with traditional falsehoods.

GERTRUDE B. STONE.
Washington, April 18.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The opposition of Southern Senators to the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill is a disgrace to civilization and must be seen as an inhuman barrier to social progress. That any man or group of men might oppose the bill is inconceivable to one sincerely believing in the social welfare of humanity regardless of race or creed. This opposition resembles Nazi Germany more than the abode of those gentlemen from points south of the Potomac.

Southern Senators do not want the antilynching bill passed because it would remove their best weapon for keeping cheap labor in the mills and on the plantations and make it almost impossible to keep the lower Negro and white classes satisfied with their degraded position.

Senator Smith and Senator George know that it is not a question of State's rights, or of protecting Southern women, but of keeping the present despotic government in the saddle in those most backward States of the continent and these Senators know the majority of Southerners, because of their marginal and submarginal status, are unable to vote or improve conditions, and the women because of the fact they have not received cultural and social emancipation from the bondage of the past, are only able to put out paper protests against existing conditions.

When it is a question of justice and social welfare for the people I consider the question of State's rights trivial and irrelevant. Should one section jeopardize the safety and well-being of a nation by having the privilege to remain lawless and barbarian? If the Southerners believe in State's rights why do they attempt the conversion of savages in foreign lands before they remove the savagery from their own society? If the Christians in the South can lynch and burn and wantonly imprison innocent people for countless "alleged" crimes why can't the men of the jungle have the same right?

Only a person who has lived in the South for a number of years can realize the necessity of passing the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill. To oppose the bill is to admit of class and racial prejudice and to admit that is to deny all claims from the Bourbon Democrats that this is a free democracy. The bill should be a law.

JAMES HARRISON.
Alexandria, Va., April 18.

Roanoke, Va., World News
April 25, 1935

ANOTHER FORCE BILL.

Those familiar with Congressional debates over half a century will find something strikingly familiar in the threatened filibuster over the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill. All that can be said on both sides was said when Henry Cabot Lodge tried to push through Congress his various "Force bills" for Federal control of elections within the States. The issue is much larger than that of lynching, as in Lodge's time, it was much larger than that of elections. It goes to the roots of home rule and the relations of the Federal government to the States.

Right-thinking people deplore the loosely drawn election laws the politicians have forced on us, witnessed by the abuses of the voting by mail statute in Virginia. But they by no means agree that the cure for that situation lies in Federal supervision of State elections.

Right-thinking people deplore lynching, whether it be of white men in California or of Negroes in Mississippi. But they are by no means sure that the cure proposed is not worse than the disease. An aroused public sentiment can demand laws in any of the States that will put a stop to mob violence. Where that aroused public sentiment is lacking, the threat of Federal interference might actually cause more resort to lynching than at present.

Under the pending proposal, the Federal courts would have power to remove any county sheriff or other officer who had failed to take due precautions to prevent such attacks on the law of the States. The confusion of thinking that is involved in any such proposal should be apparent. If the Federal government, through its courts, can remove local officers, the rights of the States will have faded from public view.

Notwithstanding the heat generated by these anti-lynching debates in Congress, the good faith of their proponents is always open to question. The bills are usually offered for political purposes only. When Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, become sponsor of such a proposal, a Negro member of the Republican National Committee remarked that "This flower of New England manhood" held his seat in the Senate of the United States only by reason of the fact that "20,000 journeying Georgians" voted for him in Massachusetts. Senator Harrison, of Mississippi, twitted Lodge on more than one occasion about this speech, but when Lodge came up for re-election the following year, he was even more eager to be known as sponsor of a Federal anti-lynching bill.

Elliott Thurston, veteran Washington correspondent, says the late Knute Nelson, of Minnesota, then chairman of the judiciary committee, asked Senator Borah to take charge of the anti-lynching bill, but Borah declined, saying he was convinced it was hopelessly unconstitutional. Lodge had no such scruples in an election year, when he needed the votes of Southern Negroes who had migrated to Massachusetts. The judiciary committee at that time decided the bill was unconstitutional, but on appeal of Mr. Lodge, enough members reversed themselves to allow the bill to be reported.

The famous filibuster engineered by the late Senator Underwood, of Alabama, followed when Senator Lodge was frankly notified that not a wheel would be turned, that not a lick of business would be done in the Senate until the bill had been withdrawn. And, after Lodge had made sufficient political capital, it was quietly dropped.

According to Mr. Thurston's recollection, the 1922 session saw the best of the long series of debates over proposed force bills. Bitter as it appeared on its face, that debate had been carefully staged in advance. Lodge was to push the bill; Underwood to oppose it, and after this sham battle had gone on for some days, and attracted enough of attention, both sides had agreed in advance that the business of the Senate would be resumed, and the force bill forgotten.

Now the force bill, dressed up as the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, has taken its place on the Senate calendar. Senator Costigan is quite earnestly pressing for its passage. Senators from the Deep South are ready for another filibuster. Senator Borah and other constitutionalists are as sure as they were in 1922 that the proposal to substitute Federal for State control of the work of locally elected officers is plainly unconstitutional. Senator Wagner, one of the patrons and an able lawyer, avoids the issue of constitutionality. His constituents in Harlem want the bill passed.

The sham battle is not expected to last long this time, for the Administration is growing apprehensive over the major items of its program, tied up behind this anti-lynching measure. After Senators who come up for re-election next year have been permitted to make political capital in the manner of Lodge and Underwood, the bill will be quietly laid aside, and the bonus measure substituted as a topic of debate by vote-hungry Senators.

DANVILLE, ILL.
COMMERCIAL NEWS
APR 24 1935

LYNCHING NOT CHIVALRY

The barrage of telegrams and letters received in Washington in support of the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill, the majority from women of the South, should have an important bearing on the successful passage of this measure.

Senator Costigan has denounced lynching as a national evil, rendered more so by the failure of grand juries to return indictments against members of lynching parties when their identity is known.

A telegram received from Mrs. William P. Cornell of Jacksonville, Fla., chairman of the Florida Council of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, is typical of the many. It represents the attitude of 27,000 southern women who repudiate the claim that "lynchings are necessary for womanhood's protection."

"The honor of women is not remotely involved in the overwhelming majority of lynchings," wires a woman from Nashville, Tenn.

Six prominent women of Alabama signed the following telegram: "We Alabama women knowing conditions existing in the South urge Costigan-Wagner Bill be brought to vote and passed. Resent position of some politicians in opposing passage of bill on grounds of protecting southern white women. Prefer legal action to mob violence."

From Nashville, Tenn., came the following statement: "Alleged crimes against women involved in less than sixth of all lynching cases."

Among the many editorials taken from southern newspapers, which Senator Costigan introduced into the Congressional Record is one from the Bristol, Va., Herald-Courier, from which we quote the following paragraph:

"In the first place, to stop crimes against the womanhood of the South would not stop lynching, since mobs frequently put men, and even women, to death who are not guilty of a more serious offense against the law than a misdemeanor, if they are guilty of any offense. And again, the law in Tennessee provides the death penalty for crimes against women and it is therefore not necessary for mobs to presume to punish such crimes."

We may conclude that the women of the South do not want, nor need, mob violence for their protection. There is a sordidness about mob violence that puts human beings to death without trial that is repugnant to women. The records of the past few years would indicate that lynching mobs in the South have assumed a greater menace than the so-called crimes against women ever did.

Residents of the North will be found in favor of a federal anti-lynching measure and it would look as if the intelligent men and women of the South are opposed to this archaic form of chivalry.

[redacted]
HERALD
APR 25 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING

Southern senators are opposing the Costigan Wagner bill which would make lynching a federa offense. The tidewater statesmen are not concerne because the measure may be an infringement on po lice powers delegated to the states by the constitu tion, although this possibly is a valid objection Rather they are defending mob law as it is enforce below the Mason and Dixon line—for the same rea son Kansas senators defend wheat diets, votes.

Under state statutes, lynching now is a felony But when a Negro is the victim and white men are guilty, the statutes are virtually non-operative. I a federal law, however, were on the books, gentle men with tar on their hands might not be able to buy off department of justice officials with a mint julep. This is the rub.

The chivalrous south is operating under the same notions which once fostered the Ku Klux Klan and the Knights of the Camelias. It is the Negroes can be "kept in their place" only through fear and force It has produced what amounts to separate "justice" for the two races, as it has separate schools, train coaches, residential sections, and occupations. Because the south has never seriously tried legal methods of preventing Negro crime it believes none exists Tolerance is increasing but slowly.

The Costigan-Wagner bill would not prevent all lynchings. Yet the Negro, under it, would be less at the mercy of any white man whose enmity he had incurred, and who now is virtually free to use the whip and the rope as he sees fit.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
MORNING POST

APR 26 1935

LYNCHING BAN OPPOSITION.

The section of the country which should be particularly in favor of the passage of anti-lynching legislation is that from which the main opposition to the Costigan-Wagner bill is indicated to come. Where such exhibitions of reversion to barbarism and floutings of the law most frequently occur should be that place from which the strongest appeals for the elimination of the outbreaks should originate. It is true that there have been but few states which have been entirely exempt from lynchings, but it happens that they are exemplified most frequently south of the Mason and Dixon line and often for whole years are confined to that portion of the country.

It happens that the authors of the joint measure now pending in Congress are Democrats, though they hail from Northern states. Yet, the political classification of the sponsors appears not to make Southerners more favorable than would be the case were the proposed legislation to have a Republican origin. Lynchings might be more readily defended, if the absence of them appeared to offer probability that the persons accused would be likely to escape merited punishment. Rarely. if ever is there such a possibility. It is not fear that the full penalty will be evaded that leads to such happenings, but unreasoning rage under the influence of a reversion to barbaric instincts.

If the Southern senators make a determined fight against the measure, as now seems to be their intention, it is improbable that it could be brought to a vote in the Senate, no matter what the House would do. Some years ago a similar anti-lynching bill did pass the House, but died in the Senate. Yet we cannot regard ourselves as governed under the forms of law if such outbreaks develop from time to time.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR

APR 29 1935

The Anti-Lynching Bill

The death of the Costigan-Wagner anti lynching bill in Congress, for which Northern senators are jointly responsible, is predicted by Representative Mitchell of Illinois, the only Negro in Congress. Senators from Southern states have served notice that they will not stand for the measure which makes political subdivisions liable to the heirs of victims of mob violence. It is expected that resort will be had to filibustering to kill the measure as was done with the Dyer bill 13 years ago.

The Southern senators are short-sighted and fail to note what happened after the Dyer bill was killed. After the losing fight then for a federal law a number of states passed legislation providing for severe punishment for officials who fail to prevent lynchings. Some states patterned their laws after that passed years ago by the Ohio Legislature, one of the first in the country to make counties in which lynchings occurred liable to the heirs of victims.

The Illinois representative sees in the present fight a warning of what may yet come in state laws and eventually a federal law which supporters of the present measure believe would prove most effective. Lynchings are decreasing in number, due to an aroused public sentiment against mob rule, a larger sense of responsibility and courage of officers to protect persons held or under sentence for crimes, and the fear of what Congress may do.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
OBSERVER

APR 28 1935

SOUTH AND ANTI-LYNCHING BILL.

It may be politically embarrassing to Southern Senators to be compelled to defeat the COSTIGAN anti-lynching bill now before their body, but it is in evidence that, come what may, they are determined to block the passage of this quite unnecessary legislation.

The merit in this proposed law is difficult to locate and the South is against it not because it is unalterably opposed to having laws erected against its all too common and pernicious habit of indulging in an occasional lynching, but because it sees absolutely nothing more virtuous to this bill than an attempt to take out of the hands of its states a function which they are entirely capable of handling as efficiently as the Federal Government.

Bristol, Va., Herald-Courier
April 28. 1935

Federal Anti-Lynching Law Coming.

Another effort to enact a Federal anti-lynching law apparently is headed for failure The Costigan-Wagner bill now before the Senate has strong support in that body but indications are that the opposition, which at presen is resorting to filibustering tactics, will be able to prevent its passage. The measure would provide severe penalties for local officers for conspiring to turn prisoners over to lynching mobs or for failing to give their prisoners proper protection, and would make counties in which lynchings occur liable for damages to victims of mobs.

Twenty years ago, or even ten years ago, the introduction of an anti-lynching bill in Congress would have been widely resented by the people of the Southern States, where nearly all of the lynchings occur, but there is no great resentment among those people against the pending measure. The Southern people have hoped and expected that their States would solve the lynching problem, that they would in time suppress mob lawlessness, but so little progress has been made in that direction and so little seems to be promised that they are becoming reconciled to the idea of a Federal law against lynching.

Because the American Constitution is violated every time an accused person is put to death without due process of law, the Federal Government would be justified in taking steps to punish mob murders. Unless the States make a better record in dealing with those crimes, and that soon, there doubtless will be a Federal anti-lynching law. For the first time in its seventeen years of history the Interracial Commission, meeting in Atlanta, has just gone on record in favor of such a law.

Lynchings-1935
Legislation Relating to.

5086

LEBANON, PA.
NEWS TIMES

APR 26 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL.

Southern senators generally resent the sectional reflection in the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill on the ability and willingness of their states to enforce their statutes in the face of mob terrorism. Some of these senators personally deplore lynchings even for "the unmentionable crime." Privately they might admit that official laxness is, in many instances, making lynchings possible. But against a bill that would lay heavy fiscal and prison penalties on lax officialdom in the South they are adamant.

The threat of a prolonged filibuster against this measure at a time when the senate is in a legislative jam with the bonus, the banking bill, social securities legislation and other measures yet to be acted upon is a serious thing. It rests upon a condition not a theory. That condition is deeply imbedded sectional pride.

It is beside the question to argue with opponents of the bill that resolute law enforcement by any state will preclude the operation there of an anti-lynching law. Though most of its opponents believe the bill is unconstitutional, and if it became law would be thrown out by the highest court, they are determined that no senate vote shall be taken to discredit their section.

In such an impasse Senator Costigan will be unwise to press his bill. It would invite a filibuster that would run for weeks or months unless the bill were withdrawn. Participating in the filibuster to protect the repute of the South would be found some senators otherwise eager to go along with the administration's program. However meritorious the measure may seem to its supporters in the light of weald surrenders to the mob spirit in many sections of the South, defeat of major legislation at this time is too great a price to pay for a persistence that cannot win in any event.

MANCHESTER, CONN.
HERALD

APR 23 1935

MONKEY-WRENCH

Senator Costigan of Colorado is going to move at the earliest possible moment, so he has served notice, to take up the Costigan-Wagner Anti-lynching bill. That doesn't mean that Senator Costigan imagines he can get his Anti-lynching measure passed, or that he is at all sure of getting a direct vote on it. It doesn't even prove that his Anti-lynching bill is the very apple of his eye, that he is trying to be noble about it in the face of almost certain defeat. What undoubtedly it does mean is that Mr. Costigan wants to make the greatest possible amount of trouble for the Roosevelt administration and could think of no surer way of making it than by bringing up the lynching bill—than which nothing in the imagination of man could possibly make Southern Democrats madder. Making the Southern Democrats in the Senate mad enough to spit cotton, mad enough to want to slaughter Northern Democrats as well as Northern Republicans—and consequently making Northern Democrats just as mad at the Southern Democrats—is precisely what any truly clever Progressive who had made up his mind to spike the administration's program might be expected to do, if he knew how. And Costigan is a Progressive—and he knows how.

To be sure, Costigan rates a Democrat; but first of all he rates a Liberal. He comes from a part of the country where you're not much of a Liberal if you take your fiscal policies from Mr. Morgenthau and the Chase National Bank. He was a pretty good Roosevelt man as long as Roosevelt was a Liberal too. He has never declared himself to be anything else but a pretty good Roosevelt man. But he's going to throw that Anti-lynching bill monkey wrench of his into the machinery of the Roosevelt program. And no good Roosevelt man would do that.

If Costigan has his way he is going to precipitate a fight in the Senate that will be worth going clear across the country to see and hear. He's going to split his party wide open. And he's going to keep it split wide open so long that it be a matter of speculation whether a single one of Mr. Roosevelt's pet "must" measures—even the Security bill which passed the House by such a smashing majority—ever comes out of the Senate alive.

Why should any good Democrat be anxious to turn the present Congress from a smooth running steam roller into a jumox of clashing parts and stalled movement? None would—if he put being a Democrat before everything else. But a Liberal—a Progressive—who had come to the conclusion that he was doing no good by stringing along with the President, he might. And evidently would. And is doing it. Just being a Democrat isn't going to be much of an asset in 1936 if there is nothing better to show for it than an extended NRA, a bank bill putting the whole fiscal structure of the country into the hands of a President who gets his advice from Rockefeller's hired man, the continuation of the AAA crop reduction and pig-killing policy—and the outrageous "Security" bill. It's going to be much better to be a Liberal or a Progressive—certainly in Mr. Costigan's part of the country.

Huey Long isn't the only Democrat in the Senate who would just as soon as not see the whole top-lofty structure of the Roosevelt program fall kerflop into very small pieces. There are quite a few others—Costigan, judging by his background and his principles, being one of them; one out of a considerable number. And two kinds of Republicans share the same desire. Reactionary Republicans who still dream of the old order, and Forward looking Republican like Borah, who can see no good whatever in any of the "must" bills.

Let us not be deceived into believing that the threatening hopeless jam of Senate legislation is the result of ineptitude. It is the result of a growing conviction that it is better for Congress to not legislate at all than to continue in the path of the last two years. That conviction is almost grown up.

Nashville, Tenn. Tennessean
April 22, 1935

The Anti-Lynch Bill.

There are indications that determined effort is to be made to get the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill through Congress at this session and that equally determined effort is to be made to prevent action on it.

Opposition to the bill is not based on sentiment in favor of lynch law, but rather on the conviction that a federal law will not solve the problem any more than state laws have solved it.

It is too much to expect that federal juries will convict members of a lynch mob or officials who fail to give protection to a prisoner under their charge in states where state juries will not vote to convict them.

Even advocates of a federal law usually agree that state laws have minimized lynching and it is our opinion that state laws, because they are more likely to represent local sentiment, are more effective as a deterrent than a federal law would be.

Education and state laws have resulted in an impressive showing in the fight against mob rule. In the past decade the number of lynchings, on the whole, showed a marked decline with a record low in 1932, though there was an increase for 1933, the latest year for which figures are immediately available. Some observers who abhor lynchings are of the opinion that the matter can be better handled through the methods which have already brought about. The present bill is almost identical with the Dyer anti-lynching bill which was introduced in Congress such improvement rather than through the imposi-ly and the result would be a revival of that general and for the Senate to turn its attention to the Presi-tion of a federal law which could have no more sup-disrespect for law and law dent's legislative program, that action on it might port than now exists in the various states for pres-hibition brought about. be speeded.

ent state laws.

The operation of federal prohibition provided anti-lynching bill which was ing would break down similar-ip any idea of the Costigan-Wagner bill's passage d be a revival of that general and for the Senate to turn its attention to the Presi-l law enforcement which pro-dent's legislative program, that action on it might t. be speeded.

the nation with an example of what can happen in 1921 and succeeding sessions. The Dyer bill, whenever efforts are made to enforce federal lawspassed in the House in 1921 by a vote of 231 to 119, in sections where they are not supported by popularwas killed in the Senate by a filibuster of Southern sentiment. The federal dry laws were so widely vio-senators opposed to federal intervention in what lated as to cause a general disrespect for law andhey considered a state problem. The same sort of law enforcement. There is reason to believe a fed-actics now are threatened in the Senate, opponents f the Costigan-Wagner measure claiming they

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
APR 24 1935

Anti-Lynching Fight Due Again In Senate

Ghosts Of Past Haunt Battle, Sometimes Sham, Over Ancient Issue.

By Elliott Thurston.

THOSE who cherish some of the older traditions of the Senate will have an opportunity in the next few days to renew their faith in the permanency of at least one custom in this world of change. The Senate is about to stage another filibuster over what used to be called the "force bill," which reappears currently under the guise of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

This measure has a long and curious history. It used to be promoted annually by gentlemen whose districts were inhabited by a sufficient number of Negro voters to make a difference on election day. And it used to be resisted, passionately, by an even larger number of gentlemen, largely from the Southern States, who talked much as Senator (Cotton Ed) Smith, of South Carolina talked the other day about protecting the womanhood of the South. Often the debate is painful. It touches deep emotions and superstitions.

• • • •

THE year 1922 brought forth what was perhaps the best of the annual battles over the force bills, as a long succession of them—some to govern Southern elections—has been called, beginning even before Civil War days. In 1922 the late Henry Cabot Lodge, of Massachusetts (Back Bay and Nahant) was extremely solicitous about protecting Negro victims (possibly one should say voters) from the atrocity of lynch law—so-called, according to the historians, from one Charles Lynch, a Virginia planter, who seems to have devised a custom in Revolutionary times of stringing up suspected Britishers by the thumbs until they cried, "Liberty forever," or perhaps "Uncle," or some other confession of capitulation.

A hint as to the reason for Senator Lodge's solicitude may be gleaned from a speech once made here by a Negro member of the Republican national committee, who eloquently reminded his audience that this "flower of New England manhood," held his seat in the Senate only by reason of the fact that "20,000 journeying Georgians" paused at the polls in the Bay State to vote for him. Senator Pat Harrison used to derive a certain sadistic pleasure from recalling this speech to the mind of the aristocratic Senator from Massachusetts.

Anyway, Mr. Lodge, who came up for re-election the following year, was more than eager to press for enactment of the Costigan-Wagner bill, then known as the Dyer bill, inasmuch as neither Mr. Costigan nor Mr. Wagner had then reached the Senate and resurrected the measure under their own names. The late Knute Nelson, sturdy old Roman of Minnesota, headed the Judiciary Committee. He asked Senator Borah to take charge of the anti-lynching bill. But Mr. Borah replied that he had studied it thoroughly in some of its previous incarnations and was convinced that it was hopelessly unconstitutional. "I know, but that's why I want you to take charge of it," replied Mr. Nelson. "I want somebody who is familiar with it to take it over."

• • • •

SO hearings were held and the Judiciary Committee concluded unanimously (save for the late Senator Sterling, who reserved decision) that the bill was unconstitutional. Whereat Mr. Lodge, much perturbed, appealed to Mr. Nelson for reconsideration. The Bay State, not to mention others, might fall into the hands of the political enemy unless this bill was favorably reported and pressed by the G. O. P. So Mr. Lodge pleaded piteously. Thereupon Mr. Nelson appealed to the committee, frankly but firmly. And thereupon enough of the members reversed their constitutional convictions to report the measure to the floor.

Then came a filibuster such as will be witnessed in the Senate once more in the next day or so. The late Oscar Underwood, Democratic leader, arose in his place and notified Mr. Lodge and all his cohorts that not a wheel would be turned, not a lick of business would be done in the Senate until the objectionable bill was withdrawn. For several days the oratory raged. The South filibustered, openly and at times ferociously.

Possibly the debate would have gone on longer and been even more bitter but for the fact that Mr. Lodge, in advance, had arranged everything. He was to push the bill. Mr. Undergood was to fight it to the bitter end. After putting on a sham battle long enough to be of political benefit to both sides, they were to drop it and go back to the business before the session. While the battle raged, it seemed very real.

• • • •

SINCE then the anti-lynching bill has not been obtruded that far until this session. But it has once more emerged as the next order of business on the Senate calendar. Mr. Costigan has given notice that he will press for its final passage. The Solid South is again united against it, ready to die filibustering rather than surrender on this elderly issue. Mr. Borah and other constitutionalists are as sure as ever that the measure is unconstitutional. Senator Wagner himself, able lawyer and erstwhile judge, gulps slightly when pressed on the matter of constitutionality. But then, there is Harlem!

Probably the struggle will not last long this time, either. The NRA, social security and other such matters must wait until the filibuster subsides, which will be when the latest proponents of this bill give in. While it lasts the conflict will be warm and especially interesting for antiquarians. It will be strongly reminiscent of so many past days in the Senate. One will have no difficulty in seeing the ghosts of Lodge and Underwood and the other departed Titans fighting again this glorious if sometime sham battle.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
APR 26 1935
THIRTY-TWO PAGES

The Antilynching Bill

Whenever a lynching occurs the nation, not merely a state, bears the odium of it. It is, as Senator Costigan says, a national disgrace. Throughout the world American civilization is measured by the American lynching record. Morally speaking, this is an effective answer to the cry of states' rights now raised again in the United States Senate as the Costigan-Wagner bill is debated.

The judiciary committee of the Senate voted unanimously to report the bill favorably, and that fact has some bearing on the probable constitutionality of it. The committee has a number of able constitutional lawyers. The bill makes a lynching a federal offense, placing heavy penalties on local officers who by negligence or cowardice let mobs seize prisoners and murder them, also enabling the relatives of the victim to obtain damages from the government of the county in which the lynching took place.

Senator Wagner of New York, a Democrat who does not make a fetish of state sovereignty, reminded his colleagues yesterday that there have been 280 lynchings since 1922, when the Senate refused to pass similar legislation on the ground that the states could handle the problem.

Lynching is an American disease of long standing; it may become virulent under circumstances having not the remotest relation to racial antagonisms. The San Jose (Cal.) lynching two years ago, to which the late Gov Rolfe gave his official approval, was the direct result of an atrocious kidnaping crime. It was white, Caucasian and American from beginning to end. Kidnapings in recent years have aroused such intense popular feeling that lynchings soon became the answer to them.

No one could venture to say that lynchings would not occur again and again if the populace almost anywhere becomes frenzied for any cause. The present antilynching bill was inspired by the mob's dance of death in one of the fairest cities of California. If Hauptmann had been acquitted, would New Jersey have been able to protect him from mob vengeance? No one could be sure.

The power of the federal government ought to be mobilized to reinforce the power of the states in stamping out this national evil. The federal government under this bill would never be called upon to act if the states did their duty.

Brooklyn, N. Y. Citizen
APR 22 1935

THE CONGRESSIONAL OUTLOOK

There are conflicting opinions in and outside of Congress with reference to some of the measures advocated by the Federal Administration or by interested groups and the American Federation of Labor.

Continuance of the processing tax on cotton is bitterly opposed by the New England Senatrs and Representatives and by the New England textile mill owners. The American Liberty League is opposed to any continuance of Secretary Wallace's control of great industries as forming in the opinion of the league a dictatorship.

The Harrison Compromise Bonus bill is opposed by the supporters of the Patman bill and by Mr. Curran's National Economy League.

The Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching bill has aroused resentment in the South and Southern Senators threaten a filibuster which would deadlock Congress in case Senator Costigan moves for a vote on his bill. While this anti-lynching bill has the support of the liberal-minded Northerners the South regards it as an interference with a problem which is fundamental in the South and which brooks of no compromise.

In so far as continuance of NRA is concerned while there is opposition from the Republican party and from individual industriss, nonetheless the overwhelming sentiment of industry is in favor of the continuance of the NRA, with modifications made necessary by acknowledged defects.

Altogether the situation is not reassuring for that harmonious cooperation between the President, the Congress and industry, which everyone recognizes is essential if the country is to wholly recover from the depression.

We use the term "wholly" advisedly inasmuch as there is no question that there has been at least 80 per cent of recovery in many sections of the country even though here in the East we are still far from this goal.

The best evidence of the improvement in business activity is the bullish sentiment in the stock market. Wall Street's pessimism is no longer in evidence either in the amount of sales of shares or the quotations. Both shares and quotations have increased and this is accepted in financial circles as proof that the tide has turned and the country is once more facing a prosperous future.

Lynchings-1935
Legislation Relating to.

5087

Miami, Fla. Herald
May 4, 1935

A GOOD FILIBUSTER

A SIX-DAY filibuster in the United States Senate, although the grave and reverend senators would deny that their long continued debate was a filibuster, has relegated the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill to the bottom of the senate calendar, which means that it will, in all probability, not be brought up again this session, if ever.

Sporadically, for more than ten years, there has appeared in congress a proposed bill which would, if it should by any chance become a law, place the enforcement of an anti-lynching law in the hands of the federal government in case of the neglect or refusal of state authorities to prosecute.

Debate on the measure in the senate was conducted in a most able manner by members on both sides of the question, but the opponents of the measure seemed, at all times, to have the better of the argument. Supporters of the proposed law however, seemed to have the votes, if the bill ever came to a final showdown.

Present defeat of the bill was the result of the application of the technical rules of the senate If in the course of the debate a motion to adjourn could be carried, the bill would lose its place on the calendar and a vote on the merits of the bill could not be had until some future and extremely indefinite day. On the other hand, a vote merely to take a recess would continue the d' cussion of the bill, without interruption.

Opponents of the bill, while talking the senate into impatience, frequently submitted motions to adjourn, but were always defeated until last Wednesday, when opponents caught the supporters napping and succeeded in securing an adjournment.

Filibustering may not be the best way to secure the enactment of good laws, but it is sometimes an ever-present help in defeating bad legislation.

The Costigan-Wagner bill was an insult to the Southern states, a violation of the state's right to control its own police power and thoroughly bad. It ought never to be heard from again.

Columbia, Tenn., Daily Herald
May 2, 1935

THE LYNCHING BILL

While the nation began to develope a case of the jitters because Congress was not progressing toward adjournment, the Senate continued inactive for more than a week because a group of Northerners persisted in trying to foist on the South the vicious and palpibly unconstitutional anti-lynching bill.

Southerners, more or less patient in regarding this latest effort of Northern Congressmen as only one more move in the series of "crusades" aimed against the South by people who do not understand conditions here, have been waiting patiently for the proponents of this legislation invading state's rights to give up the fight in view of the determined filibuster of Southern Senators. With patience rapidly warning, they have more recently expected President Roosevelt who from his residence in Georgia should have a better conception of conditions here than some of the strictly Northern self-appointed guardians of the South, to intervene with a view to clearing Senate decks for action on matters tha must be disposed of.

But Southerners were disappointed. The White House did not act, and the Senate dawdled, while feeling between the North and South, joined more closely together than even before in the recent new wave of nationalism, once more began to be evident as the "Meddlesome Matties" of the North pressed their case and boasted that if the issue ever came to a vote they would win, not on merit, but by force of numbers.

Then came a champion for the cause of state's rights and constitutionality—a voice against the arousing of sectional feeling—in the person not of the Democratic leadership of the nation, but of the Republican, Borah.

Senator Borah, while other Republicans remained silent, patting their feet as it were while Northern democrats took the lead in trying to alienate Southern Democrats from their party, could remain silent no longer. In a masterful speech that came yesterday as a surprise to the Senate, he correctly termed the lynching bill both an invasion of state's rights (certainly not becoming the Democratic party, traditional state's rights advocates) and unconstitutional, in setting up Federal control over matters purely within the local police power of the state. His speech turned the tide, caused the iniquitous law intended as a punitive measure against the South to be withdrawn, and allowed the Senate to go on with passage or defeat of important matters to the end that adjournment can be taken for the great good of the nation.

In seeing the anti-lynching bill a major issue when action on recovery measures is badly needed, the nation watched a sorry spectacle—that of one section seeking by force of number to force its viewpoints on another concerning a problem of which it knows little.

The Daily Herald is no advocate of lynching, or of mob law in any form, It has for years taken its stand against lynching, both in general and in specific, both here and abroad, a stand that has caused it at times to lose friends because of adherence to a principle that the law and not the mob should rule.

But The Daily Herald, in company with most thinking Southerners, knows that the Southern states are going forward faster than those of other sections in curbing mob rule, and in gradually abolishing lynchings. And we know too, that the pending bill, besides being an invasion of state's rights, and contrary to the precepts of the American constitution, will have an effect on lynchings exactly opposite to that its proponents claim it will have, if passed. It will engender ill feeling which has been eliminated, as far as the South is concerned, these many years. It will estop all local efforts, to curb the lynch spirit efforts which are gradually becoming more and more effective. It will be a constant effort to every citizen proud of his Southern heritage. It should not pass, and Southern Senators were resolved it should not pass, even if the filibuster was their only weapon until they received Republican aid.

Death to the lynching bill did not come through any aid from Northern Democrats, in high or low places, but from the fair-minded Republicans, under the leadership of Senator Borah.

Union, S. C., Times
April 26, 1935

IT WILL HURT, NOT HELP

The anti-lynching bill now before congress, and one of the authors of which is Senator Wagner of New York, has been denounced by Senator Bailey of North Carolina and Senator Smith of South Carolina.

Periodically that question is brought up and it is one that will always arouse the people of the South, for they feel, and justly too, that it is a direct threat at the South. It is probably true that instead of putting an end to lynch law, it would multiply lynchings. The problem is not a problem of the South alone, of the entire nation, but it can best be met by each individual state. If the anti-lynch law is made a federal law with teeth in it, we predict a vast increase in the number of lynchings.

Governor Talmadge of Georgia, long supported by The Constitution, is now under attacks by that newspaper. Without any profession of exact knowledge in the matter, but from outside observation, we can but feel sympathy for Governor Talmadge, for he must see, as many others see, that we are drifting far afield in the matter of States Rights. Many of us believe that we have unconsciously drifted into socialism and are no longer upholding democracy.

To show that Governor Talmadge is not alone in this belief, you have but to realize what happened at The American Newspaper Publishers Association a day or two ago. The association unanimously approved a resolution of its traffic committee by adopting a resolution which expressed "unalterable" opposition to government ownership of railroads or any other form of transportation. And Bainbridge Colby warned the publishers of federal laws inimical to a free press. He sees great danger to the freedom of the press. He said before the convention:

"As to the trend of legislation affecting newspapers today, there seems to be a feeling that the press of the country constitutes, in a sense, a danger to the successful progress of half-baked theories and ill considered and somewhat hastily proposed reforms."

And this editor unequivocally takes the same view. We go further: We have come to the parting of the ways; we must choose between socialism and democracy. And we are honestly of the opinion that to choose socialism will mean the ultimate loss of about all that makes life worth living.

Knoxville, Tenn., Journal
May 2, 1935

The Costigan-Wagner Bill

The outworn and illogical attitude of some of the Southern Senators in regard to the anti-lynching bill now under disturbing consideration, has made the question, to a certain extent, a confused issue in the public mind.

The act is not opposed solely by those who considered it an insult to the South, as certain bombastic speeches have declared, nor the remedy of the trouble something that concerns a gentleman's honour as independent of outside interference.

It is opposed by people who think the South bears a big proportion of responsibility for the more or less countrywide act of barbarity that we call lynching, and who feel very deeply that this section has never fully met the measure of its responsibility.

Thus many of such people, no less strongly than the hot heads, oppose Federal action as unwise and impractical in the matter of a crime so intimate and local.

Editorial discussion of this position by the New York Times offers a very clear example of the reasoning which ends in opposition to the Costigan-Wagner bill in spite of unqualified horror of the offense against which it is directed, and of unqualified amazement at the type of people who sometimes abet and sometimes condone it.

"Of all forms of lawlessness that have disgraced America in the eyes of the civilized world," says the Times, "that of lynching is undoubtedly the most abominable.

"It is so for the simple reason that other comparable crimes are either the work of demented or depraved individuals or of gangs without the pale of organized society, while your lynching mob usually includes a fair proportion of citizens of the kind normally regarded as respectable.

"It is their betrayal of the state and of their own decency that gives the final hideous touch to the atrocious business."

Yet this paper realizes that the bill now under consideration does raise a question of fundamental government policy.

"In the first place," it reasons, "a lynching is almost invariably a purely local crime.

"In this it differs radically from kidnaping, bank burglary, highway robbery and the like, with their attendant murders, whose perpetrators skip from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. There is not the same excuse to include it in the fast-growing list of offenses to be dealt with by the Federal authorities."

And so the argument goes.

Those opposed to the bill are by no means necessarily insensible to the crime it would seek to eradicate.

Their opposition comes from doubt of its full agreement with the fundamentals of our government.

For a second reason given for opposing so serious a thing as Federal authority in the matter, there is the reminder that the evil of lynching is on the wane and apparently not in need of the drastic handling proposed.

In 1892, according to the figures quoted, there were 255 lynchings.

Last year, there were fifteen.

"The curve, though it may waver a bit from year to year, has shown a marked downward tendency for nearly half a century, indicating very clearly the growing popular revulsion against the crime as well as the effectiveness of local statutes."

Tallahassee, Fla. Democrat
May 2, 1935

Anti-Lynch Bill Irks One Solon

(By The Associated Press)

Florida members of the national congress were urged yesterday by the house of representatives to oppose passage of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

Without a dissenting vote, the house adopted a resolution by Johns of Bradford county declaring "that the state of Florida is amply able to protect and defend the constitutional rights of each and every citizen of the United States of America within its borders and that the proposed bill is a direct encroachment upon state rights and should be defeated."

Urging adoption, Johns declared the pending bill was "a direct insult upon the southern states."

"I want you to vote with me," he said, "and let our United States senate in Washington know we are against this insult."

Charleston, S. C. News & Courier
April 27, 1935

A Sentence From Mr. Roosevelt?

"Senator Byrnes, of South Carolina, said: 'Lynching is murder. There are laws which cover murder. The whole thing should be left to the states and not to the federal government. I imagine the other Southern senators feel the same way.' Senator Byrnes said he would vote against the bill. Of course he will.

Senator Smith, of South Carolina, denounced the bill. Senator Reynolds, of North Carolina, said he "thought he would vote against it, because he did not like the principle of penalizing counties where a lynching takes place."

Senator Bailey, of North Carolina, said: "This bill is not going to pass; we'll fight it out if it takes all summer."

It is the anti-Southern bill under discussion; a bill introduced by Senator Wagner, Democrat, of New York city, and Senator Costigan, "Liberal" or "Progressive," Democrat, of Denver, Colorado.

This bill would transfer lynching cases to federal courts and penalize counties in which they occur in damages ranging from $2,000 to $10,000. It is the federal court feature that is dangerous.

This is a bill of the pattern with which the South has been harassed, by Republicans, since 1865. Three or four years ago it was the "Dyer bill," Mr. Dyer having represented a negro district of the city of St. Louis. He was defeated, and Democratic senators, take up his fight, against the Southern white people.

There stand SOUTHERN senators, Byrnes, Smith, Bailey, George, Reynolds, with their backs to the wall.

Where stands Franklin D. Roosevelt, president, leader of the national Democratic party, on the anti-Southern bill?

Does not Senator Byrnes, by necessary implication, make clear that the bill is anti-Southern when he declares that SOUTHERN senators are against it?

Is or is not the national Democratic administration anti-Southern in respect of this measure?

One sentence, "I shall veto the Costigan-Wagner bill if it be passed," from President Roosevelt, Democrat, would kill it dead as Hector.

Charleston, S. C. News & Courier
May 3, 1935

When Money Talks!

Let us not deceive ourselves. That the Roosevelt administration turns against the South, for practical purposes, when the so-called anti-lynching bill hangs in the balance, will not cause the South to turn against it, and the Roseveltians well know it. There is this day but one issue, and that issue is money. As long as the Washington administration shall appoint tens of thousands of persons to office in the South and distribute some hundreds of millions in Southern states, though the total sum be a pittance in contrast to the sums sent to Northern states, the Southern politicians and great numbers of Southern people will support it and they will denounce all people who do not as traitors to "Democracy." Most of those same senators, who were afraid to oppose the Costigan-Wagner bill, will continue to support the New Dealers who wrote it and pressed it. It is a matter of money, of offices, favors, public buildings, parks, roads, dams, forestry reservations, federal hospitals.

It is not unlikely that the Roosevelt administration could at this time advocate admission of negroes to Democratic primaries, could now and then appoint a "good negro" to a federal office in the South, as the Republicans formerly did, without incurring serious danger of losing Southern state support. When an administration has five billions (five thousand millions) of dollars to distribute, it is well nigh all powerful. No Roman emperor ever had as much money wherewith indirectly he might gain the friendship of the majority of the citizenry.

Savannah, Ga. Press
April 26, 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

The appearance of the anti-lynching bill yesterday gave rise to a heated passage in the Senate of the United States.

The bill provided for imposing penalties upon public officers who allowed mobs to put prisoners to death and also set up damages against a county in which violence occurred. The author of the bill claimed that national wrongs required national remedies but from every Southern state notice sprang up that such a measure would give rise to streams of oratory and possibly to filibuster.

Since the days of Senator Pou of Maryland Southern senators and representatives have been opposed to national treatment on the subject. They claim that this would be an interference with the sovereignty of the states. This feeling has probably been increased by the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court declaring in effect that cases decided where negroes were not upon the convicting juries were probable grounds for a reversal of conviction. A prominent citizen of Georgia called upon the people to know whether any verdict in a case where a negro was arraigned for attacking a white woman should be set aside unless a negro happened to be upon the jury or unless negroes were allowed to sit upon juries in that particular state.

Calling up the anti-lynching bill in the Senate yesterday had the effect of clearing the chamber except that the Southern senators stood on guard and watched the proceedings with the keenest interest.

It is evident that the further intrusion of national law and national courts into lynchings, not reduce them.

Lynchings have declined from 231 in 1892 to a total of only 15 in 1934. The tendency is definitely away from them and local officers are doing more effective work than ever in preventing mob action. The viewpoint of the people, in a word, is changing.

It is to be hoped that this improvement will be permitted to continue undisturbed.

Greenville, S. C. Piedmont
May 1, 1935

Fewer Lynchings

LYNCHING, Senator Byrnes declares on the Senate floor, "is murder, violating the law of God and of man". He would do all in his power to stamp it out.

And he believes, as we do, that passage of the Costigan-Wagner

Lynchings—1935
Legislation Relating to

5888

Bristol, Va., Herald-Courier
May 2, 1935

The Surest Lynching Preventive.

Senator Glass, opposing the anti-lynching bill now before the Senate, quoted the late President Coolidge as saying that if the States did not more vigorously assert their rights the Federal Government would invade them and take them away. "And that," the Virginia Senator added, "is what is happening in this bill."

It would be interesting to know what State right the pending anti-lynching bill would invade. If it is the right to prevent mob murders, or to find and punish those who commit these crimes, that is a right which the States seldom exercise. They seem jealous of it only when a Federal anti-lynching law is proposed.

Looking at the question from another angle, the Federal Constitution provides that no person shall be deprived of life without due process of law. That provision is violated every time a lynching occurs. Indeed, mobs often interfere directly with the due process of law by seizing their victims from the hands of its officers. Should this provision of the Constitution be regarded as a dead letter?

There was an attempted lynching at Shelbyville, Tennessee, some time ago. It was averted when the local authorities asked Governor McAlister for troops and the troops were sent. Four of the would-be lynchers were killed when the mob clashed with the troops in a defiant and determined effort to invade the courthouse and take a prisoner from the very presence of Judge and jury and kill him.

This newspaper has cordially commended Governor McAlister and the local authorities of Shelbyville for the stern measures taken by them to uphold the law in this instance. But has any member of that mob, which later ran amuck and burned the county courthouse, been apprehended and brought to account? If so, the fact has escaped notice. Drastic steps may be taken to prevent lynchings, but as long as mobsters feel that they risk no penalty for their crimes lynchings will continue to be perpetrated.

There is a growing sentiment in the South for a Federal anti-lynching law, not because the prospect of such a statute is pleasing but because under it lynchers would be hunted down and haled to court and sent to prison. And that is the surest preventive of lynching.

Orangeburg, S. C., Democrat
May 2, 1935

The Anti-Lynch Law.

The United States Senate is considering the enactment of a federal law which is directed against lynching. Southern senators are fighting the enactment of the measure.

We question very seriously the wisdom of a federal law on this subject. Sentiment against lynching has been increasing in the South and influential voices of white leaders have been raised to discourage such lawlessness by members of their own race. Progress has been made in creating a southern sentiment against allowing mobs to take the law in their own hands.

This anti-lynching sentiment in the South will not be developed by a federal bill passed by congressmen from other states, interested mainly from the angle the South will be peaceably promoted only by allowing the people of the South to adjust themselves. Interference from other states will not increase the security of the Negro in the South nor cooperate with the thoughtful, intelligent, and progressive white leadership usually seeking to amelioniate undesirable conditions and promote the welfare of the Negro.

In all critical discussions of lynching the assumption is that lynching occurs only on the South and that Negroes are the only victims of lawless murder by gangs. This is, of course, a fallacy. However, in lynching statistics mob murders in the North are not usually considered, unless the victim happens to be a Negro. The elimination of lynching, the Southern acts of violence, has been gradually going on and numerous occasions occur in which officers of the law protect guilty individuals from illegal vengeance.

Bessemer, Ala., Advertiser
April 26, 1935

Anti-Lynching Bill Will Open Way To Strife And Suffering

Southern states that resent attempts to have the federal government punish towns where lynching occurs and to arrest and imprison members of mobs, could well look to improvement in their judicial systems that permit delay in punishing or disposing of cases involving statutory offenses. Mob violence is a form of public dissapproval of the method that permits technical delay, and its seems to us this could be remedied in our own courts in some way.

Mob violence is on the wane. The South has handled the race problem in a manner impossible in other sections of the country. We have but to point to the race riots at New York and Chicago to prove this. Public hangings in California and in states north of Mason-Dixon line point to the conclusion that it is not confined to this section. But reasonably swift justice through regularly appointed court channels at home is the answer.

Knoxville, Tenn. News Sentinel
May 2, 1935

So This Is Democracy

A LARGE majority in Congress wants to enact a Federal anti-lynching law. A large majority of the citizens of the country favor such a law. This has been so for many years. Then why isn't there a law?

Since this is a democracy in which Congress is elected by popular majorities and in which Congress itself acts by majority rule, how could the Senate yesterday throw out the anti-lynching bill and prevent majority rule?

Well, it seems that ours is a democracy in text books and Fourth of July orations but not in the Senate. There, periodically, it is possible to rule by minority dictatorship. The method is not the one of stuffing the ballot box, or of kidnaping or terrorizing the majority, so that the minority can palm itself off as the majority. The method is much simpler. The minority merely decrees that there shall be no vote at all. This is achieved under the rule of unlimited debate by which the minority talks a measure to death. It forces the majority to turn to other emergency legislation acceptable to the mi-

WHILE congratulating the Southern senators on the effectiveness of their dictatorship, we venture to raise this question for their consideration: is it wise from their point of view, to kick democracy in the face quite so publicly at this particular time?

Granting that they have got away with it for many years, hasn't there been a recent change in the public temper which makes this sort of thing somewhat dangerous?

Wouldn't it have been wiser from their point of view, for instance, to give the Negro lynch victim the nominal protection of Federal law and then nullified the law as they nullify the Negro's constitu-

WE ARE interested in this questi cause we understand that these rn senators are very fearful of the f radicalism, especially among N the radicals are said to be telling t roes and the poor white share-cr nd mill hands of the South that dem
s a fake, that there is no such th epresentative government in this that democracy is only camoufla dictatorship by their enemies.
Aren't those radical agitators just enough to prove this point in the of ignorant Negroes and whites by

Anyway it may be a matter worth think ing about while these Southern senator are patting themselves on the back, secur in their dictatorship—secure for the mo ment.

Birmingham, Ala., Age-Herald
May 3, 1935

Sidetracked

The Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill has been sidetracked in the Senate following an extended filibuster by Southern senators. Russell Kent writes from Washington that doubt is now expressed that the bill again will be brought before the Senate during this Congress.

The test came on a motion to adjourn, the effect of which was to displace from its calendar position Senator Costigan's move to take up the anti-lynching measure. Adjournment carried by a vote of 48 to 32.

This action, of course, can in no sense be construed as a condonation of the barbaric outrage against which the Costigan-Wagner bill is directed. Most opponents of that legislation vied with its champions in denunciation of lynching.

Their opposition was based on the contentions that the bill was an unconstitutional invasion of state's rights and would be ineffective in achieving its purpose.

Senators Black and Bankhead, of Alabama, according to Mr. Kent, formed the spearhead of attack. Senator Borah, coming to their assistance, was credited with finally breaking the deadlock.

"If we can pass such legislation as this," the Idahoan exclaimed, "and have it sustained by the Supreme Court, then we have utterly annihilated all state sovereignty. We have broken down state lines completely.

"Moreover, this bill, aside from the constitutional question, will not do the work required. I do not regard the bill as sectional. I do not think the South should so regard it. I do not think it will accomplish anything. It will not stop lynching."

Senator Wagner replied that he believes the bill is constitutional and that there is a constitutional mandate to carry out the constitutional provisions by the appropriate legislation.

"The federal government," he said, "must see that equal protection of the law is accorded to all citizens. It is our duty to enact legislation to that end and the bill is proposed on that theory."

So ardent is The Age-Herald's desire to see an end of lynching throughout the United States that it is extremely sympathetic to sincere efforts in that direction. But it cannot believe that the Costigan-Wagner bill would get at the root of the evil.

Only an overwhelming and united public opinion can, in the last analysis, be an assurance against the outbreak of mob violence. No law can of itself create such a powerful sentiment, especially when it is widely regarded as striking at principles that are incalculably important in our form of government.

On the contrary, an ill-advised law might arouse resentment and divisions of opinions that would raise problems almost as formidable and far-reaching as lynching.

The theory of affording an equal protection of the law by federal intervention, if established as contemplated in the Costigan-Wagner measure, might be extended to cover many conditions over which, this paper believes, the customary state control should be maintained.

For example, Senator Black argued that the bill would cover strike disorders.

The pressures are strong and many to look to the centralized power of federal government for the correction of various forms of evil. Fervor to wipe out evils, however, must not blind us to the dangers inherent in yielding to sweeping surrenders of local governmental responsibilities and rights.

While the Costigan-Wagner bill probably will not come up again in this Congress, the fight for it has emphasized the demand for greater safeguards against lynching and that demand will not be downed. Whenever public opinion or public officials manifest the lack of a strong and active determination to prevent mob murder, the demand for federal intervention will be strengthened.

The way to avoid such an invasion of state sovereignty is by the establishment, through a militant public opinion and fearless local officials, of the indisputable sovereignty of the state over the mob. The building of a controlling public opinion in this respect is a slow and frequently discouraging business, but progress has been made and the effort must go vigorously onward.

Sanford, Fla. Herald
May 4, 1935

Well, the anti-lynching bill was killed. County taxpayers need no longer fear that if a lynching should occur in their county they would be taxed in order to pay ten thousand dollars to the family of their victim. They will continue to deal with the lynching problem as they have in the past, and if they make as much progress as they have in the last 15 or 20 years, the time will soon come when lynchings will be practically unknown.

Huntsville, Ala., Times
April 26, 1935

The Anti-Lynch Bill

Southern senators have been waging a quiet filibuster most of this week, and will continue it until early next week, when the bonus bill comes up, against the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

There are probably enough votes to pass the obnoxious measure in the Senate, if it could ever be brought to a ballot.

This vicious bill is aimed primarily at the South.

While the purpose, which the Colorado and New York senators, its authors, hope to accomplish—the stamping out of lynching—is entirely laudable, the wrongs that it would do would far outweigh its benefits.

In brief, the bill would impose a fine of $2,000 to $10,000 upon any county in which a lynching occurred—whether of a white man or a black man—and would invest the federal government with power to collect it.

Furthermore, it would empower federal authorities to come into a county and institute criminal proceedings, then prosecute alleged members of a mob.

The first provision seeks to indict and hold financially responsible the entire population of a county—good citizens as well as bad—for the lawless actions of a few irresponsible scalawags; to indict a whole community for the sins of a few.

That is not right.

It is not just.

It will not deter mobsters from wreaking their vengeance upon some miscreant who has committed a heinous crime.

It simply penalizes those persons of means for the illegal deeds of those who, in most cases, are without property.

Federal prosecution of mobsters also is a very direct invasion of a state's rights.

Granting that local authorities sometimes are not as diligent as they ought to be in bringing to bar those who engage in a lynching, is the federal government justified, on the other hand, in trampling under foot the rights of the states, guaranteed by the Constitution, and supplanting these local authorities in criminal prosecution of mob members?

Lynchings are decreasing in the South.

Sentiment is growing for punishment of lynchers.

It is becoming possible to get a jury of white men to convict one or more of their own race for the mobbing of a negro. A case in point occurred only last year, just across the Tennessee line near Tullahoma, where a jury gave long prison terms to several white men for the wanton murder of a negro.

This sentiment for law enforcement can be fostered and encouraged, until the stigma of mob lynchings can be virtually wiped out.

For the federal government now to intrude into a state matter, and arbitrarily to penalize and prosecute lynching cases, would simply result in doing of a wrong while trying to cure another wrong.

Columbia, S. C. State
May 3, 1935

LYNCHING BILL SHOWS SOUTHERN BLOC IS STRONG

What Did Costigan and Wagner Hope to Achieve by Effort to Force Action in Face of Practically Impregnable Line-up?—Threat to Organized Labor Ignored by Labor Lobby.

BY KIRKE SIMPSON,
Associated Press Staff Writer.

Southern solidarity in the senate on any moot question means a virtual veto on that particular legislation. There are enough Southern votes, even leaving out so-called border states such as Maryland, to block action utterly. Even the modest senate cloture rule, adopted with so much hesitation, could not be invoked against so substantial a minority.

That being true, exactly what Senators Costigan and Wagner as authors of the anti-lynching bill thought to profit by endeavoring to force consideration of the measure in the senate is not easy to puzzle out. They were on notice by a large and seasoned group of senate long-distance talkers that the bill not only could not pass but would not be permitted to reach a parliamentary roll call vote. Yet Costigan forced the issue. Why?

Motives Unguessed.

Frankly, the bystander does not know. There is nothing about the public records of either sponsor of the bill to disclose motives. Immediate personal campaign exigencies hardly can be involved. Wagner is not up for election again until 1938. Being foreign-born, the senate or a governorship is the constitutional limit of his political ambitions.

Costigan is up next year; but why should anti-lynching legislation have a special appeal in Colorado? Lynch law has not ruled in that state much unless it was back in frontier days. If Senator Costigan dreams of party promotion antagonizing the Democracy of the solid South would not seem a reasonable way of trying to make those dreams come true.

And, if some of their Southern colleagues are right about what sort of a door the Costigan-Wagner bill would open to federal direct intervention in the police affairs of the states(the two authors of the measure were taking special risks. They are acclaimed as the leading senate friends of organized labor, of labor generally. They share that with Black of Alabama, father of the 30-hour week bill. And Black told them:

"The bill as it is written would be the greatest weapon to opponents of organized labor extended to them since the beginning of this government. In the hands of their enemies it could strike them (labor organizations) to death. I cannot understand why the great labor organizations have failed to see what this bill would do to them."

The answer to Black's mystification is easy. If organized labor's legislative watch dogs in Washington had the least notion that so drastic a measure of federal intervention in state police activities could pass, they would have rallied to see to it beyond question that it had no anti-strike or anti-picketing flavor.

They would not have been content for a moment to rest on the constitutional argument against it if it, as Black contended, would more than undo all that has been accomplished in the way of anti-injunction legislation to curb federal court activities in labor strikes. Organized labor's seeming indifference to any such bill can be viewed only as due to a certainty that it could not be enacted anyhow—so whyb other with it?

Lynchings - 1935
Legislation Relating to.

5089

Charleston. S. C. News & Courier
April 20, 1935

In This New Republic

No one can demonstrate by syllogistic rules a connection between the United States supreme court's decision that negroes must serve on Southern juries, the Costigan anti-lynching bill and perhaps other measures relating to the "race question," with the New Deal, but the connection exists.

All these are emanations from the same atmosphere.

Southern people who can think are aware of the impossibility of carrying on the United States as a single state without demolishing the system, legal or extra-legal, by which states having huge negro masses in their populations have managed to get along the last sixty years.

The general program of the New Deal may be sound, The News and Courier may be hopelessly wrong in its judgments, the multiplication table as well as the constitution may be out of date for all we know, and still it is certain that this New Deal cannot succeed without tearing down the political structure of the American republic and replacing it with another.

This new government, governing from Washington and reaching down into the private affairs of every state, county, town, controlling and regimenting them, would necessarily, in time, destroy the separating barriers between the races in the South. The process has begun.

Mark, we are not now protesting against this program. If we South Carolinians shall surrender to Washington it will do with us as it will. The News and Courier is doing no more than to tell its readers what is going on.

We suppose that among the South Carolinians are persons who believe that the good people from Chicago and New York, welfare workers, philanthropists, economists, philosophers, uplifters, now running the Washington machine, have understanding of the way Southerners feel and act about their problems—but there are some pretty dumb people in South Carolina.

The Southerners are being led into a trap. The trap is baited.

Charleston, S. C. News & Courier
April 20, 1935

Leave Us to Ourselves!

The Costigan "anti-lynching bill" should be killed, Senator Smith does well to oppose it vigorously, but he was not discreet to allude to the "protection of southern womanhood" in relation with it—as if lynching were excusable in circumstances.

To say by implication that Southerners cannot protect womanhood by laws enacted and enforced by the several Southern states may be interpreted as argument for the measure which Senator Smith opposes.

If the existing laws and criminal procedure of South Carolinians are not sufficiently severe and swift to deal adequately with any species of crime it is within the power of the state to amend them, that the state should do, but, really, we South Carolinians cannot expect to be allowed a special privilege to deal with any crime in manner unknown to law.

The News and Courier would advocate a federal anti-lynching law rather than excuse lynching for any offense whatsoever. To do that would be to confess incapacity of the state to establish and maintain a civilization.

The News and Courier opposes the Costigan bill because it believes that the states are better prepared and disposed to make and enforce the criminal laws than the United States is. The Costigan bill is just another attack on the reserved rights of the states having its origin in busybody bent of persons who fancy themselves morally superior to their neighbors.

Mr. Costigan hails from Colorado, where no negroes are lynched, for which an explanation is that it contains few negroes—not that their presence in great numbers would justify it.

If it be the duty of the federal government to take notice of violent crimes, to assume that the Americans acting as one state instead of forty-eight should take over punishment of offences, Colorado should be one of the first states for it to operate upon. Anyone who has read even a little of the mob demonstrations and outrages, in its mining districts the last fifty years, must conclude that however it be capable of carrying on a republican form of government it is still in the primary school of civilization as compared with the civilization of South Carolina, which, despite pretenses, is still crude and raw.

In truth, most of these American states are pots to refrain from calling a kettle black—and still there would be more reason for despair in South Carolina if it were placed under the tutelage of states like Colorado.

The Costigan bill, and measures of similar tenor, if enacted, would promote lynching in the South.

Wilson, N. C., Times
April 19, 1935

SENATOR WILL TELL 'EM.

When the time comes to discuss the anti-lynching bill Senator Bailey, Washington informs, will review in detail the record of North Carolina with respect to the negro, "not only with respect to lynchings, of which the state has had less than other southern states," but also with respect to education and other matters. The senator will also point out, as we are further informed, that "North Carolina will have to make little if any adjustment of present practices" because of the recent decision of the Supreme court in the Alabama case as the exclusion of negroes from jury service. "Negroes are now occasionally drawn for jury service in a number of North Carolina counties," the senator will say.

In other words Senator Bailey is going to show 'em that grand old North Carolina has done so well by the colored race that we deserve the thanks of the race and should have acknowledgment from Congress instead of Congress passing a law intended to call mobs to account when the state fails and refuses to do anything about mob murders. As a faithful chronicler of North Carolina events Senator Bailey will not fail of course to give complete details of the failure to do anything about a mob killing in our state not so long ago. The governor instructed the solicitor to do something and the solicitor made a pass at it but nobody would talk and that was all. That should convince the senate that North Carolina doesn't need any anti-lynching bill. If passed it should apply to states that have more lynchings. We don't have enough to call for outside interference, which is in violation of states right, anyhow.—Greensboro News.

Greenwood, S. C. Index-Journal
April 23, 1935

LYNCHING BILL AGAIN

It cannot be put too strongly or said too often that opposition to the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill now in the Senate of the United States is not advocacy of lynching.

Lynching is more than a public evil; it is a menace to government itself.

For when it is found that men can take the law in their own hands and that the courts can be defied and ignored then no protection of law exists.

And from one thing the step to another is easy and inviting and in time the courts will have become things of no effect.

Opposition to the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching law is that it means, finally, the death of State authority. If the States are to have their full police power taken over by the Federal government then the States have no longer any excuse for their existence.

That is the goal of many people in this country, we know. And it is a goal which is wholly undesirable to us and should be to all true lovers of our country.

The Costigan-Wagner bill is of concern to every State, North, East South and West. It is not sectional in scope.

But in every State, be it remembered, this bill would make any move by a "mob" of three or more persons directed against the life or property of another a Federal offense. And trial would follow in a Federal court.

The bill has little danger of enactment surely.

NEW YORK SUN
MAY 4 1935

Shelved for a Time.

The filibuster against the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill was successful. The bill itself has been sidetracked and the Senate has proceeded to take up other items on its crowded calendar. The final vote on adjournment, which was a test of the fate of the bill shows that the opposition to the bill did not come exclusively from Southern Senators. Among those who voted for adjournment and the shelving of the bill were ADAMS of Colorado, ASHURST of Arizona, BORAH of Idaho, BROWN of New Hampshire, BULOW of South Dakota, CLARK of Missouri, COUZENS of Michigan, DIETERICH of Illinois, DUFFY of Wisconsin, FRAZIER of North Dakota, HATCH of New Mexico, HAYDEN of Arizona, KING of Utah, LEWIS of Illinois, LONERGAN of Connecticut, McGILL of Kansas, MURRAY of Montana, NORRIS of Nebraska, O'MAHONEY of Wyoming, PITTMAN of Nevada, POPE of Idaho, SHIPSTEAD of Minnesota, THOMAS of Utah, TRUMAN of Missouri and WHEELER of Montana. In other words, twenty-five of the forty-eight Senators who voted to postpone consideration of the bill for an indefinite period are from North or West or Middle [redacted].

Some of those who voted for adjournment may have done so from a conviction that it would be a waste of time to keep the bill before the Senate as long as a determined minority was ready to talk it to death. Senator BORAH, for one of the non-Southern Senators represented on this roll call, was frank to express his conviction that the Costigan-Wagner bill was unconstitutional and that it differed in that respect no whit from the Dyer bill, which the Senator opposed on the same ground. When the Senate considered the Dyer bill a majority of the Judiciary Committee held the bill to be unconstitutional and the other members of the committee, without committing themselves on this point, reserved the right to be heard on this subject later. Not one member asserted the constitutionality of the measure.

One odd difference between the Dyer bill and the Costigan-Wagner bill is that the former fixed the number of persons constituting a mob at five or more, whereas the bill just considered fixes it at three or more. If the Dyer bill had been enacted it would not have served to reach the lawless activities of a group of four, just as if the Costigan-Wagner bill had been enacted it would not have served to reach two lynchers who acted in concert.

With the humane intentions of the sponsors of this legislation there was no quarrel. Some opponents of the bill offered arguments, not to defend lynching, but to oppose Federal intervention in the problem. Of much more significance and weight were such arguments as Senator BORAH made, addressed to the doubtful constitutionality of the measure. The doubts which were raised in 1922 and have been raised each time the issue has been brought before Congress do not down, yet the mere presentation of the issue to Congress must accomplish some good in arousing public opinion and in education of the public will against lynching. The figures on lynching, showing a consistent decline in the past thirty or forty years, must reflect the influence of education and of public opinion. Morally, one lynching in a year is as reprehensible as fifty, yet the continued progress in the local solution of this problem must serve to appease disappointment, wherever it exists, over the fate of the Costigan-Wagner bill.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
APR 24 1935

Sen. Smith Chided for Opposition to Anti-Lynch Measure

Editor, The News:

I TOTALLY disagree with Sen Smith on his antagonistic attitude toward the Wagner-Costigan Federal anti-lynch bill.

It is a pity that men like Sen Smith are given the political powe to help determine the peace and good will of our country. It is almos preposterous to think that any clear thinking, true American would in any way condone such an atrociou crime as lynching.

That this bill is an insult to the South is a fallacy. I sincerely believe that the intelligent people o the South are in favor of that sor of legislation. LOUIS BERRY.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER CITIZEN
APR 27 1935

THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL.

Senator Costigan made an attempt Wednesday to secure consideration of his anti-lynching bill. Failing to secure unanimous consent for a vote on the question whether it should be taken up, he delivered a speech in support of his measure. This the opposition was ready enough to allow and indeed was willing to prolong the discussion by interposing questions from time to time. In view of the large amount of work the Senate has to do, the more time can be taken in argument before the bill is technically under consideration, the more likely it is that other business will eventually crowd it out.

On several other occasions, bills affecting home rule in the South have been filibustered against with the aid of the time limit on the second session of Congress. Under the Lame Duck amendment, there is no short session, but the Washington summer remains unchanged. Even Senator Costigan himself might not be so anxious for the success of his anti-lynching program that he would be willing to remain through July for the sake of putting it through. It may be suspected also that there is not unbounded enthusiasm among those Democrats who would probably support the bill if it should come to a vote. For some of them it would not be politically advisable to vote against it, but most northern Democrats are not at all anxious to push legislation which is so bitterly opposed by their southern colleagues.

A filibuster like some which have been worked in the past will therefore not be necessary, one may guess. There are reasons which will appeal to many who favor such legislation in itself why it should give place this session to matters of administration policy. The president himself might conceivably use his influence in a quiet way to have the bill sidetracked if consideration of it were slowing up the progress of his own measures. Then of course there are many senators who are genuinely desirous of giving these the precedence and would co-operate with the southern members for reasons of their own.

Something, however, might depend on the record of the South for the next month or two. An outbreak of lynchings might spur the Senate to action, but so far this year conditions have not been abnormally bad and, over a term of years, it must be admitted that progress is being made. Possibly the constant threat of federal legislation is fully as effective in the fight against this evil as the law itself would be, if it should be enacted.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
MAY 2 1935

SO THIS IS DEMOCRACY

A LARGE majority in Congress wants to enact a Federal anti-lynching law. A large majority of the citizens favor such law. This has been so for many years.

Then why isn't there a law? Since this is a democracy, in which Congress is elected by popular majorities and in which Congress itself acts by majority rule, how could the Senate yesterday throw out the anti-lynching bill and prevent majority rule?

Well, it seems that ours is a democracy in text books and Fourth of July orations but not in the Senate. There, periodically, it is possible to rule by minority dictatorship.

The method is not the one of stuffing the ballot box, or of kidnaping or terrorizing the majority, so that the minority can palm itself off as the majority. The method is much simpler. The minority merely decrees that there shall be no vote at all. This is achieved under the rule of unlimited debate by which the minority talks a measure to death. It forces the majority to turn to other legislation acceptable to the minority dictators.

While saluting the Southern Senators on the effectiveness of their dictatorship, we venture to raise this question for their consideration: Is it wise, from their point of view to kick democracy in the face quite so publicly at this particular time?

Granting that they have got away with it for many years, hasn't there been a recent change in the public temper which makes this sort of thing somewhat dangerous?

We are interested in this question because we understand that these Southern Senators are very fearful of the spread of radicalism, especially among Negroes. The radicals are said to be telling the Negroes and the poor white share-croppers and mill hands of the South that democracy is a fake, that there is no such thing as representative government in this country, that democracy is only camouflage for dictatorship by their enemies.

Aren't those radical agitators just mean enough to prove this point in the minds of ignorant Negroes and whites by citing the dictatorship of those few Southern Senators?

NASHVILLE, TENN.
BANNER
APR 28 1935

Topics of the Day

UP TO THE STATES

Senator Costigan is resolved to force consideration of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill at an early date without regard for the bitter opposition of certain Southern Senators and threats of a filibuster. His persistence is ill-advised in spite of the obvious weakness of some of the arguments advanced against the bill.

Last week when notice was given that a motion to make the bill unfinished business would soon be made, Senator Smith, of South California, rose to denounce the measure as a reflection upon the South and to defend lynching as a means of preserving the "sanctity of the fireside." If lynching were in fact a sectional evil and if the Southern States were as powerless to protect their citizens against outrageous assaults as Senator Smith assumes, it would be difficult to take a strong stand against federal intervention. Such, however, is not the case. Senator Smith entirely ignored the effective arguments against a federal anti-lynching law which were presented most cogently by Senator George, of Georgia. The latter recognizes that lynching is a national, not a sectional problem, but he objects to federal legislation because he believes that it would retard the progress already made toward eradication of a form of crime for which the states should assume responsibility.

The Scottsboro cases have shown how extremely difficult it is to secure an unprejudiced hearing for Negroes accused of rape. But these cases have also proved that forces are at work to insure justice to such individuals, in addition to protecting them against advocates of lynch law. The manner in which the Governor of Alabama acquiesced in the decision of the United States Supreme Court that Negroes may not be systematically excluded from serving as jurors, shows that there is no lack of courageous leadership in the South. Gov. Graves' attitude holds out a promise that justice will be administered more impartially in the future, with less racial discrimination.

The Federal Government could not provide adequate protection against lynching or other community crimes, unless local laws and local leadership supplied the necessary support for law enforcement. On the other hand, wherever local sentiment is awake to the evil consequences of mob law, federal intervention becomes superfluous. The crime of lynching is not an outgrowth of ineradicable sectional and racial prejudices. It is primarily the result of lax administration of state laws and consequent absence of a public sentiment strongly condemnatory of those who take the law into their own hands.—Washington Post.

Lynchings—1935
Legislation Relating to

5090

FILIBUSTER BALKS EFFORT TO SPEED ROOSEVELT BILLS

Southerners Keep Senate Floor Again All Day in Fight on Anti-Lynching Measure.

4-30-35

IMPASSE MAY END TODAY

But Many Days of Talking Is Still a Prospect—House Has Its Decks Clear.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—President Roosevelt's legislative speed order enunciated in his radio "fireside talk" last night to the people had a gloomy reaction in Congress today. The most important measures of the President's program are still blocked behind a Senate filibuster over the Costigan-Wagner Anti-lynching Bill.

Speaker Byrnes today pledged the fullest cooperation in speeding up the President's "must" program, suggesting that the House could be counted upon to complete it by June 10 or 15, but the situation in the Senate caused the Democratic leader, Senator Robinson, to predict a session continuing until late July.

"It will be necessary for the Senate to speed up its work if the program made clear in the President's radio speech is carried out during the present session," he said.

"The extension of the NRA, the Utility Holding Company Bill, the various measures relating to transportation and the Social Security Bill pertain to subjects that are controversial, and I do not see how a conclusion of this session can be reached before a date late in July unless better cooperation for dealing with measures can be arranged."

Parley Fails to Find Plan.

Senator Robinson had attended a meeting of the Democratic steering committee, where a futile effort was made to perfect a plan for halting the anti-lynching filibuster. Subsequently the Senate spent five and one-half hours listening to speeches by Senators Black and Byrnes, delivered with the announced intention of preventing a vote on Senator Costigan's motion to take up the anti-lynching bill.

Following these speeches another unsuccessful effort was made to have the Senate adjourn overnight in order that Senator Costigan's motion might die, allowing the leadership to bring up the Harrison bonus compromise.

The adjournment motion, made by Senator Robinson, was voted down, 38 to 37, whereupon leaders of the group of "willful" Southerners filibustering against the Costigan motion announced they would resume their talking tomorrow and continue it until the Senate was ready to proceed with other matters.

Blocked by this filibuster barrier are the NRA extension and social security bills, named by the President at the head of his "must" list.

After today's vote changes and absentees were noted and Senate leaders expressed a belief that the filibuster would be terminated tomorrow. This, they felt, could be accomplished only by the Senate's adjourning and thus avoiding the Costigan motion.

A check up on the filibusterers showed that they would not compromise or make any "deal," but were prepared—some of them were anxious—to continue their speech-making indefinitely.

"We are not filibustering yet," one of them said tonight. "We have not spoken one word that did not pertain to the merits of the bill. We are prepared to speak ten days longer on the proposal itself, then we'll start the real filibuster."

They proposed to pursue their tactics until pressure for the bonus bill, next in line to be called up becomes so great that the Senate will lay aside the Costigan motion. Leaders thought that such pressure had been registered this afternoon when Senator Robinson suddenly made his motion to adjourn. A poll had indicated that an adjournment motion could be carried by four votes, but at the roll-call the four counted upon were not in the chamber.

Senator Byrnes will resume his speech tomorrow. He spoke for two and one-half hours today. He took the floor after Senator Black had finished an address of more than three hours.

Leaders feared tonight that the Southerners might want to continue the anti-lynching discussion even after the bonus or some other measure was taken up.

Others Readty to Take Floor.

Southern members ready to take the floor could be seen throughout the Chamber today, many of them with documents piled high on their desks.

Sentaors George, Russell, Glass, Smith, Trammell, Bilho, Bankhead and Fletcher are all reported eager to speak, and Senators Bailey and Connally, who led off the filibuster, are said to be ready to resume at any time.

Senator Black declared that the pending measure should be called a "Bill to Increase the Crime of Lynching."

He predicted that its passage would excite mobs instead of suppress them and that it would classify as lynchings violence in labor or other disputes.

Senator Byrnes argued that passage of the bill would retard the "fine progress" in race relations made in the South for the last few years. He asked Senator Wagner to return to New York and try to work out a State anti-lynching statute, such as they have in South Carolina, before offering a Federal bill.

Senator Glass broke into the debate to challenge authors of the bill to show where their States had done anything to outlaw lynching. As he did so he thumped on an open book, shouting:

"There's Virginia's law. Where's yours?"

LYNCHBURG, VA.
ADVANCE
APR 24 1935

THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

No matter if it is argued that lynching is a national and not a sectional problem, the anti-lynching bill now before the Senate is really aimed at the southern States. For a number of years there has been a movement in Congress to make lynching a federal offense and those behind the movement have been invariably concerned about lawless incidents south of the Mason-Dixon line, rather than mob lawlessness elsewhere.

Commenting on the Costigan-Wagner measure, Senator Byrnes makes this pertinent remark:

"Lynching is murder. There are laws which cover murder. The whole thing should be left to the States and not the federal government. I imagine the other southern Senators feel the same way."

Of course, lynching is murder just as are many other methods of killing persons murder. For instance, in some of the northern States the fatal race riots that break out at intervals is just as much murder as is lynching but so far as we can learn the proposed federal legislation does not include race riots killings in the same category as lynching. But there is no more reason to punish a county in which a lynching occurs than it is to punish a county in which race rioting results in slayings. Again we remark, the whole measure is aimed at one section of the country.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
APR 22 1935

Says Smith Doesn't Speak for the Real South on Lynch Bill

Editor, The News:

THE COSTIGAN-WAGNER anti-lynching bill is not a "reflection on the South" as Sen. Smith of South Carolina maintains. If I know anything as a result of having lived for several years in the South, I contend that the intelligent and cultured southerners, of whom there are many, are thoroly disgusted with the crass brutality of lynching.

It is only the lowest, most ignorant and degraded specimens, who under mob hysteria and the leadership of some half-wit, participate in these orgies. From what I have heard, the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynch bill has the endorsement of the most enlightened portion of southerners.

Sen. Smith trots out all those time-worn shibboleths about "We gotta defend the virtue of our women," etc. That is an insult to the good women of the South. Time and again they have protested and tried to prevent these lynchings.

Sen. Smith is behind the times. He does not represent the new and better and more humane South. Many southerners, including southern congressmen, are supporting this bill. There are two Souths: the old, feudal, and fake chivalrous and the real, honest, and modern South. Sen. Smith is speaking for the old, not for the new.

JEFFERSONIAN.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
APR 29 1935

NOT DIXIE'S VOICE

A SMALL group of Southern Senators threaten to filibuster the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill just as a similar group killed the Dyer bill 12 years ago.

They may succeed. But if they do the country should know that their specious pleas in behalf of states' rights or chivalry do not echo the sentiments of the whole South.

Organizations representing some 42,000,000 Americans urge passage of this bill. How much of this support comes from south of the Mason-Dixon line may be judged from its approval by many of Dixie's leading papers.

"Its (the Costigan-Wagner bill's) invasion of states' rights should cause no Southern heartburning," says the Norfolk (Va.) Pilot. "There is no such thing, morally speaking, as a reserved right to deal in our own way with a form of collective murder which our own way has uniformly failed to punish."

"It may be," says the Newport News (Va.) Press, "that the anti-lynching bill will not be adopted by the Congress now in session. But if it is not, and lynchings do not stop, it will be adopted by some other Congress; in fact, must be adopted if the machinery of justice is to function."

"Apparently," says the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph, "the mere threat of the Federal anti-lynching bill has a wholesome effect, and the time has come when even the South would vote for such a bill."

Southern women, too, have been quick to resent Senator Smith's quaint argument that "lynchings are necessary for womanhood's protection." Scores of letters, telegrams and resolutions from Southern women's religious, welfare and club organizations have repudiated the preposterous claim that the South's law is helpless to protect the South's women.

Proponents of this measure claim 59 Senate votes from all over the country and a big majority in the House. Only 20 Senators are called irreconcilables. It is neither just nor gallant of them to filibuster against this popular national movement.

Anti-Lynch Bill Should Be Considered On Its Merits

The Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bil should be considered on its merits. Th law as it is or the mob on the record i has made in several thousand instances—that is the decision. This country has had experience with both, and for that reason it has a sound basis for its judgment, with no need for mere oratory or prognostication.

If the law is the better, the measure should pass and no hastily assembled tribunals made up of passion-filled blood-thirsty lynchers should supercede the courts.

On the other hand if the mob is the better protector of the public, the opponents of an anti-lynching bill should not only persist in their position but they should extend its beneficent activities.

There are defects in the courts. The United States Supreme court declared only a few days ago that the judicial system of Alabama, and inferential of every southern state, was not in accordance with the Constitution. Down in North Carolina several officials are facing trial for having inflicted cruel and unusual punishment on persons after conviction, a thing forbidden by the same Constitution. With the law and its officers thus displaying the human tendency to err, the mobocrats should see if their pet system also is not faulty in some particular. If it is perfect—the only faultless work of man—then let that South Carolina senator who says he will defeat the Costigan-Wagner bill at any cost, propose the rule of the mob as a substitute for the present agencies, and write authority for it on the statutes! He ought not be ashamed to sponsor lynching out and out!

There should be a set of rules for lynchers to go by, setting forth when the victim is to be hanged, or shot and then hanged, when burned after death or burned while alive. Better still how mutilating is to be done, real American heraldic designs to be inscribed with suitable ceremonies. Lynching, if the better system for overcoming crime, offers wonderful possibilities.

At present lynching is practiced almost wholly against Negroes. If it has proven better in their case than regular trial in the courts and punishment by their officers, it is most certainly the logical weapon when the same crimes are committed by whites. Or do the proponents of lynching hold that a blond complexion lessens the gravity of misdeeds?

Husbands and wives in this country are killing each other every day. Gangsters invade crowded neighborhoods with machine guns. Kidnapers flourish. Thievery from bank wrecking to house breaking is a recognized industry with established lanes through which the loot is disposed of. Bootlegging with all its bloody obbligato is a social sidelight. Last week a young college man, son of a justice of the supreme court, took his father and mother out into the woods and killed them. Dementia praecox, dementia Americana or plain cussedness that was a crime!

There are even cases of rape! But being white these criminals have a trial in court! No outraged public sentiment uses a school house to be a funeral pyre for them. A curious multitude sat for days in plain sight of Bruno Hauptmann with no disposition to imitate Sherman, Texas, by burning a court house to snuff out his life. Kidnapers have been caught who did their victims to death, yet even in the California lynching there was no mutilation in reprisal, such as Florida inflicted on a Negro.

The swiftness with which a mob forms in certain states when a Negro is accused of crime, is more hysteria than any real revulsion against crime, a breakdown of the moral and mental fibre of the community of which we, if we were spokesman for the lynchers, would be too ashamed to defend.

The case against lynching stands on proven ground. Whether an anti-mob law makes Kansas what it is, or Kansas being what it is frowns upon the mob, the Sunflower state presents a civilization that all the lynching states must envy.

LYNCHING

Newspaper accounts of the Senate's action on the Wagner-Costigan bill, termed by its proponents as a law to wipe out lynching, were misleading.

In the first place Southern Senators did not conduct a filibuster, at least not in the sense that filibusters are normally conducted. Senator Bailey, of South Carolina, did not carry out his threat to read "the whole Book of Deuteronomy," nor did any other Senators resort to reading extraneous matter at length.

What the Senators intent on halting a further invasion of State's sovereignty did, as a reading of the Congressional Record will show, was to attempt to defeat the bill on its merits.

Senators Bankhead and Black of Alabama, played a conspicuous part in the debate of the Wagner-Costigan bill, the former holding the floor for several days. Senator Bankhead, furthermore, yielded the floor temporarily, when requested, to permit the backers of the bill to present their side whenever they chose. Both held their ground gallantly.

Credit for breaking the deadlock has been given to Senator Borah who in his forceful manner assailed the bill on constitutional grounds. However, the opposition to the bill had previously stated that it was unconstitutional a number of times. Due to Senator Borah's standing as a liberal and his reputation on constitutional questions his attitude was probably responsible for breaking down the Wagner-Costigan forces.

Did anyone ever hear the final outcome of the "is she, ain't she" controversy over Mae West?

It is unfortunate that the strength of a majority of those who abhor lynching was wasted on the Wagner-Costigan bill. It could have been used to greater advantage along other lines.

The theory that an evil can be eradicated by simply passing a Federal law against it is one that plays too important a part in American thought today. This was amply demonstrated by the failure of the Eighteenth Amendment which was the result of the concerted efforts of the prohibitionists over a period of years. With the ratification of the amendment the prohibitionists for 14 years forgot completely to teach temperance, and the break-down of their temple followed. The passage of a Federal law aimed at lynching might have met with the same results.

The decline in lynching in the past generation should serve to demonstrate that a Federal law was not necessary. Lynching has declined to a point where in the last two-year period there were only 22 murders of this kind.

At present lynching is looked upon by all thinking people as one of the most infamous crimes of civilization. Yet our Puritan ancestors once burned witches far more frequently than suspected criminals are lynched today.

No Federal law was necessary to stop witch-burning. There was a change in public opinion, a change in the hearts and minds of men.

Apart from the fact that the Wagner-Costigan bill would have been a rank invasion of State's rights, it would have had no influence in curbing lynching. The occurrence in Shelbyville, Tenn., in which the county courthouse was destroyed by mob violence, should be adequate proof that mob spirit halts at no cost in its reckless spirit of vengeance. The destruction of the courthouse cost the citizens of the county many times more than a Federal fine of $10,000 as provided by the Wagner-Costigan bill would have.

Two plausible methods of eradicating lynching have been advanced. One, advanced by H. L. Mencken, to provide brass bands for all communities in which lynchings were liable to occur; the other, for the people to elect sheriffs willing to shoot to protect prisoners.

All the time and energy wasted in behalf of the Wagner-Costigan bill would have been ample to provide the first. The second is the responsibility of citizens. Neither can ever be brought about by Federal law.

Lynchings - 1935
Legislation Relating to

5091

GREENVILLE, S. C.
NEWS

APR 21 1935

KILLING THEIR OWN CASE

Members of Congress from the southern states will not perform a constructive service for their section if they attempt to fight the Costigan federal anti-lynching law on the ground that there is justification, in any circumstances, for mob violence.

The News and Courier, consistently vigorous opponent of any and all measures which would give the federal government more authority over state affairs, asserts that it would "advocate a federal anti-lynch law rather than excuse lynching for any offense whatsoever." To do that would, it says, be to confess incapacity of the state to establish and maintain a civilization.

And we agree with that thought. The only sound ground for opposition to these measures to invoke federal governmental authority and police efforts to punish lynchers is that the state itself is capable of performing that police duty adequately. Lynching is a crime and it must be so regarded if we are to maintain a civilized judicial procedure. And if the states will not act vigorously to that end, there is provided reason for the invocation of federal authority.

Members of Congress who are suggesting by their argument that there are occasions where lynch law, or mob rule, is justified, are killing their own case. They may filibuster against the bill and kill it temporarily by that means, but the sentiment of the country will eventually assert itself and demand that if the states will not act effectively to punish lynchers the federal government should step in and endeavor to do so.

We cannot condone lynching, anywhere or in any circumstances. Southern members of Congress who attempt to suggest that there is excuse for lynchings and use that argument against the adoption of federal laws on the subject will only strengthen the argument of the other side. For in making such an argument they are tacitly conceding that their states are condoning acts of mob violence. And any such admission is calculated to arouse renewed support for federal punitive efforts.

WASHINGTON, D. C
POST

APR 22 1935

Up To The States.

Senator Costigan is resolved to force consideration of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill at an early date without regard for the bitter opposition of certain Southern Senators and threats of a filibuster. His persistence is ill-advised in spite of the obvious weakness of some of the arguments advanced against the bill.

Last week when notice was given that a motion to make the bill unfinished business would soon be made, Senator Smith, of South Carolina, rose to denounce the measure as a reflection upon the South and to defend lynching as a means of preserving the "sanctity of the fireside." If lynching were in fact a sectional evil and if the Southern States were as powerless to protect their citizens against outrageous assaults as Senator Smith assumes, it would be difficult to take a strong stand against Federal intervention. Such, however, is not the case. Senator Smith entirely ignored the effective arguments against a Federal anti-lynching law which were presented most cogently by Senator George, of Georgia. The latter recognizes that lynching is a national, not a sectional problem, but he objects to Federal legislation because he believes that it would retard the progress already made toward eradication of a form of crime for which the States should assume responsibility.

The Scottsboro cases have shown how extremely difficult it is to secure an unprejudiced hearing for Negroes accused of rape. But these cases have also proved that forces are at work to insure justice to such individuals, in addition to protecting them against advocates of lynch law. The manner in which the Governor of Alabama acquiesced in the decision of the United States Supreme Court that Negroes may not be systematically excluded from serving as jurors, shows that there is no lack of courageous leadership in the South. Gov. Graves' attitude holds out a promise that justice will be administered more impartially in the future, with less racial discrimination.

The Federal Government could not provide adequate protection against lynching or other community crimes, unless local laws and local leadership supplied the necessary support for law enforcement. On the other hand, wherever local sentiment is awake to the evil consequences of mob law, federal intervention becomes superfluous. The crime of lynching is not an outgrowth of ineradicable sectional and racial prejudices. It is primarily the result of lax administration of State laws and consequent absence of a public sentiment strongly condemnatory of those who take the law into their own hands.

ROCKY MOUNT, N. C
TELEGRAM

APR 23 1935

UP TO THE STATES

Senator Costigan is resolved to force consideration of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill at an early date without regard for the bitter oppositon of certain southern senators and threats of a filibuster. His persistence is ill-advised in spite of the obvious weakness of some of the arguments advanced against the bill.

Last week when notice was given that a motion to make the bill unfinished business would soon be made, Senator Smith, of South Carolina, rose to denounce the measure as a reflection upon the South and to defend lynching as a means of preserving the "sanctity of the fireside." If lynching were in fact a sectional evil and if the southern states were as powerless to protect their citizens against outrageous assaults as Senator Smith assumes, it would be difficult to take a strong stand against Federal intervention. Such, however, is not the case. Senator Smith entirely ignored the effective arguments against a Federal anti-lynching law which were presented most cogently by Senator George, of Georgia. The latter recognizes that lynching is a national, not aa sectional problem, but he objects to Federal legislation because he believes that it would retard the progress already made toward eradication of a form of crime for which the states should assume responsibility.

The Scottsboro cases have shown how extremely difficult it is to secure an unprejudiced hearing for Negroes accused of rape. But these cases have also proved that forces are at work to insure justice to such individuals, in addition to protecting them against advocates of lynch law. The manner in which the governor of Alabama acquiesced in the decision of the United States supreme court that Negroes may not be systematically excluded from serving as jurors, shows that there is no lack of courageous leadership in the south. Gov. Graves' attitude holds out a promise that justice will be administered more impartially in the future, with less racial discrimination.

The Federal government could not provide adequate protection against lynching or other community crimes, unless local laws and local leadership supplied the necessary support for law enforcement. On the other hand, wherever local sentiment is awake to the evil consequences of mob law, federal intervention becomes superfluous. The crime of lynching is not an outgrowth of ineradicable sectional and racial prejudices. It is primarily the result of lax administration of state laws and consequent absence of a public sentiment strongly condemnatory of those who take the law into their own hands.—Washington Post.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA.
PROGRESS

APR 19 1935

Purity and Crime

Talking against the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill, Senator Smith of South Carolina said: "This bill is a reflection on the South. There are some crimes without the law. I resent this attempt to pass a Federal law to vindicate a justified act without the law. The virtue of woman is something not to be despoiled by Federal law. Nothing is more dear than the purity of womanhood and the Federal government should not say a violator of it should not pay a just penalty."

By "vindicate," we suppose the good senator means "stigmatize," but leaving incorrect English aside, is speech could have been written by a Northerner as a burlesque of present day Southern statesmen. It is really discouraging to find such inane twaddle being spoken er for or against the bill should be an issue that is of very genuine importance to the South.

The bill itself is nothing more than an ultimatum to the South to the effect that the rest of the country is weary of its outbreaks of mob violence and vengeful overthrow of orderly government, and its refusal to give the accused any of the rights of self-vindication which the constitution guarantees him.

Any statesman who speaks eith-

NOBLE COSTIGAN-WAGNER FIGHT

Colored Americans take pride in doffing their hats to Senators Costigan and Wagner in appreciation of the brilliant fight now being waged by these stalwart citizens to banish lynching from the shores of this nation forever.

Because of the crying necessity for a Federal lynch law with teeth in it; because the good name of this nation must not be allowed any longer to trail in the slime of cowardly officially aided and abetted mob murder, stenchy political duplicity, treachery, trickery, bigotry and open hypocrisy, this newspaper joins with the millions of decent Americans of both races in demanding for the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching measure a square deal.

It is now a certainty that this bill, with its embodiment of highly necessary provisions against mob violence and murder is heading for stiff opposition in the upper house of Congress.

Enemies of the measure, mostly from the chivalrous? South are already on record as having banded themselves together purposely to kill the bill.

Theirs is a fixed determination to stand arrogantly astride the path of the social progress of our boasted democracy; perpetuate the loathsome system of exterminating defenseless citizens like veritable rats via the savage route of barbarous, ignorant and blood-sucking rabble elements.

Lynch law, its southern advocates contest, is necessary to protect the virtue of white women.

But is this not a a vicious lie, and a damnable one at that? of course of American people know it.

But there is much truth in the common allegation that colored men often have been lynched in the South for such crimes actually committed by white men camauflaged as black cnes.

Surely the Senate should know something about about this hellish state of things right here under the very nose of the Star Spangled Banner.

If that body knows nothing of this traditional American disgrace it should be apprised of it Now! by Senators Costigan and Wagner.

To do so would be to discharge a great service to society as well as to the nation.

To millions of fair-minded citizens everywhere opposition in the Senate to this anti-lynching measure is humiliating to the nation as a whole.

The country is in urgent need of just such a law to protect innocent citizens from wanton persecution.

Pressure should be brought on Congress to place its stamp of approval on the Costigan and Wagner anti-lynch measure.

The Anti-Mob Filibuster

ENACTMENT of a federal anti-lynching law during the present session of Congress appears wholly unlikely. Even the most hopeful supporters of the Costigan-Wagner bill will admit the correctness of that statement, now that the Senate has ended its six-day filibuster and turned to the bonus question.

Negroes, who have furnished the majority of more than 5,000 persons executed without process of law in this country during the past half-century, should not feel discouraged. The fight for a federal anti-lynching law has not been lost. Monumental struggles of a proscribed people seeking justice and full citizenship are not won in a day. They continue until victory is won.

Already we are able to perceive definite good results of the 1935 battle to outlaw mob murder. Organizations representing 40,000,000 Americans have gone on record as being in favor of the Costigan-Wagner bill. Social security legislation affecting the future of 122,000,000 American people has been held in abeyance while the world watched a historical drama marred by our national custom of dodging. The President practiced the time-honored rite of evasion also. American people who love justice (and there are millions of them) will not forget. They will rise again and demand that our national legislature remove the blot of lynching and purge our country's honor.

As for Negroes as a group, we have had the opportunity to pick out the friends and enemies of the right to impartial and orderly judicial procedure. From the bigots and prejudice-ridden members of Congress from the South we expected nothing. On the other hand, we have the record of the Republicans Borah of Idaho, Couzens of Michigan, Frazier of North Dakota, Norris of Nebraska, and Shipstead, Farmer-Laborite of Minnesota, who voted to pass up consideration of the anti-lynching bill.

Too, we may consider similar action of the Democrats Brown of New Hampshire, Clark of Missouri, Lonergan of Connecticut, McGill of Kansas, Dietrich and Lewis of Illinois.

The votes of these Democrats and Republicans could have thwarted the move to adjourn. It is true that a few of these men could have been motivated by the desire to first consider social security legislation. However, it is imperative that they be noted and checked by every Negro voter regardless of party affiliation. Negro citizens should receive wholly convincing explanations from these men or utilize every facility they possess in defeating them when these gentlemen ask for the mandate of the electorate again.

Press Fight for Negro Right

WITHIN a few hours of a conference of Senate leaders with President Roosevelt at the White House on Wednesday, the motion of Senator Costigan that the Senate take up the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill was shunted aside by the tricky maneuver of the Senate "adjourning" and "reconvening" within fifteen minutes.

By their six-day fiillibuster against the bill, the Southern leaders of Roosevelt's party showed their determination to prevent any discussion on the Senate floor on lynching and the hideous persecution and oppression of the Negro people.

The Costigan-Wagner bill omits the death sentence for lynchers. It also contains provisions that could be used against any assembly held to protest the very crime against which it is supposedly directed. It was certainly not intended as an effective curb on lynching. The Southern lynch lords had no real fear of the bill. What evoked their rage was the idea that Congress should be asked to make even a formal condemnation of lynching. In their opposition to conceding even this gesture, so humbly requested by the reformists, the Southern bosses were fully supported by President Roosevelt, as well as by Senator Borah and other Republican Party leaders.

This playing by the white rulers with the rights and lives of Negroes once more emphasizes that only mass pressure of Negro and white workers and intellectuals, actively united in a militant fight for Negro rights, can force enactment and enforcement of legislation protecting the constitutional rights of the Negro people.

Senate Filibuster Blocks All Work

Southerners Finally Agree To Recess Without Vote On Whether To Adjourn

WASHINGTON, April 30.—(AP)—Wounds of the War Between the States were reopened and a warm tribute paid a former Republican president by a Democrat in the Senate today as the southern filibuster against the anti-lynching bill encompassed its sixth day.

Behind the determined blockade lay the bonus bill which has to be disposed of before any of the administration's major measures are taken up. All of these, however, are still in committees.

Democratic leaders made no effort to adjourn the Senate tonight, but consented to a recess which left the anti-lynching measure the pending order of business.

A fourth effort to adjourn is expected tomorrow, however, on the strength of a switch or two from Republican ranks. Senator Frazier, of North Dakota, was understood to be ready to go over.

Yesterday's try at adjournment lost by a single vote.

Senator Smith (D), South Carolina, a director of the filibuster campaign, today recalled the trying Civil War Reconstruction days in his State after Senator McCarran (D), Nevada, had asserted he was for the bill if it promised to solve the lynching problems which he claimed the South had not yet met but could meet.

Jumping to his feet, the Carolinian shouted that McCarran was "speaking so because he knows nothing about the gethsemane through which our people passed."

He recalled the post-war period when the Legislature of South Carolina was composed of "ex-slaves guarded by the bayonets of the Federal Government" and added it was a period measured in "corruption."

"But be it said to the everlasting credit of blacks and whites alike that they have solved their problems—with due respect, one to another," he said.

Just before a parliamentary wrangle over a series of quorum calls sought by the filibuster group to give its speakers breathing spells, 77-year-old Carter Glass (D), Virginia, interrupted a speech by Senator Bankhead (D), Alabama, to pay a tribute to the late President Coolidge for warning against further invasion of States' right by the Federal Government.

McCarran cited the Scottsboro case as an illustration "that the South can handle this situation." He said it was to the credit of the South that the negroes involved in that case were given jury trials.

Lynchings-1935
Legislation Relating to.

5092

LET THEM FILIBUSTER!

When Senator Smith of South Carolina and Senator George of Georgia attacked the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill on the floor of the Upper House one day last week, the occasion marked the beginning of an organized campaign of opposition waged by Southern Federal legislators to encompass the defeat of the measure by fair means or foul. Whether by conducting a filibuster for days to the detriment of important relief, agricultural and social legislation, or by wasting the time of taxpayers in idle chatter and oceans of irrelevant verbiage for the Congressional Record matters little. What do opponents of the measure care about governmental aid for the homeless, destitute and sick of the nation when their sectional prejudices are aflame?

Senator Smith gave an inkling of the fallacious line of argument to be advanced. He described the bill as a reflection upon the South, insisting that Southern womanhood must be protected, the implication being that the only way to protect Southern womanhood is by the mob.

Proponents of the Costigan-Wagner Bill can easily show that the number of Negroes lynched for rape is negligible; and if they were courageous and frank enough to go further, they could prove that every Negro caught in a compromising position is not guilty of criminal assault, as charged. It is obvious that hundreds of educated, Christian white women of the Southland who urge the passage of a measure by Congress to stamp out mob law do not agree with Senator Smith.

While considerable bunk is being dispensed during the filibuster, perhaps it would be a capital idea for Senators favoring the bill to make public some interesting facts on race relations in the South relative to Negro womanhood; for when Senator Smith or any of his colleagues prate about Southern womanhood they are alluding to the Caucasian only. Statistics giving the population of octoroons and quadroons in South Carolina and other States in that section should be interesting, if not startling.

Down in Senator Smith's commonwealth when laws were passed defining what constituted a person of color, the legislature had to be extremely careful in determining just how much Negro blood one must possess for fear of making it embarrassing for many South Carolina families. For years there has been too much sham, deceit and misrepresentation about social intimacies between white and colored people in the South. In the interest of truth, both Caucasian and Negro womanhood, and in justice to Negro manhood, advocates of the Wagner-Costigan Anti-Lynching Bill should avail themselves of the golden opportunity to have spread upon the records and put into public print facts and figures which prove to the world the untenable and inconsistent attitude maintained by those who work themselves into a frenzy about white womanhood, but who care nothing and say nothing about womanhood in general.

Maybe the filibuster planned by Southern Senators will prove a blessing in disguise.

FILIBUSTER THREAT ON LYNCHING BILL HANGS OVER SENATE

House Speed on Social Security Offset by Stand of Southerners.

THEY AIM TO BLOCK VOTE

If Costigan Insists on Bringing Up Bill the President's Program Will Be Delayed.

BONUS HEARING SET TODAY

House Sentiment Is Against Harrison Compromise and May Bring Deadlock.

By TURNER CATLEDGE.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Sectional bitterness over the subject of lynching, dormant in Congress for nearly thirteen years, appeared tonight as a formidable threat to immediate progress on President Roosevelt's legislative program.

Because of the situation in the Senate, where Senator Costigan has given notice that he will move at the earliest possible moment to take up the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill, administration leaders had practically despaired of making use of the decisive House victory on the Social Security Bill to further dispel the legislative jam.

Instead of going sliding through on the momentum furnished by the favorable House vote of 372 to 33, the Social Security measure will be sent now to the Senate Finance Committee, where it must take its place behind bills for extending the NRA and settling the veterans' bonus, which may find themselves blocked this week by the impending squabble in the Senate proper over the anti-lynching proposal.

As if this were not worry enough for the leadership, Senator Long has widely advertised his intention of taking the floor, probably tomorrow, to air his troubles with Secretary Ickes.

Congressional helmsmen have been slow, therefore, in making plans for the coming week. No important New Deal measure is scheduled for consideration in either house, as no one responsible for the conduct of such legislation is sure of his ground.

Filibuster Is Threatened.

Their prime hope is that Senator Costigan may not go through with his announced intention of moving to take up the anti-lynching measure. If he persists, they can see nothing ahead but an interminable filibuster, which eventually may be participated in by some of those most anxious to proceed with the President's program.

Senator Costigan was induced by Senator Robinson, majority leader, last week to forego his motion to allow consideration of the Bankhead Farm Tenant Bill. That measure has been held in the Senate ever since, in indirect filibuster against the prospective Costigan motion.

The bill around which the controversy is developing provides a Federal law assessing criminal penalties against State and county officers and setting up a method of civil redress against local governments in lynching cases. It makes the Federal District Courts the machinery of enforcement.

Southern Senators are determined that the bill shall not even come to a vote. They are apparently equally determined that a motion to take it up shall not be finally acted upon. If the temper exhibited by certain Southerners when the matter was first mentioned last week prevails when it actually comes to a test, the remainder of the administration program surely will be in jeopardy.

"We'll be here until Christmas before this thing comes to a vote," was the way one Senator from South of the Mason-Dixon Line expressed his feelings.

Would Be Pending Business.

If a motion to take up the bill should prevail it would be the pending business of the Senate until the measure was acted upon. Also, if and when the motion is made by Senator Costigan, the motion will be the Senate's business until disposed of.

A second hope of the leaders, particularly those with Southern constituencies, is that the compromise Bonus Bill may be reported by the Finance Committee before the Costigan motion is made. They have little doubt that the Senate would drop anything else to consider the bonus.

Hearings on the bonus compromise will be started by the Senate Finance Committee tomorrow. Representatives of veterans organizations, sponsors of the Patman "Greenback" bill already passed by the House, and officials of the Treasury and Veterans Administration will appear. Chairman Harrison expects to limit taking of testimony to two days and report the measure to the floor by the latter half of the week.

Although admittedly blocked by the situation on the floor, Senate committees will proceed this week on a variety of legislation, including some New Deal measures. The Finance Committee may hold night sessions on the NRA Bill; the Glass subcommittee will continue hearings on the Administration's banking proposals; the Special Munitions Committee will begin a new phase of its investigation, and the Appropriations Committee will proceed with the remaining annual supply bills.

House leaders feel that they are being victimized by the situation in the Senate.

They are prepared to move ahead with the Administration program after their overwhelming victory on the Social Security Bill. Speaker Byrns said the House would "undoubtedly" be ready to adjourn by June 15, and that only delay in the Senate could keep Congress in session after that date.

House to Go on with NRA Bill.

The House will go forward with the NRA Bill, feeling that the Senate will dally over it so long that it would be dangerous to wait. The Committees are being urged to speed their hearings and to bring out all necessary legislation as soon as possible, including re-enactment of the nuisance taxes.

There is no sentiment in the House in favor of the Harrison bonus compromise as far as leaders can discover. If the Senate passes a bill along the Patman or Vinson lines, and the President vetoes it, the House will override the veto, in their opinion, but will be more in a mood to listen to compromise than at the present time. If the Senate passed the Harrison Bill, for example, and the matter went to conference, it is possible that the House would deadlock it indefinitely.

It is probable that this reasoning will be made to Senator Harrison and other leaders. Veterans in the House think that the quickest way to definitive action would be to get a Presidential veto.

The prolonged committee fight on the Utility Holding Company Bill, with a majority of the committee reported to be opposed to the provision eliminating such companies in five years, has led House leaders to believe that nothing but a regulatory measure can be passed at this session. Such a bill would have no difficulty, they think.

The Banking Bill probably will be passed by the House, after running the gauntlet of commodity-dollar and fixed-price-level amendments. It will not, however, be taken up this week. Committee members have had a long session of hearings and executive meetings, and want a week's rest before fighting it out on the floor.

The principal legislation slated for the House this week is the Navy Department Appropriation Bill. During the debate, an effort will doubtless be made to eliminate some of the proposed construction of ships.

Anderson, S. C., Independent Trib.
April 21, 1935

THE L[illegible]ING BILL

Before the U. S. senate at the present time reposes the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill. Southern senators, including our own Honorable Ellison Durant Smith, have described the measure as "infamous" and "unconstitutional."

The Baltimore Sun, however, sees nothing for the senators to become alarmed over. Describing the bill as one of those experiments "noble in motive and far-reaching in purpose" which are nevertheless doomed to be flops because they do not take human nature into consideration, The Sun adds:

"The one infallible remedy for lynching is a grim-visaged sheriff with guts and a gun. Lynchings don't happen when such a man is around; but Congress can legislate until it is black in the face without furnishing such men. Hence it has seemed to us that passage of the Costigan-Wagner bill would mean no more than putting another dead-letter law on the statute books.

"However, this morning we view the situation with newly awakened suspicion. Yesterday's debate in the Senate was a surprise. When Smith, of South Carolina, and George, of Georgia, begin to denounce the bill as "infamous" and "unconstitutional," it is a logical inference that there is more in the thing than meets the eye. A bill that is merely worthless is hardly to be described as infamous, and if it is completely worthless its constitutionality would not seem to matter much. Clearly, these Senators have seen something in the measure that has escaped us. Perhaps it deserves a second examination."

Ah, sweet mystery of legislation! The Sun does not realize that Mr. Smith is capable of finding a negro in any woodpile, a mountain in any molehill, a termite in every steel girder. About the biggest surprise of his life, if The Sun remembers, came when he found something he didn't expect to find the farmer in Dr. Tugwell.

Jackson, Miss., News
April 7, 1935

Anti-Lynching Subject Used By Mrs. Alford

Main Address of W. M. S. Meet at Hattiesburg Held Attention

HATTIESBURG — (Special) — Lynching is no longer done for the protection of womanhood, according to Mrs. L. W. Alford of McComb, chairman of the anti-lynching campaign of the Methodist Women's Missionary Societies, who addressed the annual assembly held at the Main Street church here.

Mrs. Alford said she was basing her remarks from actual experiences during her work in the state. "Race prejudice, unemployment, political debauchery and greed have caused more lynchings in the southland than has the so-called protection of womanhood," asserted Mrs. Alford.

"It is the duty of the women's missionary societies to expand out anti-lynching program and to break down the barriers of race prejudice. Our people must be taught that the negro, too, is a son of God."

Mrs. Alford revealed that county units are being formed in Mississippi to combat lynching. She said the drive has been carried into 81 of the 82 counties in the state and that 2,867 women and 282 men have pledged to help stop these illegal executions.

Priase for Gov. Sennett Conner for his stand against lynching was voiced by Mrs. Alford.

The annual missionary conference adjourned Thursday night after a consecration service conducted by Mrs. Helen B. Bourne of Nashville, national Methodist worker.

Earlier in the day Mrs. Bourne spoke on world conditions which she painted in brighter colors than did speakers preceding her.

"The world is crying to see Jesus and it is our duty to take this message to all peoples," she declared.

Before adjournment Mrs. Lester Greer of Potts Camp, Miss., was named chairman of the anti-lynching campaign. Mrs. Alford will assist her.

Knoxville, Tenn., Journal
April 21, 1935

Not All of Us

Not all of us in the South agree with the reasons given for opposition to the federal Anti-Lynching bill by two Southern Senators during last Tuesday's debate on the wisdom of this drastic measure.

Certainly not many, among the remnant of gentle folk now left us, any longer uphold the bombastic nonsense supposed to eminate from emotions of chivalry and of high regard for the honour of woman, when it comes to the lynching of Negroes in the South.

Not everybody in this part of the country considers it necessary to become a brute on one's own part in order to punish a brutish deed, nor is the Southern gentleman of today willing to inflict upon his wife or daughter the ghastly publicity that comes of being made the occasion of a lynching mob's mad acts.

Swift trial and swift punishment, legally and sternly carried out, is an answer that instills fear into the lowest criminal and that upholds decent respect for the power and the relentless judgment of the law.

Mob law debases a community and leaves a smouldering fire of hate on both sides of two horrid and beastly deeds.

Whether or not it is the duty of the central government, or of the states themselves, to put an end to lynching is very naturally a subject for debate.

The discussion is one as to the surest way of bringing this unspeakable practice to an end, and not one of "protecting the home" by resorting to the horror of vengeance unworthy of civilization.

There can be no question of giving mob violence the right of action against a criminal. It is difficult to appreciate the attitude of any Southern statesman, or of any citizen of a Southern state, who could so misuse the name of chivalry as to invoke it in defense of a thing as unspeakably brutal and degrading to its perpetrators as a lynching.

Greenwood, S. C. Index-Journal
April 21, 1935

THE LAST STAND

By general agreement among students of the now more or less academic question of States' Rights passage by the Congress of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill and its upholding by the Supreme Court if passed, means the final and complete passing of such rights.

That is to say, acceptance of the principle back of this bill if the Supreme Court of the United States should uphold it, would mean that the States comprising the Federal government from that time on would be mere figures of speech, geographical units or whatever other name may be preferred for simple ornaments. Power as sovereign units will have passed from them forever.

For this bill, be it remembered, would give to the Federal courts jurisdiction over local violence in any State. Federal courts would, in a word, supplant State courts in a disorder or disturbance which from the beginning of the Federal government has been accepted as a concern only and solely for the State courts.

Under the terms of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill three or more persons would constitute a "mob" anywhere in the United States if charged with the intent or accomplishment of violence to life or property.

Perhaps, it might be well for you to read that paragraph over again to catch the full significance of what it means and what it might and some day inevitably would lead to.

Now heed this provision carefully: Local (that is State officials) convicted (in Federal courts) of failing to protect the life or property of an individual at the hands of a "mob" (three or more persons) would be subject to maximum fines of five thousand dollars and five years in prison, or both, as imposed by a Federal judge in a Federal court.

And further, such local officials (State officers) would be subject to prison sentences of from five to twenty-five years if these local officers should be convicted in a Federal court of conspiring with the "mob" (three or more persons) and county governments where the violence took place would be subject to indemnity penalties of from two to ten thousand dollars, these indemnity fines to be imposed by a Federal judge in a Federal court and collected by a Federal process, in the event of the death of an individual or in the event of injury to him. And where two counties are involved the liability is to be joint.

Senator Costigan, of Colorado, the chief sponsor for the bill, insists that he did not have the South in mind any more than any other section of the country when he prepared this bill. He says the lynching in San Francisco last year and the endorsement of it by the then Governor Rolph was the thing that set him off with this bill.

Regardless of the inspiration and regardless of what has happened anywhere, the certain effect of this bill should be realized.

If passed and sustained it will mean the death of State authority. That might as well be realized.

Whenever local disturbances may be taken into Federal court and tried there, State officials will have become but figure heads, puppets. State power goes.

Amazing is the endorsement of this bill by a large group of intelligent Southern women.

Florence, S. C., News
April 20, 1935

THAT—Senator Smith has been severely criticised by certain organizations for his position on the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill. The Senator knows the bill letter by letter and line by line, and no doubt has good reasons for opposing it. At any rate he is known the nation over as a true suthern gentleman and a strong advocate of all things southern.

Lynchings-1935
6
Legislation Relating to.

5093

FUNDS NEEDED NOW TO PUSH LYNCHING BILL

52 Senators Are for the Measure, Many Are Doubtful

WASHINGTON. — With the first skirmish over the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill out of the way, supporters of the measure counted up 52 "sure" votes in the senate for the measure if and when it comes to a vote.

The first sharp exchange over the bill came Tuesday, April 16 when Senator Ellison D. Smith of South Carolina loosed a burst of oratory about "protecting the womanhood of the South from beasts" and declared lynching was necessary to curb such crimes. Senator Walter F. George of Georgia also spoke against the bill, but on the basis of its alleged unconstitutionality using the old states' rights argument.

The 52 Favorable Votes

According to the latest poll, the senators who will vote for the bill are: Ashurst, Arizona; Austin, Vermont; Barbour, New Jersey; Bone, Washington; Borah, Idaho; Bulkley, Ohio; Bulow, South Dakota; Capper, Kansas; Clark, Missouri; Copeland, New York; Costigan, Colorado; Couzens Michigan; Cutting, New Mexico; Davis, Pennsylvania; Dickinson, Iowa; Donahey, Ohio; Duffy, Wisconsin; Frazier, North Dakota; Gibson, Vermont; Guffey, Pennsylvania; Hale, Maine; Hastings, Delaware; Hatch, New Mexico; Holt, West Virginia; Johnson, California; LaFollette, Wisconsin; Lewis, Illinois; Lonergan, Connecticut ; McCarran, Nevada; McGill, Kansas; McNary, Oregon; Metcalf, Rhode Island; Minton, Indiana; Moore, New Jersey; Murphy, Iowa; Murray, Montana; Neely, West Virginia; Norris, Nebraska; Nye, North Dakota; Schall, Minnesota; Stewier, Oregon; Thomas, Utah; Townsend Jr., Delaware; Vandenberg, Michigan; Truman, Missouri; Van Nuys, Indiana; Wagner, New York; Walsh, Massachusetts; Wheeler, Montana; White Jr., Maine; Schwellenbach, Washington; Shipstead, Minnesota.

Those positively opposed are: Bachman, Tennessee; Bailey, North Carolina; Bankhead, Alabama; Bilbo, Mississippi; Black, Alabama; Byrd, Virginia; Byrnes, South Carolina; Connally, Texas; Fletcher, Florida; George, Georgia; Glass, Virginia; Harrison, Mississippi; Long, Louisiana; McKellar, Tennesse; Overton, Louisiana; Russell, Jr., Georgia; Sheppard, Texas; Smith, South Carolina; Trammell, Florida.

Several Are Doubtful

Not committed, but probably favorable: Adams, Colorado; O'Mahoney, Wyoming; Pope, Idaho.

Not committed: Barkley, Kentucky; Coolidge, Massachusetts; Gore, Oklahoma; Keyes, New Hampshire; Norbeck, South Dakota; Thomas, Oklahoma.

Doubtful: Carraway, Arkansas; Hayden, Arizona; King, Utah; Logan, Kentucky; Reynolds, North Carolina; Robinson, Arkansas; Tydings, Maryland.

No report: Brown, New Hampshire; Burke, Nebraska; Carey, Wyoming; Dieterich, Illinois; Gerry, Rhode Island; McAdoo, California; Maloney, Connecticut; Pittman, Nevada; Radcliffe, Maryland.

A filibuster, of course, is the big obstacle which faces the bill. The votes are there to pass it if it can get to a vote. It is already certain that a vote will be taken on a motion to consider the bill and make it the business before the senate. Senator Costigan has served notice that he will make that motion as soon as the Bankhead farm homes act is disposed of. But already filibustering is going on the Bankhead bill, to delay as long as possible any consideration of the anti-lynching bill. One senator, supposed to be speaking on the Bankhead bill, delivered a long speech on the recent airplane flight to Hawaii.

Filibuster Will Start

Observers believe the senate will vote to take up the bill some time next week and that then the filibuster will start in earnest. Senators Costigan and Wagner are on the floor every minute and are determined to press the bill.

It is not certain as yet that Senator Huey Long of Louisiana will filibuster against the bill. The Kingfish is rated as a smart man and while he will vote against the bill, he may not lead a filibuster, having his eye on 1936.

Leading the workers and organizations who are supporting the bill is Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who has been in Washington constantly since the first word came through that the bill would be taken up.

Many Volunteer Workers

Assisting in the many tasks and interviews is a group of volunteer white and Negro workers, many of whom are not even members of the N.A.A.C.P. These include the lobby committee of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, the Washington representative of the national Y.W.C.A., Theodore Berry, president of the Cincinnati branch of the N.A.A.C.P., John P. Davis, secretary of the Joint Committee on National Recovery, Mrs. Virginia R. McGuire, president of the District of Columbia branch, a former Long Island white woman now living in Washington, a white woman visiting from Minnesota, and two young Negro women from North Carolina.

All these people have been assembling material, interviewing senators, running errands, checking newspapers and seeing correspondents. In addition, William H. Hastie has prepared an exhaustive analysis of the whole question of constitutionality including all cases which could be cited; and Charles H. Houston has made an analysis of all anti-lynching bills which have ever been introduced in congress.

Telegrams Aid Fight

Telegrams from branches of the N.A.A.C.P. and other groups and individuals were effective in getting senators who might have remained away into the senate and on the lookout for the bill. Steady communication with senators is urged by the N.A.A.C.P. from the voters back home. These messages ought not be offensive, but should be insistent and should be toned according to the known attitude of the senator. They should urge resistance to any filibuster.

In a fight like this, with the situation changing almost hourly, with hundreds of valuable contacts to be made, with the necessity of instant action if success is to be won, the N.A.A.C.P. finds itself lacking funds for the fight. In one day last week it was necessary to send $50 in telegrams. At least $50 more should have ben spent, but the money even for the first $50 was lacking. Telephone calls, stenographic service and incidental expenses require money.

"Now is the critical time," said Walter White. "All the splendid preliminary work will be wasted if we cannot press forward now that the actual fight on the floor of the senate is upon us. The need for money is desperate. Conditions are favorable for victory and it would be tragic if the need of funds should rob us of it."

Contributions should be rushed to the N.A.A.C.P., 69 Fifth avenue, New York. Checks may be made payable ot Mary White Ovington, treasurer.

VOTE BARS SHELVING OF ANTI-LYNCH BILL

Robinson Is Beaten in Senate, 34 to 33, in Motion to Adjourn and Thus Sidetrack Issue.

FILIBUSTER WILL CONTINUE

4-27-35

Bachman, Tennessee, Logan, Kentucky, Desert Southerners in the First Test.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 26.—Plans of the Democratic leadership to sidetrack the anti-lynching issue were balked today when the Senate refused by a margin of one vote to adjourn until Monday, an action which would have vacated the pending motion to take up the Costigan-Wagner bill.

Incensed at failure of his strategy, made all the more stinging because of the desertion of two Southern Democrats—Bachman of Tennessee and Logan of Kentucky—to the anti-lynch bill forces, the Democratic leader, Senator Robinson, forced a Saturday meeting.

He said he would attempt to keep the Senate in session until late tomorrow so it could have ample time to decide whether it wanted to continue in the throes of the Southern filibuster against the Costigan-Wagner bill or proceed to other important matters.

The motion to adjourn until Monday, made by Mr. Robinson, was deefated 34 to 33. Its success would have meant that Senator Costigan's motion to take up the anti-lynching bill would have been killed, and would have had to be renewed on Monday. It was the leaders' plan to have Senator Harrison recognized on Monday for the purpose of calling up the soldiers' bonus compromise.

Southerners to Keep Up Fight.

Southern Senators said tonight they would resume their filibuster, and would continue it until "doom's day," as one of them put it, before letting the Costigan-Wagner bill come to a final vote.

A slight devision has developed in the Southern ranks as to the best strategy to accomplish this purpose. Senator Harrison, who conducted the successful filibuster against the Dyer anti-lynching bill in 1922, but who now is more anxious to get up his bonus compromise, has suggested that the Senate be allowed to vote to take up the measure and that he would enter a motion immediately to lay it aside. It is figured that this could be done with little difficulty.

The active filibusterers, headed by Senators Bailey and Connally, insisted that Congress should not even be allowed to consider the anti-lynching proposal and, therefore, appeared determined to pursue their fight against the motion to take it up.

Only about two and one-half hours of the Senate's time was devoted today to arguing the Costigan motion. Most of the remainder of the session of four and one-quarter hours was taken up by Senator Steiwer in criticism of President Roosevelt's reciprocal tariff program and by Senator Schall in condemnation of the administration in general.

Incidentally, the anti-lynching bill filibuster group has not yet resorted to the parliamentary sniping which the Southerners used in 1922 to kill the Dyer bill. So far they have spoken strictly to the motion and the bill at issue. They are said to be prepared to talk for ten days or more before turning to parliamentary tricks.

Bailey Resumes the Attack.

Senator Bailey resumed the floor at the opening of today's session. He again attacked the constitutionality of the measure, which he said was plainly intended to invade the prerogatives of the States.

"There is an effort in this bill to write into the Constitution ideas never contemplated when the Fourteenth Amendment was framed," he said.

Referring directly to the authors of the bill, he continued:

"The bill gives supervision of sovereign States to the Federal Government. When did North Carolina, or New York, or Colorado so low that this must be done?

"What power has Congress over

Vote Seen as First Test on Bill.

The vote on adjournment was considered the first test on the anti-lynching measure. Those opposing the motion were considered favorable to the Costigan-Wagner bill and those favoring the motion against the bill. The roll-call was as follows:

FOR THE MOTION—33.

Democrats—31.
Adams	Duffy	Pittman	Thomas (of Utah)
Bailey	Fletcher	Radcliffe	Trammell
Bankhead	Gerry	Robinson	Walsh
Bilbo	Gore	Russell
Black	Harrison	Sheppard
Brown	Hatch	Smith
Bulow	King	Thomas (of Utah)
Byrnes	Lonergan	Trammell
Caraway	McKellar	Murphy
Connally	Overton	Walsh
Dieterich
Republicans—2.
Cousens	Norris

AGAINST THE MOTION—34.

Democrats—18.

Bachman	Donahey	Moore
Bulkley	Lewis	Murray
Burke	Logan	Neely
Clark	McCarran	O'Mahoney
Copeland	McGill	Schwellenbach
Costigan	Minton	Van Nuys

Republicans—14.

Austin	Gibson	Schall
Barbour	Hale	Steiwer
Capper	McNary	Vandenberg
Carey	Metcalf	White
Frazier	Nye

Progressive—1.

La Follette

Farmer-Labor—1.

Shipstead

Pairs—For the motion, Reynolds, Byrd; against, Wagner, Gufney.

LYNCHING BILL STIRS BIG ROW IN SENATE

Costigan Finally Gets Chance to Move for a Vote and Southerners Plan Filibuster

HE CITES CALIFORNIA CASES

Past Proves Need for Federal Law to Check Mobs in States, Coloradan Insists.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The expected anti-lynching row broke in the Senate this afternoon when Senator Costigan took the first opportunity to move to take up the Costigan-Wagner bill providing penalties and redress under Federal law for mob violence in the States.

Senator Costigan had waited for days while Southern Senators, aided unwittingly by members from the Middle West, conducted an indirect filibuster against the anti-lynching measure by holding the Bankhead Farm Tenant-Aid Bill in the Senate.

In mid-afternoon, on motion of Senator Borah, the tenant bill was suddenly recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture, and the way was open for Senator Costigan to make the motion of which he had given notice more than a week ago.

Equally as diligent, however, were the Southern Senators who previously had avowed that the anti-lynching bill should not come to a vote this session. As the Colorado Senator made his motion, Southerners sprang to their feet in all sections of the Democratic side —Trammell of Florida, Connally of Texas, Russell of Georgia, and Smith of South Carolina.

Mr. Costigan first suggested that if his motion could be acted upon immediately he would not debate it. Senator Connally whispered from behind that Mr. Costigan might just as well proceed since he and his colleagues would have quite a bit to say before even the motion to take up the anti-lynching measure could be put to a vote.

Fight to Forestall a Vote.

Should the Costigan motion finally prevail, the anti-lynching bill would be laid before the Senate and would remain as the unfinished business until acted upon or laid aside in favor of some other measure. Whether the motion carries or not, or whether the bill is laid aside or not, the legislation will remain on the Senate calendar until voted upon as it has been reported formally by the Judiciary Committee.

The purpose of the Southern contingent, as explained by certain of its members tonight, was to forestall even a vote on the motion to take the measure up. They proposed, they said, to prevent a vote until some other important measure could be prepared for action, preferably the bonus compromise.

They believed that if another important bill could be made ready by the committees, Senator Costigan might be prevailed upon to withdraw his motion, particularly if an interminable filibuster was obviously under way. Failing that, they believed the Senate might be prevailed upon to vote down the motion to take up the anti-lynching measure in order to make way for another bill.

Parliamentary authorities said tonight that opponents of the anti-lynching bill might have a better chance of sidetracking it if they would let the motion to take it up prevail. In that case they could move at any time to lay it aside for another measure and send it back to the calendar.

Costigan Makes His Appeal.

Opening discussion on the merits of the proposal on the floor today, Senator Costigan argued that lynching had become a national evil and demanded a national remedy. He declared it was evident that lynchings could not be held in check without a Federal law.

Mr. Costigan insisted at the outset that his bill was not intended as a reflection against any section of the country. Lynchings had been nation-wide, he said, adding that the revived anti-lynching movement which culminated in the pending bill was traceable directly to the "atrocities in California in 1933 involving two alleged kidnappers." He claimed the support of 53,700,000 men and women for his bill.

"The proposed law is reasonable in plan and extremely moderate in terms," Senator Costigan said.

"The Federal Government will not act until State officials have failed or refused to protect persons in their custody, or charged with, or suspected or convicted of crime.

Cites South Carolina's Penalties.

"The proposed law would bring the pressure of taxpaying public opinion, as well as the support of peace officers, to guard counties against mob violence, well illustrated in the case of South Carolina, where further lynchings have not occurred in certain counties of that State after financial penalties were imposed.

"The proposed law rests on authority vested in Congress under the Constitution, by appropriate legislation, to safeguard the equal protection of the laws for persons within the protection of States."

Representatives of the Southern opposition to the Costigan-Wagner bill said tonight they hoped to keep their arguments on a "high plane." They agreed with Senator Costigan that no justification existed for mob violence and expressed hope that none of their members would bring up any such argument as "protection of Southern womanhood" in an attempt to excuse lynchings.

They considered as "unfortunate" the remarks made along this line last week by Senator Smith of South Carolina. They proposed rather to argue that the States themselves could and were solving the lynching problem and, if left to their own devices, eventually would solve it entirely.

Lynch Law Is Defended In Senate

(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 16.—Open defense of lynch law and oppression of the Negro people without resort to court fictions rang out in the formal discussions of the United States Senate today as Senator Ellison D. Smith, Bourbon New Dealer from South Carolina, shouted the "necessity of going outside the law at times to indicate the sanctity of our fireside and the virtue of our women."

Smith was opposing the so-called Anti-Lynching Bill advanced by the National Association of Colored People to quell the mass struggle against lynch terror. The trickery of this reformist measure was demonstrated when Senator Costigan (Democrat, Col.), one of its authors, pointed out that a bill quite similar to it now is on the books of Smith's own native state of South Carolina.

The Virtue Gas

However, Smith, speaking for the ruling class which already has written down a state "anti-lynching" measure, objected to the lip service which the Federal measure would render to the right of Negroes to the fiction of legal proceedings. Smith declared:

"Certain acts committed are beyond the reach of any court or jury in the opinion of any right-minded man or woman. The virtue of a woman is a thing which should not be displayed in the courts. . . . There have been mistakes made, yes; but we in our sovereign capacity as states can grapple with the situation. . . . Nothing to us is more dear than the purity and sanctity of our womanhood, and, so help us God, no one shall violate it without paying the just penalty."

Senator George of Georgia, another Roosevelt Bourbon, declared he "deplored" lynching but that the proposed reformist measure is "unconstitutional."

BITTER DEBATE FLARES IN FIGHT ON LYNCHING BILL

Measure Aimed at South, Smith Charges; Bailey Sounds Warning of 'Battle to End.'

Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON, April 25.—(AP)—A day of sluggish senate debate on the filibuster-beset anti-lynching bill rose spectacularly to an electric climax today with a shouted assertion by Senator Smith, democrat, South Carolina, that:

"This bill is aimed at the southern states,"—he spoke sarcastically—"at our barbarism and lack of civilization. The man who introduced it had a purpose. I know what it is and so do you."

Senator Wagner, of New York, one author of the bill, sat placidly near by. He did not even look up. His co-author, Costigan, of Colorado, was not present at the moment.

Smith's outburst interrupted a speech by Bailey, of North Carolina, in which the theretofore thinly concealed threat of a filibuster was brought squarely into the open.

"This bill is not going to pass," Bailey shouted at the dozen senators in attendance, "we'll fight it out, as General Grant said, if it takes all summer."

Anyone who wanted to charge him with condoning mob violence could do so, he continued, adding pointedly that they would not do so in his presence.

"The bill transcends race and sections," he said, "there is no necessity for it even if it were tolerable."

His speech and one by Connally, of Texas, together with a short address favoring the measure by Wagner, democrat, New York, filled the day's entire session.

The southern opposition was busy behind the scenes.

Senator Harrison, democrat, Mississippi, active 13 years ago in a filibuster against a similar measure, opportunely rushed the administration compromise bonus bill into the senate with the empty formality of a "dummy report." The first plan was to move tomorrow that it be taken up.

However, this later was renounced for a scheme whereby the bonus measure would be deferred until Monday. With an adjournment over the week-end intervening, the Costigan motion to take up the anti-lynching bill would have no parliamentary standing, and the subject could be dropped without further ado.

When the senate is confronted with a choice between going on with the lynching argument and taking up the politically popular question of cashing the bonus, its decision, there was little doubt, would be in favor of the latter. On this the southerners pinned their hopes of sidetracking the lynching measure.

Wagner told the senate federal legislation was imperative if lynching is to be stopped. He said the spirit of lynch law was easily spread to suppression of free speech and contended it was but "a short step from summary treatment of those suspected of crime to suppression of every shade of economic or political opinion that disagreed with a transitory majority."

Fighting Lynching

THE so-called Wagner-Costigan "anti-lynch" bill is being discussed in Congress. The sponsors of the measure are trying to get it on to the floor for a vote. The Senators from the South are rabid in their speeches against any discussion of lynching in Congress. They threaten a filibuster.

But what is most significant is that the fight to keep the discussion off the floor is led by Roosevelt's spokesmen, Roosevelt's Democratic henchmen from the South.

This "anti-lynch" bill will not offer the slightest real fight against the lynchers or the lynch system. The Wagner-Costigan bill, in fact, is a measure that contains a menace to the working class and the oppressed Negro masses, since it provides for the dispersement of "mobs" by Federal troops. But every worker knows that to the capitalists every gathering of workers striking for better conditions becomes a "mob."

Lynchings-1935
Legislation Relating to.

5894

THE VIEWS OF TWO U. S. SENATORS

In the Senate of the United States on April 16, Senator Ellison D. Smith of South Carolina arose in his place and spluttered with regard to the passage of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill as follows:

"Mr. President, I desire to make some observations about Senate bill 24. I want to state now, as representing in part the South, that when one studies the bill and its effect he cannot fail to find that it is an open reflection upon the States where the proposed legislation is aimed to operate.

When the bill shall be taken up, the Senate will be thoroughly advised of what has caused the very humiliating necessity of going outside the law at times to vindicate the sanctity of our firesides and the virtue of our women. Senators should not hurry to reflect on the glorious traditions and history of the section to which I belong, beleagured by influences and forces with which most Senators have not been familiar and with which they have not had to reckon. We went through one bloody war under a misapprehension of the social structure of the country, but with a keen apprehension of the financial and industrial differences.

Mr. President, as one individual—and I am sure that certain of my colleagues will agree with me—I believe the intent is to enact a Federal law which will penalize the South when there has been committed an act beyond the law and by forces which no law can control. Certain acts committed are beyond the reach of any court or jury, in the opinion of any right-thinking man or woman. The virtue of a woman is a thing which should not be displayed in the courts when the criminal is known and has put himself outside and beyond the pale of the law. There have been mistakes made, yes, but we in our sovereign capacity as sovereign States can grapple with the situation as honorable, upright, law-abiding men, and we do not invite the interference of those who know not the bitterness of the trials through which we have had to go.

Senators will find before this bill shall be passed, if it ever shall pass, that the section of the country which has had the problem to face and the humility to suffer will not be in-veighed against by those who reck not of the problems in-volved. Nothing to us is more dear than the purity and sanctity of our womanhood and, so help us God, no one shall violate it without paying the just penalty which should be inflicted upon the beast who invades that sanctity.

It comes with ill grace for any State which does not know the horrors of the problem to come here and invoke the reflection, because that is what it is, which is tantamount to saying that our section of the United States is without law and is barbarous.

Mr. President, this is only the prelude to what will take place when this infamous bill shall be discussed on the floor of the Senate."

Following the above outburst of "bunk" and bathos, Senator Edward P. Costigan of Colorado, one of the authors of the anti-lynching bill made the following reply to the worthy successor of Ben Tillman and Cole Blease:

"Mr. President, with all due respect to the able Senator from South Carolina, I think I ought to say that if the bill now being discussed is a reflection on any part of the country it is for several reasons not to be taken as in any special way a reflection on the notable State from which he comes. One reason is that the Senator's State has itself enacted legislation very similar to that proposed by the Senator from New York (Mr. Wagner) and myself.

Another reason is that the latest drive for this type of legislation can be directly traced to tragic events in the State of California in the fall of 1933, when two white youths were lynched at San Jose, Calif. Since then there has been a growing conviction throughout the country that the problem is national, that it calls for a national remedy, and that the proposed legislation which is to be submitted to the Senate is both temperate and wise.

It should be added that the measure which I plan to call up when the bill if the Senator from Alabama (Mr. Bankhead) shall have been considered is supported by great numbers of southern men and women of outstanding character and finest leadership, and that the development of such support in the South is one of the memorable evidences of the value of the present legislative proposal."

If Senator Smith meant by his outburst against the anti-lynching bill to disconcert or frighten the God-fearing men and women of this country he got a very, very short time in which to exult over his presumed triumph. On April 19 Senator Robert F. Wagner of New York had published in the Congressional Record a resolution adopted by the Fifty-fourth annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, calling upon the Congress to pass the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Law. This resolution, among other things, stressed the uncontrovertable truth that "mobocratic germs, like disease germs, know no color, race or nationality or religious lines, since history shows that wherever lynching becomes a custom that a black man may be a victim today a white man may be the victim tomorrow, and (we) call upon Congress and President Roosevelt to enact and execute the Costigan-Wagner bill with a view to wiping out this shameful blot of barbarism from American soil."

But the presentation of the resolution by Senator Wagner was "only the beginning" of the avalanche of sound sense and patriotic sentiments which descended upon South Carolina's Senator Smith and his idle vaporings. Senator Costigan followed Senator Wagner and had put into the record a long list of telegrams and editorials, the bulk of which, we are enthusiastically proud to say, came from noble Southern men and women and from many of the most progressive newspapers of our section.

Among the telegrams sent none in our opinion is more deadly as an assault upon the false propaganda peddled by lynch apologists than that wired in by the Woman's Council of the Southern Methodist Church. It reads as follows:

"Nashville, Tenn., April 17, 1935.

Senator Edward P. Costigan,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

As chairman of the interracial committee, Women's Council, Southern Methodist Church, hope for early passage anti-lynching bill. Thousands southern women approve the bill as necessary to protect us from demoralization of mob as well as protect victims from lynching. Resent propaganda that lynching is for protection of women. The honor of women is not remotely involved in overwhelming majority of lynchings."

Other Nashville telegrams, which were a part of the outpouring of indignation against the false utterances of Senator Smith were the following:

Nashville, Tenn., April 17, 1935.

Hon. Edward P. Costigan,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:
Tennessee Conference Woman's Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church South, in session Nashville, April 11, unanimously petitioned Senate pass Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill. Southern women resent false notion that lynching protects them. Alleged crimes against women involved in less than sixth of all lynching cases.

Lucy B. Barnett.
Chairman Legislative Committee, Tennessee Conference.

Nashville, Tenn., April 18, 1935.

Senator Edward P. Costigan,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:
We Alabama women knowing conditions existing in South urge Costigan-Wagner bill be brought to a vote and passed. Resent position of some politicians in opposing passage bill on grounds of protecting southern white women. Prefer legal action to mob violence.

Julia Sargent.
Beth Cunningham.
Julia Loving.
Cleo Barber.
Theo Speer.
Thelma Bickley.

Nashville, Tenn., April 18, 1935.

Senator Edward P. Costigan,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Undersigned women representing four Southern States urge vote upon and passage of Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill. Feel Federal legislation imperative: State courts ineffective. Alleged crimes against women involved in only sixth of cases.

Margaret Rue, Virginia; Opal Rogers, Texas; Ethel Cunningham, Missouri; Mattie Cunningham, Texas; Ola Barnett, Missouri; Barbara Lewis, South Carolina.

Nashville, Tenn., April 17, 1935.

Hon. Edward P. Costigan,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Urge vote upon and passage of Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill. Davidson County grand jury again reported no indictment in Cheeks lynching. Lynchers definitely identified, but four grand juries have failed to indict. Case Typical, must have Federal legislation. Alleged crimes against women are less than sixth all lynching cases.

Albert E. Barnett.

Nashville, Tenn., April 17, 1935.

Senator Edward P. Costigan,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

The community relation committee of Collegeside Congregational Church heartily approve antilynching bill and hope for its immediate passage.

D. M. Mann, Chairman of Committee.

Nashville, Tenn., April 16, 1935.

Senator Edward P. Costigan,

Large group of southern men and women favor Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill. Use all your influence toward its passage this week.

John Dillingham.

Nashville, Tenn., April 17, 1935.

Senator Edward P. Costigan,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

As chairman interracial committee, Woman's Council, Southern Methodist Church, hope for early passage anti-lynching bill. Thousands of Southern women approve the bill as necessary to protect us from demoraliztaion of mob as well as protect victims from lynching. Resent propaganda that lynching is for the protection of women. The honor of women is not remotely involved in the overwhelming majority of lynchings.

Louise Young.

Nashville, Tenn., April 18, 1935.

Senator Edward P. Costigan,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Group representing 16 Southern States urge passage Costigan-Wagner Bill.

Scarritt Student Body.

Interracial Commission Back Pro posed U. S. Anti-Lynch Law

A call for a federal anti-lynch law came from the Interracial Commission here yesterday as southern senators in Washington started a filibuster against the proposed enactment of such a statute.

Composed of 50 members from 11 states the commission in its seventeenth annual meeting came out for a federal law against lynching for the first time. The organization expressed itself as "disappointed" by the record of state and local officials in lynching cases.

Organized years ago to promote the best interests of the white and negro races, the commission on interracial co-operation has made a vigorous fight to stamp out lynching.

"Hitherto the commission has taken no position relative to federal anti-lynching legislation," said a resolution adopted unanimously yesterday. "We were agreed that the primary responsibility for the prevention and punishment of lynching rested upon state officials and courts and that in the last analysis public opinion was largely the determining factor.

"Consequently the commission from its inception has worked continuously along these lines, seeking special anti-lynching legislation in a number of states, urging vigorous preventive measures when lynchings were threatened, asking effective court action against members of mobs and at the same time seeking through all possible avenues of publicity and education to build up a public opinion that would no longer tolerate crimes of this character.

"Lynching records of the past 15 years indicate progress along the line of prevention. Officers generally are more vigilant than formerly in the protection of prisoners, thereby reducing the lynching toll. Meantime intelligent public opinion is practically unanimous in condemnation of mob violence.

"On the contrary, with rare exceptions, attempts at prosecution in lynching cases continue to be futile. In nearly every case the community hysteria which gives rise to a lynching makes impossible any effective court action against the perpetrators of the crime. Consequently in not one case in ten is an effective effort made by the authorities to identify and prosecute the members of lynching mobs. Even in the rare cases in which such efforts have been made indictments seldom have been obtained and convictions usually have proved impossible.

"Disappointed by this record of impotence on the part of state and local officials, the commission has been forced reluctantly to the conclusion that little is to be expected from this source, at least in the immediate future and that an appeal to the federal courts in such cases is justified and demanded by the conditions. The commission, therefore, favors the enactment of federal ligslation to this end, in the hope that federal agents and courts would be in better position to act fearlessly and effectively in the prosecution of participants in the crime of lynching."

The commission also gave its indorsement to the Bankhead farm tenant bill now pending in congress.

South's Senators Prevent Vote On Lynch Measure

WASHINGTON, April 27.—(AP)—Endless, monotonous talk—the kind known only to filibustering senators—was the open threat hurled by Southerners today into the face of an apparent Senate determination to vote on considering the Costigan anti-lynching bill.

With a Bible on his desk, Senator Bailey (D), North Carolina, said he was prepared to read "the whole Book of Deuteronomy" if that should become necessary to prevent a vote.

This warning, ominous to a big administration legislative program, was given after the Senate for a second time refused to sidetrack the bill. By a vote of 37 to 28, it defeated a motion to adjourn, which, had it carried, would have displaced Senator Costigan's (D), Colorado, motion to make his anti-lynching bill the business of the Senate.

Then the senators voted, 50 to 10, to recess, leaving the Costigan proposal at the head of its order of business. On Monday an effort will be made, as was done today, to have the Senate consider instead the Harrison bonus payment plan. With the Southerners hoping the popularity of that issue would swing enough votes to make it the chamber's unfinished business.

However, under the Senate parliamentarian's interpretation of the rules, the bonus cannot be substituted without a vote on Senator Costigan's pending motion to take up the anti-lynching measure. And there the situation was deadlocked by the Southern filibuster.

Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, the Democratic leader, said he accepted the vote on today's adjournment motion, which he offered himself, as a definite indication of sentiment for and against the anti-lynching bill and an expression in favor of an opportunity to vote upon it.

A little earlier Robinson had been accused of assisting the open filibuster against the measure conducted for three days by senators from the South.

The charge was made by Charles H. Houston, vice-dean of the Howard University school of law, a negro institution, who saw in the circumstances an indication that President Roosevelt was giving the proponents of the measure no encouragement.

Interracial Commission Back Pro posed U. S. Anti-Lynch Law

A call for a federal anti-lynch law came from the Interracial Commission here yesterday as southern senators in Washington started a filibuster against the proposed enactment of such a statute.

Composed of 50 members from 11 states the commission in its seventeenth annual meeting came out for a federal law against lynching for the first time. The organization expressed itself as "disappointed" by the record of state and local officials in lynching cases.

Organized years ago to promote the best interests of the white and negro races, the commission on interracial co-operation has made a vigorous fight to stamp out lynching.

"Hitherto the commission has taken no position relative to federal anti-lynching legislation," said a resolution adopted unanimously yesterday. "We were agreed that the primary responsibility for the prevention and punishment of lynching rested upon state officials and courts and that in the last analysis public opinion was largely the determining factor.

"Consequently the commission from its inception has worked continuously along these lines, seeking special anti-lynching legislation in a number of states, urging vigorous preventive measures when lynchings were threatened, asking effective court action against members of mobs and at the same time seeking through all possible avenues of publicity and education to build up a public opinion that would no longer tolerate crimes of this character.

"Lynching records of the past 15 years indicate progress along the line of prevention. Officers generally are more vigilant than formerly in the protection of prisoners, thereby reducing the lynching toll. Meantime intelligent public opinion is practically unanimous in condemnation of mob violence.

"On the contrary, with rare exceptions, attempts at prosecution in lynching cases continue to be futile. In nearly every case the community hysteria which gives rise to a lynching makes impossible any effective court action against the perpetrators of the crime. Consequently in not one case in ten is an effective effort made by the authorities to identify and prosecute the members of lynching mobs. Even in the rare cases in which such efforts have been made indictments seldom have been obtained and convictions usually have proved impossible.

"Disappointed by this record of impotence on the part of state and local officials, the commission has been forced reluctantly to the conclusion that little is to be expected from this source, at least in the immediate future and that an appeal to the federal courts in such cases is justified and demanded by the conditions. The commission, therefore, favors the enactment of federal ligslation to this end, in the hope that federal agents and courts would be in better position to act fearlessly and effectively in the prosecution of participants in the crime of lynching."

The commission also gave its indorsement to the Bankhead farm tenant bill now pending in congress.

Lynchings—1935
Legislation Relating to.

5095

CHI CLERGY ENDORSES ANTI-LYNCH MEASURE

CHICAGO, Ill., April 11 — In a telegram to Senator William H Dieterich, of Illinois, the Chicago Congressional Ministers Union, representing ninety churches and 35,000 communicants, stated its endorsement of the Costigan-Wagner bill and expressed the hope that the penalty clause would not be eliminated.

The Union Ministers meeting of Chicago, representing 18 denominations and 850 churches, with approximately 300,000 communicants also telegraphed Senator Dieterich its endorsement of the bill and its belief that the penalty clause should be retained.

Mr. Costigan—Does the record show by whom the objection was made?

Mr. McKellar—I was one of those who objected, I take great pleasure in saying to the Senator.

Mr. Russell—I also asked that the bill go over.

Mr. McKellar—I think the bill ought to go over, because it ought to be debated and not passed under the five-minute rule. There is no secret about it at all.

The Vice President—The bill will be passed over.

SENATORS BLOCK ANTI-LYNCH BILL

WASHINGTON, April 18—The first senators in this session of Congress to interpose objection to the consideration of S. 24, the Costigan-Wagner Federal anti-lynching bill, are Senators Richard B. Russell Jr. of Georgia and Kenneth D. McKellar of Tennessee. The bill came up in the regular order of business Tuesday, April 9. Senator McKellar explained that the reason he was asking for the bill to be passed over was that he thought it ought to be debated and not passed under the five-minute rule then being used by the Senate. The exchange of remarks in the Congressional Record on the occasion follow:

Mr. Russell and Mr. McKellar asked that the bill go over.

Mr. Costigan—Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The Vice President—The Senator from Colorado will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. Costigan—Was exception taken to the immediate consideration of Senate bill 24?

The Vice President—It was.

Southern Bourbon Senators Attack 'Anti-Lynching' Bill

By Marguerite Young
(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 25.—Hurling an open lynch challenge, Senator Josiah Bailey of North Carolina shouted to proponents of the Wagner-Costigan so-called anti-lynching bill: "I resent the implication on the face of this bill. . . . This bill is not going to pass. We'll be here all Summer. We'll fight it out on this line, as Grant says, if it takes all Summer."

A motion to take up the Wagner-Costigan "Anti-Lynching" Bill was put forward in the Senate today and immediately subjected to a filibuster led by Southern Democratic stalwarts of the New Deal.

The bill was originated by reformist Negro leaders, who argued for it frankly on the ground that it would stay the movement of the Negro masses toward revolutionary struggle against lynching and other forms of national oppression both inside and outside of the courtroom. However, it is bitterly opposed by the bourbon politicians for two reasons. They resent any suggestion, however ineffective, of challenging their lynch regime; and they are aware that the sweep of mass resistance to such oppression makes it politically dangerous to vote against even this bill.

Senator Hugo L. Black (Dem., Ala.) hard-pressed to explain his opposition, took the floor and exposed the anti-labor threat that lurks in the bill. He referred to the section which defines a "mob or riotous assemblage" as "an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority of law, for the purpose of killing or injuring any person in the custody of any peace officer or suspected of . . . any crime." Pointing out that this would allow the bill to be used against striking workers, Black declared:

"This bill will give the greatest weapon to the opposition to labor organizations that has ever been entrusted to their care since the beginning of this government. No one can read it without realizing that when three or more meet in a union meeting and it can be as much as charged that they have the intent of hitting somebody . . . they can be tried by Federal court.

Senator Attacks Anti-Lynch Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

The Roosevelt leadership in the Senate is determined to scuttle the bill without a record vote. To this end, they hastily brought out, today, a new bonus proposal.

Instead of death to lynchers, who are murderers, [illegible] Wagner-Costigan measures merely provides that members of lynch gangs may be tried in Federal courts—but without a Federal penalty. It would set a penalty of $5,000 or five year's imprisonment or both for local officials who aid lynching by neglect or otherwise, with imprisonment up to twenty-five years for officials convicted of conspiring with a "mob."

Dodging Anti-Lynching Bill

It might as well be made clear once for all that those senators and representatives from the South who are opposing the federal anti-lynching bill do not by any means voice the unanimous sentiment of the South and that a filibuster to prevent the enactment of this bill will be resented.

The changed attitude on this matter is shown by the organization of Southern women in Florida who have lined up solidly behind the bill and have pointed to the number of lynchings which have taken place in the South in recent years with practically no one brought to justice.

Perhaps there was a time when the Federal Government should have been told to keep its hands off the enforcement of the law in the states, but since that time it has been clearly shown that the states will not enforce the law when it comes to lynching.

Statistics show that only a small per cent of the lynchings which have taken place in the course of the past few years were for attacks upon women. The flimsiest pretexts have been used to mob Negroes when racial prejudices became inflamed. The cruelty and deliberation with which the latest of the more sensational lynchings have been pulled off, that near Marianna, Fla., beggars all description. Invitations to the gruesome affair were sent out over several counties. The tragedy was postponed until a vast crowd could assemble and the crime, deliberately committed, was accompanied by mutilation and horror which made the blood run cold.

In the course of consideration of the bill Wednesday on the floor of the House, Representative Black made the statement that it would give peace officers a "wonderful excuse" to molest strikers on the ground that such officers would be subject to penalties for not enforcing the law.

Where a strike is not accompanied by violence peace officers would not have the slightest excuse for interfering in the matter, while on the other hand if the mob spirit was about to get out of hand it would be the imperative duty of the sheriff to act, whether the mob had assembled to lynch a Negro or to lynch an industry. The fears expressed by Representative Black should not be allowed to influence a full and fair consideration of this bill.

While we have referred definitely to the organization of women in Florida which has taken a strong hand in favor of the federal anti-lynching bill—introduced by a good Democrat, incidentally—we have no doubt that the good women of other sections of the South feel very much the same way about it. They do not want to see their state disturbed by a breach of law and order, whether in Florida or any other state.

The old excuses for doing nothing about this thing of mob violence will not hold good any longer. The mob spirit is entirely too prevalent, and if this law will keep it in check, whether the occasion be a lynching such as we understand it or in any other sense, it will serve a good purpose and should be passed.

DIXIE FILIBUSTER FACES MOB BILL

Costigan's Measure Is Met by Determined Opposition From Southern Senators

WASHINGTON, April 24. (AP)—A floor fight was opened suddenly today by Senator Costigan (D., Col.) for passage of his anti-lynching bill, but was met by threats of as determined a filibuster as the senate has seen since—13 years ago—such legislation was last before it.

Led by Senator Smith (D., S. C.), southern senators served notice of the senate floor that the measure would never be passed or even brought to a vote. They laid plans to provide the senate with enough oratory to fulfill that warning.

The bill would place heavy penalties upon local officers who by negligence permit mobs to seize prisoners under their custody, and enable the dependants of a lynch mob's victim to obtain damages from the county government.

Costigan appealed for consideration of his measure with an assertion that "national wrongs demand national remedies." This, he said, applied to the bill in question.

Black Heckles Costigan

Quickly as Vice President Garner announced the result of the vote on recommitting the farm tenant bill, leaving the senate without immediate business, Costigan moved that the senate proceed to the consideration of his measure.

Just as quickly a half dozen southerners were on their feet, ending his expressed hope for an immediate vote on the motion. Trammell (D., Fla.) and Connally (D., Tex.) announced they both wished to speak but Costigan took the offensive and began his speech.

Attendance quickly dwindled, except for the southerners. They stood guard on the floor or in adjacent cloak rooms.

Costigan was interrupted only once and then by Senator Black (D., Ala.) who said the bill would give peace officers a "wonderful excuse" to molest strikers on the ground that they would be subject to penalties for not enforcing the law.

ANTI-LYNCH BILL FOES THWARTED

Victory, However, May Be Short Lived With Bonus Issue Looming.

WASHINGTON, April 26.—(AP)—Senate advocates of a federal curb on lynching today scored a one-vote victory, a victory hailed by those who met defeat as destined to be as short-lived as it was close.

By 34 to 33, northern and southern senators beat down a motion to adjourn, which, had it carried, would automatically have sidetracked the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

The vote—in the instance of some senators was influenced by plans for considering the question of paying the soldiers' bonus—capped three days of filibustering by a determined group of southerners.

Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, the democratic leader, offered the adjournment motion.

Defeated, Robinson moved that the senate recess until tomorrow. This was done.

The significance of all the parliamentary jockeying was, principally, that had the advocates of the lynching bill lost on the adjournment motion the bill would not necessarily have retained top place on the senate calendar.

On Monday, at the latest, the senate will be offered a choice between going on with the lynching question or taking up the bonus bill. Heavy odds were on a decision for the latter.

Two Vote "No."

Prior to the vote, Robinson had threatened to keep in session all day tomorrow in an effort to break the parliamentary deadlock. The ballot, when it did come, found the southerners, with two exceptions, voting solidly for adjournment. Logan, of Kentucky, and Bachmann, of Tennessee, broke away from their colleagues to vote "No."

The bill would provide several penalties for local officers for conspiring to turn prisoners over to lynch mobs, or for failure to give their prisoners proper protection. Counties would be made liable for damages to the dependents of persons lynched.

Shortly before, Senator Costigan presented a hand full of telegrams encouraging him to continue the battle for the bill, one dated Atlanta, Ga., and sent by the members of the Commission on Inter-Racial Co-operation.

The message stated that the organization comprises 130 citizens, educators, ministers, and leaders of women's organizations in southern states, and was affiliated with organizations with membership "running into thousands."

Barely were the telegrams read when Senator Smith, democrat, South Carolina, filibuster leader, leaped to his feet shouting:

"Who are these patriots? Tell me their names."

Costigan promised to supply the names of the commission.

Destroys Freedom.

Senator Bailey, democrat, North Carolina, picked up his argument where he left off when the senate recessed last night.

"What power has congress over a sheriff of North Carolina?" he asked. "He is not responsible to congress but to the people of his community. When that responsibility is destroyed you destroy free government in this country."

He denounced the bill as unenforceable and unconstitutional. If a county should refuse to pay damages awarded against it, he said, they could not be collected without sending troops into that county.

The bill, he said, is an "effort to restrain the constitution and write into it powers not contemplated" by its framers.

When he concluded, Capper, republican, Kansas, read a brief statement in favor of the measure and regretting that "apparently the senate is not to be given an opportunity to vote" on the bill.

"Lynching," he said, "is a menace to law and order. It holds up to scorn our protestations of democracy and justice."

Floor Fight On Anti-Lynching Bill Is Opened

WASHINGTON, April 24.—(AP)—A floor fight was opened suddenly today by Senator Costigan (D), Colorado, for passage of his anti-lynching bill, but was met by threats of as determined a filibuster as the Senate has seen since—13 years ago—such legislation was last before it.

Led by Senator Smith (D), South Carolina, Southern senators served notice off the Senate floor that the measure would never be passed or even brought to a vote.

The bill would place heavy penalties upon local officers who by negligence permit mobs to seize prisoners under their custody, and enable the dependants of a lynch mob's victim to obtain damages from the county in which the victim was slain.

Active in that fight was Senator Harrison, of Mississippi, chairman of the finance committee, to whom the opponents of the pending measure are looking for the first break in their battle.

His committee is working out the administration compromise bill for payment of the bonus. When it is ready for presentation, they are confident that, on a test, the Senate will decide to drop the Costigan-Wagner measure and take up the bonus issue.

As quickly as Vice-President Garner announced the result of the vote on recommitting the farm tenant bill, leaving the Senate without immediate business, Costigan moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of his measure.

Just as quickly a half dozen Southerners were on their feet, ending his expressed hope for an immediate vote on the motion. Trammell (D), Florida, and Conally (D), Texas, announced they both wished to speak, but Costigan took the offensive and began his speech.

Costigan was interrupted only once and then by Senator Black (D), Alabama, who said a crowd of several hundred miners recently went into a mining camp in his State and accused those there of violating the labor clause of the codes, and that a serious tragedy resulted. He asked if such cases would come under the Costigan bill.

Costigan said he realized Black was concerned lest the bill be converted into anti-strike legislation and added that he would see nothing in it that "need alarm organized labor."

Columbia, S. C. Record
April 17, 1935

NOT TO BE APOLOGIZED FOR.

Senator Ellison D. Smith, of South Carolina, would have been on sound ground in opposing the federal anti-lynching bill if he had chosen to oppose it as an attempt to concentrate power in Washington, if he had condemned it as an "experiment noble in motive" but doomed to accomplish little more in eradicating lynching, North or South, than that other experiment accomplished in eradicating liquor.

But the senator, who voted against, not with the state rights group when federal prohibition was concocted, did not, as the Washington news reports tell it, base his opposition to the Costigan-Wagner measure on any such grounds.

"When this bill is taken up by the senate," he was quoted, "the senate will be advised of the necessity of going outside the law to safeguard our fireside and the sancity of our womanhood."

And this of course is nonsense, for all the repetition of it by all the defenders of lynching. The best and the legitimate defender of "our fireside and the sancity of our womanhood" is not the mob—lynchings do not prevent crime—but the law and the courts, which lynchings undermine. The law never was upheld by law-violation.

Six out of every seven persons lynched in the last 30 years have not even been accused of rape. The figures for the 43 years from 1880 through 1933 show that of 3,745 lynching victims 1,406 were accused of homicide, 215 of felonious assault, 623 of rape, 255 of attempted rape, 267 of theft, 67 of insults to whites, 902 of other things, not all of them crimes. Some of them, even of those accused of rape, were innocent; all of the guilty could have been convicted in the courts.

What Senator Smith, despite his good intentions, to the contrary, presents when he defends lynching is an argument for the enactment of some federal anti-lynching bill, not against it. His is the kind of stuff that makes it possible for the Wagners and the Costigans to argue that the states will not punish lynchers and that the federal government must take over the task and something of state sovereignty with it.

There isn't any apology for lynching.

Our billion-dollar government recently accepted a voluntary $35 contribution from a California man. We wouldn't be surprised now to learn that Newcastle was in the market for coal.

Lynchings—1935
Legislation Relating to.

5096

MACON, GEORGIA NEWSPAPER NOW FAVORS FEDERAL ANTI-LYNCH LAW

Forceful Editorial Commends the Disinterestedness Of Senators Costigan and Wagner, Both Democrats

FEDERAL CHECK ON LYNCHING

Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

The measures by which the Federal Government undertook to encroach upon the jurisdiction of the states, particularly in the matter of holding "fair" elections, used to be known as "force bills." One of them made the name of Senator Lodge odious in the South for many years.

But public sentiment in the South has about crystallized into the feeling that only by federal intervention can we ever hope to wipe out lynching, and the committee in charge of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill has begun to hold hearings in Washington. Because of the crowds, white and black, which filled the House committee room at the last session of Congress, when this bill was being considered, it has been decided to hold the hearings in the large caucus room of the Senate office building.

Under the Hoover administration Representative Dyer of Missouri offered an anti-lynching bill, but he suffered under the handicap of representing a Negro district, and perhaps that was at least one of the reasons why the bill did not get any further.

No such charge can be brought against Senator Wagner or Representative Costigan, good, sterling Democrats from a white constituency and it is believed that the bill has a chance of success.

Under the terms of this bill local officers who fail, neglect or refuse to make all diligent efforts to protect prisoners from mobs and to apprehend mob participants would be guilty of a felony, punishable by a fine of $5,000 and imprisonment for five years.

Any officer, having a prisoner in custody, who conspires with others to lynch, also would be guilty of a felony, along with members of a mob, punishable by imprisonment from one to twenty-five years.

If, within thirty days of an injury or lynching, the state where it occurs shows no disposition to prosecute offenders, the federal court could take jurisdiction.

Finally, any county in which a person is seriously injured or killed by a mob would be liable to the injured person or his heirs in an amount not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 as liquidated damages."

There will be a certain amount of opposition to this bill here in the South, but it is a fair question to ask what else are we to do? Lynching goes on year after year and punishment for the crime is practically unknown. One of the most recolting of these crimes was the latest to gain general attention, which a Florida mob, near Marianna, after bringing the victim from an Alabama jail, where he had been taken for safe keeping, sent out invitations in the morning to attend the lynching, which resolved itself into slow torture, with gruesome details hardly fit to be printed.

Members of the mob were well known to the officers of the law, who indeed, might have prevented the lynching in the first place if they had cared to do so, and yet no one was ever punished, as no one in that state has ever been punished for such a crime, although, as the women of the state themselves point out, there have been thirty lynchings.

This brutality simply cannot go on. The states have had ample opportunity through the years to do something to prevent this barbaric crime. The time has come when something must be done and the federal anti-lynching bill appears to be the answer.

Rockville Center, N. Y.
NASSAU DAILY REVIEW
APR 1 1935

Passage of Anti-Lynching Bill Would Outlaw Murder by Mob

Editor, Nassau Daily Review:

Current discussion of the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill shows that some people still place credence in the old fallacy that the crime of lynching originates in the righteous indignation of reputable citizens at the slow processes of the law or miscarriage of justice. However, the facts indicate that lynch mobs do not uphold, but violate the law, justice and civilization.

Murder by mob is still murder, but its effects are worse because the active participation of many persons debauches entire communities and plunges them into anarchy. The lynch mob solves no problems of personal, social or economic maladjustment, but institutes a reign of terror and lawlessness, and sets an example of impunity for the brutal and degenerate.

In the last fifty years there have been 5,073 recorded lynch victims, both white and colored, of whom 83 were women. In many instances, the crime with which the victim was charged was trivial, and in only a small percentage of the cases was there an accusation of rape or murder. The methods of execution include beating to death, hanging, shooting, burning and prolonged and obscene tortures.

States where lynchings most frequently occur have taken no steps to prevent them, so it devolves upon the federal government to enforce the amendment to the Constitution which guarantees to all citizens the equal protection of the law. Each year when there has been a campaign for federal legislation against lynching the number has decreased during the time Congress was in session. When Congress adjourned without action on anti-lynching bills, the weeks following brought renewed outbreaks of this crime.

America's lynch record is better known in other parts of the world than to many of our own citizens and our proclamations on the rights of small nations and minority races are regarded as hypocritical so long as the federal government abandons those within our own borders to barbaric torture and death at the hands of mobs.

The Senate Committee on the Judiciary considers the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill constitutional and has recommended its enactment as "appropriate legislation". Printed copies of the recent hearing on the Bill before the Committee can be obtained by addressing a request to your congressional representative or to Senator Wagner or Senator Costigan. The facts regarding lynching in America, as disclosed at that hearing, will astonish many of our citizens, and I suggest that you try to get this information and then urge Congress to pass a law which will discourage and punish lynchers.

GERTRUDE B. STONE,
Washington, D. C.
March 28, 1935.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS
MAR 27 1935

On the Spot.

The Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill has been reported out of the senate's judiciary committee. By the terms of it, the responsibility for not preventing lynchings is put upon the officers of a state or any subdivision thereof where a lynching occurs, and they would be liable to a maximum $5,000 fine or five years' imprisonment or both. For convicted mobsters, the penalty would be five to 25 years' imprisonment, and there are other provisions by which the federal court would assume jurisdiction after a state government had failed to apprehend and prosecute the offenders.

So far in this year 1935 there have been two lynchings, one in Mississippi and the other in Louisiana. In neither instance have the offenders been apprehended or prosecuted. And those, it will not be overlooked, are the states from which come, respectively, Senators Bilbo and Long.

In view of which circumstances it is going to be interesting to see how the Hero of the Sands Point Washroom and The Man Bilbo vote on the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill. They will be, so to speak, on the spot.

TOLEDO, O.
BLADE
MAR 28 1935

The Anti-Lynching Bill

THE race relations committee of the Toledo Y. W. C. A. should experience no difficulty in obtaining the five thousand signatures it seeks to petitions urging President Roosevelt to recommend for passage the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill. If passed, as it should be, this measure will make state and local officials answerable to the federal government and subject to heavy penalties for failure to protect prisoners and other individuals against mob violence. It further provides that persons injured by mobs, or the heirs of persons lynched, may receive $2,000 to $10,000 from the county in which such crime is committed.

In 1894, 192 persons were lynched in the United States. That was peak. Until very recently the number of lynchings decreased steadily, but the new trend is upward. In 1933, 28 persons in this country were slain by insensate mobs. Few, if any, of the victims had been convicted of crime. Some were taken from jails and from sheriffs who offered little resistance in protection of their prisoners awaiting trial. A former governor of a western state virtually justified mob law on one occasion.

Lynchers are seldom arrested; almost never convicted under the state laws. The federal government has passed drastic new laws to discourage kidnaping. It should do as much to prevent lynchings, and to provide some compensation for the dependents of mob victims.

GEORGE ATTACKS ANTI-LYNCH BILL

Constitution

Demands Vote Delay Until He Returns; Says States' Right Abolished.

4-17-35

By GLADSTONE WILLIAMS.

WASHINGTON, April 16.—The problem of lynching can better be solved by the individual states themselves than by the federal government Senator Walter F. George, of Georgia, today told his colleagues in the upper chamber of congress during debate on the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill. Atlanta, Ga.

Denouncing the measure as unconstitutional, he expressed the hope it would not be pressed to final action by its sponsors because to date "the means we have already adopted are making more for the safety and security of life against mob violence than any that it may be possible to inject by proposed legislation of this character."

While the Wagner-Costigan measure was not formally before the senate for discussion, Senator George asked the indulgence of his colleagues because he was obliged to leave Washington late this afternoon to visit his aged father who is seriously ill at Cordele, Ga. The senator did not wish the bill to be brought up for final action in his absence without an opportunity to first voice his opposition.

While admitting that no section of the United States more deeply deplored lynching than the south, Senator George said he did not entertain the slightest doubt but what the Wagner-Costigan bill was unconstitutional, is not authorized or justified under the constitution and that if it were justified under the constitution we would have broken down every semblance of state sovereignty through the enactment of this kind of legislation.

"Not because the south has a peculiar interest in this proposed legislation," he added, "but because it has a just interest in it."

He did not discuss the merits of the measure or any particular provision but rather confined his remarks to a legal analysis of it.

"I have never been an apologist for lynching and never shall be," the senator continued. "In days past, when I have been honored by my people with judicial position, I have taken my own life not politically but physically in my hands in an effort to give full protection to men who were charged with crime and against whom mob violence was threatened. And I would do so again.

"This deplorable offense against society probably would be better handled by the states themselves if there were no attempt to interfere through federal legislation."

It was at this point that the senator urged his colleagues not to force final action on the bill.

"Those of us who believe, as I believe," he said, "that this measure is clearly beyond the scope of federal power certainly have a right to be heard. The assertion of the congress of the constitutionality of this bill completely and ultimately would destroy any possibility of the functioning of a dual system of government under our constitution.

"I want to say to those who propose the legislation that had they lived in sections where they may think the crime of lynching is condoned altogether, and had they been called upon at the dead hours of the night to stake not only their political but physical lives for the protection of the humblest of our citizens against a threatened mob, they would understand something of the real attitude of honest men and women not only of the south but of every part of this nation, who do not condone lynching.

"We have made marvelous progress in every part of the country in ridding civilization of the blot of this offense, and nowhere has this progress been better than in the south."

The senator insisted that surer progress would be made in the future if no attempt was made to stretch the constitution and if extra-constitutional means and measures were not resorted to to drive upon a people already conscious of their obligations and determined to meet their duty, the will and edict of the federal congress.

Continuing he said:

"If I wished to promote the cause against lynching, if I wished to hasten the day when lynchings would be no more, I would oppose any effort by the federal government to resort to extra-constitutional means to enforce upon any section or upon any state, or upon all the states the so-called national will upon the nebulous theory that the offense itself has become a national evil and a national problem, as if all problems are not, in the final analysis, national.

"I am no apologist for mob violence. Long ago I set my face like flint against it.

"I know very well that a mob, whatever may be the motivating cause, is simply primitive humanity in motion.

"If it is possible to define a mob within the meaning of the constitution and to bring into force and play federal powers upon the flimsy pretext asserted in this measure, then like federal power may be invoked against kidnaping, against every other conceivable crime in the category when committed by three or four persons; and the state with all its power of local self-government must inevitably disappear from the American system if the supreme court ever holds legislation of this kind constitutional."

Senator Smith, democrat, South Carolina, asserted that the nation had gone through one war because of a "misapprehension of the social structure of this country."

"When this bill is taken up by the senate," Smith shouted, "the senate will be advised of the necessity of going outside the law to safeguard our fireside and the sanctity of our womanhood.

"As one individual, and I am sure certain of my colleagues agree, I resent this attempt to pass a federal law.

"We in our sovereign capacity can battle with this problem. We do not invite interference of those who have not had the bitterness of the trials we have endured."

Anti-Lynch Bill Halted By Senators

Journal Constitution

McKellar and Russell Block Passage By Objections

4-20-35

BILL PASSED OVER

Montgomery Ala.

N. A. A. C. P. Officials Urge Rushing Petitions

WASHINGTON—The first senators in this session of Congress to interpose objection to the consideration of S. 24, the Costigan-Wagner federal anti-lynching bill, are Senators Richard R Russell, Jr., of Georgia, and Kenneth D. McKellar of Tennessee.

The bill came up in the regular order of business Tuesday, April 9. Senator McKellar explained that the reason he was asking for the bill to be passed over was that he thought it ought to be debated and not passed under the 5-minute rule then being used by the Senate. The exchange of remarks in the Congressional Record on the occassion follows:

Mr. Russell and Mr. McKellar asked that the bill go over.

Mr. Costigan, Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The Vice President. The Senator from Colorado will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. Costigan. Was exception taken to the immediate consideration of Senate bill 24?

The Vice President. It was.

Mr. Costigan. Does the record show by whom the objection was made?

Mr. McKellar. I was one of those who objected, I take great pleasure in saying to the Senator.

Mr. Russell. I also asked that the bill go over.

Mr. McKellar. I think the bill ought to go over, because it ought to be debated and not passed under the 5-minute rule. There is no secret about it at all.

"The Vice President. The bill will be passed over."

Petitions Being Signed

The petitions urging passage of the bill are being signed and returned to the national office of the N. A. A. C. P. in a steady stream, but N. A. A. C. P. officials point out that the time is nearing for the presentation of the petition to President Roosevelt, and they are asking that signatures be rushed and petitions sent into New York as fast as possible. It is hoped all the petitions will be in hand and ready for presentation by May 1.

The New York office of the Association also reiterated its request for funds and pointed out that the bill is now entering its most difficult stage, when personal conferences are required with senators and when constituents of particular senators must be acquainted with the latest attitude of their representatives.

The fight for the anti-lynching bill is eating into the regular budget of the Association, its officials stated, and special contributions for anti-lynching work are badly needed. They should be sent to the national office of the N. A. A. C. P., 69 Fifth Avenue, New York.

SMITH THREATENS FILIBUSTER BAR TO LYNCHING BILL

Constitution

4-25-35

Carolinan's Warning Disrupt's Costigan's Fight for Measure To Penalize Officers

Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—(AP)—A floor fight was opened suddenly today by Senator Costigan, democrat, Colorado, for passage of his anti-lynching bill, but was met by threats of as determined a filibuster as the senate has seen since—13 years ago—such legislation was last before it.

Led by Senator Smith, democrat, South Carolina, southern senators served notice off the senate floor that the measure would never be passed or even brought to a vote. They laid plans to provide the senate with enough oratory to fulfill that warning.

The bill would place heavy penalties upon local officers who by negligence permit mobs to seize prisoners nuder their custody, and enable the dependants of a lynch mob's victim to obtain damages from the county government.

Active in that fight was Senator Harrison, of Mississippi, chairman of the finance committee, to whom the opponents of the pending measure are looking for the first break in their battle.

"National Wrongs—Remedies."

His committee is working out the administration compromise bill for payment of the bonus. When it is ready for presentation they are confident that on a test the senate will decide to drop the Costigan-Wagner measure and take up the bonus issue.

Costigan appealed for consideration of his measure with an assertion that "national wrongs demand national remedies." This, he said, applied to the bill in question.

As quickly as Vice President Garner announced the result of the vote on recommitting the farm tenant bill leaving the senate without immediate business, Costigan moved that the senate proceed to the consideration of his measure.

Just as quickly a half-dozen southerners were on their feet, ending his expressed hope for an immediate vote on the motion. Trammell, democrat, Florida, and connally, democrat, Texas, announced they both wished to speak but Costigan took the offensive and began his speech.

Attendance quickly dwindled, except for the southerners. They stood guard on the floor or in adjacent cloak rooms.

Labor Angle.

Costigan was interrupted only once and then by Senator Black, democrat, Alabama, who said a crowd of several hundred miners recently went into a mining camp in his state and accused those there of violating the labor clause of the codes and that a serious tragedy resulted. He asked if such cases would come under the Costigan bill.

Costigan said he realized Black was concerned lest the bill be converted into "anti-strike legislation" and added that he could see nothing in it that "need alarm organized labor."

Black contended, however, that it would give peace officers a "wonderful excuse" to molest strikers on the ground that they would be subject to penalties for not enforcing the law.

Florence, S. C., News
April 18, 1935

THAT—Senator Smith has threatened to filibuster for weeks against a proposed anti-lynching bill, if it comes before the senate, he made known recently. The Senior South Carolina senator declared that no such bill as the Costigan-Wagner proposal would pass as long as he was in Congress. Senator Smith was immediately joined by Senators George of Georgia and Byrnes of South Carolina, an administration spokesman.

Columbia, S. C. Record
April 19, 1935

WOMAN SCORES ATTACK ON ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., April 19—(AP)—Telegrams "repudiating" an attack by Senator Smith of South Carolina on the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill were dispatched to Washington yesterday by Mrs. William P. Cornell, Florida chairman of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching and other leaders.

On the senate floor Tuesday, Smith expressed concern for "the purity and sanctity of our women-hood and declared he believed in the bill was to "penalize when there has been an act beyond the law force which no law can

Lynchings - 1935
Legislation Relating to.

5097

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

MAR 2 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

The fact that crimes "of organized banditry, cold-blooded shooting, lynching and kidnaping have threatened our security" was sharply called to the attention of Congress by President Roosevelt in his annual message.

Our senators and representatives now have the opportunity of responding to that declaration insofar as it relates to lynching. The Wagner-Costigan bill is an attempt to correct a condition which has long been America's shame.

Favorably reported by the Senate judiciary committee last year but not brought to a vote in either house, the measure would give the federal courts jurisdiction to try, under the laws of a state, any member of a lynching mob if either state officers are lax or jurors obtainable in a state court are manifestly opposed to punishment of lynchers. These conditions would exist automatically if within 30 days of a mob's offense no effort had been made to apprehend, indict or prosecute the guilty parties.

For a decade and a half, bills of like purpose have been introduced at every session of Congress. As long ago as 1922 the House passed the Dyer bill by a vote of nearly two to one. Southern senators, feeling that lynching was the South's problem, killed the measure by obstructive tactics.

Since that time, however, the nation has been made conscious of mob law by cases of murder and violence outside the South, particularly in the double lynching at San Jose, California, in 1933. The South therefore need no longer feel that lynching is its problem alone. It has become the nation's problem. It must be solved!

SPARTANBURG, S. C.
JOURNAL

FEB 20 1935

Anti-Lynching Legislation

Approved by President Roosevelt hearings have begun in Washington on an anti-lynching bill whose sponsor is Senator Wagner of New York. Its proponents and those who favor such Federal legislation are earnest and sincere. There can be no defense raised for lynching, the supplanting of law and order by mob force and rule. But the right way to go about handling this problem is not through Federal Courts and under Federal direction and jurisdiction.

It is something for the states themselves. Wherever there is one lynching, whether in the South or in any other section, it is one too many. With the Federal government encroaching in nearly every other line it is doubtful to say the least if the ends sought can be achieved by Congress passing anti-lynch laws.

Merely to change the authority and courts from state to Federal within itself accomplishes no miracles. It does not insure more respect for law and order when the mob gets the lust and urge for shedding human blood.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NEWS TRIBUNE

MAR 2 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING

Once again the question is very much toward as to whether Congress shall enact an anti-lynching bill. For years the fight raged around what was known as the Dyer bill: now it is the Wagner-Costigan proposal which holds the limelight.

This bill was reported favorably by the Senate Judiciary Committee last year but never came to a vote in either chamber of the Congress. It had, and has, the support of President Roosevelt. Nevertheless it is not going to have easy-going. Though the Dyer bill, for example, easily made the grade in the House, it failed in the Senate, and the same sort of opposition which it met with there is lying in wait for the Wagner-Costigan measure.

The latter provides that Federal courts shall have jurisdiction to try, under the laws of the State concerned, any member of a lynching mob, but not in all cases. The right shall exist only if State officers have been lax in prosecution or if available jurors are manifestly opposed to punishment for the crime of lynching. These pre-requisites shall be deemed to exist if within 30 days of the crime no serious effort has been made to apprehend, indict or prosecute guilty parties. The bill has several punitive aspects, notably one providing for a fine of from $2000 to $10,000 to be paid to the person injured, or his estate, in any act of mob violence by the county in which the crime took place.

The old objection raised against the Dyer bill, namely that it was unconstitutional, will be raised against the new measure. To get round it, the new bill declares that "if any State or political sub-division fails to protect a person against mob violence or to punish his attackers such person shall be held to have been denied due process of law and equal protection of the laws, as guaranteed by the Constitution."

As a practical matter, regardless of how we may abhor lynching, as all good citizens should, it may be doubted whether the new legislation would prove really effective. What does it matter whether a man is tried in a State or a Federal Court if his jury is drawn from the same community? Perhaps the psychological factor in a Federal Court would be more in favor of a fair trial, and almost anything which operated in that way would seem worth trying. But, as we have said, it is very doubtful whether the well-meaning proposals of Messrs. Wagner and Costigan will ever pass. One of the consequences of national prohibition is that legislators are more than ever chary of trying to do by congressional act what States should do for themselves.

Jacksonville, Fla., Times-Union
March 14, 1935

Anti-Lynching Bill Favored

Ministerial Body Expresses Stand in Resolution.

The Jacksonville Ministerial Alliance went on record yesterday as favoring the passage of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, now set for public hearing by the Senate judiciary sub-committee.

In announcing their stand on the bill, the ministers explained that the measure will not be invoked except in cases where State officials have failed to fulfill their duty.

Th resolution adopted follows:

"Be it resolved that this body go on record as approving the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, and further,

"Be it resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to our Senators and Representatives, urging upon them the necessity of favoring the passage of this bill, further

"Be it resolved that a copy of this resolution be furnished to the papers of the City of Jacksonville.

"The Ministerial Alliance deplores the lack of law enforcement on the part of our State officials. It is particularly deplorable in such tragedies as occurred in our State at Marianna."

Anti-Lynch Bill Report Creates New Momentum

Afro-American
3-23-35
Baltimore, Md.

Measure Now on Senate Calendar Awaiting Call for Vote.

10 LEGISLATURES ASSERT APPROVAL

More Funds Needed in Campaign.

WASHINGTON.—New momentum gathered behind the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill last week as soon as the favorable report of the Senate judiciary committee was made public.

The bill now goes on the Senate calendar, where it faces the difficulty of being called up for a vote.

The task of getting it called up for consideration and vote on the floor is the main job of the supporters at present, according to NAACP officials. The bill reached this same point in 1934; it got through the committee favorably, but was blocked repeatedly when Senators Costigan or Wagner called for it to be debated or voted upon.

Support Increasing

This year there is more support behind the bill than before. The NAACP reports that it has received requests for more than two thousand petition blanks in one day. Six hundred petitions were requested and distributed by the YWCA; three hundred by the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom; three hundred for students of both races in Southern colleges; 250 to a special mailing list; two hundred to the Cleveland NAACP; one hundred to Danville, Va.; one hundred to Indian Head, Md.; eighty to the District of Columbia NAACP; and numerous shipments of ten, twenty-five and fifty to various points.

Legislatures Endorse Bill

The bill has been endorsed by the New Jersey, California, Minnesota and Kansas state legislatures; by the Massachusetts state senate, the Illinois house of representatives, the New York and Indiana state assemblies; also by the city councils and Cleveland and Duluth, Minn. The Akron (Ohio) city council is expected to act upon a resolution of endorsement shortly.

Although the support behind the bill is growing in volume, it is not as well co-ordinated and effective as it might be, observers here point out. They declare that if a little money could be spent in organization, correspondence, and personal contact work, the bill would have better than an even chance.

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL ATTACKED BY MITCHELL

Congressman Says It Won't Work; Wants Commission On Negro Affairs

By Jesse O. Thomas

ATLANTA. — (ANP) — Congressman Arthur W. Mitchell, guest speaker on the occasion of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Morris Brown college, as founder's day speaker, said both yes and no to the same proposition.

The meeting was held in the famous Big Bethel church on Auburn avenue and Butler street, and the congressman spoke to a capacity audience of 1100 Atlanta citizens. The meeting was covered by representatives of the Associated Press, the Atlanta Constitution, the Atlanta Daily World and the Macon, Georgia, Telegraph.

"This country has been made to suffer all the time by the introduction of the color question," Mr. Mitchell asserted. "Pushing it in has always meant more harm than good. We have eventually got to get away from it."

Attacks DePriest

He reiterated his accustomed statement that he doesn't represent 10 million Negroes. He represents the constituency of the first congressional district of Illinois, he said.

"Go see your congressman," he advised. "Because I am a Negro is no reason why 10 million Negroes should expect me to represent them. I am not going to draw the color line. Congressman DePriest didn't recommend a single white man from the congressional district of Illinois to West Point or Annapolis. The white boys have just as much right to be represented from that district as Negroes."

He took a whack at the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill and criticized the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for its activities, which, according to Congressman Mitchell, itself has caused some 25 bills to be introduced.

"We can't stop lynching by the enactment of anti-lynching bills, he insisted. "We have anti-murder laws and people are still killing; anti-larceny bills, and people are still stealing. Lynching will be stopped through Christian education."

Coincidentaly, while the Congressman was speaking, a Negro was being lynched by a mob in the school yard three miles east of Slayden, Miss.

When he learned this, the congressman quickly reversed himself. "I have introduced the best anti-lynching bill that has been introduced, and the only bill that is going to pass," the congressman confided. "I have introduced a bill creating a commission on Negro affairs."

Throughout his address he advised Negroes to look to their southern white friends for their salvation claiming that the northern white man did not understand the Negro. His best friends were here in the South, with whom he should work out his salvation.

The unthinking element of his audience was pleased with the address. The thinking element was very much disappointed and distressed. It was the consensus of opinion among the leaders of the Negro population that the coming of Congressman Mitchell contributed nothing to the constructive development of race relations in Atlanta. For an hour and a half, Congressman Mitchell blowed both hot and cold.

Massachusetts Backs U.S. Anti-Lynch Law

BOSTON.—The state senate of Massachusetts has adopted resolutions calling upon Congress to enact legislation for the prevention of lynchings and the punishment of the crime.

At first the senate defeated the resolutions on a voice vote count of 13 to 15, but when Senator Thomas M. Burke demanded a roll-call, they were adopted by a vote of 19 to 16. The switch in the vote is attributed to fear on the part of opponents of the resolutions that voters might be aroused against them.

Mitchell in South Blames NAACP for 25 Anti-Mob Bills

Congressman Predicts the Passage of His Own Proposal.

REPEATS STAND ON REPRESENTATION

Censures DePriest for Not Appointing Ofays.

ATLANTA, Ga.— (ANP) — Addressing 1100 persons during the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Morris Brown University at Big Bethel A.M.E. Church, last week, Congressman Arthur W. Mitchell reiterated that he represented the first district of Illinois in Congress, not any particular racial group.

"This country has been made to suffer all the time by the introduction of the color question," Mr. Mitchell asserted. "Pushing it in has always meant more harm than good. We have eventually got to get away from it.

"Go see your own Congressman," he advised. "Because I happen to be one of you is no reason why ten millions should expect me to represent them. I am not going to draw the color line. Congressman DePriest didn't recommend a single white man from his district to West Point or Annapolis. The white boys have just as much right to be represented from that district as any other group."

Criticizes NAACP

The speaker took a crack at the Costigan - Wagner anti-lynching bill and criticised the N.A.A.C.P., which, according to him, has caused some twenty-five bills to be introduced.

"We can't stop lynching by the enactment of anti-lynching bills," he declared. "We have anti-murder bills and people are still killing; anti-larceny bills, and people are still stealing. Lynching will be stopped through Christian education."

Coincidentally, while the Congressman was speaking, Ab Young, a farm hand, was being lynched in a school yard near Slayden, Miss. Following these statements on the lynching bills, the speaker asserted:

"I have introduced the best anti-lynching bill that has been introduced, and the only bill that is going to pass."

Mr. Mitchell also advised his hearers to look to their southern friends for their salvation, claiming that the northern whites lack understanding of the problem.

TRANSCRIPT
Freehold, N.J.
MAR 15 1935

LOCAL NEGROES ASK ANTI-LYNCHING LAW

Assured By Barbour And Sutphin That Measure Will Have Their Support

In an effort to secure Congress ona support for the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill, now pending, Freehold Negroes have contacted Senator W. Warren Barbour and Representative William H. Sutphin. The support of these two members of Congress was indicated in letters received by the Colored Civic group, local backers of the bill.

The Costigan measure, designed to afford the Negro added assurance of constitutional rights of trial by jury, and reduce the number of lynchings, has the support of the New Jersey legislature which in a January resolution petitioned Congress to incorporate it into the law of the land. Since 1875, 3,975 Negroes have gone to death by lynching. Occasionally in the South and West a white is lynched but for the most part the crime is perpetrated against Negroes.

The Colored Civic group petitioned the Congressmen to pass the legislation to afford "due process of law" and guarantee of rights as provided in the fifth, sixth, 13, 14 and 15th amendments to the Constitution.

In reply Sutphin answered: "I am happy to assure you my favorable view toward the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill. I will continue to support same to its fullest extent during the present Congress or at any other time. I have always considered lynchings uncivilized and un-American and want to see them stamped out."

Barbour struck a note of uncertainty as to the fate of the bill, but assured the local group of his support when he answered thus: "I assure you I am strongly in favor of the prompt enactment of the anti-lynching bill. It is apparent, however, that this bill will not be passed as long as its parliamentary position is such that the objections of one senator can prevent consideration of the bill. I am in favor of making the measure the order of business in the Senate, so that a record vote may be had."

Officers of the Civic group are: Mrs. Zella Baskerville, president; Mrs. Betty Height, secretary; Wayatt Baskerville, treasurer; Mrs. Ida Sparks, Mrs. Ella Davis, Mrs. Alice Rice, the Rev. T. S. Rice, Mrs. Emma Ward and Mrs. Frank Little, executive committee.

He's Against Passage Of Anti-Lynch Bill

Editor, The Post:

I wish to differ with your editorial, "Obstruction," in The Post of March 26, in which you characterized the action of "Southern Democrats" in Congress who defeated the Dyer anti-lynching bill in 1923 and pigeon-holed the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill in 1934 and who will oppose its passage at this present session of Congress, as "obstruction of the most irresponsible variety."

The late Senator Oscar W. Underwood was the leader of the Southern Democrats in the Senate who defeated the Dyer anti-lynching bill in 1923. No one stood higher in the esteem of the people of the United States as a statesman than did Senator Underwood. If men of his type considered the passage of a Federal anti-lynching bill inimical to the best interests of the South, there must have been good grounds for such an opinion.

Southern Democratic congressmen representing the views of their constituents have always contended, and rightfully so, that the lynching problem growing out of the racial question is one that must be handled by the local authorities and not by the Federal Government. The states have already given up too many of their powers to the National Government.

It seems to me that Senators Wagner of New York and Costigan of Colorado are the ones who are playing politics in their unsuccessful attempt to force passage of this bill on a section of the country which they apparently know little about.

ROBERT CLARKE REDUS JR.

Lynchings - 1935
Legislation Relating to.

5898

GROUND LOST IN ANTI-LYNCHING DRIVE

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
FEB 19 1935

"After twelve years of careful record of the Honor Roll of States free from lynching there is only one more state on the Roll than at the beginning of the period," says a statement issued by the Department of Race Relations, Federal Council of Churches, 105 E. 22nd Street, New York. "In 1934 the total number o fstates free of lynching was 40, only one more than in 1923," the statement continues. "This meager result has come in the face of increased activities of church and religious organizations, social and civic agencies, increased efforts of local officers of the law to protect prisoners and the almost united voice of the press. In each of three of these years there was one state less on the Roll than at the beginning; in two years there was the same number as at the beginning; in one year two less than at the beginning. In each of two years there were four more states free than at the beginning and in two other years there was an increase of one and two respectively, but the years of gains have been less than those with losses with a net gain in twelve years of only one state.

"Kentucky and Florida whcih were free of lynching in 1933 lost their places on the Roll in 1934. California, Maryland, Missouri, North Carolina and South Carolina which had lynchings in 1933 regained places on the Honor Roll in 1934."

In releasing the statement, Dr. George Edmund Haynes, Executive Secretary of the Department of Race Relations, said "The persistence of the evil and its hold upon local areas are indicated by the fact that seventeen states during ten years have fluctuated on and off the Honor Roll. The number of victims of the mob has shown a similar unfavorable tendency. After a downward trend from 33 victims in 1923 to 10 in 1929 there has been a tendency to increase except in 1932 when there was a decrease to 8 victims. There were 28 victims of lynching in 1933 and 15 in 1934. There has been as much savagery in torturing victims as in former years, if not more. The determination and spirit of mobs have been seen in the large number of attempted lynchings prevented by officers of the law. The failures of the law-abiding citizens in many local areas to wipe out lynching point clearly to the need of national assistance to state and local officers through legislation which will bring Federal power to the aid o fthose officers who struggle to protect life and limb of accused persons."

The States free of lynching last year, according to available records, are:

Arkansas, Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Nevada, North Dakota, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Wyoming.

The Evening Sun Forum

Please be brief. As a rule 200 words should be enough. Your name and address must accompany each communication as an evidence of good faith. Your name will not be published unless you wish it, but signed letters will be given the preference.

Strange That This Gentleman Hasn't Discovered Mr. Mencken's Attitude On Lynching Ere This

To the Editor of The Evening Sun—Sir: For once Mr. H. L. Mencken is on the side of God as when he goes to the Capital to speak in favor of the anti-lynching bill. We are with him in this heart and soul. Yet one is amazed at his complex.

I suppose on an average we have four or five lynchings in the U. S. A. yearly. The question arises what prompts this man to make a special trip to the Capital, laudable as it may be, to save from torture and death four people yearly, while 4,000,000 are slowly tortured and starved to death under our economic system?

I have read Mr. Mencken in The Evening Sun and elsewhere for twenty years. If I have ever known him to write or utter one serious word in behalf of the countless thousands of sufferers in this country, I miss my guess. With him the "common herd" doesn't count in the social order.

On the whole The Sun and The Evening Sun have been very fair to the poor during these heart-burning years, for which thank God. (Rev.) Albert Turkington.

Baltimore, Feb. 17.

DESPATCH, N. Y.
REGISTER
FEB 23 1935

Women's Association Urges Roosevelt Back Anti-Lynching Bill

Briarcliff Congregational Church Group Sends Letter To President

A letter to Franklin D. Roosevelt, urging his support of the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill, has been forwarded to the White House by the Woman's Association of the Briarcliff Congregational Church.

Names of the president and 12 association members were signed to the letter. They are Jessie W. Schuman, president, Edith Lehner, Frances A. Christopher, Frieda J. Kossow, M. E. Hamlin, Emma O. Rayburn, S. M. Davis, Florence M. Drewry, Margaret Wright North, Nellie M. Heyer, Mary J. Minshall, Marie J. Applegate and M. V. Williams.

The letter reads as follows:

"In your letter of Jan. 24 to Dr. Everett R. Clinchy, Director, the National Conference of Jews and Christians, you stated:

"Brotherhood Day offers an opportunity to mobilize the forces of good will across the country and to promote common effort in all that makes good citizenship.'

"It occurs to us that the government of the United States itself could do nothing finer in mobilizing the forces of good will across the country and in promoting common effort in all that makes good citizenship than by making the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill the law of the land.

"Lynching remains a horrid blot upon our national honor. It is the denial of good will. It is the destruction of good citizenship. When any group of people take the law into their own hands, the violence they commit against the individual is serious, but not more so than the violence they commit against the state.

"Therefore, while we applaud your endorsement of 'Brotherhood Day,' we would also appeal to you, who are the President of our colored citizens not less than of the white, to urge upon Congress the enactment of the Costigan-Wagner Bill, thereby strengthening the forces of good will and good citizenship and serving notice on local governments that they will be held accountable wherever and whenever basic human rights are trespassed upon and violated for any reason, real or imagined, by mobs of misguided men and women.

"With appreciation for the repeated evidence of your courageous leadership."

CLARKSBURG, W. VA.
EXPONENT
FEB 24 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING LAWS

The anti-lynching bill sponsored by Senators Costigan and Wagner was reported favorably to the Senate last year by the Senate judiciary committee, but did not come to a vote in either house of Congress. The bill was supported by President Roosevelt, who had declared in his annual message to Congress: "Crime of organized banditry, cold-blooded shooting, lynching and kidnaping have threatened our security." Bills similar to the Costigan-Wagner bill have been introduced in every session of Congress since 1920. In 1922 the Dyer anti-lynching bill passed the House of Representatives by almost a two to one vote. The bill was killed in the Senate by obstructive tactics of southern Senators opposed to federal intervention in what they considered purely a problem of the states.

The Costigan-Wagner bill provides that the federal courts shall have jurisdiction to try, under the laws of the state concerned, any member of a lynching mob, but only if (1) state officers are lax in prosecution; or (2) jurors obtainable for service in a state court are manifestly opposed to punishment for the lynching. These two prerequisites are held automatically to exist if within 30 days of a mob offense no effort has been made to apprehend, indict or prosecute the guilty parties.

Any county in which mob violence occurs is made subject to a fine of from $2,000 to $10,000, to be paid to the injured person or his estate. Action to recover these damages shall be brought by the federal government. If more than one county is involved in a lynching, each is liable for the damages assessed. And any state employe who neglects his duty of protecting an individual against mob violence or of prosecuting persons guilty of such violence is guilty of a felony. On conviction, he may be fined up to $5,000 or imprisoned up to five years, or both.

The Costigan-Wagner bill attempts to get around the question of constitutionality by declaring that if any state or political subdivision fails to protect a person against mob violence or to punish his attackers such person shall be held to have been denied due process of law and equal protection of the laws, as guaranteed by the constitution.

Many persons opposed to lynching doubt the effectiveness of legislation to meet the evil. These persons point out that lynchings occur, and go unpunished, in many states with anti-lynching laws of their own. It is argued also that if jurors in a state court will not vote to punish lynchers, jurors in a federal court in the same community may well take the same position. To which advocates of a federal law retort that it might minimize lynchings even if it did not fully prevent them.

The number of lynchings in the first 11 months of 1934 was 17. This was fewer than in 1933, but more than in 1932, which was the low water mark. The trend is rather steadily toward fewer lynchings. In the last 45 years, more than one-third of the victims of lynchings were accused of murder, and less than one-fourth of rape or attempted rape. The proportion of lynchings has been lower in the so-called Black Belt, where negroes are in the majority, than in counties with less than one-fourth negro population.

ALBANY, N. Y.
NEWS

FEB 19 1935

Adopt Lynch Law

THE United States government has proved its efficiency in the battle against kidnapers and gangsters when it had opportunity under the law to act. The federal government, under the Wagner-Costigan bill, would have opportunity to aid materially in stamping out lynching in this country. There are some prospects now that this bill may be passed. Lynching is one of the worst of crimes. It constitutes, as Senator Wagner said, "almost every type of infamy that blots the record of civilization."

One of the weakest points has always been that too often local authorities condone lynching. In many cases there have been no prosecutions although the ringleaders of lynching mobs were known and evidence was plentiful as to their culpability. County officers have been reluctant to move against their neighbors who have taken part in lynchings. Many lynchings have been condoned and there has been no redress.

Under the proposed law severe penalties are prescribed for lynchers and not only for the actual lynchers but for officers who conspire with mobs or fail to protect prisoners, and also against counties where lynchings occur. It is proposed to make counties or civic divisions responsible for such lynchings. Counties might even be held liable for damages.

It is not expected that legislation only can curb lynching but a federal law will enable the government to act. It will make it impossible or difficult for any county authorities to condone mob law or to fail to prosecute. Mob law never will be curbed so long as local authorities refuse to take action against lynchers. Lynching has been, and continues to be, one of the blackest blots on the country. Other nations cannot understand why lynch law is tolerated in some states and why mob members who take the law into their own hands are not even prosecuted.

KINGSTON, N. Y.
LEADER

FEB 18 1935

CIVIC FORUM APPROVES ANTI-LYNCHING MEASURE

Resolution is Sent to President Asking Costigan—Wagner Bill Be Enacted

A resolution to be sent to President Roosevelt, asking that Congress enact the Costigan-Wagner bill now in the Senate in an effort to eliminate lynchings, was adopted yesterday at St. Mark's Civic Forum for Adult Education. The resolution points out that less than a dozen convictions have resulted although 5,068 persons have been lynched in the United States since 1882.

The letter to the President and the resolution follow:

Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt,

White House, Washington D. C.

Mr. President:

The following resolution unanimously adopted by the St. Mark's Civic Forum now in session, in the City of Kingston, County of Ulster, State of New York.

"WHEREAS: since 1882 there have been 5,068 persons lynched in the United States with less than a dozen convictions resulting therefrom, and, moreover that in each of these onvictions, only nominal prison terms were given lynchers; and furthermore during the year 1934, there was a total of eighteen lynchings, bring into the picture America's major crime—LYNCHING—which is a travesty on justice in our country, and

"WHEREAS: further miscarriage of justice should be prevented, now therefore:

"BE IT RESOLVED by the St. Mark's Civic Forum: that Congress is respectfully importuned to enact the Costigan-Wagner bill, which is now before that legislative body."

Professor Dumm Speaker

Professor Clarence Dumm, principal of Kingston high school, was the speaker at the session. He was introduced by the Rev. M. J. Broomes, pastor of the church and executive secretary of the conference.

Carrying out the thought of adult education, Professor Dumm said that while many persons believe their education is complete when they finish high school or college, this is really only the beginning of our lives, not only from the earning part but also from the educational.

"The mind is the greatest gift God has given us," he said, "and we must keep it active, receptive and in constant training." At the present time, he said, adults seem to be striving more for education than do the younger people. The depression is partly responsible for this, he said, as it has made so large a number of people idle, and also because the adults see how their opportunities can be increased.

Mr. Dumm pointed to Abraham Lincoln and Booker T. Washington as two examples of men who were forced to obtain practically all of their education after they had grown to manhood.

Athens, Ga., Banner-Herald
March 10, 1935

THE WAGNER-COSTIGAN BILL

An anti-lynching bill tinged with the days of reconstruction outrages has been introduced in the senate of the United States by Senators Wagner and Costigan. The bill contains many objectionable features, one in particular is that which requires counties in which lynchings occur to pay to the family of the victim a sum of money amounting to several thousand dollars. The aim and purpose of the bill is directed at the southern states, but, of course, is general in its application. While it is not expected that the bill will pass, yet it has received support from a number of Democratic senators, principally those representing northern states. The Republican contingent in the senate are solidly in favor of the bill.

The grand jury of the Superior court of Butts county has started the ball to rolling in opposition to the measure. In a resolution condemning the bill, the members of the jury, said:

"Resolved, that while we deplore lynchings and have no disposition to condone or excuse the same, still we feel this proposed bill is a direct violation and invasion of states's rights. We point with pride to our country's record in this regard, and feel we can safely rely upon our officers to do their duty in the future as they have in the past, in protecting all prisoners and affording them a fair and legal trial in our county. We also call special attention to the unfairness and, in our opinion, unconstitutionality, of a measure which makes a county liable for such large damages, whether the citizens of that county participated in the lynching or not; and can easily imagine the many injustices that might be engendered thereby. Further

"Resolved, we call upon our senators and representatives in Congress to vote in the negative and to use their influence in every possible way to prevent the passage of this unfair bill, which we feel is an unwarranted aspersion upon our officers and courts."

We presume that the two Georgia senators are opposed to the bill, and will so cast their votes when it is put on its passage. However, the grand jurymen of Butts county are to be commended for the manly way in which they went about showing to the world how they felt on a proposed law that would not improve conditions, but merely would cast aspersions on the people of this section of the country.

Such measures tend to revive the conditions that existed during the days of carpetbag rule following the closing of hostilities of the War Between the States. No good can come from the enactment of such a law, which is nothing more nor less than a breeder of strife and turmoil among a reunited and law-abiding nation.

Lynchings-1935.
Legislation Relating to.

5099

OSSINING, N. Y.
REGISTER
FEB 6 1935

Women Urge Passage Of Lynching Bill

Society Of Briarcliff Congregational Church Praises Measure

A letter of appreciation, signed by the members of the Woman's Society of the Briarcliff Congregational Church, has been sent to Senator Robert S. Wagner in support and praise of his efforts as co-author of the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill. A similar letter, seeking his support of the legislation, was sent to Senator Royal S. Copeland.

The letter reads:

"The undersigned women of the Woman's Society of the Briarcliff Congregational Church wish to express their appreciation to you in supporting the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill in the Congress of the United States.

"The recent manifestations of lynching have not only been a disgrace; they have been downright barbarous.

"We are frankly concerned for those who are lynched and their relatives and friends, and for those who by reason of color are forever in danger of being lynched; but more fundamentally we are concerned with basic human rights and justice, for lynching is vastly more than a crime; it threatens the very foundations of our nation.

"We therefore welcome and applaud your leadership in placing upon the Federal Government the responsibility of guaranteeing to American citizens their legal and human rights and of holding such states accountable wherever and whenever those rights are trespassed upon and violated for any reason, real or imagined, by a mob of misguided men and, we are ashamed to say, women who presume to take the law into their own hands.

"With admiration for this evidence of your social vision for which we have repeatedly had reasons for rejoicing, we remain,

"Respectfully and gratefully yours"

The signatures on the letters include: Jessie W. Schuman, Hazel B. Brady, Frieda J. Kossow, Mrs. Henry H. Law, Josephine C. Bishop, Mrs. J. Harold Whitson, Mary J. Minshall, Nellie M. Heyer, Azda E. Courreges, Margaret Wright North, Helen Fetzer, Jennie Baker, Marie Applegate and Edith Lehner.

PATERSON, N. J.
CALL
FEB 6 1935

Asks Congress To Curb Mobs

New Jersey Assembly Seeks To Prevent Violence And Lynching

Trenton, Feb. 5 (AP)—A resolution calling upon congress to enact laws to prevent lynching and mob violence was passed by the New Jersey assembly today at the request of J. Mercer Burrell, Negro assemblyman from Newark.

Asserting 4,000 lives had been lost in lynchings in the United States during the past 50 years, Burrell told the assembly it was time congress took steps to "stamp out this national blot."

The senate passed a bill by John C. Barbour, of Passaic, majority leader, to authorize the presiding supreme court justice in any county to call on the attorney general to take over any part of a criminal prosecution. Under present law, where the attorney general goes into a county he must entirely supplant the prosecutor.

Other bills passed by the senate included:

Woodruff, Camden—To provide that condemnation commissioners shall value property for highway purposes when the court of chancery refuses to enforce agreements between the state highway commission and property owners.

Woodruff—To forbid workmen from returning any part of wages to employers in order to secure or retain employment on public works projects and make such demands on the part of employers a violation of the crimes act.

Leap, Salem—To allow local governing bodies and the highway commission to grant permission to railroad companies to maintain warning signals at highway and railroad intersections, and legalize existing signaling devices.

Leap—To require that copies of governmental reports be filed in the state library for purposes of centralization.

Reeves, Mercer — To fix new schedule of fees for licensing private dectectives, so they would pay $100 a year instead of $150 every five years.

Reeves—To increase fines for overloaded vehicles on interstate bridges from $100 to $250 for first offense and $250 to $500 for subsequent offenses.

Powell, Burlington—To provide that auditors of third class counties be named by the board of freeholders instead of elected.

Powell—To shorten the hunting season for foxes as set forth previously.

Bills passed by the assembly included:

Barbour—To extend to April 1, 1935, the law permitting counties and municipalities to issue bonds covering arrearages in state road

King, Morris—To perfect title to tax and soldiers' bonus payments, land sold by the quartermaster general's department.

Stout, Hudson—To authorize mortgage cancellation upon authorization by federal agencies.

Giuliano, Essex—To permit the showing of dogs with cropped ears provided they belong to non-residents.

Rafferty, Middlesex—To vest title to real and personal property of insolvent foreign corporations in resident receivers.

Paul, Essex—To require approval of banking and insurance commissioner for the reinsuring by life insurance companies of outstanding risks or policy obligations.

Jamieson, Mercer—To prescribe methods for discharging mechanics' liens.

Pascoe, Union—To provide that police and fire department economy dismissals shall be from members most recently appointed.

Kerner, Union—To allow informers in gaming cases five per cent of penalty recovered, balance to go to county.

Goldberg, Essex—To require that wage payments have prior claim on company's income.

BLOUNT RESOLUTION ENDORSED BY N.A.A.C.P. OF TOPEKA AND K. C., ALSO LINCOLN AND DOUGLASS CLUB

The Kansas City, Kansas local branch of the NAACP, went on record last Sunday endorsing the Blount Resolution, which passed the House last Friday without a dissenting vote, and is now awaiting consideration in the Kansas Senate. House Concurrent resolution No. 10, a resolution memorializing Congress to pass the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, was introduced by Representative Blount during the early part of last week.

The Kansas City Branch of the NAACP sent Prof. G. A. Gregg, president of Western university, to lobby the Senate, to concur the House Resolution. Many letters and telegrams have been received by the State Senators from all parts of the state. If this resolution is adopted, it will be the first state in the Union to pass a resolution urging the passage of the Costigan-Wagner Bill, and will no doubt be an incentive for other states to follow this action.

TALLAHASSEE, FLA.
DEMOCRAT
FEB 12 1935

Innocent Will Pay

The family of a person lynched in any county of the United States would be able to recover damages of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000, if an anti-lynching bill proposed in the senate by Senator R. F. Wagner, of New York, should become a law, and the money to pay the judgment of the court would come out of the county treasury.

The unjust feature of this measure is that it would require the taxpayers, including those disapproving of lynchings, to pay for a thing over which they had no control.

South Carolina has a law requiring the county in which a person is lynched to pay the family of the deceased a sum of $2,000. No action in court is required, the payment is mandatory and the taxpayers in general are taxed to secure the money.

It seems like a far cry from state's rights for the federal government to enact a measure that would require taxing the people of any county in the United States to pay a lynched man's family damages.—Sarasota Herald.

Write Your Three Letters Now to Help End Lynching

Have you written your three letters to the two United States senators from your state and the representative from your district urging them to vote for the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill?

Last week many widely known individuals, practically all of whom are white, appeared before the senate judiciary sub-committee hearing on the Costigan-Wagner bill. They urged the law-makers to pass the measure without delay, calling lynching "a blot upon civilization."

You may not be called upon to testify before the senate committee but you can make your voice heard by spending nine cents to urge your senators and representatives to make this anti-lynching bill a law.

Several persons have already sent their names to us as we requested, indicating they have sent their letters. They are included in THE CALL's roll of honor. But that is the least important part of it. We are hoping that you will shower your congressmen with letters—and your names should be legion—from a high sense of duty, loyalty and self-defense.

Any citizen who doesn't care enough to put forth some small effort to help save himself from this savage monster of lynching doesn't deserve the name.

Address your letters to senators at the Senate Office building, Washington, D. C. For Missouri, the two senators are Bennett C. Clark and Harry S. Truman; for Kansas, Arthur Capper and George McGill; for Oklahoma, Elmer Thomas and Thomas P. Gore; for Arkansas, Joseph T. Robinson and Hattie W. Caraway.

Your city or county clerk will give you the name of your representative. Send those three letters now. Don't delay!

ROLL OF HONOR

THE CALL is happy and gratified at the response shown by its readers who have written their senators and representative urging them to vote for the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

When you write your three letters to Washington, notify us wherever you are, and we will be glad to place your name on this roll of honor.

Here is the first list:

Robert Artemah Brown, Weleetka, Okla.

Otis K. Harris, Frankfort, Kas.

William R. Ferguson, Kansas City, Mo.

Richard R. Walker, Kansas City Mo.

Roland Locke, Kansas City, Mo.

Harold W. Johnson, Kansas City Mo.

Lucius Stewart, Kansas City Kas.

Rodger Frazier, Kansas City, Mo.

Ollie Beams Sr., Kansas City, Kas.

Mrs. Bessie Davis, Hannibal, M

Henry C. Green, Platte City, M

R. H. Johnson, Northe Platt Nebr.

Birmingham, Ala. Post
February 20, 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL OPPOSED IN GEORGIA

Legislators Assert Measure Is 'Reflection On South'

By United Press.

ATLANTA, Feb. 20.—Branding the measure as a violation of state rights and a reflection on Southern citizens and officials, the Georgia House of Representatives today was on record as opposing congressional passage of the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill.

The resolution said that the bill, pending before Congress, permits Federal intervention "in the enforcement of local criminal laws."

NEW YORK TIMES

FEB 24 1935

'SENATE' AT VASSAR VOTES FOR LEAGUE

'Bilbo' Surprises Delegates by Backing Anti-Lynching Bill, Also Adopted.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Feb. 23.—Student members of the "Model Senate" meeting at Vassar College today ratified a resolution to bring the United States into the League of Nations and voted for "unemployment assurance." The latter measure was approved only after it had been rewritten and subjected to a forty-minute argument from the floor. Anti-lynching legislation also was approved.

The "Model Senate," organized by the Political Association of Vassar College, received recognition from President Roosevelt.

In a letter to Virginia J. Canavan, chairman of the committee, the President expressed the opinion "that this project should be of real value nationally as well as to the universities participating. Without a doubt it should go far toward giving the youth of our country insight into the intricacies of present-day government."

The delegates, from twenty-six colleges, voted to make the senate a permanent body, with annual sessions at different colleges.

Miss Canavan was named president of a continuation committee. A vice president will be selected from the university where the senate will convene next year.

Miss Margaret Lacy of the New Jersey College for Women was named secretary and Clark Vogel of Rutgers was made treasurer.

A committee-at-large includes Miss Carnzu Clark of Vassar, John Turner of Princeton, Carl Jensen of Hamilton and Leonard Meeker of Amherst.

"Bilbo" Backs Lynching Bill.

A question arose among the delegates today as to whether or not it is wise to have the delegates attempt to carry out the policies of their political counterparts.

Clark Vogel of Rutgers, cast in the rôle of Bilbo of Mississippi, voted in favor of the anti-lynching bill, which all agreed was out of character. Mr. Vogel's action, however, was met with cheers from the gallery.

Arthur J. Reeves Jr. of Princeton, impersonating Vice President Garner of Texas as presiding officer, pushed business along to accord with the time schedule for the day. Final action on bills was taken this afternoon at the last session.

The first sign of Senatorial displeasure occurred this afternoon. The bill providing for employment assurance was drawn by the majority members of the financial committee and read on the floor.

The minority members objected strenuously to the form of the bill and for forty minutes arguments flew back and forth to the accompaniment of hisses, boos and cheers from the gallery.

Finally, the majority report was overruled and the minority report accepted. Minority members withdrew from the floor and wrote a new bill which was conditionally passed just before adjournment.

Graduated Taxes Proposed.

This measure guarantees employment assurance for all workers from the ages of 18 to 65, whose yearly income does not exceed $3,000, with a minimum weekly payment of $10 and $20 additional for each dependant.

It was proposed to pay this money from the funds, the first of which would be used for the first fifteen weeks of unemployment and would come from a 3 per cent tax on payrolls. The second fund would be used for benefits paid to workers after the first fifteen weeks and would be raised by graduated taxes on individual incomes and corporations' surpluses.

The Anti-Lynching Bill was passed with hardly a dissenting voice. This bill would make it a Federal offense to incite or participate in lynching if the State within which the lynching occurs does not take steps within thirty days to prosecute the crime.

Individuals responsible for death by lynching would be guilty to the maximum penalty of the State; the penalty for inciting a mob to lynching would be not less than one year or more than life imprisonment; members of a mob inflicting property damage in connection with lynching would be imprisoned for not less than six months or more than five years.

Every county in which a lynching takes place would be held liable for damages ranging from $2,000 to $10,000, the damages to be paid to the victim's estate.

Arguments for and against adherence to the League were similar to those made on the floor of the Senate in Washington.

Economic nationalism was advocated and opposed, but when the vote was polled, dummy voting being allowed, it was found the ratification had been approved by a full two-thirds majority.

"Huey" Is Centre of Attraction.

By The Associated Press.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Feb. 23.—"Huey Long" and a 180-pound bodyguard are the centre of attraction of the "model Senate" at Vassar College today.

"Huey Long" was impersonated by Harold K. Ellis Jr. of Pheonixville, Pa., a senior at Lehigh University. His bodyguard is George D. Manson, also from Lehigh. Mr. Manson, when he was not "Huey's" bodyguard, doubled as "Senator Overton" from Louisiana.

For the benefit of reporters "Senator Long" explained his "share the wealth" program. "Put more tax on those big oil companies; pile it on heavy on the rich." As for Jim Farley: "He can't scare me. I ain't no stamp collector."

Mr. Ellis admits he is enjoying the rôle of "Senator Long." "Gives me a feeling of importance," he explained.

GREENVILLE, TEX.
EVENING BANNER

FEB 18 1934

Anti-Lynching Law

Pending is a proposal to enact a federa law regarding lynching, the object being, o course, to prevent them. States righters, most ly of the South, will immediately resent fed eral interference with a purely Southern crime; not that the crime ought not to be curbed, but that it is a matter for the states wherein the crime occurs.

So far as that is concerned, it is a state natter, but the states guilty of permitting ynchings to continue to be black spots on Americanism's record to do nothing about prevention nor even punishment after crime. Why? You know the answer; timidity in going into tournament with mob rule; law officers' fearfully cringing before a form of insane anarchy.

Will a federal law be able to cope better with a human aberration than a state law? A federal law unenforcable can and will be no more efficacious in dealing with otherwise law-abiding, even if cowardly, criminals than an unenforcable state law.

Lynchings—1935
Legislation Relating to

5100

Senator Black Hits DePriest and National Association

Congressman Mitchell Termed Different; Alabama Senator Has Praise Also for Tuskegee; Says Dr. Moton Hasn't Endorsed Costigan Bill.

WASHINGTON. — Senator Black (Dem. Ala.) said the anti-lynching bill was backed by a group whose purpose was to stir up strife between the races.

Without mentioning the NAACP by name, he said members of this group were only anxious to draw their salaries and raise funds to pay themselves.

Hits at DePriest

He referred to ex-Congressman DePriest as one who had gone abroad raising the torch of prejudice, passion and hate and his successor Congressman Mitchell was different.

Tuskegee Praised

Black praised Tuskegee, Booker Washington, Dr. R. R. Moton and Dr. George Carver and told of their fine relationships with Southern white people. He intimated that these people were different from Mr. DePriest and the NAACP.

Senator Bankhead said he was sure Dr. Moton didn't favor the anti-lynching bill, had never read it or endorsed and would not endorse it.

Senator Costigan pointed out Tuesday that Dr. Moton was a vice-president of the Southern Interracial Commission, which, this week, endorsed Congressional action against lynching.

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y.
GAZETTE
APR 26 1935

THREAT OF FILIBUSTER

Southern senators generally resent the sectional reflection in the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill on the ability and willingness of their states to enforce their statutes in the face of mob terrorism. Some of these senators personally deplore lynchings even for "the unmentionable crime." Privately they might admit that official laxness is, in many instances, making lynchings possible. But against a bill that would lay heavy fiscal and prison penalties on law officialdom in the South they are adamant.

The threat of a prolonged filibuster against this measure at a time when the senate is in a legislative jam with the bonus, the banking bill, social securities legislation and other measures yet to be acted upon is a serious thing. It rests upon a condition, not a theory. That condition is deeply imbedded sectional pride.

It is beside the question to argue with opponents of the bill that resolute law enforcement by any state will preclude the operation there of an anti-lynching law. Though most of its opponents believe the bill is unconstitutional, and if it became law would be thrown out by the highest court, they are determined that no senate vote shall be taken to discredit their section.

In such a impasse Senator Costigan will be unwise to press his bill. It would invite a filibuster to protect the repute of the South would be found some senators otherwise eager to go along with the administration's program. However meritorious the measure may seem to its supporters in the light of weak surrenders to the mob spirit in many sections of the South, defeat of major legislation at this time is too great a price to pay for a persistence that cannot win in any event.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
APR 19 1935

Sen. Smith's View of Justice Is Bit False, They Think

Editor, The News:

AFTER reading certain statements of Sen. Smith, of South Carolina, concerning the Costigan anti-lynching bill, I fail to understand how he can maintain that "some crimes" are outside the law.

The Senator intimates that he considers lynching a "just penalty" for some crimes. I cannot conceive there being anything "just" in taking a man from authorities or from jail and murdering him. Smith has a strange conception of justice.

MOUTON COOPER.

Editor, The News:

THE Senator from South Carolina, who stated that the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill is "a reflection on the South," surely did not think before he spoke.

If he had, I am certain that the outrages, the barbaric "festivals" which have taken place there, would have struck him as being the greater "reflection" on the South.

The passage of this bill, supported by southern congressmen, will do much to dim this pronounced "reflection."

EULALIA L. BOWIE.

McGILL VOTES ON LYNCH BILL TO ADJOURN

Southerners Train Guns of Oratory Against Anti-Mob Measure

VOTERS WIRE McGILL

WASHINGTON. — Senator George McGill of Kansas, who voted Tuesday for adjournment during the filibuster that is being waged against the anti-lynching bill, was besieged with a flood of telegrams from Negroes in Kansas City, Kas., urging his support of the bill. If a motion for adjournment is carried the bill is automatically reversed to the bottom of the calendar.

Senator Carter Glass of Virginia and Senator Bankhead of Alabama were leaders in the filibuster Tuesday. Glass used the age old device of warning against the invasion of states rights.

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)—While most of Negro America and most of white America went about their daily duties last week, with little knowledge and conviction about the effort to have enacted a federal law as a deterrent to lynching, there was being staged in the United States senate here an historic battle, involving once more, the simple issue—justice to [illegible] men.

Day after day, from Wednesday on, the fight continued with the north and west lined up almost solidly on one side and the south just as solid on the other.

States Have Failed

The struggle was staged for and against the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill. In the face of 5,000 lynchings in the last 50 years, and the failure of the states to wipe out the crime, Senators Costigan of Colorado and Wagner of New York, both seek the enactment of a federal statute to enable the federal government to proceed against lynchers when mobs within the states have unlawfully usurped the powers of the states and committed murders.

But the issue, as stated here, is not so simple in the senate. There, after all, last week, one once more saw arrayed, the representatives of one section of the country which fought to keep Negroes in slavery and has since fought to degrade them in every manner possible. You saw men, still refusing to accord the Negro a status as a citizen and human being, busy defending the concept of their section which cannot accommodate itself to justice for the Negro and to the political supremacy of the white race at the same time.

Senator Ellison D. "Cotton Ed" Smith, South Carolina, best expressed the attitude of these southerners. He was willing to be frank. He believes in lynching. When the virtue of a white woman is in question and a culprit is suspect, Senator Smith is quite willing that a mob should murder him, that no white woman should be forced to come into court to prove that the suspect is guilty. Senator Smith "argues" that the anti-lynching bill is a "reflection" on the state and section of the country where lynching predominates.

Argument on Low Plane

But Senator Smith's southern colleagues recognize that such a "reflection" is not a powerful "argument." There was tacit agreement among them, therefore, that Senator Smith's "argument" was on a "low plane," although he was expressing the honest conviction of them all, and that such an "argument" would not get them very far. They therefore decided to mask their real "argument" and place the debate on a "high plane" of their own, ignoring, in so far as possible, the "low-grade" sallies of "Cotton Ed."

Banded together on the "high plane" were Senators Tom Connally of Texas, Black of Alabama and Bailey of North Carolina, backed by heavy, though for the time being, silent, reserves from the cotton states.

The "high plane" argument, believe it or not, was based upon:

First, state sovereignty.

Second, the United States constitution.

Third, the jeopardy of organized labor.

To describe the ramifications of these "arguments" as attenuated by the southern senators, would require more space than any newspaper can afford, but before touching lightly upon them, some of the other forces against which the advocates of the Costigan-Wagner bill have had to struggle, should be described.

Correspondents in Opposition

The most powerful opposition force has been the daily press of the nation, as represented in its Washington correspondents. Individual newspapers, throughout the nation, have endorsed the bill, but the Washington correspondents, during all of last week's battle cunningly contrived to keep the importance of the issue from the people of the country and belabored the sponsors of the measure by informing the public that they were obstructing other "more important" legislation.

The Washington correspondents gave much space to the "argument" of the southern opponents of the bill but very little to that of its sponsors. Senator Costigan spoke at length on the merits of the bill, but in the press dispatches received only one quoted line: "National evils demand national remedies." He addressed himself to the constitutionality of the measure, to the question of the invasion of states' rights, and to the probable use of the law in labor disputes.

What the southerners said on these issues was freely quoted by the correspondents, but nothing of what both Senators Wagner and Costigan had to say. In fact, except in the New York papers, nothing was quoted from Senator Wagner's speech. And this is the same Wagner whose bills in behalf of labor have received so much public print.

The Washington correspondents completely ignored the avalanche of telegrams and other messages which poured in on senators from all sections and all groups within the country, attesting the importance of the Costigan-Wagner bill in relation to other measures before the senate. They deliberately played it down and apparently sought to incite the public to demand the sidetracking of the lynching measure for other proposed legislation.

Sought to Kill Bill

The attitude of the Washington correspondents probably had an administration bearing. In spite of insistent pleas from many sources, President Roosevelt declined to say one word for or against the Costigan-Wagner bill. The administration leaders in the senate deliberately sought on several occasions to kill the bill. Thus the correspondents knew that in playing the bill down, they were not going contrary to the wishes of he administration. They were following the wind straws.

At the same time that they implied that the anti-lynching measure was "in the way," they knew that one word from the President would have so weakened the opposition that the bill would have been speedily passed, and the way cleared for the so-called "must" legislation which the President pleaded for in his radio talk Sunday night.

The issue was placed squarely up to the President in a telegram sent by Charles Houston of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People Friday. He received no answer. All efforts on the part of Walter White, secretary of the N. A. A. C. P. to see the President failed.

Won't Offend the South

The President, by his action, definitely let it be known that he is not going to offend the South on an issue involving justice to Negroes. He took this position in spite of a majority in the senate which favored such justice.

All of the so-called "must" legislation, old age pensions, extension of NIRA, unemployment insurance and whatnot, were held up, not by Senators Costigan and Wagner, but by the southern oligarchy in the senate which declared in effect that the nation could go to ruin for other legislation before they would allow the anti-lynching bill to pass.

The picture of the America of today for the historian of the future is that of a few men, blinded by prejudice, fighting against a just measure in behalf of human beings, and at the same time, prolonging the suffering of millions by preventing the discussion of remedial legislation.

The most spectacular skirmish in the last week's battle occurred between Senator Connally of Texas, expressing constitutional objections to the measure, and Senator Clark of Missouri. Senator Costigan had already cited the constitutional authority of the measure in that section of the Fourteenth amendment which gives the congress authority to guarantee to every citizen the equal protection of the law, and enables it to pass appropriate legislation to enforce that guarantee. When citizens are lynched, in spite of the efforts of state authorities, he argued, they have not been given the equal protection of the law and Congress is expressly enabled to enact proper legislation.

Clark Takes Issue

However, Senator Clark took with poor grace the effort of Senator Connally to drag in the Constitution in oppostion to the effort to blo out lynching. He was amazed that Senator Connally had been able to ignore the Constitution for so long and on so many occasions and found it convenient only to use against the Costigan bill.

Senator Costigan nailed the issue of states' soverignty by pointing out that, under the terms of his bill, the federal government was only empowered to act after the states had failed or neglected to do so, and then, not against the states, but against lawless mobs which had taken over the authority of the states and against which the states had found themselves powerless.

The argument to the effect that the anti-lynching law was a threat to organized labor, was scotched with the publication in the Congressional Record of a resolution, passed by the American Federation of Labor, endorsing the bill. It was also pointed out that the laws against murder apply in instances of killings in labor disputes.

Significant among the friends of the Costigan-Wagner bill were Senators Barkley and Logan from Kentucky, and Senator Bachmann of Tennessee. Conspicuous as opponents were Senator Dieterich, Illinois; Tydings, Maryland, a lynching state, and Norris of Nebraska, one of the old big timers in the senate.

White Women Repudiate Smith

The fight of the southerners to beat the bill, however, brought new support to it. The Southern interracial commission, which had been wavering, released to the press Friday an endorsement of the measure. Southern white women's groups, aroused by Senator Smith's "defense" of them, repudiated him in scores of telegrams dispatched to the senate.

Thus in spite of the verbal pyrotechnics of Smith, Bailey, Connally and others, when the opposition forces moved in to kill the measure Friday, they found themselves up against a brick wall. Senator Robinson, Arkansas, moved to adjourn the senate over the week-end, in an effort to kill the bill as pending legislation when the body reconvened Monday Monday. He was unsuccessful. By a vote of 34 to 33 the senators rejected his motion.

The senate was therefore recessed until Saturday. Again the motion to adjourn was made. But Saturday, it met worse defeat 37 to 28, showing conclusively that if the measure is ever allowed to come to a vote, it will become law, barring the President's veto.

Senator Dieterich's opposition to the bill will probably cause a bitter fight against him in Illinois. He has objected to some of the penalties in the bill, but instead of lending his influence to improvements in the measure, his action of last Friday and Saturday in voting to kill it by adjourpment, stamped him as being definitely opposed to it, and uninterested personally in any legislation to combat the lynching evil. He has already offended his constituents by his vote on the World court. Serving his first term in the senate, his stand on that issue and his stand on the lynching bill, are certain to seriously jeopardize his chances for re-election.

SENATE HOLDS FIRM FOR LYNCHING TEST

Southerners' Plan to Adjourn and Thereby Sidetrack Bill Is Defeated Again, 37 to 28.

CONCEDE ACT COULD WIN

Meanwhile, Filibuster Snags Bonus and All Other Legislation, Confusing Leaders.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 27.—Southern Senators, fighting desperately the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, were beaten back by a vote of 37 to 28 today, when, as on yesterday, they tried to adjourn the Senate and, by this parliamentary move, throw the bill into the discard for the rest of this session.

Their defeat left the legislative program in a confused and disturbing state, for immediately afterward, by a vote of 49 to 10, the Senate recessed with Senator Costigan's motion to take up the disputed bill still in preferred position, with soldiers' bonus advocates demanding quick action on their measure, and with a Southern "battalion of death" swearing that the Costigan motion must never reach a vote.

Debate leading up to the recess was characterized by amusing incidents and parliamentary suggestions, in a Senate reminiscent of times of "the old days." Once Mr. Connally, without a smile upon his face, tried to amend Senator Costigan's motion to bring up the anti-lynching bill by substituting "HR3896," the title of the bonus bill, for "S24," the title of the Costigan-Wagner measure.

Other Bills Seen Blocked.

Vice President Garner, Senator Robinson, the Democratic leader, and other parliamentary experts hold that the Costigan motion must be disposed of before the bonus can be taken up.

Senators Costigan and Wagner are willing to have the bonus considered if they first can have a record vote on bringing their measure up for debate.

But Southerners, including Senator Bailey of North Carolina, Smith of South Carolina, Trammell of Florida, Black of Alabama, Bilbo of Mississippi and Connally of Texas announced that they would never consent to this vote.

Democratic leaders strove to smooth out the inter-party dissension, Mr. Robinson urging the Senate to vote on the Costigan motion, then temporarily lay aside the lynching bill and proceed with the bonus debate. His words had no effect. As soon as he made this formal proposal, Mr. [illegible] said sharply:

"I object."

Tonight the leaders were trying to "call off" the more militant Southerners, but, armed with books, documents, and even Bible, Mr. Bailey and his forces were prepared to talk indefinitely, they said. One of them stated in a private conversation that his ranks hoped to "keep the feet of the bill's backers right up to the fire" until the nation's veterans could bring pressure for consideration of the bonus bill.

The surprising strength of the support for the Costigan-Wagner bill was readily conceded by its bitterest antagonists.

Foes Admit Bill Could Win.

They agreed that if it came to a direct vote the bill would win in the Senate, and therefore they said they would use every strategy to present such a test, battling to prevent even a vote on the motion to take it up, despite the fac that it might then be laid aside for other business.

Democratic leaders are willing to permit the vote on the motion, believing that even if the bill had a preferred status it could constantly be shoved aside for other business and not be acted on before the session closed. The bonus, they argue, will consume days of debate, while discussion of the Naval Bill, NRA, AAA amendments and other pressing bills is looming in the background.

Frm othe galleries today it appeared that the leaders' plan was to allow the bill to be taken up formally without a record vote, as a roll call might place some Senators in an extremely disadvantageous attitude. But this plan, offered in the midst of an hour-and-a-half session, produced only defiance from the extreme opponents of the bill.

Further debate on the bill Monday seems almost certain, but by the end of that day, some compromise may be reached whereby the Bonus Bill can be brought to the front. Meanwhile, Democratic chiefstains will try to compose differences within their ranks, to calm the extremists, and to check recalcitrants, such as Senators Bachman of Tennessee and Barkley and Logan, both of Kentucky, who voted against Mr. Robinson's motion to adjourn.

Roll-Call on Adjourning.

Today's roll-call vote on the motion to adjourn, made by Senator Robinson, was as follows:

FOR ADJOURNMENT—38.

Democrats—26.

Adams	Dieterich	Robinson
Bailey	Fletcher	Russell
Bankhead	Glass	Shepard
Bilbo	Gore	Smith
Black	Harrison	Thomas
Brown	Hatch	(Okla.)
Bulow	King	Thomas
Byrnes	Lonergan	(Utah)
Caraway	Radcliffe	Trammell
Connally
Cousens

Republicans—1.

Shipstead

Farmer-Labor—1.

AGAINST ADJOURNMENT—37.

Democrats—22.

Ashurst	Donahey	Neely
Bachman	Hayden	O'Mahoney
Barkley	Lewis	Schwellenbach
Bone	Logan	Truman
Bulkley	McCarran	Van Nuys
Burke	Minton	Walsh
Copeland	Murphy
Costigan	Murray

Republicans—15.

Austin	Hale	Nye
Borah	Hastings	Schall
Capper	Johnson	Steiwer
Frazier	Keyes	Vandenberg
Gibson	McNary	White

PAIRS.

For adjournment — Reynolds, McKellar, Overton, Tydings, George, Duffy, Gerry, Byrd, Democrats; Norris, Republican.

Against adjournment — Wagner, Moore, Clark, Guffey, Democrats; Barbour, Townsend, Carey, Metcalf, Republicans; LaFollette, Progressive.

Lynchings-1935
Legislation Relating to.

5101

CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER

FEB 11 1935

2,000 BACK U. S. ANTI-LYNCH BILL

Mass Meeting Hears Bishop Schrembs, Walter White and Rabbi Rosenthal.

Bishop Joseph Schrembs, Rabbi Rudolph M. Rosenthal, Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and other speakers urged support for the Costigan-Wagner federal anti-lynching bill in a mass meeting attended by 2,000 persons in Public Music Hall yesterday afternoon.

A resolution in favor of the bill was unanimously adopted. Hearings will begin Thursday before a subcommittee of the Senate judiciary committee. The rally was sponsored by the Cleveland branch of the N. A. A. C. P.

Bishop Schrembs called lynching "the crime that cries to heaven for vengeance."

"Surely the blood spilled by the lynching mob cries to heaven with a thousand times the strength of the blood of Abel, killed by his brother Cain in the first crime," the bishop said.

"If it is true that a sixteen-year-old youth recently convicted of murder, was the product of a social system he was in no way responsible for, then it must also be true of the poor Negro, who perhaps has gone wrong. Society, when it undertakes to punish him by lynching, is committing the most terrible crime on earth, the crime of deliberate murder.

"You are assembled here to appeal to Congress and the president to apply all forces of the law to bring justice to your people," he went on. "The Costigan-Wagner bill is a decisive step in the war against injustice: I am with you heart and soul in your fight to wipe out the menace of lynching."

White, who at one time in his investigation of lynchings in the south had a price put on his head, said the chief opposition to the Costigan-Wagner bill was coming from southern senators and congressmen.

"They do not approve lynching," he said, "but they are afraid of what their constitutents at home will say.

"Because of the key positions southern senators and congressmen hold on committees, the Costigan-Wagner bill may lose unless you raise your voices and demand its passage.

"During the time the Costigan-Wagner bill was up for consideration by Congress last year, not one lynching took place anywhere in the United States. But when Congress adjourned in June without taking action the bars were down, and fourteen Negroes were lynched between June and December of last year.

"Huey Long, speaking of a lynching in his state late last year, said 'They slipped that one over on us. They will continue slipping lynchings over on the American people unless we take active measures to stop it.'

"I bring you support from a people that has itself long known persecution," Rabbi Rosenthal said. "The Jewish people are as anxious as the Negroes that the crime of lynching be wiped out."

Frank W. Sotak, president of the All-Nations League, and Rev. W. H. McKinney of Antioch Baptist Church were other speakers.

Negro spirituals were sung by a group of choruses from colored churches and the Central High School a capella choir.

Kansas Legislature Urges Passage of Anti-Lynching Bill

TOPEKA.—The Kansas house of representatives in session here adopted last week a resolution urging passage of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill pending before congress in Washington, according to Representative W. M. Blount from the eighth district. action will be relayed to Kansas representatives and senators in Washington.

Approval of this legislation is being sought this week in the state senate.

House members were unanimous in voicing sentiment for the measure.

Lynch Evil Worse Than Communism, Senate Told

COMPLETES HEARING ON BILL

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 22.—"I think the forces which bring about lynching in this country are more dangerous than the activites of the few Communists we hear so much about," declared Representative-at-large Caroline O'Day (D.) of New York, testifying before the Senate Judiciary subcommittee Thursday in support of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill. The Congresswoman, who was born in Georgia presented the woman's view on lynching, asserting that l... law is uncivilized and is responsible for the loss of A... prestige abroad.

Another star witness was H. L. Mencken, the celebrated critic who said "no government pretending to be civilized can go on condoning such atrocities Either it must make every possible effort to put them down, or it must suffer the scorn and contempt of Christendom." He suggested that "the best plan will be to make a beginning by passing that bill, and then waiting for the proper courts to pass upon it..... Nothing can be accomplished until an actual experiment is undertaken."

Senator Guffey Appears

In addition to Senators Edward P. Costigan and Robert F. Wagner, co-authors of the bill and Representative Thomas F. Ford of California who presented it in the House, Senator Joseph Guffey, the new Democratic senator from Pennsylvania, appeared voluntarily and declared the bill had his wholehearted support. Others who spoke were W. E. Woodward, noted author and chairmna of the Writer's League Against Lynching, who expressed the belief that anti-lynching sentiment in the South was growing; Vice-Dean Charles H. Houston of the Howard University law school and Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People which with other organizations, is actively sponsoring the bill.

"Lynching Open Anarchy"-Costigan

"Lynching is a flagrant violation of not one but many constitutional rights," Senator Costigan testified. "It is open anarchy." In urging passage of the bill, he reviewed events which had happened since a year ago when the first bill was introduced, and pointed to the coincidence that while it was pending in the Senate there were no lynchings but that when Congress adjourned without doing anything about it 14 lynchings took place at the rate of one a week.

Dean Houston scored the Department of Justice and the Attorney General for inactivity in connection with the Claude Neal kidnap-lynching and attributed mob rule in the South to basic economic causes.

Citing separate lynchings which

Lynch Evil Worse Than Communism

Continued from Page 1

he said "constitute almost every type of infamy that blot the record of civilization." Senator Wagner declared that "The plea that the lynching problem can be solved by local authority alone is a travesty upon reason and experience. There is no local authority when sober public sentiment is engulfed in the passions of the mob and when officers of the law condone it if they do not connive in the subversion of law to lawlessness. That is why we need a federal anti-lynching law."

Walter White testified that "it is evident beyond any question now that only federal legislation can cope with the lynching evil." He sharply criticized reactionary and radical forces opposing the bill, declaring that the former consisted mainly of lynchers and the latter of insincere agitators. He scoffed at the fear expressed by some people that a federal anti-lynching law might be used against labor and pointed to the endorsement of the bill by the American Federation of Labor.

WHEELING, W. VA.
REGISTER

FEB 13 1935

The Anti-Lynching Bill

There are many evils which not only cannot be cured by the simple process of passing a statute forbidding them, but which on the contrary may even be aggrevated by such a statute if it undertakes to go too far, or does not deal with the matter in a practical way.

Drinking and gambling belong in that class, but lynching certainly does not. Everyone must agree that the severest possible laws against lynching would be entirely justified; and that the passage of severe laws against lynching could not possibly have the effect of encouraging the perpetration of such crimes.

Public sentiment against lynching should also be built up. But in this case the passing and enforcement of laws cannot in any way conflict with public sentiment. Severe laws should be passed and should be enforced. The Costigan-Wagner bill, which is now before Congress again, should be passed. It has been pointed out that there was a decrease in lynching when this bill was up for consideration before; and that the crime increased during the time when the bill was shelved. This may of course have been merely a coincidence. But the fact remains that in the interest of law and justice, the Costigan-Wagner bill should be passed. And it would not be amiss to mention this fact to any of your representatives in Washington with whom you may happen to be communicating.

CLEVELAND, O.
NEWS

FEB 19 1935

Council Approval Asked On Anti-Lynching Bill

A resolution will be introduced into council next Monday night asking that it go on record in favor of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, now before Congress. Councilman Finkle is sponsor.

This is the second piece of social legislation to come before council in the last two weeks, it having recently asked the state legislature to repeal the criminal syndicalism law.

BOSTON, MASS.
Christian Science Monitor

FEB 16 1935

Wagner-Costigan 'Alliance' Pushing Anti-Lynching Bill

Measure Calls for Federal Action Against Mobs When States Fail To

Special from Monitor Bureau

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16—Senators Robert F. Wagner (D) of New York and Edward P. Costigan (D) of Colorado, co-authors of the latest anti-lynching bill, are good friends. They see eye-to-eye on most things, and occasionally get their heads together—in fact, get them very close together, indeed—as during the incident in this week's hearings of the special committee when the bellicose Henry L. Mencken appeared as witness. Mr. Mencken was in favor of the bill and gave energetic testimony in behalf of it.

Senate committee hearings are frequently informal affairs and dignified legislators occasionally are not above whispering advice in the handling of testimony from the one to the other. In this particular committee, Senator Frederick Van Nuys (D) of Indiana is chairman. Though there are moments of relaxation in almost every congressional inquiry, the sponsors of this one are deeply serious. Lynching in America is on the wane; Senators Wagner and Costigan, along with Mr. Mencken, hope to give it a final coup de grace by new federal legislation.

The same bill was reported favorably to the Senate last year by the Judiciary Committee but failed to get a vote. The bill was backed by President Roosevelt who declared, in his annual message, "Crimes of organized banditry, cold-blooded shooting, lynching and kidnaping have threatened our security." Bills similar to the present one have been introduced in every session of Congress since 1920, and in 1922 the Dyer anti-lynching bill passed the House by almost a 2-to-1 vote.

The pending bill would give federal courts authority to try members of a mob if state officers fail to prosecute or if jurors are manifestly opposed to punishment. These two conditions are held to be met automatically if no effort has been made to indict or prosecute guilty parties 30 days after mob violence. Any county in which mob violence occurs is made subject to a fine of from $2000 to $10,000, to be paid the injured person or his estate. State employees failing to act against mob violence may be fined up to $5000 or imprisoned up to five years.

Arguments for the bill are obvious. Arguments against the bill are that lynching is gradually disappearing in any event, that federal courts are not likely to secure justice when state courts fail to do so, and that state anti-lynching laws have failed.

Conference

id-World

Senate Committee Debates Anti-Lynching Bill

Senators Edward P. Costigan (Left) of Colorado Having a Whispered Conversation With Senator Robert F. Wagner of New York as the Committee Chairman, Senator Frederick Van Nuys of Indiana, Looks On.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE

FEB 18 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING ADVOCATE TO GIVE ADDRESS

William Pickens, field secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, will speak on "Nationalism in America" tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock in First Unitarian Church.

The lecture is one of a series sponsored by the Rochester committee of the League for Industrial Democracy. A graduate of Talladega College and Yale University, recipient of honorary degrees from several American universities, Mr. Pickens is a former dean and vice-president of Morgan College, Baltimore.

For the past 15 years he has been actively identified with the work of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and has been a strong advocate of the anti-lynching bill.

DAYTON, O.
HERALD

FEB 23 1935

MR. MENCKEN ON LYNCHING

THE WAGNER-COSTIGAN BILL which would give the federal government power to impose severe penalties upon lynchers, upon officials who conspire with mobs or fail to protect prisoners from mobs, and upon counties where such lawlessness occurs, has drawn a large amount of comment. But no statement has seemed more to the point than that made by H. L. Mencken, the Baltimore columnist and former editor of the American Mercury, before a senate judiciary subcommittee. Assuming that federal action was necessary to check mob killings, Mr. Mencken said:

"The states are charged with punishing all such invasions of the common right of citizens, but some of them have failed to do so and others have not honestly tried. Meanwhile lynchings continue, and though they do not increase in number, they show a tendency to increase in savagery. * * * No government pretending to be civilized can go on condoning such atrocities."

Several other persons who testified at the senate hearing on the anti-lynching bill reported that people in foreign lands have the impression that the United States "condones lynching." The wonder is, after recalling recent mob acts that showed "a tendency to increase in savagery," that many more observers have not questioned our right to be considered a civilized nation.

LOWELL, MASS.
EVENING LEADER

MAR 4 1935

Before the Maryland legislature is a bill that is designed to put a check upon lynching. It would make the city of Baltimore or any county in the state in which a lynching occurred liable to the victim's estate in a sum ranging from $2000 to $10,000. It is argued that this would promote zeal for law enforcement against mob action. And it is urged that the family of a victim is entitled to some recompense for the failure of the state to protect him. Such a measure might tend to make officials zealous to do their full duty in discouragement of mob violence. But that it would serve to dampen the mob spirit is not so sure. One suspects that it would be of benefit chiefly as and if it operated to arouse general public sentiment against a relic of barbarism.

24th Anti-Lynching Bill in House

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The number of anti-lynching bills pending in this session of Congress has reached twenty-four. 3-16-35

The twenty-third was introduced by Representative Melvin C. Maas, Republican, of Minnesota, Monday, March 4, and the twenty-fourth by Representative Herman P. Kopplemann, Democrat, of Connecticut, last Friday.

Lynchings - 1935
Legislation Relating to.

5102

New York Herald-Tribune

FEB 15 1935

Hearing Speeds Senate Vote On Anti-Lynching Measure

Costigan Demands U. S. Curb on 'Open Anarchy'; Mencken Pleads for Test

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—An excoriation of lynching by H. L. Mencken and other witnesses today gave impetus to the drive for a Federal anti-lynching law.

Frederick Van Nuys, Democrat, of Indiana, chairman of a Senate judiciary subcommittee, predicted that his group would report the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill after Mr. Mencken, Baltimore writer, had said that no civilized government could "condone such atrocities." Senator Robert F. Wagner, Democrat, of New York, asserted that lynchings constituted "almost every type of infamy that blots the record of civilization." Senator Wagner and Senator Edward F. Costigan, Democrat, of Colorado, are co-authors of the bill.

Rewritten from the bill proposed last year, the measure prescribes severe penalties for lynchers, peace officers who conspire with mobs or fail to protect prisoners from riotous assemblages, and counties where such lawlessness occurs.

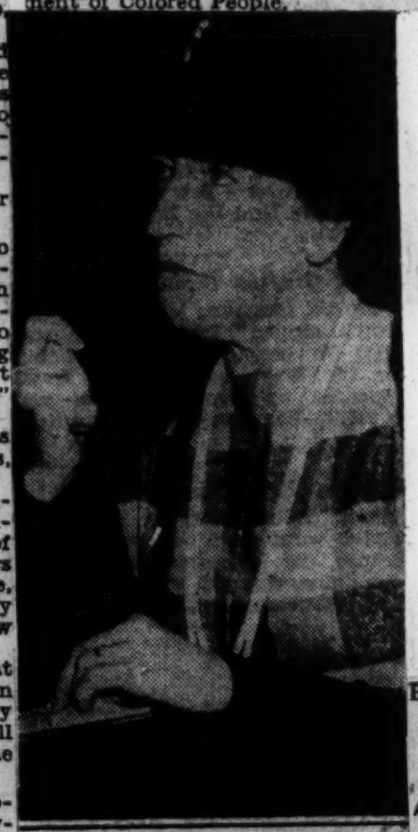
Lynching was described by Senator Costigan as "open anarchy."

Explaining that he could offer no opinion on the wisdom or the constitutionality of the bill, Mr. Mencken urged its enactment as an "experiment." "Even if the worst comes to the worst and we find that preventing lynching is actually impossible, that discovery will at least be something," he said.

Assuming that Federal action was necessary to check mob killings, Mencken said:

"The states are charged with punishing all such invasions of the common right of citizens, but some of them have failed to do so and others have not honestly tried. Meanwhile, lynchings continue, and though they do not increase in number they show a tendency to increase in savagery."

No opposition witnesses appeared at the one-day hearing, and Senator Van Nuys said that the measure probably would be recommended to the full committee soon, possibly with some slight changes in phraseology.



Senator Vincent H. Dieterich, Democrat, of Illinois, criticized the county-liability clause as making it possible to subject Chicago to damages "to indemnify gangland" when a gangster was taken for a ride. Senator Costigan then suggested a modification to make counties liable only where they did not exercise "due diligence."

"The record of the last five years is stained with the life blood of ninety-five unjudged victims, largely because local authority failed to prevent and failed to punish," said Senator Wagner.

"Legislation alone cannot quench the fires of intolerance and hate, but the speedy passage of this bill will rally and sustain all the forces of enlightenment in the United States."

With a small group of Negro educators and spectators in the committee room nodding approval, Representative Caroline O'Day, Democrat, of New York, a native of Savannah, Ga., told of a visit to South Africa, where, she said, the impression prevailed that the United States "condoned lynching."

Others supporting the bill were Representative Thomas F. Ford, Democrat, of California, who has introduced it in the House; W. E. Woodward, of the Writers League Against Lynching; and representatives of Howard University (Negro), of Washington, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Herald Tribune photo—Acme

Caroline O'Day, New York Representative, at yesterday's session of Senate subcommittee

Anti-Lynch Bill

In an editorial appearing in the Houston Post of the issue of February 16 it is pointed out that the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill, now awaiting the approval of the senate judiciary committee, came into being because of the failure of the states, mostly southern, to suppress mob violence.

The Houston Post's point is well taken.

The South will raise a storm of protest over some of the provisions of the Costigan-Wagner bill for various reasons, chief among which are provisions which penalize counties in which lynchings take place; and a consequent invasion of state's rights.

The INFORMER doubts that there ever would have been a Costigan-Wagner bill, or that any bill designed to eradicate lynching would have received the approval of the nation's highest law-making bodies, if lynching had not spread to sections in the north, and if white people had not been the victims of them.

However, only the South is to blame for the fact that lynchings of Nordics have taken place in the North in recent years; for the traditions of mob-violence have been gradually absorbed all over the country with a consequent disregard for law and the orderly process of the law.

If, apparently said our Northern cousins, Southern folks can lynch and burn people, so can we. And they did—only the victims of their mob-lust, in most cases, happened to be white.

It was then, and then only, that such a bill, as the Costigan-Wagner measure, came into being; and it was because of such things as recorded above that it will be passed.

If the Southern states had seen fit to suppress the crime of mob violence, it would not now be necessory to draft a measure which brings lynchings within Federal jurisdiction.

Birmingham, Ala., Age-Herald
February 15, 1935

LYNCHING OPPOSED

Approval Of Bill To Urge Stringent Penalties Sought

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14—(AP)—The United States was told Thursday by Henry L. Mencken, the writer, that "either it must make every possible effort" to stop lynchings "or suffer the scorn and contempt of Christendom."

He testified to a Senate judiciary subcommittee after Senator Costigan (D., Col.) had urged approval of his bill to impose stringent penalties against mob participants, officers who fail to protect prisoners and counties where lynchings occur.

Lynching was described by Costigan as "open anarchy."

Explaining he could offer no opinion on the wisdom or the constitutionality of the bill, Mencken urged its enactment as an "experiment."

NEW YORK JOURNAL

FEB 15 1935

LYNCH LAW HIT BY MRS. O'DAY

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—Women don't want to be protected by "the barbarous practice of lynching," Rep. Caroline O'Day (D), of New York, today had told a Senate Judiciary sub-committee hearing on the Wagner-Costigan anit-lynching bill.

Mrs. O'Day, for whom Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt campaigned last Fall, described herself as "a Southern woman" despite her New York residence. She declared:

"A few years ago I was in South Africa, and I visited all the towns on the east coast. The racial problem there is far more difficult than ours. But I cannot tell you the horror our lynchings evoke there, especially our policy of condoning such a barbarous practice."

The bill failed to reach the floor at the last session of Congress.

New York Herald-Tribune

FEB 13 1936

Anti-Lynch Bill Sponsor Cite Lincoln's Exampl

Wagner and Costigan Ask U. S to Help Race He Freed

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12 (AP).—Co authors of anti-lynching legislation pleaded with the nation tonight in memory of Abraham Lincoln to make effective by law his words, "with malice toward none."

Speaking over the Columbia Broadcasting System, Senators Edward P. Costigan, Democrat, of Colorado, from Washington, and Robert F. Wagner, Democrat, of New York, from New York, branded as appalling the number of lynchings in the United States.

"Within the lifetime of many of my listeners," Senator Costigan said, "more than 1,400 white men and women and about 3,700 Negroes, often for trivial, unproven offenses and without court trials or sentences, have been lynched in the United States."

Reviewing their proposed legislation, which he said had been studied carefully for any possible constitutional defects, Senator Costigan said it provided that:

Any state that fails or neglects to protect a person against mobs will be deemed to have denied equal protection of the law.

A peace officer failing to exercise diligence in protecting such persons will be liable for a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment for five years.

If a peace officer conspires to aid a mob, he will be liable for imprisonment from five to twenty-five years.

If a state fails to bring action against members of a mob within thirty days after the crime, judgment from $2,000 to $10,000 may be obtained in Federal courts by representatives of the wronged citizen.

Senator Wagner declared that lynching, "directed as it is chiefly against the race that he released from bondage, is a constant profanement of the shrine of Lincoln."

BOSTON, MASS.
POST

FEB 8 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING ACTION URGED

State Committee Would Strengthen U. S. Laws

Strict enforcement of the federal lynching law was recommended by the legislative committee on constitutional law at the State House yesterday in reporting favorably resolutions which will be sent to President Roosevelt and Congress.

The resolutions, based on the petition of Arthur R. Hall of Cambridge, state "Resolved that the General Court of Massachusetts respectfully represents to the President and Congress of the United States the necessity of the more strict enforcement of existing federal statutes prohibiting and punishing the crime known as lynching and the passage of additional federal statutes further to prohibit or punish such crime."

BOSTON, MASS.
EVENING GLOBE

FEB 6 1935

LYNCHING PENALTY URGED ON CONGRESS AT HEARING

The Massachusetts Legislature was urged to adopt resolutions memorializing Congress in favor of pending legislation providing a penalty for the crime of lynching at a hearing today before the Legislative Committee on Constitutional Law.

Representative Samuel Cohen of Boston scored lawlessness in Southern States and expressed the hope that Massachusetts would be placed definitely on record in favor of drastic Federal laws to curb such practices. Representative Abraham Zimon of Boston spoke along similar lines.

Joseph Mitchell, attorney and president of the Roxbury Civic Guild, Inc, spoke in favor. He said there were 16 lynchings in the United States last year.

There was no opposition.

NEW YORK AMERICAN
FEB 15 1935

LYNCHING BILL WINS SUPPORT

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14 (AP).—An excoriation of lynching by H. L. Mencken and other witnesses today caused a Federal proposal against the crime to gather momentum.

Chairman an Nuys (., Ind.), predicted his sub committee would report the Wagner-Costigan bill after Mencken, Baltimore writer, said no civilized government could "condone such atrocities."

Senator Wagner (D., N. Y.), asserted lynchings constitute "almost every type of infamy that blot the record of civilization."

The measure prescribes severe penalties for lynchers, officers who conspire with mobs or fail to protect prisoners from riotous assemblages and counties where such lawlessness occurs. Senator Costigan (D-Col.), suggested a modification to make counties liable only where they did not exercise "due diligence" to protect a mob victim.

CLEVELAND, O.
PRESS
FEB 11 1935

BISHOP INSPIRES WIRED DEMANDS FOR LYNCH BILL

Cleveland Prelate Says Time for Pleading to Congress Has Passed

• Scores of telegrams and hundreds of letters were sent to Washington today by Cleveland supporters of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill to be presented to a subcommitte of the Senate Judiary Committee Thursday. The messages today were worded as demands to the Government, instead of pleas as heretofore.

The change in tone is due to an address by the Rt. Rev. Joseph Schrembs, bishop of Cleveland, at a meeting in Public Music Hall yesterday afternoon sponsored by the Cleveland Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Bishop Schrembs said the time had arrived for the association to put aside soft words and humble pleas and insist on the passage of anti-lynching legislation.

"Surely the blood spilled by the lynching mobs," he said, "cries to heaven with a thousand times the strength of the blood of Abel, killed by his brother Cain."

Cites Cleveland Crime

If it is true, he said, that a 16-year-old Cleveland boy, convicted of murder, was the product of a social system he was in no way responsible for, then it must also be true of the poor Negro who has gone wrong but who is often lynched before guilt is even proven.

"I am with you heart and soul in your fight to wipe out the menace of lynching," Bishop Schrembs said.

Walter White, national secretary of the association, New York, gave the audience of 2000 a sketch of the provisions of the Costigan-Wagner bill and explained the difficulties of getting it enacted. The obstacles in the way are Southern legislators dominated by financiers and industrialists who prefer a wide breach of racial hatred between the whites and blacks.

Fear Economic Upset

"The legislators would like to pass the bill but their influential backers fear the economic system may be upset should there be accord and peace between the whites and blacks because of the power the combination could exert in the labor market," Mr. White said. "Nothing keeps them farther apart than lynchings."

One of the provisions of the Costigan-Wagner bill would put a fine of from $2000 to $10,000 on the county in which the lynchings occur and another would take the entire jurisdiction of apprehending lynchers and trying them in courts in the hands of Federal authorities, Mr. White told the audience.

Other speakers were Rabbi Rudolph Rosenthal, Temple on the Heights; Frank W. Sotak, president of the All-Nations League, and the Rev. W. H. McKinney, Antioch Baptist Church.

A combined choir from eight colored churches and the capella choir from Central High School sang spirituals and hymns.

BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN

FEB 1 1935

NICE SIGNS FIRST BILL AS GOVERNOR

Initial Measure Of Assembly Lets Harford Board Aid Firemen

SESSION PERFUNCTORY

Berman Introduces Three Proposals Designed To Keep Down Lynchings

By N. T. KENNEY

[Annapolis Bureau of The Sun]

Annapolis, Jan. 31—Governor Nice today signed his first bill as both branches of the General Assembly went through more or less perfunctory sessions.

The bill signed by the Governor, the first one to be passed by the House and the Senate, was a local measure to allow the County Commissioners of Harford county to render financial aid to volunteer fire departments and libraries.

Offers Lynching Bills

In the House of Delegates today Delegate Theodore B. Berman (Rep., Fourth Baltimore) introduced three bills intended to keep down lynching in Maryland. In general, the measures would place more responsibility on sheriffs guarding prisoners who might be the objects of lynch attack, would speed up trials both when the case was to be tried in the jurisdiction in which the crime was committed and when the venue had been changed.

The four women delegates—Mrs. Lulu W. Boucher (Rep., Allegany), Mrs. Mayne A. Collins (Dem., Somerset), Mrs. E. Blanche Phillips (Dem., Third, Baltimore) and Miss Ruth E. Shoemaker (Dem., Montgomery), struck a blow for their sex by introducing legislation permitting women to serve on juries.

Proposes One-Term Limit

The most important developments in the Senate included introduction of a bill by Senator Harry T. Phoebus (Rep., Somerset), which would make it impossible for any Governor of Maryland to succeed himself.

Senator Phoebus, interested in legislation keeping more humble officeholders from becoming "repeaters," announced his intention of making the same rule apply to higher posts as well.

Senator Melvin L. Fine, also a Republican and from the Fourth Baltimore district, brought in a measure which would make it compulsory for all contractors receiving awards from the city of Baltimore to observe a thirty-hour work week for their labor.

The bill also would set a minimum $2 per diem wage for Baltimore city employes in the laboring classification and would place all such classes of employes on an eight-hour day except in cases of extreme emergency. It excluded members of the Fire Department, jail employes and City Hospital employes.

Take Early Adjournment

Both branches adjourned early. They are to meet again at 11 A. M. tomorrow, with prospects of another early adjournment in sight. With much financial legislation in the near offing, however, members of the Legislature consider it probably that longer sessions will be in effect next week.

In the Executive office, Governor Nice announced his approval of a pending "yellow dog" bill which would forbid use of injunctions in labor disputes.

The Governor stated his opinion many injunctions in such cases preclude free speech and lawful assembly It is the first time this perennial measure has had Executive backing in a long while.

One Hearing Held

Only one formal committee hearing was held today. This was a joint hearing of the House of Delegates Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee for the purpose of hearing the views of the State Racing Commission on proposed race-track taxation.

No decision was reached following the hearing.

The Senate Finance Committee later held a conference in the Attorney-General's office to determine legal questions arising from the proposed sale of the Northern Central annuity.

TOLEDO, O.
NEWS BEE

FEB 12 1935

SENATORS TO TALK ON LYNCHING LAW

Wagner, Costigan In Discussion Over CBS Network

Senator Robert F. Wagner, Democrat, of New York, will join Senator Edward T. Costigan, Democratic political leader of Colorado, in a radio discussion of the anti - lynching legislation now before Congress, over a Columbia network including WSPD, at 11:15 p. m. Tuesday

Senator Wagner

Senator Costigan will be heard from Columbia studios in Washington and Senator Wagner will speak from Columbia's key station, WABC, New York.

Georgia House Hits Anti-Lynching Bill

Constitutional 2-19-35

The Georgia house of representatives Monday adopted unanimously a resolution asking congress not to pass the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill.

The resolution condemned the bill as a "violation of state rights and a reflection upon the people of the south and their local officials."

The bill, now pending in congress, permits federal intervention "in the enforcement of local criminal laws," the resolution added.

Charges were included that persons were seeking to convey the impressions that white people of Georgia and the south "are in favor of this bill" and that such persons "do not represent truly the white manhood and womanhood of the south."

Lynchings - 1935
Legislation Relating to.

5103

NOTE ON AN ARGUMENT.

This argument over federal anti-lynching legislation, it must have long since been realized, is a resurgent sort of proposition. In event you do not get precisely what we mean:

Only a few days ago Dr. Moton's annual report from Tuskegee institute chronicled a sizable decrease in mobberies for the past year, although the total will remain shockingly high so long as a single lynching occurs. Further than that, the report offered distinct encouragement in the number of mob frustrations; local officers were apparently becoming more alert, more mindful of their obligations and the responsibilities intrusted to them.

But even as that trend won praise, South Carolina re-appeared in the public prints with a continued exhibition.

On the night of December 8, 1933, Bennie Thompson, charged with having threatened white men with a knife, was taken from an unguarded jail at Ninety-Six and beaten to death. Authorities arrested four white men, the quartet who had reported the prisoner's alleged offense. Rather convincing evidence was revealed at the time. Blood was found on the automobile of one of them, and subsequently the owner, it was duly chronicled, made a signed statement in which it was admitted that he and the other three men under arrest had seized and done the negro unto death. So far so good; but last week the state, after lapse of more than a year, got around to the business of trying the quartet. Three were released upon "not guilty" instructions from the court, and the fourth, the confessor, joined them after the jury accommodatingly spent 10 minutes in retirement.

All of which should leave no misunderstanding anent our initial declaration of resurgence.

Federal Lynch Law Is Agitated

ATLANTA, Jan. 13—(AP)—Mob action, such as the lynching of a negro in Louisiana last week "would seem to make it imperative the Federal Government take positive and vigorous steps to protect the lives of its citizens," Dr. Will W. Alexander, director of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, said today.

Alexander, heading a group of Southern men and women interested in better relationship between the races, issued the following statement from headquarters of the group:

"At Franklinton, Louisiana, early Friday morning, masked men broke into the jail, evidently without resistance from the officers in charge, and lynched a prisoner to whom the Louisiana Supreme Court had granted a new trial.

"The past history of such cases offers no assurance that the Louisiana authorities will make any effort to punish the members of this mob.

"The persistence of these occurrences and the refusal of local authorities either to protect their prisoners or to punish lynchers would seem to make it imperative that the Federal Government take positive and vigorous steps to protect the lives of its citizens.

"Southern representatives and senators now in leadership in Washington will find it difficult to justify indifference or opposition to Federal legislation for the control of lynching."

Jerome Wilson, 30-year-old negro, was shot to death in a jail cell at Franklinton, La., by a group of men and his body dragged away and left on the side of the road.

The negro had been convicted of slaying Deputy Sheriff Delos C. Wood during a general gun fight between officers and negroes at Wilson's home July 22. The Louisiana Supreme Court granted him a new trial.

Birmingham, Ala., Age-Herald
January 24, 1935

Greatly Needed

Last Monday Senator Costigan directed attention to the anti-lynching bill which he and Senator Wagner are sponsoring, and had read into the record the contents of the measure which he said is substantially the same that received the approval of the judiciary committee at the last session of Congress. That proposal did not come up for action in the Senate, largely because Southern senators were opposed to its consideration. It is highly questionable that they will be able to make themselves equally felt this time. The Claude Neal lynching has given a special momentum to sentiment for federal legislation in the premises. That means that the affair is most likely to be fought out on the floor of the Senate.

Southern senators can be relied on to leave nothing undone to prevent enactment. But as matters stand, they are up against an ominous situation. The tide is running against them, and will continue to do so to an overwhelming extent, unless the Legislatures of this section take steps to strengthen their own laws on the score of lynching. A very clear obligation rests on our General Assembly to scrutinize the Alabama statutes for the purpose of implementing them as much as possible. We have anti-lynching laws, which in the hands of an aggressive governor, or under the pressure of a determined public opinion, can serve as a deterrent. The trouble is that we cannot usually be sure of having either force at work.

Gov. Graves has shown his courage in this respect, during his first administration. He can be expected to toe the mark again, whenever the occasion arises. But that assurance does not make less desirable such additions or amendments to existing statutes as shall operate to drive home to all concerned the serious consequences of a lynching bee. There are too many loopholes in the arrangement we have. There is lacking that immediacy between a mob's action and the penalties therefor which ought to exist as a warning to would-be lynchers and the communities in which lynchings take place. We ought to have, as a state law, pretty much what the Costigan-Wagner bill provides, by way of establishing accountability and meting out punishment.

How much better off would our representatives and senators be, if they could cite this step in the direction of state and local responsibity! At this hour, when so much is being done or planned at Montgomery to advance the social well-being of the state and to make government an effective agency, a modern anti-lynching statute would be thoroughly in order. It would be the best answer we can contrive to the criticisms hurled at Alabama on the score of race relations. It would help us to gain that position in the eyes of the country which for one reason or another we have lost—to our very painful disadvantage.

Move for Anti-Lynching Law Spurred by Congress Appeals

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—(AP)—An excoriation of lynching in the pungent phrases of H. L. Mencken and other witnesses today caused a federal measure against the crime to gather momentum which promised the approval of a senate judiciary subcommittee.

Chairman Van Nuys predicted his group would report the Wagner-Costigan bill after Mencken, Baltimore writer, said no civilized government could "condone such atrocities." Senator Wagner asserted that lynchings constitute "almost every type of infamy that blot the records of civilization."

Wagner and Senator Costigan are co-authors of the bill.

Rewritten from the form proposed last year, the measure prescribes severe penalties for lynchers, officers who conspire with mobs or fail to protect prisoners from riotous assemblages, and counties where such lawlessness occurs.

No opposition witnesses appeared at the one-day hearing and Van Nuys said the measure probably would be recommended to the full committee soon with possibily some slight changes in phraseology.

Senator Dieterich criticized the county-liability clause as making it possible to subject Chicago to damages "to indemnify gangland" when a gangster was taken for a ride. Costigan then suggested a modification to make counties liable only where they did not exercise "due diligence" to protect a mob victim.

"Lynching is a flagrant violation, not of one but of many constitutional rights," Costigan said. "It is open anarchy. Accusation is conviction. The victim is put to death, with young and old indiscriminately looking on or participating, under crime-breeding circumstances of indescribable savagery."

Wagner said the "record of the past five years is stained with the life blood of 95 unjudged victims largely because local authority failed to prevent and failed to punish."

"Legislation alone cannot quench the fires of intolerance and hate," he said. "But the speedy passage of this bill will rally and sustain all the forces of enlightment in the United States."

With a small group of negro educators and spectators in the committee room nodding approval, Representative Caroline O'Day, a native of Savannah, Ga., told of a visit to South Africa where she said the impression prevailed that the United States "condoned lynching."

She said a Hindu had written a book on lynching and racketeering in the United States which was a best seller in India. Mencken said the government must make every possible effort to put lynchings down, or "it must suffer the scorn and contempt of Christendom."

Others supporting the bill were Representative Ford, who has introduced it in the house: W. E. Woodward, of the Writers League Against Lynching, and representatives of the Howard University (negro) of Washington, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Federal Check on Lynching

The measures by which the Federal Government undertook to encroach upon the jurisdiction of the states, particularly in the matter of holding "fair" elections, used to be known as "force bills". One of them made the name of Senator Lodge odious in the South for many years.

But public sentiment in the South has about crystallized into the feeling that only by federal intervention can we ever hope to wipe out lynching, and the committee in charge of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill has begun to hold hearings in Washington. Because of the crowds, white and black, which filled the House committee room at the last session of Congress, when this bill was being considered, it has been decided to hold the hearings in the large caucus room of the Senate office building.

Under the Hoover administration Representative Dyer of Missouri offered an anti-lynching bill, but he suffered under the handicap of representing a Negro district, and perhaps that was at least one of the reasons why the bill did not get any further.

No such charge can be brought against Senator Wagner or Representative Costigan, good, sterling Democrats from a white constituency, and it is believed that the bill has a chance of success.

Under the terms of this bill local officers who fail, neglect or refuse to make all diligent efforts to protect prisoners from mobs and to apprehend mob participants would be guilty of a felony, punishable by a fine of $5,000 and imprisonment for five years.

Any officer, having a prisoner in custody, who conspires with others to lynch, also would be guilty of a felony, along with members of a mob, punishable by imprisonment from five to twenty-five years.

If, within thirty days of an injury or lynching, the state where it occurs shows no disposition to prosecute offenders, the federal court could take jurisdiction.

Finally, any county in which a person is seriously injured or killed by a mob would be liable to the injured person or his heirs in an amount not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 as "liquidated damages."

There will be a certain amount of opposition to this bill here in the South, but it is a fair question to ask what else are we to do? Lynching goes on year after year and punishment for the crime is practically unknown. One of the most revolting of these crimes was the latest to gain general attention, when a Florida mob, near Marianna, after bringing the victim from an Alabama jail, where he had been taken for safe keeping, sent out invitations in the morning to attend the lynching, which resolved itself into slow torture, with gruesome details hardly fit to be printed.

Members of that mob were well known to the officers of the law, who, indeed, might have prevented the lynching in the first place if they had cared to do so, and yet no one was ever punished, as no one in that state has ever been punished for such a crime, although, as the women of the state themselves point out, there have been thirty lynchings.

This brutality simply cannot go on. The states have had ample opportunity through the years to do something to prevent this barbaric crime. The time has come when something must be done and the federal anti-lynching bill appears to be the answer.

The Mob in Harlem

SPEAKING TUESDAY night over the Columbia broadcasting system in observance of Lincoln's Birthday, Senator Costigan, co-author of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill now pending in Congress, made it clear that lynching is not a fate reserved exclusively for Negroes. Fourteen hundred white persons have been lynched in the United States during the past five decades, he reminded hearers over a national hook-up.

Mr. Wagner was right. Last week a mob of Negroes (that is not a pretty term) wrecked a bakery shop on Lenox avenue and injured Samuel Tonicci after he was accused of kicking a Negro woman in the stomach. Some 200 persons menaced the proprietor and smashed his windows and fixtures while he fled through the rear. Arrested later for assault, Tonicci charged that he was slashed by a member of the mob.

It is regretful that Harlem should have such a demonstration while agitating for an anti-lynching bill. When militiamen fired upon a mob in Shelbyville, Tenn., a few months ago Negroes were loud in applause of the authorities of that state. What should we expect peace officers to do in Harlem when we threaten summary execution? Do we not have full recourse in the law?

However, we believe that there is a valuable lesson in the incident. We must have a federal anti-lynching law to protect white as well as colored people. Lynching is a social disease common to both races, and must be eradicated by education of the masses and punishment of law officers and citizens who tolerate or abet it.

BOSTON, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
FEB 6 1935

Asks Resolution Against Lynching

Scoring lawlessness in the South in the matter of lynchings, a group of legislators today appeared before the committee on constitutional law and urged that Massachusetts be placed definitely on record in favor of drastic laws to curb such practices.

The group asked adoption of resolutions by the Legislature, memorializing Congress in favor of pending legislation providing for a penalty for the crime of lynching.

BOSTON, MASS.
AMERICAN
FEB 6 1935

LYNCH PENALTY Demanded Here

Adoption by the Massachusetts Legislature of a memorial to Congress in favor of legislation providing for a penalty for the crime of lynching today was strongly urged before the legislative committee on constitutional law.

Joseph Mitchell, attorney and president of the Roxbury Civic Club, Inc., favored the resolutions. There was no opposition.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
JAN 31 1935

ANTILYNCHING BILL URGED FOR PASSAGE AT GATHERING HERE

At a mass meeting of several hundred negroes Wednesday night the immediate passage of the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill was urged. The meeting was held under the auspices of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at Pythian Temple, Gravier and Saratoga streets.

A copy of the resolutions urging the passage of the bill was sent to Senator Joseph T. Robinson, majority floor leader of the Senate, after being signed at the meeting. Sixty-two negro civic, fraternal and business organizations co-operated in calling the gathering.

The resolution asserted that the recent lynching at Franklinton, La., of Jerome Wilson, slayer of a deputy, "has shown how hopeless is the condition of the negroes in the state of Louisiana." It also pointed out that President Roosevelt has called attention to the need of anti-lynching legislation.

A resolution was also adopted urging the establishment of a separate negro division of the ERA in the city, stating that the majority of persons on the relief rolls are negroes and that an individual office will give employment to negro office workers.

Speakers at the meeting included James E. Gayle, representing the National Association for Advancement of Colored People; Mayme Brown, editor of the Louisiana Weekly; Richard Whitten, Socialist party leader; A. W. Brazier, president of the Good Samaritan Association, and Charles C. Ross of the Third Ward Negro Civic League.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
LEADER
JAN 31 1935

THE LYNCHING BILL

This bill (the proposed federal anti-lynching bill, sponsored by Senators Cutting and Wagner) should have been enacted at the last session of congress when public sentiment was strongly behind it, but executive interest was lacking, the two legislative houses were absorbed by the new deal and other matters, and no vote was had. In recent months horrifying events have taken place.

Lynchings have suddenly multiplied in the south, and one recent lynching—that of a Negro named Neal—was an event of such incredible ferocity as to shock even this nation long since become inured, unhappily, to atrocities of this description. Public opinion is, therefore, aroused anew. The current issue of The Crisis, for example, lists the church and other organizations which are now in favor of having the federal government intervene in this situation, and shows that in these organizations is a constituency of 41 million people.

The truth is, of course, that the American people have been patient for a long time with the individual states of the union. For a half century, now, Negroes and also white men, and not only men but women, have been hanged, burned, disembowled, tortured, butchered, by mobs more cruel than the wildest savages. In all this time the states concerned have done nothing. So rare is such action as that in Tennessee recently, where a mob was met with bullets, as to constitute a major news sensation. But even in Tennessee, the leaders and members of the mob are not brought to justice.

What we have in this lynching business is not only a defiance of the law in the beginning, but a complete breakdown of the law in vindicating its authority in the end. The states have failed, in other words, and the patience of the people is at an end. What the states cannot or won't do, the federal government can do and must do.—Unity.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
FEB 3 1935

Support Given Mitchell's Bill On Mob Rule

Anti-Lynching Measure to Be Discussed at Howard Today.

Support of the first bill introduced into Congress by Representative Arthur W. Mitchell (Democrat), of Illinois, an anti-lynching measure, was indicated yesterday by a number of invitations received by him to speak before organized groups of colored citizens.

The administration and faculties of Howard University extended an invitation to meet with them on the university campus at 5:30 p. m. today in an informal get-together, when legislation of mutual interest to the university and the Representative will be analyzed by students of political science.

The Mitchell bill, introduced last Tuesday, contains the provision that if a person is taken from a State or county peace officer and injured or killed, that fact, when established, shall be prima facie evidence that such officer suffered or permitted such person to be taken from his custody.

It contains another provision that such officer shall be guilty of a felony punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000, or imprisonment of not more than five years. From two to ten years imprisonment is provided for such persons as conspire, combine or confederate with a peace officer to suffer a person to be taken from his control and killed or injured.

Lynchings - 1935
Legislation Relating to.

5104

TEXT OF MITCHELL'S ANTI-LYNCH BILL

H. R. 4457—74th Congress, 1st Session
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
January 22, 1935

Mr. Mitchell of Illinois introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

BILL

To assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United Sttaes of America in Congress assembled, That (a) if any officer, agent, or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof shall have any person in his custody by virtue of his power or authority as such officer, agent, or employee, and shall, without lawful justification or excuse, suffer or permit such person to be taken from his custody and injured or put to death or to be unlawfully injured or put to death while in his custody. the said State shall be deemed to have denied to the said person the equal protection of its laws.

(b) Proof that any person being in the custody of any such officer, agent, or employee was unlawfully injured or put to death or unlawfully taken from such custody and injured or put to death, shall be prima facie evidence that such officer, agent, or employee suffered or permitted such person to be so taken from his custody or injured or put to death therein.

Sec. 2. (a) Any officer, agent, or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof who shall have any person in his custody by virtue of his power or authority as such officer, agent, or employee, and who shall, without lawful justification or excuse, suffer or permit such person to be taken from his custody and injured or put to death or to be unlawfully injured or put to death while in his custody, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

(b) Proof that any person being in the custody of any such officer, agent, or employee, was unlawfully injured or put to death or unlawfully taken from such custody and injured or put to death shall be prima facie evidence that such officer, agent, or employee suffered or permitted such person to be so taken from his custody or injured or put to death therein.

Sec. 3. Any officer, agent, or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof, acting as such officer, agent, or employee under authority of law, having in his custody or control a prisoner, who shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person to injure or put such prisoner to death, or who shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person to suffer or permit any person to take such prisoner from his custody or control, to be injured or put to death, shall be guilty of a felony, and those who so conspire, combine, or confederate with any officer, agent, or employee shall likewise be guilty of a felony. On conviction the parties participating therein shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than two years and not more than ten years.

Sec. 4. If any person shall be taken from the custody of any officer, agent, or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof and unlawfully injured or put to death, or shall be unlawfully injured or put to death while in the custody of any such officer, agent, or employee, the said State and the said governmental subdivision of the said State shall be deemed to have denied to such person the equal protection of its laws, and the said governmental subdivision of said State shall be liable to the injured person or, in the event of death, to the legal representatives of the deceased for a sum not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000, which sum may be recovered in a civil action against such county or other governmental subdivision of a State in the United States District Court of the judicial district wherein such person is injured or put to death: Provided, That when any such person shall have been taken from the custody of any such officer, agent, or employee of any governmental subdivision thereof, the county or other governmental subdivision of said State wherein the said person shall have been so injured or put to death shall be liable to the injured person, or in event of death to the legal representatives of the deceased as aforesaid. When any person shall have been injured as aforesaid, the cause of action for such injury shall not abate with the death of the person.

Sec. 5. If any provision, sentence, or clause of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of this Act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

MITCHELL HAS BILL TO STAMP OUT LYNCHING

Submits Measure For Approval Of Congress

2-2-35

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Differing materially from the provisions of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, the measure introduced in the House by Representative Arthur W. Mitchell, Democrat, of Illinois, is directed solely against non-action by state officials in discharging the duty of affording to persons in their custody the equal protection of the laws.

The phrase "mob or riotous assemblage," used frequently in the Costigan-Wagner bill, is nowhere to be found in the Mitchell bill. This is considered an improvement in some quarters, since the presence of a mob or riotous assemblage will not have to be proved for the proposed law to be effective.

By the terms of the Mitchell bill, a state is deemed to have denied to a person the equal protection of its laws if any officers of the state, county, or other local governmental subdivision, without lawful justification or excuse shall suffer or permit a prisoner to be taken from his custody and injured or put to death or to be unlawfully injured or put to death while in his custody.

Penalties Listed

Any officer, having any person in his custody by virtue of his power or authority, who shall, without lawful justification or excuse, suffer or permit such person to be taken from his custody and injured or put to death or to be unlawfully injured or put to death while in his custody, shall be guilty of a felony, punishable by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both, under the bill.

Proof that any person being in the custody of an officer was unlawfully injured or put to death or unlawfully taken from such custody and injured or put to death is made prima facie evidence that the officer suffered or permitted the prisoner to be taken from his custody on injured or put to death.

Officers conspiring or confederating with other persons to injure or put a prisoner to death or to suffer or permit any person to take a prisoner from their custody to be injured or put to death, and those who conspire with the officers are guilty of a felony under the terms of the bill, and subject to imprisonment for not less than two years and not more than 10 years.

Penalties on County Etc.

The county or other governmental subdivision of a state where a prisoner is taken from the custody of an officer and injured or put to death, or injured or put to death while in the custody of an officer, is made liable to the injured person or his legal representatives for a sum of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000. The penalty is to be recovered in a civil action against the county or other governmental subdivision of a state in the United States District Court of the judicial district where the person is injured or put to death.

Only the county or other governmental subdivision of the state where the person is injured or put to death shall be liable for damages.

The provisions of the Costigan-Wagner bill make the county in which a prisoner is seized and the county in which he is injured or put to death, jointly liable for liquidated damages in the event the Senator Edward P. Costigan of Colorado introduced H. R. Bill 4457, to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every state the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching.

It is to be hoped that the churches of the nation will perform their duty in moving their congregations to urge their various senators and congressmen to aid in the passage of such legislation. The failure of the Department of Justice to take official notice of the lynching of Claude Neal, October 26, in Marianna, Florida, leaves little to be expected from the office of the attorney general of the nation unless compelling force can be brought about to national legislation.

THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

This particular lynching and its attending circumstances was revolting beyond words and indicated that those who were a party to it represented head hunters rather than a supposed civilized people. So bold were the perpetrators of this crime that they planned and advertised in advance, seizing their victim in Georgia; carrying him into Florida for execution.

That the attorney general of the United States should remain silent in a case of this nature is not quite clear for the average citizen to understand. However, it is refreshing to note that the kidnapers can be speedily apprehended when they seek to enrich themselves by attacking the wealthy for ransom.

It is not to be denied that the law moves swiftly when the right of property is involved but slowly when human rights are at stake. All of which lends growth and stimulation to the communistic program in America.

Clarendon, Va., Chronicle
January 25, 1935

THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL IN CONGRESS

EVERY TIME that an anti-lynching bill has come up in Congress southern Senators and Members have fought it on the ground that it violated the sacred rights of the states. Now that this administration has violated every sacred right of the states with the approval and applause of southern Democratic Senators and Members a national anti-lynching bill should not find opposition from that source. A member of Congress who voted for the Agricultural Adjustment Act and amendments thereto should close his mouth about the sacred rights of the state and put a padlock on it.

The federal anti-lynching bill should be copied and adopted in every state. It provides that an officer who is charged with the duty of protecting a prisoner from a mob and who neglects to carry out that duty, is guilty of a felony, punishable with a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars and imprisonment up to five years or both. An officer who conspires with a mob to allow a prisoner in his control to be injured or killed is subject to from five to twenty-five years imprisonment. Any county in which a person is seriously injured or killed by a mob is liable in damages of from two thousand to ten thousand dollars. Jurisdiction to try cases arising out of the act is vested in the United States District Court where the state authorities fail to act within thirty days or where jurors obtainable for service are strongly opposed to punishing the offenders. The United States District Court may try cases arising under the act in any part of its District.

It would strengthen the bill if it defined that a mob was where two or more persons act in concert to injure or kill a prisoner or to kill or injure one sought for an alleged crime, but not yet in custody of the law.

And the bill should prohibit the trial of any person charged with a crime for which the death penalty may be inflicted in less than thirty days after his arrest.

And the bill should declare a mistrial in all cases where a mob was in the neighborhood of the court while a trial for an offence punishable with life imprisonment or death was in progress.

There is a popular idea that lynching of negroes in the South is because of assaults on women. Not a third of those lynched were charged with assault on women. Not one negro in a million ever assaults a woman. A negro was lynched in Tennessee for walking on the same side of a bridge that the white people used. Another in the same state for being "impudent" to a white woman. A negro in Georgia was to be burned at the stake without a chance to prove his innocence. His wife rushed to the scene and pleaded with the mob not to burn her husband. He was tied to a tree, gasoline thrown over his body and the mob seized his wife and burned her to death. A small colored boy playfully grabbed at a playmate, a small white girl and tore her dress. She told her mother. A mob gathered and hanged the boy without a trial. There have been hundreds of such cases, and yet none of the mob murderers has been punished. Lynching is crowd murder. Everyone counselling advising, aiding or in any way participating is legally and morally guilty of murder, just as guilty of murder as one person would be if he alone committed the crime. No effort is ever made for the proper identification of the negro charged with criminal assault, and tortures are inflicted that would make any innocent person however exalted, confess. The only chance to convict those who commit mob murder is in the federal courts where juries can be drawn from places remote from the scene of the lynching and a high class of persons drawn for jury duty. Lynching is our national disgrace. President Roosevelt is opposed to lynching. He can cause Congress to pass the anti-lynching bill. That is more important to the negroes of the country than appointing a few colored politicians to office. More important than entertaining them at luncheon and their wives at tea.

Last Stand for State Rights

Senator Costigan, of Colorado, has again introduced an anti-lynching bill, and again it should be defeated. The "liberal press" is supporting the bill, and it is expected that the "liberal" senators and representatives will vote for it.

The News and Courier believes that the state of South Carolina has the right to manage its own affairs.

Southern senators and representatives will probably oppose the bill—but their arguments against it will have little weight.

Mr. Costigan will say to them: "You prate about 'state rights'? What do you care about state rights? Or know about them? Are you not voting every day for the amalgamation of the states? You are supporting dozens of measures that will centralize government in Washington, to which this little measure is as nothing. When you enpower Washington to tell your people how much cotton or tobacco they shall plant, when you ask it to take over the guardianship of your poor as if your states were rural parishes, why balk at my anti-lynching bill? It looks as if the right to lynch a negro were the only state right which you are really concerned to preserve."

Costigan cares nothing for state rights. Colorado is a fresh state, created not so long ago by act of congress and was never a "nation", as South Carolina was.

Mr. Costigan is an amalgamationist, he would change this republic into a glucose mass and so most of the Southerners are voting to do. Costigan will twiddle his fingers at them if they yawp about state rights—and there will be no answer.

Yes, the Southerners in congress are about to make their last stand for state rights on the ground that the United States of America should leave to the Southern states the right to "lynch a nigger" whatever other rights it appropriates.

The News and Courier hopes that the Costigan bill will be defeated, but it would not enjoy the exhibition that the Southern New Dealers make of themselves when they oppose it.

Were The News and Courier a congressman and a New Dealer self-respect would compel it to support the Costigan bill.

Respect for South Carolina's rights would not let it be a New Dealer.

Lynchings - 1935
Legislation Relating to.

5105

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL GIVEN WIDE SUPPORT

Legislation Designed To Impose Harsh Penalties on Peace Officers.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—(AP)—Senators backing a federal anti-lynching bill said today a determined drive would be made to put it across at this session.

Several efforts to obtain such legislation have been made in the past but failed. One argument voiced against it has been on the ground of constitutionality.

A bill written by Senators Costigan, democrat, Colorado, and Wagner, democrat, New York, was approved by the senate judiciary committee last session but the senate itself did not act on the bill.

Costigan and Wagner already are laying plans to push their bill again at this session. It is designed to penalize local officers who fail to prosecute lynch mobs, and to give the federal government jurisdiction in case of such failure.

Officers convicted of failing to protect prisoners or prosecute lynchers would be guilty of a felony and subject to a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment up to five years, or both.

Such an officer convicted of conspiring with the lynchers would be subject to a jail sentence of from 5 to 25 years.

If local officials failed to apprehend lynchers within 30 days after the offense, the federal court would have jurisdiction to prosecute the case. It could also step in if local sentiment was so strong there was no chance for justice to be administered.

One of the most important provisions of the proposed law would make a county in which a lynching took place liable to civil damages of from $2,000 to $10,000. The money would go to the family of the lynch victim.

Must Legislation

Among America's achievements last year were 16 lynchings.

The record includes the Claude Neal lynching, probably the most sadistically barbarous demonstration of mob fury in the history of 5000 American lynchings since 1882.

It would be futile to blazon this dishonor if 1935 did not hold promise of something better.

Congress today has before it the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, holding counties financially liable for mob lawlessness in their borders. The very threat of this measure checked lynching last year. While the bill was pending in Congress lynchings stopped completely, but when it became apparent that Congress would not act they broke forth with renewed frequency. It is believed that the publicity given the measure was responsible for a drop of lynchings from 28 in 1933 to 16 last year.

Organizations with total membership of 42 million people are requesting President Roosevelt to put the Costigan-Wagner bill on his "must" program. The Government should not ignore this evil and the popular outcry against it.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
STAR
JAN 10 1935

Lynching Must Go

A PLEA is made through Everybody's Ideas for support of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill which will soon be placed before Congress.

The plea comes from a local representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, but the measure it publicizes can be said to aim directly at the advancement of white people who perpetrate the foul outrages which so long have been a black stain on the South.

Lynch law is the law of the mob, the insane, sadistic and perverted mob whose only emotional outlet is blood-letting. It is intolerable in a country that professes to be enlightened and "civilized." Not once has it been invoked to mete out justice that the ordinary processes of law could not have dealt. It is a base survival of moronic savagery that should once and for all be stamped out.

The Costigan-Wagner bill, blocked at the last session, should have the active support of all decent people everywhere, and enough pressure should be brought to bear on Congressmen to make it, this session, a law of the land. Southern states won't enact this law for themselves. Uncle Sam will have to do it for them.

N. Y. SUN
JAN 15 1935

FOR ANTILYNCH BILL

Mrs. O'Day Says She Wil Support It to Utmost.

WASHINTON, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—Representative Caroline O'Day Democrat, of New York, today made her first statement to the press on specific legislation, a strong indorsement of the anti-lynching bill.

"I have been interested in the efforts Southern women have been making to curb this horrible thing," said Mrs. O'Day, who was born in Perry, Ga., "and I am only too glad to be of real service in the movement. Being a Southern woman, I know how the women of that section feel on the subject."

Mrs. O'Day added that she had already assured Senators Wagner and Costigan, the authors of the antilynching bill, that she would support it to the utmost in the House.

MRS. O'DAY ON LYNCHING

From the Associated Press.

Representative Caroline O'Day, democrat, New York, today made her first statement to the press on specific legislation, a strong indorsement of the anti-lynching bill.

"I have been interested in the efforts southern women have been making to curb this horrible thing," said Mrs. O'Day, who was born in Perry, Ga., "and I am only too glad to be of real service in the movement. Being a southern woman, I know how the women of that section feel on the subject."

Mrs. O'Day added she already had assured Senators Wagner and Costigan, authors of the anti-lynching bill, that she would "support to the utmost" the twin bill in the House, introduced the first day in the session by Representative Thomas Ford, Democrat, California.

EL PASO TEX.
HERALD
JAN 2 1935

WOMEN TO BACK ANTI-LYNCH LAW

Measure Would Fine Counties In Which Mob Hangings Are Committed

The El Paso Woman's City Government Club is backing the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill in the coming session of Congress, Mrs. Robert Townsend, club president, said today.

Support of the bill was sought by El Paso Negro organizations.

The club has been active in Negro welfare work, and is raising funds for improvements to the Negro civic center near Washington Park.

Dispatches from Washington said that organizations representing total memberships of 42 million Americans from church, labor and other circles are actively preparing to push pasage of the anti-lynching bill.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is sponsoring the measure.

The measure provides federal fines of from $2000 to $10,000 against counties in which lynchings have been committed. The fines collected would be turned over to the victims' heirs.

A group of 48 organizations presented a memorial to President Roosevelt stating that since 1882 3068 persons have been lynched in the United States, with less than a dozen convictions of those responsible.

Caroline O'Day Backs Anti-Lynching Bill

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—(AP)—Representative Caroline O'Day, democrat, New York, today made her first statement to the press on specific legislation, a strong indorsement of the anti-lynching bill.

"I have been interested in the efforts southern women have been making to curb this horrible thing," said Mrs. O'Day, who was born in Perry, Ga., "and I am only too glad to be of real service in the movement. Being a southern woman, I know how the women of that section feel on the subject."

Mrs. O'Day added she already had assured Senators Wagner and Costigan, authors of the anti-lynching bill, that she would "support to the utmost" the twin bill in the house, introduced the first day in the session by Representative Thomas Ford, democrat, California.

SELMA, ALA.
TIMES-JOURNAL

JAN 7 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL FORECAST

It is quite possible that some form of anti-lynching legislation will be enacted at the present session of Congress, Senator Costigan having already announced that he will push his own bill, which may be materially modified before passage. It is earnestly hoped that Southern Senators and Representatives will not take the familiar course of blindly arraying themselves in opposition to all measures designed to cope with this indefensible evil. It is admitted without argument that the legislatures of the Southern states will do nothing to abate this blight on our civilization.

It would be well also to frankly recognize the fact that Federal courts and grand juries may be equally impotent, because lynchings are usually supported either by a passive or a dominant public sentiment in the communities where they occur. However, there is believed to be a growth of healthy sentiment in opposition to mob violence in this section, although the South was besmirched by the odium of 17 lynchings last year.

Numerous organizations are speaking out boldly in detestation of mob violence. The objective of the Costigan-Wagner bill, is in addition to other penalties, to impose a heavy fine on a county permitting a person to be lynched. Of course, if it should be necessary to establish in court the guilt of county officials where a lynching had occurred, the act would be of little value. Courts and officials are reluctant to affront, or defy an aggressive public opinion. The "guilt" of the community would not be proven and hence the imposition of the fine would not be ordered.

It is also a matter of serious doubt whether the effect of the bill would in another respect be what its supporters think. Courthouses or jails or both of them have been burned by mobs at Sherman, Texas and Shelbyville and Chickasha, and it is extremely doubtful if a mob that is sufficiently desperate to destroy a $100,000 county building would be deterred from violence by any $20,000 fine against innocent taxpayers. However, the proposed measure has sufficient virtue to justify it serious consideration.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
NEWS SENTINEL

JAN 9 1935

FEDERAL ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

From time immemorial some representative has introduced an anti-lynching bill either in the House or Senate annually, but no action has ever been taken on these bills other than in committees. Last year Senators Costigan, of Colorado and Wagner of New York, introduced an anti-lynching bill which received the approval of the judiciary committee, but for some reason it never reached the floor of the senate. This year, however, it is alleged that a determined effort will be made to enact a bill that will have as one of its outstanding provisions a requirement that counties in which a lynching occurs pay damages from $2,000 to $10,000 to the family of the lynched victim.

While the authors of the proposed anti-lynching bill are both Democrtas, it is not believed that the Democratic members will consider it a party matter, but on the other hand it is thought the bill will be killed by the votes of the Democrats.

Tifton, Ga. Gazette
January 16, 1935

These southerners who throw a fit everytime a national anti-lynch law is mentioned, might take note of what a congresswoman said in endorsing the anti-lynching law because she is a native of the South and knows how southern women feel.

Milton, Fla., Gazette
January 24, 1935

A FEDERAL LYNCH LAW

There's now considerable agitation in favor of a federal anti-lynch law. I don't know how far this notion will go, and it doesn't matter, anyway. Just so long as dam phool technicalities and other folderol can be invoked to obstruct justice in the courts, just that long will criminals be the main attraction at necktie parties. I cringe when I read of what some mobs do. It's hard to believe that human beings of this day can hark back to pre-civilization times. But that's neither here nor there, speedy trials and sure punishment is the only thing on this earth that will ever stop lynchings.—The Enterprise (Ala.) Ledger.

Moss Point, Miss. Advertiser
January 18, 1935

ANTI-LYNCHING LAW.

Congressman Costigan of Colorado addressed a meeting in New York and indicated that he would introduce a bill to make it a federal offense to lynch a person. New York is very receptive of this sentiment. It has several societies which continually berate the South and call for federal action, appealing to the President, and doing other things to threaten the South. Lynching in any other place is not so bad; but in the South it is terrible. We admit that; but it must apply, with other Eastern and Western disorders en masse for industrial reasons only. We do not defend lynching; though it must be admitted that some things are done which are so fiendish and brutal that the people naturally are maddened by them. The people of New York would have lynched Hauptmann at one time, and also the man who killed the little Brooklyn girl. They did not do it, but they had all the feeling animating a lynching crowd. It must be understood that no population, nor any considerable part of any Southern community or any community takes part in a lynching. But it is proposed that a community in which one occurs may, under the proposed bill in congress, be compelled to compensate the family of the person lynched. Why? Do the taxpayers as a whole lynch anybody? Do they know that this or that group of five or more men are about to lynch somebody? Are they conspirators or connivers? Are they consulted? It is a most unreasonable and officious proposal.

One thing may be noted by observers of these Eastern persons who have threatened the South for years with a Force Bill, an Anti-Lynching Bill, and so forth, they never have a word of sympathy for the poor victims of the scoundrel lynched. They seem to care more for the form of law than the human elements aroused in men who commit the lynching and who are in many cases good, quiet and peaceable citizens impelled and carried away by the character of crime and criminal. Their sympathy is with him only. It is absurd to claim that these critics are concerned only with an orderly trial.—Daily Herald.

Washington, Ga., News-Reporter
January 31, 1935

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

By EDWARD P. COSTIGAN
Senator From Colorado.

ONE by one the arguments against the inevitability of lynching have yielded. To those who say that the practice cannot be halted, we confidently point to the record last spring when word was passed to peace officers to go slow in permitting lynching or the result would be early enactment of a punitive federal law.

During the five and one-half months in which the last congress was in session lynchings virtually ceased in this country. Then, promptly following the adjournment of congress, which did not enact the considered legislation, the stream of lawlessness again began to flow at the rate of approximately one lynching a week, until the whole country was saturated with its revolting recitals.

Roanoke, Ala., Leader
January 30, 1935

WHAT ARE WE TO DO ABOUT THE LYNCHING EVIL?

Elsewhere there is published in this paper a news story revealing the increasingly strong support being given a bill now pending in Congress providing for federal action against states and counties where death by lynching occurs. This bill has already received surprising support by members of Congress, and now influential people and various organizations are preparing to push it still more strongly upon the attention of the present Congress.

Plainly and candidly, we have no one to blame but ourselves if this rather officious and obnoxious federal bill becomes a law. Few people having a proper regard for state's rights would prefer it. On the other hand no thoughtful citizen can condone the curse of mob law, no matter under what pretense it is practiced. Mob law means no law. The more it is indulged, the less assurance of protection there is for the innocent.

We must admit that one trouble is the fact that public sentiment has not been as strong and combative at this point as it should have been. All too frequently there has not been sufficient efforts put forth to prevent mob murder or to arrest and convict those who are guilty of it. Who ever heard of a conviction for this grave offense? Certainly convictions are exceedingly rare.

Now comes the United States government ready to place the iron heel of punishment upon the civil sub-divisions that permit this travesty upon law and human rights. What else can we expect? Our states and counties are to be penalized wherever lynchings occur. And who can say nay, unless and until we arouse public sentiment and give practical proof of our purpose to protect prisoners and see that they shall have a fair trial as provided by law and justice.

manufacturers are demanding that the processing tax be taken off them and cotton farmers subsidized direct from the national treasury, using PWA funds for that purpose. And the amazing thing is that the part of the press which rages loudest against government spending is giving this drive by the textile manufacturers the utmost favorable publicity as a means of embarrassing the administration. Suppose the drive succeeds; what then? If the processing tax is taken off cotton, other processors will demand that it be taken off wheat, corn, hogs, tobacco and so on. That will require that all the farmers, now being buoyed up by those taxes, be put on direct federal subsidy. (The senate approved this precise use of PWA funds in an amendment which it attached to the gigantic public works bill.) But the nation will not put up long with the idea of directly subsidizing a whole basic industry from the federal treasury. When the subsidies are ended, the farm population will relapse into bankruptcy and despair. And then . . . well, who can say what then?

Have the Poor Better Manners Than the Rich?

THE great objection of solid citizens to the extension of democracy into the economic field is not, as they themselves confess, that they selfishly wish to hold on to their privileges, but that they cannot bear to see civilization delivered into the hands of the mob. However, the mob cannot always be judged by its moblike actions. A man who is the speaker on a comparatively highbrow radio program was talking the other day with a movie executive who told him about the tons—literally—of fan mail which come to stations after certain popular radio features. On the other hand, certain other features, such as symphony programs, which are enjoyed by thousands of cultivated persons, do not bring even a proportionately smaller fan mail, but a markedly disproportionately small response. Why? Here is the executive's answer: "The poor have to work so hard for what they get, and are usually treated with so little consideration, that when they get anything in the way of a gift or a kindness, they are grateful, and they want to express their attitude. The rich are so used to getting things for nothing that they take it as a matter of course; they think it is their due. After all, they are swine." Far be it from these columns to endorse any such incitement to class hatred as the ex cathedra assertion that the rich are swine. But a business executive with somewhat unusual facilities for observation seems to have got that impression. He may be quite wrong. Yet his belief that poor and underprivileged people have an innate sense of the fitness of things, a sense that a favor received naturally calls for a response, is something that will bear thinking about. That they may often be grateful for the wrong gifts does not affect the issue; education will take care of that whenever they begin to get real education and not the inadequate "schooling" now doled out by bankrupt cities and uneducated school boards. Perhaps trouble and a first-hand experience of the neighbors' troubles have already given that education in essential social decency which this fan mail habit illustrates—a social decency which may well prove the major factor in making democracy, in fields other than the purely political, a success when we achieve it.

A Federal Curb for Lynching

NOT since 1922 has there been such widespread discussion of the lynching evil as the nation is experiencing today. On the floor of the senate, in the columns of the press and on the programs of innumerable civic, educational and religious groups there are overwhelming evidences of a renewed stirring of the national conscience with regard to mob violence.

The immediate occasion of all this concern is the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, S. 24, easily sidetracked in the 73rd congress, but like Banquo's ghost, haunting the 74th and refusing to be shouted out of existence by the eloquent but not always convincing threats of certain senators. And behind this immediate occasion of another bill before congress there lies the stark fact of an alarming upward trend in the curve which charts the occasions of mob violence throughout our country. Official records have been kept since 1882. The count to date is over 5,000. The yearly average up to 1920 was more than 100.

At that time an outraged public opinion, realizing that the various states were either helpless or unwilling to offer effective resistance to lynching, demanded that the federal congress assume responsibility. Representative L. C. Dyer of Missouri introduced an anti-lynching bill and pushed it through the house. Under the leadership of the late Senator Underwood, however, ably assisted by the present Senator Pat Harrison and others, the bill was filibustered to death in the senate. The nation did not immediately forget its lesson, however, for in 1924 and 1925 lynchings dropped to the new low figures of 16 and 18. But succeeding years registered a steady increase so that by 1933 the number had climbed back to 28, and last year's victims were estimated at from 25 to 42.

Once again public opinion demanded federal action. This latest demand received powerful impetus from two particularly atrocious lynchings. The first, in San Jose, California, was publicly endorsed by the late Governor Rolph. He not only commended the mob but promised a pardon in advance to any lyncher who might be convicted. The other case was the lynching of Claude Neal in Florida. Neal, a youthful Negro, was obviously guilty of a very serious crime and would undoubtedly have paid for it with his life even under the fairest conditions of legal procedure. For safekeeping he was moved out of Florida and lodged in a small Alabama prison, easily accessible to a mob bent on finding him. From there he was forcibly removed and taken back to Florida where, after such prolonged torture and such unspeakable mutilation as would shame the most degraded savages, he was finally put to death.

The Costigan-Wagner bill is based on the "due process" clause of the fourteenth amendment which reads: "All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. . . . Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." Upon the basis of this phrasing hinges the constitutionality of the proposed measure. It declares: 1. that mob action deprives persons of that due process of law provided in the fourteenth amendment; 2. that failure on the part of any local or state officer to apprehend, indict and prosecute the members of a mob shall constitute a crime punishable by fine or imprisonment or both; 3. that failure on the part of local or state authorities to take such action within 30 days after the offense shall automatically charge the federal district court with the responsibility of initiating legal proceedings; and 4, that injured persons, victimized by mob violence—or their heirs—may recover indemnity from $2,000 to $10,000 from the county or counties guilty of failing to prosecute.

While it is true that lynching is primarily a southern problem Senators Costigan and Wagner, staunch democrats and supporters of the administration, have taken every precaution to give their proposal the characteristics of a national measure in no way reflecting on particular states or individuals. Senator Costigan has repeatedly pointed to the fact that lynching is likely to break out in any state, north or south, as recent events in Ohio, Indiana, California, Colorado and Missouri indicate. Despite its careful wording, however, and its tactful sponsorship, several factors are cooperating to make the passage of this bill extremely difficult. There is, first of all, the administration's "must" program consisting of the bills that are considered of major importance in furthering the cause of the new deal. Needless to say, the anti-lynching bill is not among these. In view of the fact, therefore, that many of the President's supporters are from those states where mob violence is most likely to find expression, and where federal intrusion will be most embarrassing, the administration's "must" program becomes a convenient excuse for refusing to permit the Costigan-Wagner bill to come up for a final vote. Administration leaders are not likely to succeed in thus sacrificing this measure, but their slightly less loyal colleagues who are determined that S. 24 "shall not pass" consider it their paramount duty to defeat the bill even if they must filibuster it out of existence. Such at any rate is their threat.

When other tactics fail against a proposal of this nature its enemies can always fall back on the claim that it is unconstitutional. That this bill is an assumption of prerogatives which states have usually claimed for themselves is frankly admitted; but the force of the argument is lost in view of the fact that it seeks to provide that very process of law which the constitution of the United States has guaranteed but which states and local communities have seen fit to deny victims of mob violence for more than fifty years. Lynchers have not been indicted because the administrators of law in their communities have either sympathized with them or have been afraid of them. The plea that the bill is unconstitutional therefore comes with little grace and with even less consistency.

Constitutionality is a favorite political cloak under which to conceal one's real objections to unpalatable measures. Congress has often passed laws similarly encroaching on states rights; and by virtue of implementing the government with such emergency laws it has been able to place a check upon kidnaping, and to run down gangsters with a degreee of efficiency which the several states themselves were never able to develop. The fight against this bill, based more on tradition and prejudice than on an orderly presentation of facts, inevitably betrays the weakness of its position.

It remained, in this instance, for Senator Smith of South Carolina to contribute the classic objection, resurrected from the reconstruction era, that the "sanctity of the home" and the "purity of womanhood" was at stake. One could not hope to find any more effective answers to all these objections than those emanating from the very states and constituencies which these opponents to the anti-lynching bill represent. Telegrams, letters and editorials have flooded Senator Costigan's desk, and he has spread many of them on the pages of the Congressional Record. Hardly had Senator Smith completed his impassioned plea when southern women—working girls, college students, church and civic groups—repudiated all he said, and urged the passage of this measure. All the major women's organizations of the Southern Methodist church are behind it, and Senator Wagner has stated that petitions representing 40,000,000 American citizens have asked for its passage.

But will this bill achieve all that its sponsors expect of it? To their credit it must be said that they have never cheapened it with extravagant claims. The deep rooted prejudices of race will remain to frustrate every legislative attempt to secure for the Negro that modicum of justice which, if granted him at all, is granted as a gift rather than as a right. It may be counted on to hamper and evade the provisions of this bill also, if and when it is passed. But every one knows that mob violence with its attendant brutalities has never yet been met with stern resistance. After each bloody deed there are the usual regrets and apologies, the public expressions of horror, the editorial rebukes and the commissions of inquiry—and then the refusal on the part of the authorities to make a single indictment. Conscientious and intelligent citizens have recommended remedial measures without number, but the inertia of state legislatures has made any sort of progress practically impossible.

The only recourse that now seems practicable is federal action. The Costigan-Wagner bill would apply that remedy only after the community in which the crime occurs has been given thirty days of grace to initiate action of its own and thereby to save its prestige. And in the event of a default the trial, now under the auspices of the federal courts, may still be held somewhere within the same geographical area, and probably will be; but it can then be held outside the immediate neighborhood where men's passions have been aroused, and where a greater degree of justice is possible for every one concerned. The fine, moreover, which the federal government would collect for the benefit of the victims, is intended as a corrective as well as a punitive provision. In South Carolina, where a $2,000 fine has been imposed on communities in which lynching has gone unpunished, there has not as yet been a second lynching in the same community.

Public opinion should therefore demand the prompt passage of this bill, not merely for the sake of the intended victims of mob violence but for the sake of all decent men and women who would implement their abhorrence of this type of lawlessness with the legal machinery necessary to offer it vigorous resistance.

Shackles for Scholars

ONCE again a minority of anxious souls is working itself into a fever of unnecessary excitement over the supposed prevalence of radical and subversive influences in our institutions of higher education. That the active agitators in this campaign to put the bit and blinders upon scholarship are relatively few does not mean that the movement is unimportant. A large element of the public is readily suggestible in regard to imagined perils of this sort, and the exigencies of politics are such that a determined and fanatical few in almost any state legislature have a fair chance to get formidable support from those who really know better but are interested in getting, in return, votes for their own favorite measures. Thus the Illinois senate recently adopted, by a large majority, a resolution calling for an investigation of communistic teaching in the colleges and universities of the state, both public and private, with the implied threat of withdrawing support from one class and tax exemption from the other if their teachings are found not to conform to the senatorial committee's standard of social and political orthodoxy. Similar attempts are being made elsewhere.

The dangers inherent in such investigations are far more serious than those that may reasonably be apprehended from any teachings that there is ground to believe are being given in Illinois or any other state.

There is, in the first place, the overwhelming probability that such legislative investigations will be conducted by persons who have no qualifications for determining whether or not any given body of social or economic doctrine is communistic or subversive. Communism is, to be sure, a definite creed and program; in our judgment, a bad one. But for most Americans, including legislators, it is not a program which they can define clearly and discuss unemotionally on its merits and demerits; it is a label to paste upon any set of opinions or any plan of economic organization which leans more to the side of collectivism than their own. It is a term of reproach employed to take the place of argument. If it were proposed to investigate the purity of a city's water supply, it might be taken for granted that the investigation would be conducted scientifically by qualified experts. But none of those who clamor for an investigation of the purity of the intellectual streams which flow from our educational fountains has thought of suggesting that the investigators should pass any sort of qualifying examination or that, before beginning their work of analysis and criticism, they should establish any standards of purity by comparison with which the quality of the suspected teachings should be judged, or even that they should be able to define the thing that they are looking for and prove that they know it when they see it.

One has only to recall the black lists and red lists that have been issued in recent years to realize how badly such standards and qualifications are needed if an investigation is to be anything more than a political witch-hunt. Jane Addams and Graham Taylor are set down as reds. Mrs. F. D. Roosevelt and Mrs. Louis D. Brandeis are listed as persons exercising a subversive influence. The Federal council of churches is characterized as a perfect hotbed of red radicalism. Practically all the new-dealers have, at one time or another, been described as either communists or socialists. (One test in the qualifying examination for investigators should be to define communism and socialism and state clearly the difference between them.) And Colonel Hadley, of the Paul Reveres, was recently quoted as saying that the subversive radical teaching of the universities is proved by the fact that so many of their graduates are now among the advisers of the President of the United States!

It is fantastic to suppose that the movers of these resolutions to investigate would welcome the suggestion that the appointment of the investigators should be conditioned upon some proof of their competence. But even if it were so ordained, the policy would be open to objection. Universities cannot exist under restraints imposed by the political power. Institutions bearing that name may continue and perform certain academic gestures, but they will not be universities. A nation or a state can take its choice. It can have universities, or it can have no universities. But it cannot have them without paying the price. Part of that price is money, and part of it is willingness to have its ideas, its culture and its institutions subjected to scholarly scrutiny. President Robert M. Hutchins of the University of Chicago recently stated the case with precision when he said: "Freedom of inquiry, freedom of discussion, and freedom of teaching—without these a university cannot exist. Without these a university becomes a political party or an agency of propaganda. It ceases to be a university." What has happened to the universities of Germany, Italy and Russia is an impressive and sobering object lesson.

Universities have periodically been objects of suspicion and attack since first they began to exist; and before that, individual scholars, thinkers and investigators often felt the heavy hand of the state, the church or the mob. Socrates lived, during his later years, in a period of Athenian hundred-percentism and of popular resentment against the influence of highbrows and difference between the standards of athletics at Cambridge and the personality of the newcomer was not easy to reconcile for anyone who read the newspapers, and the director found some difficulty at the start in explaining why one of the most notorious go-getters in college athletics should have been called to Harvard. He did admit that the gentleman's unfortunate reputation had preceded him, but explained this away by some curious logic. It appeared that an investigation had proved that notwithstanding the new leader's proselytizing at his former post, his freshmen had lost twenty-eight out of thirty-five games. This astonishing ratiocination drew no objections from his listeners, and the new coach, R. C. Harlow, stood up.

Why was he chosen at all? Simply because Harvard couldn't take it any more. Five or six years of unsuccessful football teams were too much; the graduates rebelled. They couldn't take it, neither could the Director of Athletics, who saw his gate receipts falling away in an alarming manner and his job endangered. That Harvard had in the past been asis of sanity in an athletic-mad college world meant ting. Standards of value were not considered. The only tion was to get a winning team, a winning team at any That meant the right kind of coach, and Harlow of stern Maryland turned out winners. Never mind his hods, results count. So there he was, the new executive g officially presented to the stockholders of the corpo-on.

In a sentence, he is the kind of man you'll never meet psychoanalyst's anteroom. For he is a typical extrovert he big, broad-shouldered type who calls you by your first e ten minutes after he has met you. He looks like what is, a successful football coach. No doubts about life. tball is a great game. Those who deserve to win will . Fight to the end. Morale. Team play. Block. kle. Fight.

He knew his audience—or was it that he had been rned? In any event he dealt wisely in generalities which ld mean everything or nothing according to one's point view. He gave them exactly what the majority had come hear, ringing sentences that seem full of significance when rd but when taken to pieces are fustian. "I have long eamed of being here with you men of Harvard tonight... ir generous loyalty...your unwavering support...the nderful bunch of boys at Cambridge...justify the trust u have placed in me. . . . Football is a dike against the od of soft living. . . . Never saw a football player at the ad of a Communist parade. . . . Let's keep the old game rugged...the fine spirit of Harvard..."

He cleverly avoided any details about important matters at issue, neglecting carefully to inform his hearers just how he would obtain prep-school stars if prep-school stars showed a tendency to matriculate at New Haven and Princeton. Nor did he explain that a slightly different attitude toward sport would prevail at Cambridge, that next fall each man would have his name plastered across the front of his jersey. These and other details were left in the background. He said just enough and not too much. Deftly flattering, subtly insinuating that victory was just around the corner, he ended with a paean to the Harvard spirit and its sudden effect upon the Sassenach from the South, which left his hearers in a rosy glow.

Who were they, those open-mouthed idolators? They were not merely citizens of the metropolitan area; their mental existence was not, as Ellis Roberts remarked, "bounded by a cocktail shaker and the New Yorker." No, they were graduates of a great university. Heaven help us all, they were educated men.

But we do not choose our heroes. They are made for us; high-school boy or college graduate, we worship as we are told. Like sheep those men sat transfixed by the platitudes and banalities from their hero's mouth, exactly like the boys and girls on the station platform staring at their friend in the coach. The man standing before them was the new head coach. Above criticism, a superman, as aloof and mighty in his sphere as the recruit for the Cardinals was to the boys with whom he had attended classes.

If a single person in the audience realized that this was a formal surrender of Harvard, one of the last ramparts of sanity in sport, to the god of victory-at-any-cost, he kept still. If one listener untouched by mass emotion retained enough perspicacity to raise a voice of protest, he was unheard. Not a word of criticism for this man coming to change all the athletic traditions of a great university. In this body of presumably mature men were the same wide-eyed admiration, the identical signs of hero-worship, that shone on the faces of the boys and girls who watched their friend and schoolmate ride off to the training camps of Florida. The hero of the high school is the hero of the college man.

Reflection on the South

By MARTHA GRUENING

SHARP attacks have been made in the Senate upon the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill. Among the most vocal of those opposed to the bill is Senator Smith of South Carolina. According to the New York Times for April 17, Senator Smith "described the bill as a reflection on the South, insisted that Southern womanhood be protected, demanded that the matter be left to the states, and said the measure indicted the South as lawless and barbarous."

The provisions of the Costigan-Wagner bill—which are not restricted to Southern states—give jurisdiction to federal courts over local violence. The bill provides severe punishment for peace officers who are convicted in a federal court of failing to protect their prisoners from a mob, and still more drastic penalties for officers thus found guilty of conspiring with the mob; and it establishes indemnities payable by the counties involved to persons injured through such dereliction of duty or to families of persons killed. Some states, notably South Carolina, have laws containing similar provisions, but these laws are almost never enforced.

On July 4, 1933, Norris Dendy, a colored man, was lynched near Clinton, South Carolina. His alleged offense was striking a white man who had become abusive in a heated argument between them. Dendy, a powerful man, left the scene of the quarrel unmolested but later in the day was arrested on a charge of "reckless driving" and lodged in the Clinton jail. That night a mob dragged him out of the jail, threw him into a waiting car, and drove away with him at high speed. Next day his body was found some miles away from Clinton. He had apparently been beaten and strangled to death. In spite of the sworn testimony of the Denby family and other eyewitnesses, who named several white citizens of Clinton and three of the town's police officers as members of the mob, the coroner's jury, composed of friends and relatives of the lynchers, decided that Norris Dendy met death "at the hands of parties unknown." Later, largely through the untiring efforts of the dead man's brother, Robert Dendy of New York, the evidence was brought to Governor Blackwood's attention. As a result presentments for murder were drawn up against five white men and placed before the grand jury which met at Laurens, South Carolina, in February, 1934. This jury adjourned without taking any action, and the next grand jury to consider the evidence, meeting in June, 1934, also failed to find indictments.

In the meantime anonymous threatening letters sent to the aforementioned witnesses had effectually deterred two of them from returning to South Carolina to testify. A letter written to Mr. Dendy by a state detective on stationery bearing the seal of South Carolina sums up the matter as follows: "The grand jury at the past sessions court at Laurens . . . regardless of the testimony of witnesses, found a no-bill. It is just like I told you in the beginning; when a grand jury refuses to indict, officers of the state and county are helpless." (Italics mine.) Federal juries cannot be so easily counted on to refuse to indict or to find that lynchers posing proudly for photographs "could not be identified." This may explain Senator Smith's objection to federal juries.

Perhaps no recent lynching offers more complete justification for the Costigan-Wagner bill or shows up more effectively the flimsiness of the usual excuses for lynching. The protection of Southern womanhood, white or black, was not involved, though the mob in its zeal did knock down Norris Dendy's mother, a woman over seventy, as she pleaded vainly for her son's life. The lynchers are well known in the community; yet after two years no one has been punished or even indicted for the crime. The accused police officers were not even suspended while the charges against them were being investigated, and the victim's family has not received one penny of the compensation provided by the South Carolina law in such cases.

Senator Smith to the contrary notwithstanding, there have been white South Carolinians, too, who could bear witness to the inadequacy of state protection against lynchers. There was, for instance, Sheriff John Thomas of Walhalla. He was clubbed into unconsciousness on the night of April 23, 1930, by the mob that took the Negro, Allen Green, from jail, tied him to a tree, and riddled him with bullets. Green was accused of raping a white woman on evidence so patently faked that the sheriff explained his unpreparedness for the attack—the mob had found him asleep—by saying that he had not supposed anyone really believed the charge against his prisoner. Eventually seventeen of the lynchers were put on trial, but in spite of positive identification of two of them by the sheriff and his son and strong evidence against several others, all were acquitted. Two years later one of these defendants, Laudy Harris, confessed publicly that he had been the leader of the mob that lynched Green.

Is it necessary to recall the Aiken cases? One of the three Negro victims of mob savagery in that affair had been acquitted by a directed verdict and the other two, a woman and a fifteen-year-old boy, were awaiting trial, having successfully appealed from a conviction for "conspiracy to murder." The grand jury failed to find indictments though the lynchers were well known. Has Senator Smith, "insisting that the matter be left to the states," also forgotten Anthony Crawford? Crawford was lynched in Abbeville, South Carolina, in 1916 under circumstances that closely resembled those in the case of Norris Dendy. He was a substantial and respected farmer of Abbeville County and saw no reason for taking a white man's abuse. In the course of a dispute with a white merchant over the price of some cotton seed, Crawford cursed the white man. For this he was arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct and fined fifteen dollars. A white mob, outraged at such leniency shown to an "impudent" Negro, pursued him with the avowed intention of giving him a beating, finally cornering him in a cotton gin in which he had taken refuge. When Crawford struck the leader of the crowd in self-defense he was partly blinded, then kicked, stabbed, and beaten into insensibility. Rescued by a fluke, he was thrown into jail, only to be seized again and then with further torture dragged through the streets to the fair grounds, where he was hanged and then shot. As usual, no member of the crowd could be identified, but the decent white citizens of Abbeville were aroused. They were not able to secure the punishment of the lynchers, but they called meetings and passed resolutions condemning them and their apologists, and these resolutions ended significantly—nearly twenty years ago—with these words: "That if it be necessary . . . to carry out this determination the aid of the state and federal government be called, in order that every man may enjoy his rights under the constitution." (Italics mine.)

Correspondence

From Angelo Herndon

To the Editors of The Nation:

On Friday, April 12, I sat in the first of the two rows reserved for spectators in the Supreme Court of the United States, listening to the oral argument in the case of Angelo Herndon vs. the State of Georgia. I listened as Whitney North Seymour, retained by the International Labor Defense, made a brilliant and eloquent plea in which he proved that the old Georgia slave-insurrection law under which I was convicted and sentenced to from eighteen to twenty years on the chain gang was a direct violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

My first trial in Georgia, back in January, 1933, came sharply to my mind when J. Walter Le Craw, who had helped prosecute my case in the lower courts too, began his speech. The same ranting and raving and shouting. The same open call to race hatred. He asked the Supreme Court to uphold my sentence because I had in my possession Communist literature—he kept saying it was in a shoe box that I had under my arm when I was arrested, actually it was confiscated from my room without a search warrant—that said, "The Communists want to seize the land and give it to the niggers." After that first slip he was careful enough to say "Nigras."

But his appeal to the highest court was no different from the prosecution in Atlanta. No evidence was produced against me to prove that I advocated "force and violence." Even the

A Message to Congress
(Which the President Might Read to It)

To the Congress: I come before you at the opening of the Seventy-fourth Congress deeply imbued with the profound responsibility placed upon me and the majority party by the result of the last election. It went far beyond any personal or party tribute; it was a vote of confidence, I believe, less in men than in the measures the Administration has advocated for the purpose of restoring prosperity and of giving relief to the millions of our fellow-citizens and their families who are still without the means of support by their own labor. I should be less than human, however, if I were not moved to the depths of my being by my share in this unprecedented popular approval of what we have tried to do and have done. For my own part, may I take this opportunity to say most solemnly that I accept it as a mandate to proceed with our double task, first, of assuring a return to normal conditions, and, second, of modernizing our political and economic life, with complete social justice as our beacon-light?

That the problems before us are so vital and far-reaching as inevitably to make this session of Congress one of historic importance must be as clear to you as to me. Some of the questions to be settled will profoundly affect the national development for years to come. They cannot be answered in a short time, nor should they be decided with undue haste. The decreased minority in Congress makes it incumbent upon the majority to proceed with circumspection and care. Primarily, the Congress must decide the fundamental issue of the relations of labor and industry. This brings up at once the question of the permanence of any or some of the features of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which, as you are aware, expires by your limitation on June 16 next. To me, labor's retention of the right to collective bargaining and the duty of capital to deal with representatives of labor's own choosing remain the fundamental points in the reorganization of our economic life. I believe that labor should have equal weight with capital, and I am determined to bring to book those corporations which, after having solemnly signed their names to the codes for their businesses, are refusing to honor their signatures by obeying the law, and are seeking to defy the government itself. There is no more important duty before the Executive than to make it clear to the entire country that the government of the United States cannot be defied successfully by any individual, any corporation, or any group. The issue of how far government supervision over industry shall go is squarely before you. I believe that it must be sufficient to guarantee justice for labor, and the blocking of any further drift toward an economic oligarchy or toward monopoly.

The next most important field for your consideration is that of social security. In my message to you of June 8 I notified you of my plan to ask for unemployment insurance and old-age pensions. Specific bills covering these subjects accompany this message. I lay them before you as a basis for your consideration. The beginning of complete social security for the American citizen must no longer be postponed. It is for you to decide finally the details of unemployment insurance—how much industry shall be taxed for its support, who shall administer it. It is also imperative that you go a step farther and draft adequate legislation for insurance for the sick and the aged. In my message of June 8 I asked for authority for the modernization of existing homes and the building of new homes. The measures voted by your honorable body have made possible great advances. As I am not satisfied with our progress in this field, I hereby promise you that every effort will be made to double the speed of construction with the definite goal of a decent home for every American and the elimination of all slums. A British Minister has lately declared that there will not be a slum left in England after five years. Shall we lag behind Great Britain in achieving this great end? Again, it would in my judgment be a profound error to fail to embody in our permanent legislation minimum wages, shorter working hours, elimination of the sweatshop and, above all, of child labor. It is my earnest hope that the several states will ratify without delay the child-labor amendment to the Constitution and thereby bring us up to an equality in this matter with other countries. American childhood must be kept out of mine, factory, and field; it must not be exploited for private gain.

There is still another and a specific issue of profound import to which I invite your attention. The passage of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill is an immediate duty. It cannot have escaped your attention that our national honor has been foully besmirched by the recent lynching of Claude Neal, a Negro, near Greenwood, Florida. This prisoner was in the law's hands; his guilt was certain and confessed. The mob which took him from the jail advertised its purpose and accomplished it with a sadistic fury, an obscene barbarity, which make the printing of all the details an impossibility. Shocking as was the murder of the prisoner's victim, the fiendish conduct of the mob makes it impossible for Americans to point the finger of scorn at lawlessness anywhere in the world. It stains our flag, as it tarnishes our honor. I cannot guarantee that the Costigan-Wagner bill will stamp out mob murder, but I do know that it will give to the United States government some of the powers it needs to check this evil, which in its importance overshadows the government's war against gangsters, bootleggers, and the other organized elements among our criminals. The killing of four citizens at Shelbyville, Tennessee, last month by troops, in order to prevent the lynching of an American citizen accused of crime, is still further proof of the menace of this lawlessness to our national life.

Our goal is plain. It is the creation of a more ideal economic order. There shall be in the United States special privilege for none, economic equality for all, with the motive of private profit subordinated to the general welfare. That the road lies open, the field ready for cultivation, is obvious. The spirit of the Tennessee Valley Authority, which I have promised shall rise in every state, is the best pledge of that.

Franklin D. Roosevelt

Here's How the Senate Beat Anti-Lynch Filibuster

Only 12 Convictions in 5,071 Cases of Lynching

Afro-American 5-4-35

Alabama Senator Wants to Compare Lynching and Burglary; Tydings Answered on the Penalty Clause.

WASHINGTON. (Special) — Senator Byrnes (Dem. Ala.) filibustering Monday, said, if the Senate would enact a federal law against lynching which is on the decrease, it ought also to make federal regulations to cover burglary in New York and other large cities, which is on the increase.

Wagner Replies

In reply, Sentor Wagner brought out the fact that lynchings were different, and asked Senator Black whether he knew how many prosecutions and convictions there had been in the five thousand cases of lynchings.

Black Tries to Help Out

Senator Black sought to help out Senator Byrnes by asking Senator Wagner did he know the statistics on rang crimes in Chicago and New York.

Senator Wagner promised to get the statistics on gang crimes but meantime read into the Record the statement that of 5,071 lynchings since 1882 and 280 since 1922, there have been prosecutions in only eight-tenths of one per cent of these cases and only twelve cases of convictions.

Tydings Opposes Penalty

Senator Tydings (Dem. Md.) said he would like to vote for the bill, but he objected to the $10,000 penalty clause which was assessed against a whole county and included the innocent witl. the guilty.

Senator Wagner answered that eleven states had anti-lynching laws in which such penalties were assessed against counties which permitted lynchings.

No county, he said, has had another lynching after once paying $10,000 for the first one.

Many Wire Costigan to Hold out Against Filibusterers

Senator Smith Snootily Terms Southern Interracial Commission Favoring Bill "Patriots."

WASHINGTON — (Special)— Senator Costigan, read into the record telegrams from individuals and organizations Monday urging the Senate to resist the filibuster if it takes all summer. Some of the telegrams declared against surrender at any cost, and added that the senders were praying for victory.

Some of the wires were signed by:

New York Students' Literary Association, Chicago World, Philadelphia Foreign Mission Board, J. H. Johnson; Philadelphia Young Friends Movement, Chicago Civic Council, H. H. Pace, Cincinnati NAACP, T. M. Berry; Mobile NAACP:

J. L. Leflore; Louisville, NAACP, B. S. Elberley; Marion Ind. NAACP, Katherine Burley, Louisville American Legion, Peter Salem Post;

Philadelphia, Logan Baptist Church, Philadephia Women's Independent League, Chicago South Central Community Council, Staunton, Va., Mrs. W. S. Plummer Bryan, Mrs. A. Stuart Baldwin, Mrs. R. L. Walton.

Philadelphia, Society of Friends, Dr. Virginia Alexander.

Philadelphia Young People Fellowship, William Smith.

Philadelphia, Henry Cater Patterson.

Chicago, International Press Service—83 newspapers.

Baltimore, Maryland Anti-Lynching League.

Jacksonville, Fla, National YWCA, Mrs. Walter S. Jones.

New York, Church Women's Committee Federal Council of Churches.

Philadelphia, Hill School, Germantown.

Philadelphia, Young People's Christian Endeavor, F. Beeker.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania Branch International Womens League.

Philadelphia, Young Friends Movement, Thomas Churchman, Elinor Brinkley.

Philadelphia, Florence Evans;

Philadelphia, Dir. Georgia Coleman, Member Women's Political Study Club.

Philadelphia, Emma Sidle, Young Friends Movement.

Philadelphia, Betty Cramer, Intercollegiate Club.

Moorestown, N.J., Eleanor Wildman, Carolyn Johns.

Philadelphia, Randolph Baylor, Jr.

Washington, D.C., Federation of Churches, W. L. Dabney, secretary.

Atlanta, Interracial Commission, 130 citizens in 13 States. Will W. Alexander.

New Orleans, Ministerial Union.

Philadelphia, Young People of Reformed Church, George Devine.

Philadelphia, Ethel Rhoads Pott, Member Society of Friends.

Philadelphia, Tioga Peace Group, Kathryn Patterson.

Philadelphia, Delaware Youth Conference.

Philadelphia, Jack Lanking, president Methodist Youth Conference.

Philadelphia, Mary Cooper, President Baptist Young People's Union.

Philadelphia, Eustace Gray, President District S.S. Union.

Wants to Know "Patriots"

Senator Smith (Dem., S.C.) wanted to know the names of the 110 Interracial Commission patriots" who sent in the telegrams to urge the passage of the anti-lynching bill.

Senator Costigan said the Commission on Interracial Cooperation had just met in Atlanta and had previously taken no action on lynching. Officers, names, he said, included:

Will Alexander, president Dillard University; the Rev. E. M. Poteat, Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, Mrs. W. A. Newell, John H. King, Emily Clay, I. Sherrod, Kennedy Daniel Ames.

All are white except Mrs. Bethune.

Sidelights on NAACP Anti-Lynching Fight

WASHINGTON. — The Senate and the crowded galleries were held spellbound on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons last week when Senator Edward P. Costigan of Colorado and then Senator Robert F. Wagner spoke, urging the passage of the Federal anti-lynching bill bearing their names.

They riddled with facts and ridicule the familiar contentions of the opponents of an anti-lynching law that the states could control lynching; that the bill was a threat to labor; that it was unconstitutional, and that lynchng was declining anyhow and so a law against it was unnecessary.

• • •

Senator Black of Alabama raised the anti-labor issue on Wednesday only to be brilliantly refuted by Senator Costigan. On Thursday after Senator Wagner's speech, Senator Tom Connally took up the sword for the South and talked at great length about the Constitution and state's rights.

Connally was twitted by Senator Clark of Missouri for bringing up the Constitution. The Missouri Senator expressed mock surprise that "it is only when such a measure as this, having to do with a subject such as lynching is submitted that the Constitution, long in retirement, is trotted out, its front repainted, its joints mended, and put in the forefront of the action."

The debate between Connally and Clark was one of the high spots of the long Thursday session. Senators Glass of Virginia, Borah of Idaho and Bailey of North Carolina, rushed to Connally's aid when the going became heavy.

• • •

Senator Warren K. Barbour threw the Senate into an uproar near the close of the Thursday session when he pointed out that those who contended loudest for states' rights came from the states "which are leaning most heavily on the Federal government for financial assistance in meeting the ravages of the depression."

He then had read into the record the FERA statistics on relief expenditures in the thirteen Southern states, showing how little they gave for relief and how much came from the Federal government.

• • •

Galleries Laugh

The crowded galleries got a big laugh from the florid, old-fashioned, ante-bellum oratory of Senator Ellison D. (Cotton Tom) Smith, of South Carolina, and Senator Tom Connally of Texas about the home, the sanctity of womanhood and the Constitution.

• • •

Keen-minded Lee Johnson, Senator Costigan's secretary, remembered a speech by Senator Connally last year in which he denounced those who last year raised constitutional objections to one of the recovery measures he was supporting. Johnson rushed to his office and returned with the Congressional Record containing the speech. Senator Costigan used it to good effect.

• • •

Senator Huey Long, the Kingfish of Louisiana, in tan suit and tan-and-white shoes, walked restlessly around the Senate chamber, alternately laughing in Connally's flustered face and slapping his hands together.

• • •

Chinese, Japanese, Haitian and other occupants of the diplomatic gallery, tried to mask their amazement that there should even be a debate on such a humane measure.

• • •

Detailed memoranda prepared by the N.A.A.C.P. on number and causes of lynchings by states, triviality of causes, innocent persons lynched, constitutionality and FERA funds to South which prates of states' rights were distributed in the press galleries and given to Senators.

• • •

Newspapermen, Senators and others say the fight is one of the best organized and conducted seen on Capitol Hill for some time.

• • •

White women worked devotedly for N.A.A.C.P. in fight. They were Mrs. Gertrude B. Stone (native Oklahoman) of Washington branch; Miss Elizabeth Eastman of Y.W.C.A., and sister of Joseph B. Eastman, the cordinator of railroads; a young Kentucky woman; Katharine Gardner of the Federal Council of Churches; Helen R. Bryan and Marjorie Penny of the Friends.

• • •

Charles H. Houston, William H. Hastie and other attorneys were busy running down legal points, preparing briefs, etc.

Finest of all perhaps was the instantaneous response by NAACP branches, and other interested groups with telegrams to wavering Senators.

FREE TO ALL OUR READERS

Get this beauty-pak free, consisting of Queen Skin Whitener Ointment, Queen Face Powder, Tuxedo Club Pomade, and New Improved Queen Hair Dressing which transforms kinky hair to beautifully marcelled waves. Just send your name and address with 10c in stamps to cover cost of mailing and wrapping to the Newbro Mfg. Co., 339 Walker St., Atlanta, Ga. This is our way of acquainting you with Newbro cosmetics and proving to you that they will give you the results you have long wished for.

Colored agents wanted to sell these fine preparations for colored people. Big money can be made. Write for our Big Offer.

Costigan Makes Superb Appeal for Anti-Mob Law

Tells Senate 5000 Lynchings Demand a National Remedy.

PROPOSED BILL IS TERMED REASONABLE

Effect of S.C. State Law Is Cited.

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Immediately after the Senate voted on April 24 to recommit the Bankhead Farm Tenancy Bill to the Agriculture and Forestry Committee with instructions to report it back not later than May 12, Senator Edward P. Costigan, Democrat, of Colorado, moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

Senator Costigan sought unanimous consent for an immediate roll-call to determine whether or not the bill should be taken up. Objections were made by Senators Tom Connally of Texas and Park Trammell of Florida, Democrats.

Debate Begun

Debate was begun by an explanation of the bill by Mr. Costigan.

Pointing out that 5,071 men and women have been lynched in the United States within the lifetimes of many Senators and that the evil is national, he declared that lynching "imperatively requires a national remedy."

Abraham Lincoln Quoted

He quoted comments on lynching from Abraham Lincoln, when a young Illinois lawyer, and Woodrow Wilson, during the World War.

He stated that the present, nation-wide movement in support of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill was the result of the lynching of Thomas H. Thurmond and John Holmes, both white, at San Jose, Calif., on November 26, 1933, which Governor James Rolph, Jr., condoned.

Federal Law Needed

"Tested by the rule that national wrongs demand national remedies," Senator Costigan declared, "it is evident that lynchings cannot be held in check without a Federal law. They are often interstate and always have a Federal character. Although about 11 of 48 States—North and South Carolina among them—have applied the restraints of reasonable State statutes with results considered excellent, the evil continues to break out with every practice of brutality and lunacy."

He urged 12 reasons for the enactment of Federal anti-lynching legislation. They were:

Proposed Law Reasonable

"First. The proposed law is reasonable in plan and extremely moderate in terms.

"Second. The Federal Government will not act until State officials have failed or refuse to protect persons in their custody or charged with, suspected, or convicted of crime.

"Third. Financial damages, as provided in the proposed Federal law, are now allowed against cities or counties, or both, for mob injuries or death under State laws of 11 States of the Union.

Public Opinion Needed

"Fourth. The proposed law would bring the pressure of taxpaying public opinion, as well as the support of peace officers, to guard counties against mob violence, well illustrated in the case of South Carolina where further lynchings have not occurred in certain counties of that State after the financial penalties were imposed.

"Fifth. The proposed law rests on authority vested in Congress under the Constitution, by appropriate legislation, to safeguard the equal protection of the laws for persons with the protection of States; and the constitutionality of the proposal is supported by successive interpretations of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Lawyers Agree Bill Is Constitutional

"Sixth. Lawyers of high standing, such as the late Moorfield Storey, of Boston, former president of the Massachusetts and American Bar Associations, have carefully analyzed and fully endorsed this type of legislation, and Chief Justice Hughes of the Supreme Court, some years ago was a member of a national conference which unanimously adopted a resolution recommending such Federal legislation.

"Seventh. The San Jose lynching in California in the fall of 1933, which started a new national demand for such a law is one proof that lynchings are not due to legal delays. Dean McMurray, of the University of California Law School, at Berkeley, has declared that California's recent record for criminal convictions is better than England's.

"Moreover, the criminal courts where the San Jose lynchings occurred were not congested with cases at the time, and the two white youths there lynched might have been promptly and impartially tried by jury.

Rape Charges False

"Eighth. Charges of crime against women, even without opportunity to prove their truth or falsity, are statistically shown to be among the less ferquent causes of lynchings; and many of the alleged offenses which have led to lynchings, have been shockingly trivial.

"Ninth. Medical opinion more and more leans to the view that the limitless barbarities of lynchings spring from a sadistic type of madness, which can be repressed by community influence, and which, if not repressed, is only satisfied by unspeakable acts of savagery.

Mob Law Endangers U.S.A.

"Tenth. Mob law endangers, as does nothing else, the safety of all life and property, and the continuance of free government.

"Eleventh. The progress of civilization is measured by the successive triumphs of law over lawlessness.

"Twelfth. The proposed law is already strongly endorsed by highly representative organizations in every part of the United States having a total estimated membership of 53,570,000 men and women."

Cannot Usurp Functions of the Courts

Closing his argument, he declared that "every repetition of mob brutality denies its victims the right of speedy and impartial trial and equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Constitution.

"No man can be permitted to usurp the combined functions of judge, jury, and executioner of his fellow men; and whenever any State fails to protect such equal rights, I submit that the Federal Government must do its utmost to [illegible] to all of us."

RO-ZOL BLEACH and Skin WHITENER

ROZOL bleaches quickly, effectively and without harm or injury to the most delicate skin.

ROZOL will clear any complexion. Also for ringworms, pimples, black heads, freckles, tan and rough knees and elbows.

PRICE 25 CENTS

At all drug stores—a product of

The Overton Hygienic Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill.

"In Everybody's Mouth"

KERR'S KILL-A-KOUGH

For Mild or Severe Coughs Due to Colds, Simple Bronchitis and Minor Irritations of the Throat.

35c per bottle

Carries a Money-Back Guarantee.

On Sale at Livingston Drug Co. 1630 Penna. Ave., Your Favorite Druggist or Our Retail Store.

Myrtle Ave. and George St. Baltimore, Md.

Fine for Kidney And Bladder Weakness

STOP GETTING UP NIGHTS

Keep your kidneys free from waste matter, poisons and acid, and put healthy activity into kidneys and bladder and you'll live a healthier, happier and longer life.

One most efficient and harmless way to do this is to get from your druggist a 35-cent box of Gold Medal Haarlem Oil Capsules and take them as directed—the swift results will surprise you.

Besides getting up nights, some symptoms of kidney trouble are backache, moist palms, leg cramps, and puffy eyes. If you want real results, be sure to get GOLD MEDAL—the original and genuine—a grand kidney stimulant and diuretic—right from Haarlem in Holland. Give your kidneys a good cleaning once in a while.

First Test on Anti-Lynch Bill Won by One Vote

Couzens and Norris, Two Republicans, Aid Democratic Southern Senators to Hold Up the Measure.

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Plans to adjourn instead of recess over the week-end in order to side-track the motion of Senator Edward F. Costigan, Democrat, of Colorado, to take up the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill were balked on April 26 when the Senate refused by a margin of one vote to adjourn until Monday.

The goal of this strategy was to vacate the pending motion and permit Senator Pat Harrison, Democrat, of Mississippi, chairman of the Finance Committee, to gain the floor the first thing Monday morning and move to take up the Harrison Compromise Bonus Bill.

Robinson Makes Motion

The motion to adjourn was made by Senator Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas, the majority leader. It was defeated by a vote of 34 to 33. Senator Robinson then moved to take a recess until noon Saturday.

Two Southern Senators deserted the opponents of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill to vote against the motion to adjourn. They were Senators Nathan L. Bachman, of Tennessee, and M. M. Logan, of Kentucky, Democrats.

Two Republicans

Two Republicans voted for the motion. They were Santors James Couzens, of Michigan, and George W. Norris, of Nebraska.

The Senate devoted only about two and one-half hours to a discussion of the Costigan motion. Most of the remainder of the session of four and one-quarter hours was taken up Senator Frederick Steiwer, Republican, of Oregon, in critcism of President Roosevelt's reciprocal tariff program and by Senator Thomas D. Schall, Republican, of Minnesota, in condemnation of the administration in general.

Bailey Talks

Senator Josiah W. Bailey, Democrat, of North Carolina, resumed the floor at the opening of the session on April 26. He again attacked the constitutionality of the measure, which he said was plainly intended to invade the prerogatives of the States.

Senator Costigan interrupted the debate to insert in the Congressional Record telegrams he had received, mostly from the South, urging passage of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill and expressing the hope that no filibuster will be allowed to succeed.

Capper Defends Bill

Senator Arthur Capper, Republican, of Kansas, spoke in behalf of the bill. He declared the purposes of the bill "are so laudable, its motives so much in the interest of humanity, its need so manifest, that I cannot understand why anyone should oppose its passage."

First Test

The vote on the motion to adjourn was considered the first test on the anti-lynching bill. It was a deliberate move to kill Mr. Costigan's motion to take up the bill.

Those opposing the motion were considered favorable to the Costigan-Wagner bill, and those favoring the motion, arrayed against it. The roll-call was as follows:

Friday's Roll Call on Anti-Lynching Bill

FOR THE MOTION—33

Democrats—21

Adams, Colo.	Hatch, N.Mex.
Bailey, N.C.	King, Utah
Bankhead, Ala.	Lohgergan, Conn.
Bilbo, Miss.	McKellar, Tenn.
Black, Ala.	Murphy, Ia.
Brown, N.H.	Overton, La.
Bulow, S.D.	Pittman, Nev.
Byrnes, S.C.	Radcliffe, Md.
Caraway, Ark.	Robinson, Ark.
Connally, Texas	Russell, Ga.
Dieterich, Ill.	Sheppard, Texas
Duffy, Wis.	Smith, S.C.
Fletcher, Fla.	Thomas, Utah
Gerry, R.I.	Trammell, Fla.
Gore, Okla.	Walsh, Mass.
Harrison, Miss.

Republicans—2

Couzens, Mich	Norris, Neb.

AGAINST THE MOTION—34

Democrats—18

Bachman, Tenn.	McGill, Kas.
Bulkley, Ohio	Minton, Ind.
Burke, Neb.	Moore, N.J.
Clark, Mo.	Murray, Mont.
Copeland, N.Y.	Neely, W.Va.
Costigan, Colo.	O'Mahoney, Wyo.
Donahey, Ohio	Schwellenbach, Wash.
Lewis, Ill.	Van Nuys, Ind.
Logan, Ky.
McCarran, Nev.

Republicans—14

Austin, Vt.	McNary, Ore.
Barbour, N.J.	Metcalf, R.I.
Capper, Kas.	Nye, N.D.
Carey, Wyo.	Schall, Minn.
Frazier, N.D.	Steiwer, Ore.
Gibson, Vt.	Vandenberg, Mich.
Hale, Me.	White, Me.

Progressive—1

LaFollette, Wis.

Farmer-Labor—1

Shipstead, Minn.

Paired

For the motion, Reynolds, N.C.; Byrd, Va., Democrats; against Wagner, New York (Dem.), and Guffey, Pa. (Rep).

Wartime Bogey Raised in Letter to U. S. Senators

WASHINGTON. — In a joint letter to Senators Edward P. Costigan and Robert F. Wagner, sponsors of the anti-lynching bill, Saturday, Walter White, of the NAACP, sounded the note of possible wartime disloyalty.

The letter, which was read into the Congressional Record, praised the Senators for their efforts in behalf of the anti-lynching measure and flayed opponents of the bill.

A portion of its text is:

"Does America expect—or dare she demand fealty and wholeheatred support in the next war from twelve million when she deliberately refuses to protect them from mob violence in time of peace?"

Crookedness Charged

The letter charges that filibustering Senators are the most efficient disseminators of unrest and violence. It further indicates that such men occupy their positions by crooked politics and not merit.

A portion of the letter that is reported to have caused considerable stir is:

"We utter no threats, but we would be derelict to our own conciences and lacking i candor to the Congress if we did not say that your bill is one of the yardsticks of our political attitudes in the future.

"We are in deadly earnest and we cannot and will not accept excuses for any supine surrender to the brazen filibuster now in progress."

This was interpreted as a threat to use the same tactics to defeat opposition Senators as were used to defeat those who voted for the confirmation of Judge John J. Parker in 1930.

Bi-Race Group Favors U.S. Anti-Lynch Bill

ATLANTA, Ga.—The Commission on Interracial Co-operation, in the seventeenth annual session, Thursday, for the first time, went on record as favoring the enactment of Federal anti-lynching legislation, and considered at length the status of laborers in industry and agriculture.

The anti-lynching statement was brought in by a committee headed by Forrester B. Washington, director of the Atlanta School of Social Work, and was adopted without a dissenting vote. Dr. George S. Mitchell, of Columbia University, reported the results of a national survey of the economic status of workers in the industries. Dr. Charles S. Johnson ,of Fisk University, who directed an intensive study in agriculture, painted a gloomy picture of the status of farm tenants of both races.

EVANGELIST IN S. CAROLINA

CHARLLESTON, S.C. — The Rev. James Garfield, evangelist, is conducting a revival at the New Tabernacle Church, here.

Public Won't Be Satisfied Without Anti-Lynch Law

Wagner Defending His Bill Denies Invasion of States' Rights.

TEXAS'S CONNALLY TALKS THREE HOURS

Clark Chides Him About Mentioning Constitution.

WASHINGTON.—The Harrison Compromise Bonus Bill, providing for the immediate payment to veterans in cash or bonds of the present value of their adjusted compensation certificates was hastened to the Senate on April 25 for the purpose of sidetracking the motion of Senator Edward P. Costigan, Democrat, of Colorado, to take up the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

Senator Pat Harrison, Democrat, of Mississippi, chairman of the Senate finance committee, which approved the Harrison compromise after rejecting the Patman "greenback" bill, already passed by the House, and the Vinson full cash payment plan, sponsored by the American Legion, broke into a speech by Senator Robert F. Wagner, Democrat, of New York, to file the committee report on the bonus bill.

Dummies Used

The documents he presented were only the formal "dummies" and were filled in later with the actual draft of the bill and report.

Consideration of the motion of Senator Costigan to take up the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill was resumed in the Senate on April 25 with a speech by Senator Wagner. He stated his reasons for introducing the measure in co-operation with Senator Costigan and urged its enactment.

Assault on Government

He called lynchng "a defiant assault upon government itself." He cited as horrible examples the lynching of George Armwood on the Eastern Shore of Maryland on October 18, 1933, and the Tennessee case where a frustrated mob burned down the courthouse.

He also referred to the lynching of Claude Neal, who was taken from an Alabama jail, carried across the Florida state line, shot to death, his body dragged through the streets, mutilated and hanged to a tree in Court Square at Marianna, Fla. Octo[illegible]

Lynching Not Localized

"Events of this nature cannot be localized in their effects," he stated. "In such a period of flux, prejudice and hatred recognize no arbitrary bounds. It is but a short step from summary treatment of those suspected of crime to suppression of every shade of economic or political opinion that disagrees with a transitory majority."

Answering the contention of opponents of the bill that lynchnig can be ended by state action alone, he said "the plea crumbles under the weight of the facts that it must carry." He pointed out that since 1882 there have been 5,071 lynchings in the United States, and 280 since 1922 when the Dyer anti-lynching bill was killed by a filibuster in the Senate.

No Invasion of States' Rights

"This bill does not invade states' rights," Senator Wagner declared. "It interferes only with mob rule. Nowhere is the sentiment stronger, nowhere is the desire for Federal assistance in combating the scourge within their midst more predominant than in those areas where lynching has reached its peak. Fifty-three million people, without regard to locality or walk of life, have united in pleading for the enactment of this Federal anti-lynching law. The sentiment for such a law is as wide-spread as the impulse of humanity. It is as deep-rooted as the spirit of Americanism; it is as imperishable as our Bill of Rights.

"In the history of this country no campaign for civil justice has been waged in vain, and public opinion in the United States will never be satisfied until 'Judge Lynch' is smothered under a heavy blanket of national resentment."

Connally Chided by Clark

Senator Wagner was followed by Senator Tom Connally, Democrat, of Texas, who spoke for nearly three hours, and Senator Josiah W. Bailey, Democrat, of North Carolina.

Senator Connally was chided by Senator Bennett Champ Clark, Democrat, of Missouri, who expressed amazement at the fact that for the first time in months that he had heard the Texan Senator refer to the Constitution was when the anti-lynching bill was brought into the Senate.

Senator Clark told Senator Connally that his return to the Constitution "would appear with better grace" if the process had been a little more gradual than the time between the recommitment of the Bankhead bill on one day and consideration of the motion to take up the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill on the next.

Constitutionality a Question for the Courts

Mr. Clark said the constitutionality of the measure was "a proposition for the courts to determine."

Senator Bailey asserted that the government had constantly sought to encroach upon the powers of the states.

Bailey's Threat

Senator Bailey threatened a filibuster. "This bill is not going to pass," he said. "We will be here all summer; we will fight it out on this line, as General Grant said, if it takes all summer.

"We are not going to permit the power of the Federal Government to be extended over the administration of the criminal laws in the commonwealth of North Carolina.

"We will speak night and day, and if the authors of the bill charge us with responsibility for delaying the consideration of the present program, I will put so much of it upon them as I think I can, but all that I cannot I will take, and I will not flinch about it."

Bailey Quotes Tuskegee

Quoting figures from Tuskegee Institute, Senator Bailey commented that lynchings had decreased from 231 in 1892 to 8 in 1932, and 15 in 1934. He argued that there had been great advances in curbing lynchings.

New Jersey's Barbour for Bill

Speaking in behalf of the bill, Senator W. Warren Barbour, Republican, of New Jersey, said that those states in which the issue of states' rights "is more frequently raised, are the same staes which are leaning most heavily on the Federal Government for financial assistance in meeting the ravages of the depression in their cases."

He said that if those states "are willing that the Federal Government should assume by far the greatest responsibility in taking care of their unfortunate, that they should not be too insistent on denying the constitutional rights of court trial and ordered justice to their own citizens."

GOLDEN BROWN HAIR CAP Free! WITH SAMPLES

—— of GOLDEN BROWN BEAUTY AIDS sent upon receipt of 10c in coin or stamps to cover shipping costs. Also most attractive agents proposition on one of the best known and fastest selling race lines. Write NF-52.

GOLDEN BROWN CHEMICAL CO. Memphis, Tenn.

9 Votes Is Margin of 2nd Test of Anti-Lynch Bill

Move to Substitute Bonus Bill Is Defeated; Two Republicans with Va., Md., N.C. Senators Aid Lynching Filibuster; Northern and Western Democrats Stand Firm.

(AFRO Bureau)

WASHINGTON. — Supporters of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill triumphed again last Saturday when they defeated for a second time a motion to adjourn the Senate and, by this parliamentary strategy, sidetrack the bill for the Harrison Compromise Bonus Bill.

The motion to adjourn, made by Senator Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, the majority leader, was beaten by a vote of 37 to 28.

Immediately after the motion to adjourn was defeated, the Senate, by a vote of 49 to 10, recessed until Monday noon, with the motion of Senator Edward P. Costigan, Democrat, of Colorado, to take up the anti-lynching bill still pending.

Offer of Bonus Substitute

Leaders of the filibuster against the anti-lynching bill sought to displace it by the substitution of the bonus bill. As soon as Vice-President John N. Garner announced that the Costigan motion to proceed to the consideration of the anti-lynching bill was the pending question, Senator Tom Connally, Democrat, of Texas, tried to amend the pending motion by substituting "H.R. 3896," the number of the bonus bill, for "S. 24," the number of the anti-lynching bill, in the Costigan motion.

Offer to Lay Bill Aside

Senate parliamentarians hold that no amendment to the motion is in order and that the original motion must be disposed of before any other business can be taken up. Senator Charles L. McNary, of Oregon, the minority leader, sought to make the point of order that the amendment of Senator Connally was not in order, but the latter would not yield the floor to him for that purpose.

Senator Costigan offered to agree to lay aside the anti-lynching bill for consideration of the "must" program of the administration if his motion to take up the bill should be adopted.

Robinson Sought Agreement

In accord with the proposal of Mr. Costigan, Senator Robinson sought agreement to the Costigan motion by unanimous consent and to lay aside temporarily the anti-lynching bill and consider the bonus bill.

No sooner was the request made than Senator Ellison D. Smith, Democrat, of South Carolina, objected.

Senator McNary suggested that the Senate make the anti-lynching bill its unfinished business and postpone the consideration of the bonus bill for a few days. Senator Robinson made a motion to adjourn. The Robinson motion took precedence, and a vote was first taken on it.

Three Switches

There were three switches in the votes of last Friday and Saturday. Senators Louis Murphy, of Iowa, and David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts, who had voted on the previous day to adjourn, voted Saturday against the adjournment motion. Senator Henrik Shipstead, Farmer-Labor, who had voted against adjournment Friday, voted for it Saturday.

Senator William E. Borah, Republican, of Iowa, who had not voted Friday, voted against adjournment.

He had previously stated that he was not willing to agree to postpone the Costigan motion to take up the anti-lynchnig bill so as to take up the bonus bill unless it were also agreed that after the bonus bill was disposed of the Costigan motion would be finally disposed of before the Senate considered AAA amendments."

Two Republicans Against

Once again two Republicans were recorded in favor of the adjournment motion. Senator James Couzens of Michigan voted for it. Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, was paired with Senator Robert M. La Follette. If Senator La Follette had been present, he would have voted against adjournment. If Senator Norris had been permitted to vote, he would have voted for it.

Four Southern Democrats voted against adjournment. They were Senators Nathan L. Bachman, of Tennessee; Alben W. Barkley and M. M. Logan, both of Kentucky, and Harry S. Truman, of Missouri.

Tydings With Lynchers

Senator Millard E. Tydings, Democrat, of Maryland, was paired with Senator Jesse H. Metcalf, Republican, of Rhode Island. If Senator Tydings had been present, he would have voted for adjournment. Senator Metcalf would have voted against it.

Saturday's roll-call on the motion to adjourn was as follows:

Saturday's Roll Call for Adjourning

FOR ADJOURNMENT—33

Democrats—26

Adams, Colo.	Gore, Okla.
Bailey, N.C.	Harrison, Miss.
Bankhead, Ala.	Hatch, N. Mex.
Bilbo, Miss.	King, Utah
Black, Ala.	Lonergan, Conn.
Brown, N.H.	Radcliffe, Md.
Bulow, S.D.	Robinson, Ark.
Byrnes, S.C.	Russell, Ga.
Caraway, Ark.	Shepard, Texas
Connally, Texas	Smith, S.C.
Dieterich, Ill.	Thomas, Okla.
Fletcher, Fla.	Thomas, Utah
Glass, Va.	Trammell, Fla.

Republicans—1

Couzens, Mich.

Farmer-Labor—1

Shipstead, Minn.

AGAINST ADJOURNMENT—37

Democrats—22

Ashurst, Ariz.	McCarran, Nev.
Bachman, Tenn.	Minton, Ind.
Barkley, Ky.	Murphy, Ia.
Bone, Wash.	Murray, Mont.
Bulkley, Ohio	Neely, W.Va.
Burke, Neb.	O'Mahoney, Wyo.
Costigan, Colo.	Truman, Mo.
Hayden, Ariz.	Van Nuys, Ind.
Lewis, Ill.	Walsh, Mass.
Logan, Ky.

Republicans—13

Austin, Vt.	Keyes, N.H.
Borah, Idaho	McNary, Ore.
Capper, Kans.	Nye, N.D.
Frazier, N.D.	Schall, Minn.
Gibson, Vt.	Stelwar, Ore.
Hale, Me.	Vandenberg, Mich.
Hastings, Dela.	White, Me.
Johnson, Cal.

Pairs

For adjournment—Reynolds, N.C.; McKellar, Tenn.; Overton, La.; Tydings, Md.; George, Ga.; Duffy, Wis.; Gerry, R.I.; Byrd, Va., Democrats; Norris, Neb., Republican.

Against adjournment — Wagner, N.Y.; Moore, N.J.; Clark, Mo.; Guffey, Pa.; Democrats; Barbour, N.J.; Townsend, Del.; Carey, Wyo.; Metcalf, R.I., Republicans; LaFollette, Wis., Progressive.

South Talks Constitution as Anti-Lynch Bill Looms

Senator Clark Tells Dixie Senators He Never Heard Them Mention the Constitution Before.

Constitutionality an Excuse

WASHINGTON (Special) — When Senator Byrnes (Dem. S.C.) declared that he was opposed to the anti-lynching bill because he considered it unconstitutional, Senator Wagner retorted that much of the New Deal legislation was likewise thought unconstitutional.

"If we are satisfied with the merits of the proposal," he said, "we can leave the constitutional question to be determined by the courts."

Clark Is Amazed

Senator Bennett Champ Clark, (Dem. Mo.) expressed amazement Thursday at the discussion of Senator Tom Connally (Dem. Tex.) of the constitutionality of the anti-lynching bill.

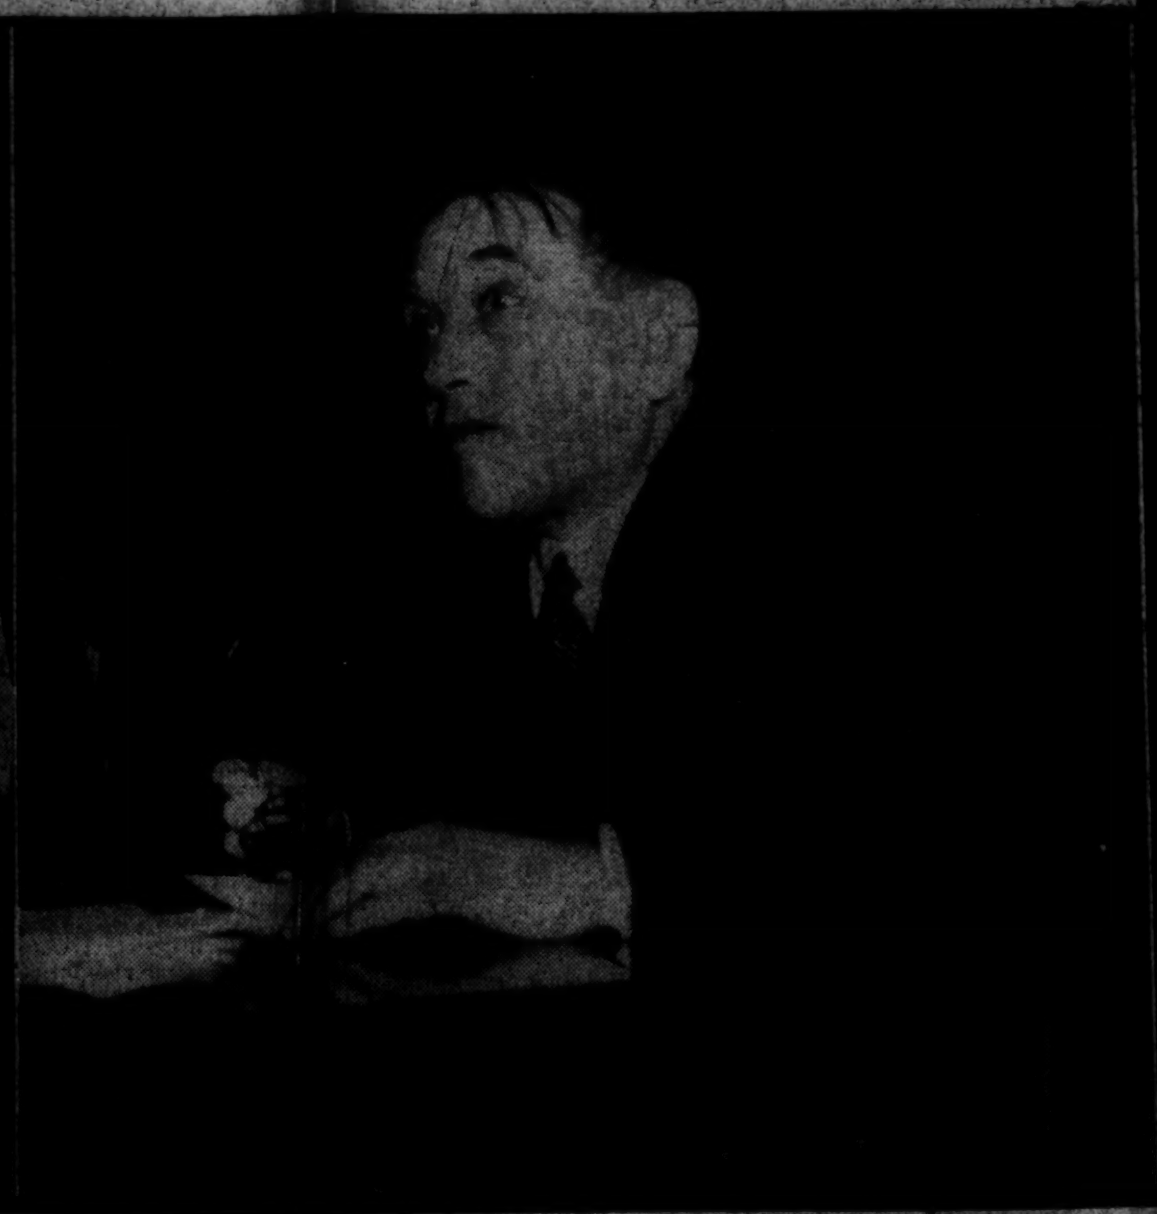
He said the only time he and some other Senators mention the constitution is when an anti-lynching bill is brought up.

Senator Logan (Dem. Ky.) said Senators can always find something unconstitutional about a bill [illegible]

Senator Long, (Dem. La.) declared the debate irrelevant. Before long, he said, we will be discussing the Mother Goose almanac.

Mitchell Votes Nay on Reducing Navy

WASHINGTON—On the important roll-call in the House last week on the motion of Representative Fred J. Sisson, Democrat, of New York, to recommit the Naval Appropriation bill with instructions to report it back with such amendments as would reduce the total amount appropriated by twenty per cent, which was rejected by a vote of 289 to 56, Representative Arthur W. Mitchell, Democrat, of Illinois, voted "nay."

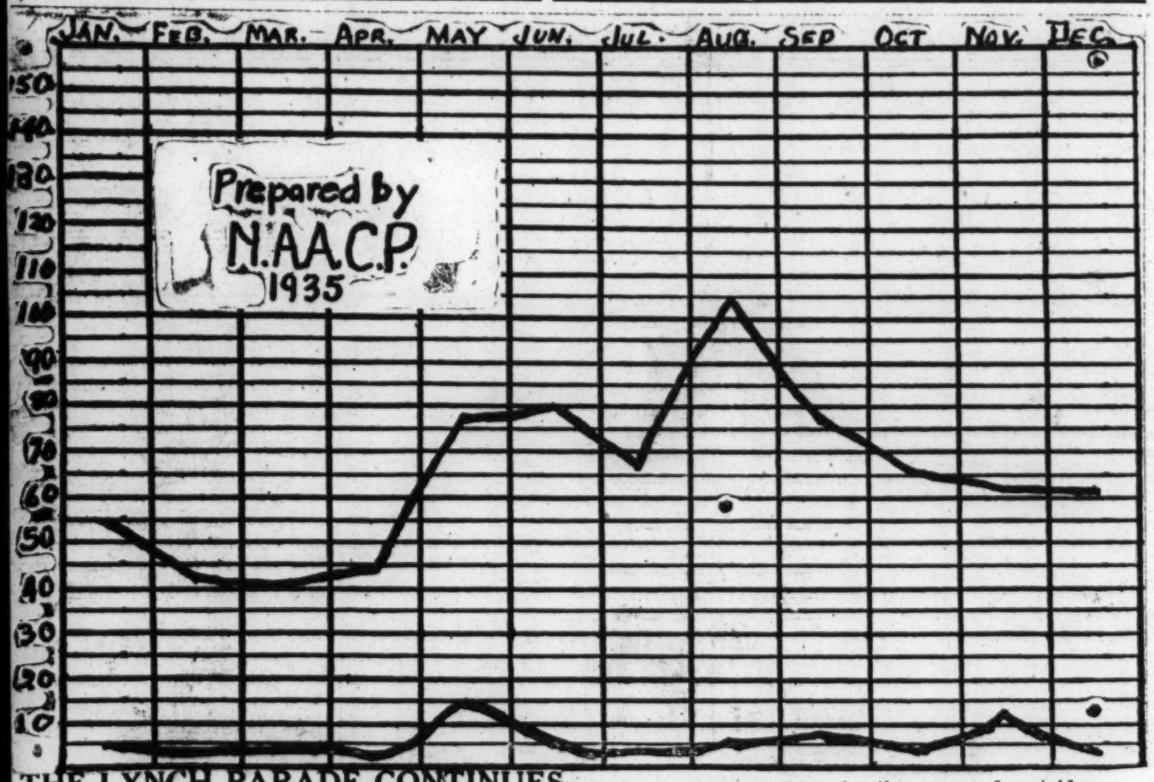


Of course you want a delicately scented, smooth perspiration-proof face powder that stays on all day if need be—but you want MORE than that. Dr. FRED Palmer's SKIN WHITENING Face POWDER lives up to its name — makes skin look lighter and lovelier. Two shades only, light and dark, a Dr. FRED Palmer triumph. Eliminate puzzling search for right match. At all drug stores 25c or send 3c for samples to Dr. FRED Palmer Laboratories, Dept. 304, Atlanta, Ga.

FEB 15 1935

Anti-Lynching Bill Studied; Gen. Wood to Direct Works

+ Day's Events in Pictures +



Underwood & Underwood Photos.

Congress opens hearings on anti-lynching bill! Interesting camera glimpses of the hearing before Senate Judiciary Committee. Left, Senators Edward P. Costigan, of Colorado, and Robert W. Wagner, of New York, authors of the bill, chatting confidentially. Center, H. L. Mencken, noted Liberal, appears before the committee. Right, Mrs. Caroline O'Day, representative from New York, at the hearing.

Lynchings—1935
N.A.A.C.P., Reports on.

5106

A 20-Year Record of Lynching And Burning In The Southland!

This graph, prepared by the NAACP, shows in the top line the trend of lynchings by months for the 20-year period, 1915-1934 inclusive. The month of August leads with 105 lynchings, and the month of March is at the bottom with "only" 45 lynchings.

The bottom line of the graph shows the burning of human beings by months over the same 20-year period. A total of 45 persons were burned by mobs, some of them alive and some of them after being killed.

Texas leads with 12 burnings, followed closely by Mississippi, with 10, and Georgia with 8. The banner burning month, as shown by the graph above, was May, with a total of 15, with November close behind with 13.

THE LYNCH PARADE CONTINUES

According to figures compiled by Tuskegee institute, 20 persons were lynched in America during 1935, a total of four more than in 1934. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has not yet revealed its totals, which will probably be at variance with those of Tuskegee, nor have the Communists issued their annual statement which will be far more than either of the other organizations.

But it is a matter of even conservative record that the mobs rule and no method has as yet been devised to end this situation. Last year attempts to have federal anti-lynching legislation passed brought a long filibuster in congress. Senators of Dixie states yelped about "states rights" and said they were competent to deal with such savagery back home. Borah of Idaho, who wants the presidency, threw his influence behind the move to kill the Costigan-Wagner bill.

Meanwhile the country boasts of its "civilization" and points with pride to its huge stride toward a mechanized society. Countries and peoples with fewer autos and no skyscrapers are looked upon as inferiors. Missionaries spend good money trying to "convert" the non-Christian peoples of Africa. Frankly, we boast a holier-than-thou attitude which merely serves to lower America in the eyes of outsiders. Were the savage to indulge in human-fries, nobody would be surprised; but for a nation which claims to be 120,000,000 of God's anointed to roast its brothers and sisters make the crime just that much more terrible.

Lynching continues. Lindbergh had the right idea when he left these lawless shores.

Lynchings – 1935
N.A.A.C.P., Reports on.

5107

NEWBURGH, N. Y.
NEWS

JUL 9 1935

Negro Group Denies Story Of 'Lynch Mob'

Newburgh Branch of National Association for Advancement of Colored People Says Crowd at Falls Was 'Only 75'

Officers of the Newburgh Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People today issued a statement, signed by Dr. Robert Branch, president, denying that a mob of Highland Falls Negroes attempted to lynch Clyde Larkin, accused of criminally attacking a 19-month-old Negro girl there on June 29.

Dr. Branch says the story which appeared in The News of July 1 was erroneous when he said that 250 Negroes swarmed about the Highland Falls lockup following Larkin's arrest. Investigation by the association, Dr. Branch says, discloses that the crowd numbered "less than 75."

Group's Statement

Dr. Branch's statement:

"In an article which appeared in The Newburgh News July 1, a statement was made that a mob of 250 Negroes was swarming around the lockup clamoring for Larkin's life. This statement was not only erroneous but a gratuitous insult to the colored population of Highland Falls. The sentiment of that village was grossly miscarried by the press, according to an investigation by the Newburgh Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

'Only Small Crowd'

"On the night of the crime of which Larkin is accused, a small crowd of less than 75 persons assembled about the scene, such as to be expected at the scene of any crime.

"The organization wishes to be clearly understood that it does not wish to influence public sentiment in connection with the case; nor does it wish to interfere in any way with the progress of the case now being tried in the courts.

"We urge every Negro and friend of better relations to make a substantial effort to stamp out lawlessness and race hatred thereby making America a better place in which to live."

Group's Officers

Other officers of the Newburgh branch are: Robert Hawkins, vice-president; Mrs. Harriet Freeman, secretary; Ambrose M. Bost, treasurer, and Hazel Amos, financial secretary. The executive officers are: Dr. Branch, Mr. Hawkins, Mrs. Freeman, Mr. Bost, Naomi Wisher, Alberta Flemming, Harvey Burger, the Rev. E. O. Clarke, and the Rev. R. M. Mitchell.

New York Evening Post

JUL 23 1935

Three Lynchings in Five Days

To the Editor of New York Post:

Sir—(Copy of telegram to President Franklin D. Roosevelt, White House, Washington, D. C.)

The lynching of Rubin Stacy by a mob in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Friday, was the third lynching within the past five days and the ninth lynching this year.

Four lynchings have taken place since the Costigan-Wagner bill was sidetracked in the Senate May 1, thus bearing out the prediction that the removal of threat of Federal legislation would encourage mob violence.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People urges you to ask further consideration of this legislation by Congress, as States have demonstrated they cannot and will not prevent lynchings or punish lynchers.

Unless the Federal Government acts to stamp out lynching, America will continue to be branded as a hypocrite in voicing its dismay and disapproval of terror in Germany, Mexico and elsewhere.

ROY WILKINS,
Assistant Secretary National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Lynchings-1935.

Alabama

Prevented

5109

CONFESSION BARES LYNCH MOB'S ERROR

1-4-35

Pair Admit Crime For Which Three Nearly Died

By United Press.

ANDALUSIA, Jan. 3.—Two Andalusia youths confessed to Sheriff Tom Gannt today that they committed a murder for which a mob threatened to lynch three innocent men recently.

The two, Rubin Pittman, 19, and Calvin Soles, 22, told Sheriff Gannt they killed Trammel Steele in a filling station robbery at Laurel Hill, Fla., last Dec. 20.

Both are paroled convicts from Kilby Prison.

Confessions of Pittman and Soles absolved three other suspects who were held for safekeeping at Montgomery. A mob had threatened them following capture here. They were Tobe Adams, Tookie Meeks and Ed Davis, the latter a Negro.

Pittman and Soles were linked with the crime when six automatic pistols stolen from the National Guard Armory here were used in the robbery were traced to them.

Alabama Mob Fails To Secure Negro

